1. GENERALLY.

Allowance of Commission for Collecting Messages—How far a Preference.]—A party collected messages for a telegraph company, and received a commission from the company on the messages collected:—Held, that the commission could not be considered as a violation of the provision in the charter of the company "for the sending and receiving of messages by all persons alike without favour or preference, and subject to such equitable charges and reasonable regulations as may from time to time be made by the company." Reuter v. Electric Telegraph Co., 6 El. & Bl. 341; 26 L. J., Q. B. 46; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1245; 4 W. R. 564.

Telegraph Wires—Mode of Placing.]—A local board, on being applied to by the postmaster-general under s. 3 of the Telegraph Act, 1878, for their consent to the placing of telegraphs and posts upon, along and over streets and roads in their district, refused their consent, except on condition that the wires across or along streets or roads should be underground. This difference, after having been referred to a metropolitan police magistrate, was, in accordance with s. 4 of the Telegraph Act, 1878, brought before the railway commissioners. The commissioners decided that overhead wires should be allowed, subject to the following conditions:—1. That all wires shall be of copper. 2. That all poles shall be of iron. 3. That no wires shall be placed over, along, or across any road or footway at a less height than thirty feet above such road or footway. 4. That where a wire crosses over any public road or street the distance between the points of support at either side of such road or street shall not in any case exceed 100 yards. Wandsworth District Local Board v. Postmaster-General, 4 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 301.

By the Metropolitan Management Act, 1855, s. 96, "all streets, being highways, shall vest in and be under the management and control of the vestry or district board of the parish or district in which such highways are situate." Defendants, a telephone company, fixed a telephone wire to a chimney, and stretched it across a street, which was vested in plaintiffs as the district board, at a height of about thirty feet from the ground. Plaintiffs brought an action for an injunction to restrain defendants from keeping up the wire:—Held, that what was vested in plaintiffs was the property in the surface of the ground, together with as much space, both above and below the surface, as amounted to the area of ordinary user; and that as the wire in question was above this area, and was not shown to be dangerous, so as to amount to a nuisance, plaintiffs were not entitled to an injunction:—Held, also, that defendants did not require plaintiffs' consent under 26 & 27 Vict. c. 112, s. 12, to entitle them to place the wire across the street. Wandsworth Board of Works v. United Telephone Co., 53 L. J., Q. B. 449; 13 Q. B. D. 904; 51 L. T. 148; 32 W. R. 776; 48 J. P. 676—C. A.

A telegraph company had power by their act to place under any public road their wires and pipes, and to break up the pavement or soil of such roads, making compensation for all damage, provided that nothing in the provision should extend or apply to any railway, except that the company might carry their wires and pipes directly, but not otherwise, across any railway, so as not to damage or be likely to damage the railway or any of the works connected therewith. A railway, pursuant to the provisions of the act incorporating the company, crossed a public road on the level:—Held, that the telegraph company had no right to place their wires and pipes under that part of the public road where it was crossed by the railway on the level, as that part was not a public road, but a railway within the telegraph company's act. S. E. Ry. v. European and American Electric Telegraph Co., 9 Ex. 363; 2 C. L. R. 467; 23 L. J., Ex. 113.

A telegraph company, without any parliamentary powers, laid down their wires in tubes under a public highway. An information and bill were filed complaining of those acts as a nuisance to the public and as an invasion of the rights of the owner of the adjacent land in the soil of the road. The court refused to grant an injunction until the legal right had been established. Att.-Gen. v. United Kingdom Electric Telegraph Co., 30 Beav. 287; 31 L. J., Ch. 329; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 583; 5 L. T. 338; 10 W. R. 167.

Where a company, for the purposes of profit to itself, placed telegraph posts upon a highway with the object and intention of keeping them there permanently, and did permanently keep them there, such posts being of such sizes and dimensions and solidity as to obstruct and prevent the passage of carriages and horses or foot passengers:—Held, that the company was liable to be found guilty upon an indictment for a nuisance. Reg. v. United Kingdom Electric Telegraph Co., 2 B. & S. 647, n.; 31 L. J., M. C. 166; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1153; 6 L. T. 378; 10 W. R. 538; 9 Cox, C. C. 174.

Held, also, that even if the posts were not placed upon the hard or metalled part of the highway, or upon a footpath artificially formed upon it, or although sufficient space was left for the public traffic, the company was still liable to a conviction. Ib.

Liability of Postmaster-General for Negligence.]—By the Telegraph Act, 1868, which incorporates the Telegraph Act, 1863, s. 2, the term "the company," in the Telegraph Act, 1863, shall, "in addition to the meaning assigned to it in that act, mean the postmaster-general." In an action against the postmaster-general, in his individual capacity, for, by his servants, negligently opening a flagway for the purpose of erecting telegraph posts:—Held, that the action did not lie. Jones v. Monsell, Ir. R. 6 C. L. 155.

Purchase of Premises by Postmaster-General—Rateable Value at Date of Purchase.]—The Telegraph Act, 1868, empowers the postmaster-general to purchase, for the purposes of the act, the undertaking (including land and property) of any telegraph company, and s. 22 provides that all land, property and undertakings so purchased shall be assessable and rateable to parochial rates at sums not exceeding the rateable value at which such land, property and undertakings were properly assessed at the time of such purchase. In 1870 the postmaster-general purchased the undertaking of a telegraph company, including a house held by the company under a lease for twenty-one years from September, 1867. At the time of the purchase a portion of the house was subject to an underlease granted by the company to H. for the remainder of the term less one day, and containing a covenant by the company to pay all parochial rates. The postmaster-general occupied and used, for telegraphic purposes only, the portion of the house not comprised in the underlease until the year 1878, when he demised that portion to others, and thenceforth no part of the house was occupied or used for telegraphic purposes. The rateable annual value at which the portion comprised in the underlease could properly have been assessed, as a separate tenement at the time of the purchase, was 108*l.* In 1880 the assessment committee of the district separately assessed that portion in respect of parochial rates at the rateable annual value of 334*l.*:—Held, that s. 22 applied notwithstanding that all use of the house for telegraphic purposes had ceased, and therefore that the occupier of the premises comprised in the underlease was not liable to be assessed in any sum exceeding the rateable value at which these premises could have been properly assessed at the time of the purchase. St. Gabriel, Fenchurch v. Williams, 55 L. J., M. C. 14; 16 Q. B. D. 649; 54 L. T. 270; 34 W. R. 256; 50 J. P. 533.

Telegraphic Address—Damnum absque Injuria.]—The short address "Street, London," was used for many years in sending telegrams from abroad to Street & Co., of Cornhill. A bank adopted by arrangement with the post-office the phrase "Street, London," as a cypher address for telegrams from abroad to themselves:—Held, that the court had no jurisdiction to grant an injunction restraining the bank from using such address, as there was no attempt to interfere with trade, no legal injury done, but simply a matter of inconvenience. Street v. Union Bank of Spain and England, 55 L. J., Ch. 31; 30 Ch. D. 156; 53 L. T. 262; 33 W. R. 901.

2. Compensation.

What is an Interest Entitling to—Compulsory Purchase by Government.]—By s. 7 of the Telegraph Act, 1868, any railway company possessed of a telegraph open to the use of the public on the 1st of January, 1868, for transmitting messages for money, or possessing any beneficial interest in such telegraph, might require the postmaster-general to purchase the right of such railway company to transmit such messages, or other beneficial interest. By s. 10 of the Telegraph Act, 1869, any telegraph company with which the postmaster-general may not come to an agreement with respect to the amount of compensation to be paid to them for their undertaking, may have such amount settled by arbitration in manner provided by the Lands Clauses Act, 1845. By an agreement with the telegraph company, under which the telegraph company erected and placed their telegraphic apparatus on the Cowes and Newport Railway Company's line, the railway company took the exclusive use of one wire during the continuance of the agreement, but was prohibited from using the wire for public use or for profit, or for any other purpose than the transmission of the railway company's own messages. The agreement was to be in force for twenty-one years, and at the end of that time the telegraph company was to remove its telegraphic apparatus:—Held, that the railway company had no interest in the telegraph such as to entitle them to require the postmaster-general to purchase it under the Telegraph Acts, 1868 and 1869. Cowes and Newport Ry. v. Board of Trade, 43 L. J., Q. B. 242; 22 W. R. 807.

The Somerset and Dorset Railway Company, which connected two portions of the London and South-Western Railway, entered into an agreement in 1866, by which they undertook to complete all the works, including the telegraphs, and then to hand over, for the term of 1,000 years, their line to the South-Western, who undertook to pay them forty-five per cent. of the gross receipts from traffic conveyed by the railway. At the date of this agreement the Somerset and Dorset Railway had two telegraph wires along their line. In 1865 the South-Western had made an agreement with the Electric Telegraph Company, by which the latter was to have the exclusive right of transmitting messages along the lines which the South-Western then had or might afterwards acquire. After the passing of the Telegraph Acts, the postmaster-general acquired these telegraphs, and paid compensation in respect thereof to the South-Western. The Somerset and Dorset railway company then applied for compensation in respect to their telegraph, and afterwards requested the chief justice of the common pleas, pursuant to s. 9 of the Telegraph Act, 1868, to appoint an umpire, which he declined to do, on the ground that the Somerset and Dorset company had no beneficial interest in a telegraph within s. 7 of that act:—Held, that that railway had, under the agreement with the South-Western, parted with the beneficial interest in their telegraph, that messages sent by the telegraph formed no part of traffic conveyed by the railway, and that consequently they were not entitled to compensation under the Telegraph Acts. Reg. v. Coleridge (Lord), 45 L. J., Q. B. 649; 34 L. T. 752.

Award of Lump Sum—Further Claim—Arbitration Clauses.]—By the Telegraph Act, 1868, s. 9, sub-s. 6, the postmaster-general shall pay railway companies by way of compensation (clause D.) such sums as shall be settled by arbitration in respect of the loss by such railway company of the privilege of granting other way-leaves and making future arrangements with telegraph or other companies, and in respect of granting a monopoly to the postmaster-general for the conveyance of telegraphs over their railways. By clause H. of the same sub-section, on acquisition of the telegraphs, the postmaster-general shall have a perpetual right of way for his poles and wires over the whole of the railway company's system, and in consideration thereof he shall pay to the railway company such sum per mile per wire over the whole of the said system by way of yearly rent as shall be fixed by arbitration. The arbitrator in determining the amounts to be paid to the railway company under this act, shall have regard to the agreements which subsist between the railway company and any telegraph company, and also to a compulsory sale being required from the railway company; and in estimating the amount to be paid under any one part of this section shall have regard to the advantages to be obtained and the disadvantages to be sustained by the railway company under any other part of this section. By sub-s. 8 of the same section, power is reserved to the railway company to erect and work private telegraphs for annual rent or payment for way-leave from traders. An arbitrator had awarded a certain lump sum to the defendants as and by way of compensation in pursuance of the provisions of sub-s. 6 of s. 9 of this act, but had made no allusion in his award to any yearly rent under clause H. of that sub-section:—Held, that the defendants were precluded from any further compensation for extra poles or wires which the postmaster-general might in future require to be erected upon their railway system. Reg. v. Metropolitan Ry., 50 L. T. 6—C. A.

To Officers.]—The Telegraph Act, 1868, s. 8, sub-s. 7, applies only to the three telegraph companies named at the beginning of s. 8; and, therefore, the telegraph superintendent of a railway company is not entitled to compensation for the loss of his office, when the telegraphic business of the company is acquired by the postmaster-general. Reg. v. Postmaster-General, 32 L. T. 559.

The superintendent of one of the three named telegraph companies was held entiled to compensation in respect of profits on allowance for expenses while travelling on the company's service. Ib.

By the Telegraph Act, 1868, s. 8, sub-s. 7, officers who have been for a fixed period in the employment of a telegraph company, whose undertaking has been purchased by the postmaster-general under the provisions of the act, and who have been in receipt of a yearly salary, or of remuneration not less than 50*l.* a year, are entitled, in the event of their receiving no offer of an appointment by the postmaster-general in the telegraphic department of equal value to that held under the company, to an annuity by way of compensation for the loss of their office, equal to a proportion of the annual emolument derived by them from their office. S. was an officer of a telegraphic company, whose undertaking had been purchased by the postmaster-general, and was entitled, so far as salary and term of office were concerned, to compensation under the Telegraph Act, 1868. It was part of his duty, when required, to travel on the company's business; when he so travelled his ordinary salary ran on, but his additional expenses were paid by the company, who agreed that he should receive certain fixed sums in lieu of making him bring in an account of his expenditure, and then repaying him:—Held, that the sums so paid to him for travelling expenses were to be taken into consideration in calculating the annual emolument derived by him from his office. Reg. v. Postmaster-General, 47 L. J., Q. B. 435; 3 Q. B. D. 428; 38 L. T. 89; 26 W. R. 322—C. A.

3. Messages and their Effect.

Liability for Misdelivery of Messages.]—A special act gave an electric telegraph company powers for laying down their line, and enacted that the use of their telegraph and apparatus for the purpose of receiving and conveying messages should, subject to the prior right of use for the service of the crown, and subject to such charges and reasonable regulations as might be made by the company, be open for the sending and receiving of messages by all persons alike. The company stipulated that they would not be responsible for mistakes or delays in the transmission of nor for the non-delivery of unrepeated messages from whatever cause arising, and that half the usual price for transmission would be charged in addition for repeated messages:—

Held, that the obligation of the company to use due care and skill in the transmission of a message arose entirely out of contract, and that the vendor of goods who received an offer by telegraph from the vendee could not maintain an action against the company for a mistake in the message. Playford v. United Kingdom Electric Telegraph Co., 10 B. & S. 759 ; 38 L. J., Q. B. 249 ; L. R. 4 Q. B. 706 ; 21 L. T. 21 ; 17 W. R. 968.

An electric telegraph company's act provided that the public without preference, shall have the use of the company's telegraph, subject to reasonable regulations, to be made by the company. When a person wishes to transmit a message by the telegraph, a message paper is handed to him for his signature, on which is indorsed a notice that messages of consequence ought to be repeated from the station to which they are addressed, and that a higher rate is charged for repeated messages, and that the company will not be responsible for mistakes in the transmission of unrepeated messages :—Held, that the company was not liable for the consequences of such mistakes ; that the condition introduced into the notice was reasonable ; and if not a reasonable regulation under the act, it was such a limitation of liability as the company in the character of common carriers, was entitled to create by notice to their customers. M'Andrew v. Electric Telegraph Co., 17 C. B. 3 ; 25 L. J., C. P. 26 ; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1073 ; 4 W. R. 7.

—— Warranty given in Error.]—The respondent's ship was in a port in Australia under orders to proceed to R. The respondent entered into a contract with the appellants in the United Kingdom to purchase a cargo of coal, to be loaded in Australia. The appellants telegraphed to their agents in Australia as to the terms and conditions of the sale, and added instructions as to the destination of the ship. They had no authority from the respondent to give any orders as to the destination. By a mistake of a telegraph clerk, C. was given as the destination instead of R. The appellants' agents in Australia informed the master of the ship that they had instructions to direct him to proceed to C. The master hesitated to change his destination, and the appellants' agents then gave him a letter "to confirm our verbal instructions as to your destination "—naming C. as his destination — and continuing, "this letter will be a sufficient guarantee for your proceeding on your voyage " :—Held, that the letter amounted to a warranty upon which the respondent could sue for damages he had sustained through the ship proceeding to C. instead of to R. Brown v. Law, 72 L. T. 779 ; 8 Asp. M. C. 230—H. L. (E.)

Actions for Misdelivery.]—No action will lie against a telegraph company at the suit of the receiver for the misdelivery of a telegram, unless there is either a contract between him and the company, or (possibly) fraud on their part in the transmission of it. Dixson v. Reuter's Telegraph Co., 47 L. J., C. P. 1 ; 3 C. P. D. 1 ; 37 L. T. 370 ; 26 W. R. 23—C. A.

The plaintiffs carried on business as merchants at Valparaiso, and were a branch house of a firm at Liverpool. A telegraph company, through the negligence of their agent misdelivered a telegraphic message to the plaintiffs. The message purported to be from the plaintiffs' Liverpool house, and to be a large order for barley ; but in fact it was not from the Liverpool house, nor intended for the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs executed the supposed order, and, having suffered a heavy loss in consequence, claimed damages against the telegraph company :—Held, that they were not entitled to maintain their action, as there was no contract between themselves and the company, nor any duty upon the company to transmit messages correctly. Ib.

The receiver of a telegram cannot maintain an action for a mistake which has caused him damage. The person who pays for the transmission of a message is the only person who has a right of action in case he is damnified by the negligence of the company or its servants. Playford v. United Kingdom Electric Telegraph Co., 17 L. T. 243 ; 16 W. R. 219.

—— For Non-delivery.] — The defendant's business was to collect the telegraphic messages for transmission to America and other places. The plaintiff entrusted the defendant with a message in cypher, which was unintelligible to the defendant, for transmission to America. The defendant negligently omitted to send the message. The consequence was that the plaintiff lost a sum of money which he would have earned for commission upon an order to which the message related :—Held, that the plaintiff could not recover such sum of money from the defendant, but only nominal damages. Sanders v. Stuart, 45 L. J., C. P. 682 ; 1 C. P. D. 326 ; 35 L. T. 370 ; 24 W. R. 949.

Use of Cyphers.]—A telegram company in London made arrangements with the defendants, being two individuals in Australia, for the transmission of messages, in which certain words were used as short expressions of the names and addresses of the principal customers ; and the defendants were described as agents of the telegram company. In a little time the parties quarrelled, and one of the defendants came to England to carry on an independent telegram business with his partner in Australia, and sent circulars to the customers of the telegram company, mentioning that he had their cyphers. On motion to restrain him from using the cyphers :—Held, that there was nothing confidential in the cyphers, and that he was entitled to use them. Reuter's Telegram Co. v. Byron, 43 L. J., Ch. 661.

Equivalent to Letter.]—Semble, that a telegram, if properly identified, is equivalent to a letter. Coupland v. Arrowsmith, 18 L. T. 755.

Privileged Communications.]—When a communication, libellous in itself, but such that the occasion of it would have rendered it privileged if made by letter to the person alone to whom it was addressed, was in fact made by means of a telegram, it is not privileged, though made bonâ fide, because the mode of conveying the information necessarily involves publication to the post-office clerks :—Held, it was not less a publication because s. 20, of the Telegraph Act, 1868, makes the disclosure of the contents of a telegraphic message by any official in the post-office a misdemeanour. Williamson v. Freer, 43 L. J., C. P. 161 ; L. R. 9 C. P. 393 ; 30 L. T. 332 ; 22 W. R. 878.

Communications or messages transmitted through telegraph offices are not privileged, and the clerks transmitting the same must disclose their contents in a court of justice.

Waddell, In re, 8 Jur. (N.S.) 181, Part 2. S. P., Ince, In re, 20 L. T. 421.

Production of Telegrams by Post-office.]—On a subpœna from the court of bankruptcy to produce all telegrams sent by the bankrupt from a certain date, the secretary of the post-office was ordered to produce the documents sought for, the court intimating that such subpœnas should be prepared so as to meet the convenience of the officials. Smith (Thomas), In re, 7 L. R. Ir. 286.

The post-office authorities may be ordered to produce specified telegrams. Tomline v. Tyler, 44 L. T. 187.

Notice of Injunction by, how made.]—Sufficient notice of the granting of an injunction may be given by telegram. Langley, Ex parte, Smith, Ex parte, Bishop, In re, 49 L. J., Bk. 1; 13 Ch. D. 110; 43 L. T. 181; 28 W. R. 174.

Contracts by Telegram—Sufficiency within Statute of Frauds.]—When, in answer to an offer to buy land, written and signed instructions of acceptance are given in the usual way to a telegraph company to be telegraphed, and a telegram is sent in the usual way in accordance therewith, there is a sufficient contract in writing within the Statute of Frauds. Godwin v. Francis, 39 L. J., C. P. 121; L. R. 5 C. P. 121; 22 L. T. 338.

B. having entered into a contract with C., the brother of the defendant, for the sale of hay, brought an action against the defendant for not accepting. The judge at the trial admitted letters and telegrams signed by C. as evidence against the defendant, and the jury found for the plaintiff:—Held, that there was sufficient evidence of the authority, and that the two telegrams, of which one was signed in C.'s name, and in the other the name of the defendant was not mentioned as buyer, together constituted a sufficient memorandum of the contract to satisfy the statute of frauds, on the ground that the defendant might be treated as the undisclosed principal of C., who appeared on the telegrams to be liable as principal. McBlain v. Cross, 25 L. T. 804.

—— Mistake in Telegram—Effect of.]—The defendant wrote a message for transmission by telegraph to the plaintiff, ordering three rifles. By mistake the telegraph clerk telegraphed the word "the" for "three;" and the plaintiffs thereupon, acting upon a previous communication with the defendant to the effect that he might perhaps want as many as fifty rifles, sent that number to him. He declined to take more than three. In an action against him to recover the price of fifty rifles:—Held, that he was not responsible for the mistake of the telegraph clerk, and that therefore the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover the price of more than three rifles. Henkel v. Pape, 40 L. J., Ex. 15; L. R. 6 Ex. 7; 23 L. T. 419; 19 W. R. 106.

A firm of shipbrokers signed a charterparty in the form, "by telegraphic authority" of the charterer "as agent." Owing to a mistake made by the officials in its transmission, the rate of freight offered by the charterer had been misrepresented in the telegram which the shipbrokers had received from him:—Held, in an action brought by the owners of the ship against the shipbrokers for breach of warranty of authority, that evidence of persons engaged in the business was admissible to explain the effect of the form of signature, that such evidence showed that it was commonly adopted in order to negative the implication of any further warranty by the agent than that he had received a telegram, which, if correct, authorised such a charter as that which he was signing, and that the shipbrokers were therefore not liable. Lilly v. Smales, [1892] 1 Q. B. 456; 40 W. R. 544.

—— Revocation of Offer.]—The defendant, being possessed of warrants for iron, wrote from London to the plaintiffs at Middlesborough asking whether they could get him an offer for the warrants. Further correspondence ensued, and ultimately the defendant wrote to the plaintiffs fixing 40*s.* per ton, net cash, as the lowest price at which he could sell, and stating that he would hold the offer open till the following Monday. The plaintiffs on the Monday morning at 9.42 telegraphed to the defendant: "Please wire whether you would accept forty for delivery over two months, or if not, longest limit you could give." The defendant sent no answer to this telegram, and after its receipt on the same day he sold the warrants, and at 1.25 p.m. telegraphed to plaintiffs that he had done so. Before the arrival of his telegram to that effect, the plaintiffs having at 1 p.m. found a purchaser for the iron, sent a telegram at 1.34 p.m. to the defendant stating that they had secured his price. The defendant refused to deliver the iron, and thereupon the plaintiffs brought an action against him for non-delivery thereof. The jury found at the trial that the relation between the parties was that of buyer and seller, not of principal and agent. The state of the iron market was very unsettled at the time of the transaction, and it was impossible to foresee when the plaintiff's telegram was sent at 9.42 a.m. how prices would range during the day:—Held, by Lush, J., that under the circumstances the plaintiffs' telegram at 9.42 ought not to be construed as a rejection of the defendant's offer, but merely as an enquiry whether he would modify the terms of it, and that, although the defendant was at liberty to revoke his offer before the close of the day on Monday, such revocation was not effectual until it reached the plaintiffs; consequently the defendant's offer was still open when the plaintiffs accepted it, and the action was, therefore, maintainable. Cooke v. Oxley, (3 Term Rep. 653) discussed. Stevenson v. McLean, 49 L. J., Q. B. 701; 5 Q. B. D. 346; 42 L. T. 897; 28 W. R. 916.

—— Where made.]—The plaintiff telegraphed from Regent Street to the defendant at Ludgate Hill directing him to make bets, on his behalf, on certain horses. The defendant replied by telegram, "You are on." Upon the plaintiff suing the defendant, as his agent, in the mayor's court for 356*l.* received to his use, the defendant applied for a writ of prohibition:—Held, that the application must be refused, since the whole cause of action arose within the city—the telegraph office being merely the medium through which the parties were brought into communication—and they were accordingly in the same position as if they had met together in the city and made a contract. Cowan v. O'Connor, 57 L. J., Q. B. 401; 20 Q. B. D. 640; 58 L. T. 857; 36 W. R. 895.

Packed Messages.]—By an agreement with the plaintiffs the defendant was to receive a commission on the company's charge for messages sent by the defendant along their line: Held, that under this agreement the defendant was not at liberty to pack several messages into one, charging for them separately, and yet as between himself and the company only treating it as a single message. International Telegraph Co. v. Reuter, 4 W. R. 510.

Telegrams—Increased Charge—Authority of Clerk.]—Where a certain sum is charged for a telegram and the sender is afterwards called upon to pay an increased sum:—Held, that he is bound to pay the amount so claimed, as the postmaster-general is in no way estopped from suing, and is not bound by inaccurate representations made by a clerk in his employ. Postmaster-General v. Green, 51 J. P. 582.

Unpublished Information—Copying by Rival Firm—Injunction.]—It is competent for a news agency to collect information from a public source and transmit it to subscribers to whom it is new upon the terms that they shall not communicate it to third parties; and the court will interfere by injunction to restrain a subscriber from communicating such information to a third party in breach of his contract, and also to restrain a third party from inducing a subscriber to break his contract by supplying him with such information with a view to publication. Exchange Telegraph Co. v. Central News, 66 L. J., Ch. 672; [1897] 2 Ch. 48; 76 L. T. 591; 45 W. R. 595.

Licensee of Monopoly—Licence to Supply Stock Exchange Telegraphs Simultaneously—Injunction—Contract by Telegraph Company to Supply Tape-Recording Instruments—Personal Service.]—The defendants were a company incorporated under the Companies Act, 1862, and licensed by the postmaster-general under the Telegraph Act, 1869, s. 5, to establish telegraphs within the limits of their districts, which included the London Stock Exchange, for the purpose of simultaneously transmitting news to their subscribers. This news consisted, amongst other things, of current fluctuations of prices on the stock exchange, and was, by the permission of the stock exchange, collected there by the defendants' agents, and distributed from the defendants' offices to the offices of their subscribers by means of tape-recording instruments supplied by the defendants. The plaintiff was not a member of the stock exchange, and was in the habit of advertising for business. The defendants had entered into three separate contracts with the plaintiff by which they undertook to supply him with three of their instruments. By the rules of the stock exchange its members were not allowed to advertise, and the stock exchange having required the defendants to cease supplying outside brokers who advertised with the special information collected in the building, the defendants disconnected the three instruments from the supply of that class of news:—Held, that the licence of the defendants was neither a monopoly at common law nor part of the monopoly conferred on the postmaster-general by the Telegraph Act, 1869, and therefore that there was no duty imposed by the licence for the non-performance of which the plaintiff could sue the defendants. Cochrane v. Exchange Telegraph Co., 65 L. J., Ch. 334.

Two of the three contracts were made without reference to the rules of the stock exchange; the third contract was made subject to the rules of the stock exchange:—Held, that, although under the circumstances of the case there had been breaches by the defendants of the two former contracts, the plaintiff was entitled to damages only and not to an injunction, the contracts being for personal service in reference to a chattel. Ib.

4. Injuring Property of Company.

Cables.]—A ship's anchor got entangled with an electric cable, and the cable was cut by order of the master:—Held, that, under the circumstances, the master was guilty of a want of nautical skill, and that the admiralty court had jurisdiction to entertain a suit against the ship, and the ship was condemned in damages and costs. The Clara Killam, 39 L. J., P. 50; L. R. 3 Adm. 161; 23 L. T. 27; 19 W. R. 25.

The plaintiffs were the owners of a telegraphic cable lying at the bottom of the sea between England and France. The defendants were aliens, and their ship, while sailing upon the high sea more than three miles from the English coast, lowered an anchor, and injured the cable:—Held, that the court would presume that the masters of ships were aware of the existence and situation of submarine cables, and that a duty was thereby cast upon all such masters of ships to manage their vessels so carefully and skilfully as to avoid (if possible, in the exercise of reasonable precaution) injuring these cables. Submarine Telegraph Co. v. Dickson, 15 C. B. (N.S.) 759; 33 L. J., C. P. 139; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 241; 10 L. T. 32; 12 W. R. 384.

B. TELEPHONE.

Infringement—Postmaster-General's Exclusive Privilege of Transmitting "Telegrams."]—Edison's telephone, for which patents were granted in 1877 and 1878, consists of a transmitter, a wire, and a receiver. When sounds are spoken into the transmitter, electric currents of varying intensity pass along the wire, so that corresponding or equivalent sounds are heard at the receiver, and two persons at a distance can thus converse with one another. A company leased these telephones to subscribers at yearly rents which produced a profit to the company, and arranged the wires so that subscribers could converse with one another when put into communication by a servant of the company:—Held, that Edison's telephone was a "telegraph" within the meaning of the Telegraph Acts, 1863 and 1869, although the telephone was not invented or contemplated in 1869. Att.-Gen. v. Edison Telephone Co., 50 L. J., Q. B. 145; 6 Q. B. D. 244; 43 L. T. 697; 29 W. R. 428.

Held, also, that a conversation through the telephone was a "message," or at all events a "communication transmitted by a telegraph," and therefore a "telegram" within the meaning of those acts: and that since the company made a profit out of the rents, conversations held by subscribers through their telephones were infringements of the exclusive privilege of transmitting telegrams granted to the postmaster-general by the Act of 1869, and were not within the exceptions mentioned in s. 5. Ib.

Hiring of Wires—Notice to Determine Agreement—Waiver by Acceptance of Rent—Threats to cut off Wires—Injunction.]—An injunction granted to restrain the cutting off of communication, in breach of an agreement to "erect and maintain in working order" certain telephone wires and apparatus. Keith, Prowse & Co. v. National Telephone Co., 63 L. J., Ch. 373; [1894] 2 Ch. 147; 8 R. 776; 70 L. T. 276; 42 W. R. 380; 58 J. P. 573.

The demand and acceptance of rent due subsequent to a notice to determine a tenancy of chattels is a waiver of the notice. Ib.

Semble, where a term in chattels has expired and rent has been subsequently accepted, a tenancy from year to year is created, and the tenant is entitled to six months' notice to determine the tenancy, whatever may have been the length of notice required during the continuance of the original tenancy. Ib.

A. IN WHAT CASES.

Covenant.]—Upon a bare covenant for the payment of money, the defendant may plead a tender. Johnson v. Clay, 1 Moore, 200; 7 Taunt. 486.

So, in covenant on an insurance against fire, a tender may be pleaded, and money paid into court under 19 Geo. 2, c. 37, s. 7. Solomon v. Bewicke, 2 Taunt. 317.

Bill of Exchange.]—An acceptor of a bill of exchange cannot plead a tender after the day of payment. Dobie v. Larkan, 10 Ex. 776; 3 W. R. 247.

Action for Unliquidated Damages.] — A defence of tender of the sum paid into court cannot be pleaded to a claim for unliquidated damages. Davys v. Richardson, 57 L. J., Q. B. 409; 21 Q. B. D. 202; 59 L. T. 765; 36 W. R. 728—C. A.

A tender before action is not pleadable to an action for unliquidated damages. Dearle v. Barrett, 2 A. & E. 82; 4 N. & M. 200; 3 D. P. C. 13.

Mortgagor and Mortgagee.]—If the mortgagor tenders the money to the mortgagee and he refuses it, his interest shall cease from that time, and he ought not to keep the pledge. Manning v. Burgess, 1 Ch. Ca. 29.

As to a tender of mortgage-money, there ought to be reasonable notice of paying it in, and, if the tender be insisted on, to stop interest, the money must be kept dead from that time, because the party is to be always ready, six months' notice being given to pay in the mortgage-money at H.: though this be not the place mentioned in the proviso of the deed, yet where money was lent in town, and no objection made to the notice, no reason for a personal tender, or to make a man carry a great sum to a person in the country. Gyles v. Hall, 2 P. Wms. 378.

Interest on mortgage not stopped, but on a proper tender and notice. Garforth v. Bradley, 2 Ves. 678. See also Robarts v. Jefferys, 8 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 137. Harmer v. Priestley, 16 Beav. 569; 22 L. J., Ch. 1041; 1 W. R. 343.

Tender of payment by mortgagor to agent of mortgagee, and refusal to accept, and twenty-four years thereafter suffered to elapse without demand from mortgagee of principal or interest; payment of principal or interest for whole decreed, under the circumstances. Meade v. Bandon (Earl), 2 Dow, 268.

Where covenants are inserted in a deed of assignment on the part of a mortgagee, he may refuse to take the principal and interest, though tendered, till he has advised with his attorney on the safety of executing the assignment, being entitled to reasonable time. Wiltshire v. Smith, 3 Atk. 89 ; 9 Mod. 441.

B. BY AND TO WHOM.

1. Agents, Clerks, or Servants.

To Authorised Agent, &c., is a Good Tender.]—A tender of money to an agent or a servant, authorised to receive payment, is a good tender to the creditor himself. Goodland v. Blewith, 1 Camp. 477 ; 10 R. R. 731. And see Anon., 1 Esp. 349.

No Authority to Accept.]—A tender to a managing clerk is good, though he should have received orders not to accept it. Moffatt v. Parsons, 5 Taunt. 307 ; 1 Marsh. 55 ; 15 R. R. 506.

A creditor told his clerk, previously authorised to receive money, not to receive a sum if offered him by a certain debtor, for that he had put it into the hands of his attorney ; and the clerk, on tender made, refused to receive the money, and assigned the reason :—Held, that this was a good tender to the principal. Ib.

Money payable as a composition on a sum due to a solicitor for costs was tendered to a clerk in his office, who, saying that the solicitor was out, and that he, the clerk, had "no instructions," refused the money :—Held, per Lord Coleridge, C.J., that the clerk's statement did not amount to a disclaimer of his authority to receive the money ; as he was apparently conducting his master's business in the office, such authority might be implied ; and, therefore, the tender was good. Per Denman, J., that the statement was, in effect, a disclaimer of authority ; the case was, therefore, indistinguishable from Bingham v. Allport (1 N. & M. 398), and the tender was bad. Finch v. Boning, 4 C. P. D. 143 ; 40 L. T. 484 ; 27 W. R. 872.

Where a person demands the payment of money at his office, such demand amounts to a special authority for his clerk there to receive it ; therefore, in his absence, a tender to the clerk is a good tender, although he states that he is not authorised to receive the money. Kirton v. Braithwaite, 1 M. & W. 310 ; 5 D. P. C. 101 ; 2 Gale, 48 ; 1 Tyr. & G. 945 ; 5 L. J., Ex. 165.

A tender made to the managing clerk of the plaintiff's attorney, who at the time disclaims authority from his master to receive the debt, is insufficient. Bingham v. Allport, 1 N. & M. 398 ; 2 L. J., K. B. 86.

A., the plaintiff's attorney, wrote to the defendant, stating that a debt due from the defendant to the plaintiff "must be paid to me" on the next day. A tender was made on the next day to a writing-clerk of A., in A.'s office, who said that he could not take the money, as A. was out, and the person must wait till he came in :—Held, not a good tender, as not being made to a person authorised to receive money ; but, that if A.'s letter had asked payment "at my office," a tender to any person in the office who was carrying on the business there would have been sufficient. Watson v. Hetherington, 1 Car. & K. 36.

If an attorney sends a letter to demand payment, and the debtor makes a tender to him, that is a good tender, unless the attorney disclaims his authority at the time ; and if the attorney is absent, he is bound by the acts of those whom he allows to represent him at his office. Therefore, after such a letter sent, a tender to the clerk of the attorney at his office (the attorney being absent) is good. Wilmot v. Smith, 3 Car. & P. 453 ; M. & M. 238 ; 31 R. R. 732.

Authority of Principal to tender Smaller Sum.]—A tender by the agent of a debtor of the whole sum demanded by the creditor, by pulling out his pocket-book, and offering, if he would go into a neighbouring public-house, to pay it, which the creditor refused to take, is good, although the agent is only authorised by the debtor to tender a sum short of the whole sum demanded, and offered the rest at his own risk. Read v. Goldring, 2 M. & S. 86 ; 14 R. R. 594.

2. Joint or Separate Demands.

If A., B. and C. have a joint demand, and C. has a separate demand on D., and D. offers A. to pay him both the debts, which A. refuses, without objecting to the form of the tender, on account of his being entitled only to the joint demand, D. may plead this tender in bar of an action on the joint demand, and should state it as a tender to A., B. and C. Douglas v. Patrick, 3 Term Rep. 683 ; 1 R. R. 793.

If A. is indebted to several persons in different sums of money, and when they are all assembled together tenders them one gross sum sufficient to satisfy all their demands, which they refuse to receive, insisting on more being due, this is a good tender. Black v. Smith, Peake, 88 ; 3 R. R. 661.

Where a party has separate demands for unequal sums against several persons, an offer of one sum for the debts of all will not support a plea, stating that a certain portion of this sum was tendered for the debt of one. Strong v. Harvey, 3 Bing. 304 ; 11 Moore, 72 ; 4 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 57.

The defendants (co-tenants) were let into possession of land under an agreement to give up possession at any time on payment of a fair equivalent for the crop :—Held, that a tender to one co-tenant only, of compensation for the crop, was a sufficient tender to the others, so as to entitle the landlord to maintain ejectment. Loddiges v. Lister, 1 L. T. 548.

B. MODE OF MAKING.

1. What Money or Notes.

Legal Coin.]—A tender to be strictly legal must be made in the coin of the realm, and the money should be produced ; but an offer in fact may be made equivalent in law, by waiver of the legal requisites of a strict undeniable tender, by putting it on a ground which works a dispensation. Polglass v. Oliver, 2 C. & J. 15 ; 2 Tyr. 89 ; 1 L. J., Ex. 5.

—— Waiver of Objection.]—To invalidate a tender, or to divest an offer to pay of the legal effect of a tender, if the objection is to the medium of the offer to satisfy, and not to the sum offered, the ground of the rejection must be stated, or it is a waiver of the objection of insufficiency in that particular respect, and it cannot afterwards be taken advantage of in court, on the score of not being an effective legal tender ; in other words, an objection on a point of fact works a waiver of objections on points of law. Such waiver may be implied, though not expressed. Ib.

Bank Notes.]—Bank notes were not made a legal tender by 37 Geo. 3, c. 45. Grigby v. Oakes, 2 Bos. & P. 526.

Circumstances may make that amount to a tender in equity, which was not pleadable as such at law, e.g. a tender in bank notes, during the restriction as to the issue of cash, semble. Biddulph v. St. John, 2 Sch. & Lef. 534.

—— Not Objected to.]—Yet a tender of a Bank of England note was good, if not objected to at the time. Brown v. Saul, 4 Esp. 267. S. P., Wright v. Read, 3 Term Rep. 554.

So a tender of a country bank bill will be good if no objection is made to it on that account. Lockyer v. Jones, Peake, 180, n.; 3 R. R. 682, n. S. P., Tiley v. Courtier, 2 C. & J. 16, n.; Polglass v. Oliver, 2 C. & J. 15; 2 Tyr. 89; 1 L. J., Ex. 5.

Cheque—No Objection to.]—A tender made in the form of a cheque in a letter is a good tender, where no objection is made to the quality but only to the quantum of the tender; and though the letter contains a request that a receipt may be sent back, yet such request does not vitiate the tender, for it is not a condition. Jones v. Arthur, 8 D. P. C. 442; 4 Jur. 859.

2. Production of Money.

Is Necessary.]—To make a legal tender, there must either be an actual offer of the money produced, or the production of it must be dispensed with by the express declaration or an equivalent act of the creditor. Thomas v. Evans, 10 East, 101; 10 R. R. 229.

A tender is not good where the money is not in sight, but the witness supposed it was in a desk and never saw it produced, so that it did not appear, that, if the party was willing to accept the money, it could be immediately paid; the money should be at hand and capable of immediate delivery. Glasscott v. Day, 5 Esp. 48; 8 R. R. 828. S. P., Huxham v. Smith, 2 Camp. 21; 11 R. R. 651.

If a party tells his creditor that he will pay him so much, and puts his hand into his pocket to take out the money, but before he can get it out the creditor leaves the room, and the money, consequently, is not produced till he is gone, this is no tender. Leatherdale v. Sweepstone, 3 Car. & P. 342.

A letter from a solicitor of B., to the solicitor of A., stating his willingness to pay the money due, and stating "Dr. B. now tenders," &c., but not actually tendering the amount, does not amount to a tender, although A.'s solicitor treated it as a tender, and wrote, in answer, "I decline your tender, and shall file a bill." Powney v. Blomberg, 14 Sim. 179; 13 L. J., Ch. 450; 8 Jur. 746.

What is Sufficient Production.]—Where the plaintiff disputes the quantum, to prove a tender some money must be proved to have been produced, though it is not necessary to prove the exact sum. Dickinson v. Shee, 4 Esp. 68.

Where a person offers a sum of money, by way of tender, and states the precise sum he so offers, which he holds in his hand, it is a sufficient tender, although it is twisted up in bank notes and not shown to the party. Alexander v. Brown, 1 Car. & P. 288.

Where the defendant ordered A. to pay the plaintiff 7*l.* 12*s.*, and the clerk of the plaintiff's attorney demanded 8*l.*, on which A. said, that he was only ordered to pay 7*l.* 12*s.*, which sum was in the hands of B., and B. put his hand to his pocket, with a view of pulling out his pocket-book to pay 7*l.* 12*s.*, but did not do so, by the desire of A.; but B. could not say whether he had that sum about him, but swore that he had it in his house, at the door of which he was standing at the time:—Held, that this was not a legal tender, as the money should have been produced to the attorney's clerk. Kraus v. Arnold, 7 Moore, 59.

Production Waived—By what Means.]—If at an interview between the plaintiff and the defendant, when the defendant is willing to pay 10*l.*, a third person present offers to go up stairs and fetch that sum, but is prevented by the plaintiff's saying "he cannot take it;" such offer is a good tender; and although the defendant did not at the time take notice of what was done, yet his pleading it afterwards is a sufficient ratification of the act. Harding v. Davis, 2 Car. & P. 77; 31 R. R. 654.

Where a vendor admits it would be fruitless, a tender is unnecessary. Jackson v. Jacob, 3 Bing. (N.C.) 869; 5 Scott, 79; 3 Hodges, 219; 6 L. J., C. P. 315.

In the case of a tender, if the party to whom it is to be made says, "You need not make a tender to me, as I will not accept it," it is considered as made. Wallis v. Glynn, 19 Ves. 380; G. Coop. 284.

Where the creditor insists on more being due, it is not necessary to produce the money tendered. Black v. Smith, Peake, 88; 3 R. R. 661.

On a plea of tender of 1*l.* 12*s.* 5*d.*, the jury found specially, that the defendant's attorney called on the plaintiff, and said, "I come to pay you 1*l.* 12*s.* 5*d.*, which the defendant owes you;" that the attorney put his hand into his pocket, but did not produce the money; the plaintiff said, "I cannot take it, the matter is now in the hands of my attorney":—Held, that such finding did not warrant a judgment for the defendant. Finch v. Brook, 1 Scott, 70; 2 Scott, 511; 1 Bing. (N.C.) 253; 2 Hodges, 97; 4 L. J., C. P. 1.

In an action for non-delivery of a cargo, it was proved that a larger sum was demanded for freight by the master than was due, and that the demand was so made as to amount to an announcement by the master, that it was useless to tender a smaller sum, as it would be refused:—Held, that these facts amounted to a dispensation of a tender. The Norway, Br. & Lush. 404; 3 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 245; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 892; 13 L. T. 50; 13 W. R. 1085.

A trader who, under a trader debtor summons, served under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 81, had signed an admission of a debt, went to his creditor with the amount of it in his pocket in money, and told the creditor that he had come for the purpose of paying that amount. The creditor said it was of no use, as it was too late, and that the debtor must see the creditor's attorney:—Held, that the production of the money was dispensed with, and that there was a good tender. Danks, Ex parte, 2 De G. M. & G. 936; 22 L. J., Bk. 73; 1 W. R. 57.

3. Requiring Change.

If Change required, no Tender.]—A plea of a tender of 20*l.* is supported by evidence of the tender of a larger sum, though such larger sum was tendered as the sum which the creditor was to receive, and not as the sum out of which he was to take the 20*l.* Dean v. James, 1 N. & M. 303; 4 B. & Ad. 547; 2 L. J., K. B. 94.

Where a defendant tendered seven sovereigns in payment of a demand of 6*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*, and said to the plaintiff, "There, take your demand," and at the same time delivered a counter-claim upon the plaintiff of 1*l.* 5*s.*, who said, "You must go to my attorney":—Held, that this was not sufficient to support a plea of tender to an action for 6*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.* Brady v. Jones, 2 D. & R. 305. And see Holland v. Phillips, 6 Esp. 46.

A tender of a larger sum, requiring change, is not a good tender of a smaller sum. Robinson v. Cook, 6 Taunt. 336; 16 R. R. 624.

A plea of tender of a half-year's rent simply, is not supported by evidence of a tender of the half-year's rent, requiring the lessor to get change and pay back the property tax. Ib.

It is not a good tender of a fractional sum for the debtor to offer a creditor a bank note to a larger amount, and to desire him to take out of that the sum to be paid. Betterbee v. Davis, 3 Camp. 70; 13 R. R. 755.

4. Waiver by Claiming Larger Sum.

In what Cases.]—A tender of 2*l.* to pay 1*l.* 13*s.* is good, if the plaintiff objects to receive it only because he is entitled to a larger sum, and not on the ground that he has no change. Cadman v. Lubbock, 5 D. & R. 289; 3 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 41.

Where the defendant, who owed the plaintiff 108*l.* for principal and interest on two promissory notes, in consequence of an application from the plaintiff's attorney for the amount, sent a person to the attorney, who told him he came to settle the amount due on the notes, and desired to be informed what was due, and laid down 150 sovereigns on a desk, out of which he desired the attorney to take the principal and interest, but the attorney refused to do so, unless a shop account, due from the plaintiff to the defendant, was fixed at a certain amount:—Held, that this was a good tender of the 108*l.* Bevans v. Rees, 5 M. & W. 306; 7 D. P. C. 510; 8 L. J., Ex. 263; 3 Jur. 608.

A tender of a bank note in payment of a fractional sum is good, if the creditor objects to receive it merely on the ground of the sum offered to be paid being less than the sum claimed, although the creditor is required to return the difference between the bank note and the fractional sum. Saunders v. Graham, Gow, 121.

A declaration stated an agreement by the defendants to repair the plaintiff's ship for a reasonable price to be charged by them to the plaintiff, and upon completion to redeliver the ship to the plaintiff upon payment of such price so to be charged. That the repairs were completed, and the plaintiff was ready and willing to pay the defendants such price as aforesaid, whereof they had notice. Breach, that they did not charge a reasonable price, but demanded an exorbitant sum as the price of the repairs, and gave notice to the plaintiff that they would not redeliver the ship until payment thereof, and detained the ship after she was completed until payment of the exorbitant sum. Plea, no tender of a reasonable price, or of any sum in respect thereof. Replication, waiver of the tender:—Held, that the replication was good and the plea bad. By the terms of the agreement the defendants were bound to deliver their bill of reasonable charges, and the plaintiff was relieved from the necessity of making a tender. Watson v. Pearson, 9 Jur. (N.S.) 501; 8 L. T. 395; 11 W. R. 702.

5. Demand of a Receipt.

Providing Stamp for—Condition.]—A tender must be unconditional, and of the precise sum due; therefore a plea of tender is not supported by evidence that the defendant took a sum of money out of his pocket, and said to the plaintiff, "If you will give me a stamped receipt, I will pay you the money;" as by 43 Geo. 3, c. 126, s. 4, the person from whom the money is due may require the person receiving to give him a receipt and pay the amount of the stamp duty, and, if he refuses to do so, he is liable to a penalty. Laing v. Meader, 1 Car. & P. 257.

Going with money in hand to make a tender, and demanding "whether the creditor has a receipt stamp," and receiving an answer in the negative, without an actual offer of the money, will not support a tender. Ryder v. Townsend (Lord), 7 D. & R. 119; 4 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 27.

Where a creditor, on a tender being made, refused to receive the money, on account of more being due:—Held, that he could not afterwards object to the tender, on the ground that the party making it required a receipt. Richardson v. Jackson, 8 M. & W. 298; 9 D. P. C. 715; 10 L. J., Ex. 303. S. P., Cole v. Blake, Peake, 179; 3 R. R. 681.

Where a sufficient tender is made in a letter which requests that a receipt may be sent back, such request does not vitiate the tender, for it is not a condition. Jones v. Arthur, 8 D. P. C. 442; 4 Jur. 859.

Demand of Receipt in Full.]—Issue was joined upon a plea of tender of 7*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.* It was proved that the defendant's witness tendered that sum to the plaintiff, observing, "I offer you 7*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.*, as the balance of 35*l.*, and I demand a receipt in full." The plaintiff refused to receive it, alleging that the amount was insufficient:—Held, a conditional and therefore an invalid tender. Foord v. Noll, 2 D. (N.S.) 617; 12 L. J., C. P. 2.

A tender of a quarter's rent, coupled with a demand of a receipt to a particular day, the contest between the parties being whether one or two quarters' rent were due, is not a valid tender. Finch v. Miller, 5 C. B. 428.

If a person tenders money, but will not pay it unless the person to whom it is tendered will give him a receipt in full of all demands, such a tender is bad. Griffith v. Hodges, 1 Car. & P. 419. S. P., Glascott v. Day, 5 Esp. 48; 8 R. R. 828.

A tender is not good where the debtor at the time required the creditor to sign a receipt, which expressed that the sum tendered was the balance due. Higham v. Baddely, Gow, 213.

6. Must be Unconditional.

A tender to be good must not be clogged with a condition. Jennings v. Major, 8 Car. & P. 61.

The attorney of A. put down 18*l.*, and said to the other party, "I tender you 18*l.* for Mr. M." :—Held, that this was a good tender. Ib.

A tender to be good must be unconditional, so that if the creditor takes the money, and there is more due, he may still bring an action for the residue. Mitchell v. King, 6 Car. & P. 237. S. P., Greenwood v. Sutcliffe, 61 L. J., Ch. 59 ; [1892] 1 Ch. 1 ; 65 L. T. 797 ; 40 W. R. 214—C. A. And see cases supra.

Questions for Jury.]—A defendant made a tender in these terms : "I have called to tender 8*l.* in settlement of the account." The judge thought this a conditional tender, but the jury found for the defendant :—Held, that it was for the jury to determine the meaning of the language used, and that the construction was not a question of law. Eckstein v. Reynolds, 7 A. & E. 80 ; 2 N. & P. 256 ; 6 L. J., K. B. 198.

The question, as to whether a tender was made conditionally or not, is for the jury. Marsden v. Goole, 2 Car. & K. 133.

Tender in Full Discharge.]—If ten sovereigns are offered to a person, and he is told that he may "take those ten sovereigns in full of his demand," that is not a good tender. Cheminant v. Thornton, 2 Car. & P. 50.

An offer of a certain sum in full of a demand is not a legal tender. Strong v. Harvey, 3 Bing. 304 ; 11 Moore, 72 ; 4 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 57.

In an action for taking the carriage horses which the plaintiff had hired of the defendant, to convey him from the defendant's inn ; he pleaded that the plaintiff refused to pay his bill for entertainment, and that the defendant did so to prevent the removal of the plaintiff's carriage. To this plea the plaintiff replied, he tendered the defendant 45*l.*, and the defendant rejoined, denying the tender. It was proved that the plaintiff put down the money, and offered it, if the defendant "would take it in full of the bill" :—Held, that this was not a valid tender, and that this evidence did not support the replication. Gordon v. Cox, 7 Car. & P. 172.

An offer to pay a sum of money to be accepted as the whole balance due, where a larger sum is claimed, does not amount to a legal tender. Evans v. Judkins, 4 Camp. 156.

Where a plaintiff offered to take a sum tendered in part of his demand, and the defendant would only allow him to take it "as a settlement" :—Held, not a good tender. Mitchell v. King, 6 Car. & P. 237.

If a person puts down a sum of money, and the creditor offers to take it in part, and the debtor will not allow him to do so, saying that no more is owing ; this is not a good tender, because a person tendering money should tender it without making any terms, and leaving it open for one party to say that more was due, and to the other, that the sum tendered was sufficient. Peacock v. Dickerson, 2 Car. & P. 51, n.

Creditor does not make Admission if Tender Valid.]—In support of a plea of tender, the evidence of the witness was, "I went to the plaintiff, and told him I came with the amount of Oliver's (the defendant's) bill. The plaintiff said he would not take it ; it was not his bill. I offered it to him as the amount of his bill" :—Held, that this tender was good, and that the plaintiff might have accepted the amount without thereby making any admission that no more was due. Henwood v. Oliver, 1 G. & D. 25 ; 1 Q. B. 409 ; 10 L. J., Q. B. 158.

A tender of a less sum than is due, accompanied with a statement, "that it is more than was due, but that the plaintiff might take it all," is a good tender of the amount offered. Thorpe v. Burgess, 8 D. P. C. 603.

The acceptance of such a tender does not preclude the party accepting it from proceeding for the remainder of his claim. Ib.

If a person offers a sum, "as all that is due," that is not a good tender. A party by accepting a sum properly tendered, does not thereby compromise his claim to a larger sum, which he would do if he took a sum offered "as all that was due." Sutton v. Hawkins, 8 Car. & P. 259.

A tender is not vitiated by the person making it saying, at the time of making it, that it was all the debtor considered to be due. Robinson v. Ferreday, 8 Car. & P. 752.

A good tender cannot be made in terms which, by taking the money, would cause the other party to make an admission. Hastings (Marquis) v. Thorley, 8 Car. & P. 573.

If a person in tendering a sum of money says, "I tender you 21*l.* in payment of the half-year's rent due at Lady-day last," this will make the tender bad, because, by accepting the money, the other party would admit that the sum was the amount of half a year's rent. Ib.

A tender is valid if it implies merely that the party offers a given sum as being all that he admits to be due, but if it implies also that if the other party takes the money he is required to admit that no more is due, the tender is conditional and insufficient. Bowen v. Owen, 11 Q. B. 130 ; 17 L. J., Q. B. 5 ; 11 Jur. 972.

A tenant sent to his landlord 26*l.* with a letter, in these words : "I have sent with the bearer 26*l.* to settle one year's rent of Nant-y-pair." The landlord refused to take it, saying that more was due :—Held, a good tender. Ib.

The plaintiff tendered rent to the defendants, his landlords, with the words. "Here is your quarter's rent" :—Held, that this did not require the landlord to make any admission as to the amount due, as a condition of its receipt, and was therefore a good tender. Jones v. Bridgman, 39 L. T. 500.

A tender of a certain sum as being "all that is due," is bad. Field v. Newport &c. Ry., infra.

Waiver by saying that Money not Enough.]—Where it was proved that an agent of the defendant had gone to the plaintiff and had offered him 4*l.* "in full discharge of his account," and the question of the meaning of these words was not left to the jury, but a verdict was directed to be entered for the plaintiff :—Held, that the tender was sufficient, the plaintiff having offered no objection at the time it was made, either to its form, or that he was called upon to accept the sum tendered in full discharge, but rejecting it simply on the ground that the money was not enough. Bull v. Parker, 2 D. (N.S.) 345 ; 12 L. J., Q. B. 93 ; 7 Jur. 282.

7. Under Protest.

Validity.]—A. demanded 20*l.* as rent due from B., and B. having claimed deductions which A. would not allow, B. then put down twenty sovereigns, and said, "I tender you 20*l.* under protest" :—Held, a good tender, as this was not a conditional tender, the words "under protest" merely importing that B. did not acquiesce in the demand of A., and did not mean to preclude himself from recovering the money back again if he could. Manning v. Lunn, 2 Car. & K. 13.

A tender accompanied by a protest is valid. Sweney v. Smith, 38 L. J., Ch. 446; L. R. 7 Eq. 324.

A shareholder in a company formed for working certain patents owed 40*l.* to the company in respect of calls on his shares. He sent a cheque for that amount to the secretary, along with a letter, which began thus:—"Herewith I forward a cheque for 40*l.*, being the amount of the call made upon me for twenty shares which I hold in the company." Then followed a protest against the payment, on the ground that certain patents which had been sold to the company were invalid; and the letter concluded in these terms:—"I request that you will enter this my protest in the records of the company, and further, that this money be held in trust by the directors (each of whom I shall hold responsible for repayment of the same) until the question of the vendor's patent rights has been settled":—Held, that this was a good tender of payment, and that the concluding words of the letter imposed no obligation or liability on the directors. Ib.

Though a conditional tender is not good, a tender under a protest, reserving the right of the debtor to dispute the amount due, is a good tender if it does not impose any conditions on the creditor. Greenwood v. Sutcliffe, 61 L. J., Ch. 59; [1892] 1 Ch. 1; 65 L. T. 797; 40 W. R. 214—C. A.

A mortgagor tendered to a mortgagee in possession the balance appearing to be due for principal, interest, and costs, according to an account made out by the mortgagor from documents furnished by the mortgagee, such balance being less than what the mortgagee claimed to be due. The mortgagor stated at the time that he did not admit the correctness of the mortgagee's accounts, and that he intended to take steps to dispute them, and to have the costs taxed. The mortgagee refused to accept the sum tendered. The mortgagor then brought an action to redeem:—Held, that the tender, as it did not impose any conditions on the mortgagee, was a good tender, and that the mortgagor was entitled to accounts, for the purpose of showing whether it was sufficient in amount, reserving further consideration and costs in case it proved to have been sufficient; the ordinary decree to stand in case the tender was shown to have been insufficient. Ib.

8. Entire Demand.

Tender of Part.]—A demand of a certain sum, made up of two sums, claimed on two distinct grounds, is not a demand of either. Field v. Newport, &c. Ry., 3 H. & N. 409; 27 L. J., Ex. 396.

Therefore, where a railway company, entitled to distrain for tolls, demanded a sum in gross, made up of two sums, the one due for tolls, the other not so due, and the party tendered the amount due for tolls as being all that was due:—Held, that the company was not entitled to distrain, but was not precluded by the tender from recovering the toll. Ib.

A tender of part of an entire demand is inoperative. Dixon v. Clarke, 5 C. B. 365; 5 D. & L. 155; 16 L. J., C. P. 237.

And a tender of part of a debt is not made valid by the debtor having a set-off for the balance. Searles v. Sadgrove, 5 El. & Bl. 639; 25 L. J., Q. B. 15; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 21; 4 W. R. 53.

If A. demands from B. 1*l.* 7*s.* for several matters, including 10*s.* for a particular service performed by A., and B. tenders 19*s.* 6*d.*, this will not support a plea of tender of 10*s.* on account of such service. Hardingham v. Allen, 5 C. B. 793; 17 L. J., C. P. 198; 12 Jur. 584.

—— Pleading.]—Action by payee against the maker of a promissory note for 15*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*, payable on demand, averring a demand on a particular day. Plea, as to 3*l.*, parcel, &c., a set-off, due at the time when the note was demanded, and ever since; and as to 12*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*, residue, &c., that at the time of the demand the defendant tendered the plaintiff 12*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*, and has always from the time of making his promise, as to 12*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*, been ready and willing to pay that sum, and now brings the same into court; replication to the first plea, a traverse that any set-off was due at the commencement of the suit; to the second, that, before making the alleged tender, and before and at the time of making the demand and refusal hereinafter mentioned, a larger sum than 12*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*, to wit, 15*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*, including the 12*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*, was due upon the note; and that before the tender, the plaintiff demanded payment of the 15*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*, which so included the 12*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*, but the defendant refused to pay the 15*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*; and that, at the time of such demand and refusal, no set-off or other just cause for non-payment thereof existed:—Held, that the replication was good Cotton v. Godwin, 7 M. & W. 147; 9 D. P. C. 763; 10 L. J., Ex. 243.

A replication, alleging that the sum pleaded to, and brought into court, was not sufficient to satisfy the plaintiff's claims in respect thereof, is bad. Smith v. Manners, 5 C. B. (N.S.) 632; 28 L. J., C. P. 220; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 549.

Action for work and labour, money paid, and on an account stated. Plea, as to 4*l.* 16*s.*, parcel, &c., that, after the making of the promises, the defendant tendered to the plaintiff 4*l.* 16*s.*, and as to that sum, he has always been ready to pay the 4*l.* 16*s.* to the plaintiff, and now brings the same into court. Replication, that before making the tender, and before and at the time of the demand and refusal hereinafter mentioned, a larger sum than 4*l.* 16*s.*, to wit, 7*l.* 12*s.*, that sum including the 4*l.* 16*s.*, was due from the defendant to the plaintiff on account of divers of the causes of action in the declaration; and that, before making the tender, the plaintiff demanded of the defendant payment of the 7*l.* 12*s.*, which so included the 4*l.* 16*s.*; yet the defendant did not pay the 7*l.* 12*s.*, but refused to pay the same, and that no set-off or other just cause then existed for the non-payment:—Held, that the replication was good. Tyler v. Bland, 9 M. & W. 338; 1 D. (N.S.) 608; 11 L. J., Ex. 257.

To a declaration for breaking into and entering the plaintiff's house and converting his goods, the defendant pleaded that the plaintiff's house was situate in a township in which a poor-rate had been made, that the plaintiff omitted to pay it, and that the churchwardens and overseers applied to two justices, who issued a warrant directing them to levy the amount and costs incurred by them. The plea then justified the trespasses under the warrant, as a servant of the overseers. Replication, a tender before distress of the amount of the rate (omitting the costs): —Held, that the replication was bad, as pleading a tender of part only of what was due. Walsh v. Southwell, 2 L. M. & P. 91; 6 Ex. 150; 20 L. J., M. C. 165.

A replication that, before and at the time of the tender, a larger sum was owing and was demanded, and not paid, is no answer to a plea of tender as to a smaller sum. Brandon v. Newington, 3 G. & D. 194; 3 Q. B. 915; 12 L. J., Q. B. 20; 7 Jur. 60.

A declaration on simple contract, containing two counts, in each of which 26*l.* was demanded. The defendant pleaded as to 5*l.*, parcel, &c., a tender. The plaintiff replied, that before and at the time of the tender, and of the request and refusal after mentioned, and until and at the commencement of the action, a larger sum than 5*l.*, to wit, 13*l.* 15*s.*, part of the money in the declaration demanded, was due from the defendant to the plaintiff as one entire sum, and on one entire contract and liability, and inclusive of and not separate or divisible from the sum of 5*l.*, and the same being a contract and liability by which the defendant was liable to pay to the plaintiff the whole of the larger sum in one entire sum, upon request; and that after the last-mentioned and larger sum had become so due, and while the same remained unpaid, the plaintiff requested of the defendant payment of the last-mentioned and larger sum, of which the 5*l.* in the plea mentioned was such indivisible parcel as aforesaid, yet that the defendant refused to pay the larger sum, wherefore the plaintiff refused the 5*l.*:—Held, that the replication was a good answer to the plea; and that if there was any set-off or other just cause for not paying the larger sum, it should come by way of rejoinder. Dixon v. Clarke, 5 C. B. 365; 5 D. & L. 155; 16 L. J., C. P. 237.

Action for money received. Pleas, except as to 7*l.*, never indebted. Except as to the 7*l.* set-off. And as to 7*l.* a tender and payment into court. Replication to the last plea, that, at the time of tender, a larger sum was due as one entire sum on one entire contract. The judge, at the trial, having ruled that the tender was good, and that, if the payment into court and set-off made up the amount, the verdict should be for the defendant, and a verdict having been found accordingly, the court granted a rule absolute for a new trial. Phillpotts v. Clifton, 10 W. R. 135.

Solicitor Retained.]—It is no answer to a plea of tender before the commencement of the suit, that the plaintiff had, before such tender, retained an attorney and instructed him to sue out a writ against the defendant, and that the attorney had accordingly applied for such writ before the tender, which was afterwards sued out. Briggs v. Calverly, 8 Term Rep. 629.

Tender without Solicitor's Charge.]—The plaintiff's attorney, before bringing the action, wrote to the defendant to say, that, unless the debt, together with his (the attorney's) charge for that letter, was paid at his office on the Wednesday following, at twelve o'clock, proceedings would be commenced. On the Wednesday, at ten o'clock, an agent of the defendant went to the attorney's office, and there saw a boy, to whom he tendered the amount of the debt only. The boy, after referring to the letter-book, refused to accept it, unless the charge was also paid. The writ was issued at eleven o'clock on that day:—Held, that this was a good tender. Kirton v. Braithwaite, 1 M. & W. 310; 5 D. P. C. 101; 2 Gale, 48; 5 L. J., Ex. 165.

D. DEMAND AFTER TENDER.

Demand must be of Exact Sum.]—If the plaintiff in his reply alleges a subsequent demand and refusal, it is incumbent on him to prove, that, after the tender admitted in the pleadings, he demanded of the defendant the exact sum specified as having been before tendered and refused. Spybey v. Hide, 1 Camp. 181.

Where, to a declaration on a bill of exchange for 10*l.* 4*s.* the defendant pleaded non assumpsit as to all except 4*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*, and as to that a tender, with an averment that the defendant was always ready and willing to pay the same; and the plaintiff replied, that the defendant was not always ready and willing to pay the said sum, and a demand thereof after the cause of action accrued, and before the tender, and issue was taken thereon; and on its being proved that the defendant had paid 7*l.* on account of the bill, and had tendered 3*l.* 4*s.*, a verdict was found for him:—Held, that the replication was not supported by proof of a demand of the whole debt due, but could only be supported by proof of the demand of the precise sum tendered. Rivers v. Griffiths, 1 D. & R. 215; 5 B. & Ald. 630; 22 R. R. 505.

By whom Demand Made.]—Where the issue is on a subsequent demand and refusal to a plea of tender, the demand of the debt, to do away the effect of the tender, must be by some one authorised to receive it, and to give the debtor a discharge. Coles v. Bell, 1 Camp. 478, n; 10 R. R. 731, n. S. P., Coore v. Callaway, 1 Esp. 115.

This principle applies even in replevin. Pimm v. Grevill, 6 Esp. 95.

To whom Demand Made.]—After a tender of what is due from two persons on a joint contract, a subsequent application to one of them is sufficient to support a replication, that the plaintiff subsequently demanded payment from both. Peirse v. Bowles, 1 Stark. 323; 18 R. R. 775.

Evidence of Demand.]—A letter demanding payment of a debt sent to the defendant's house, and to which an answer is returned that the demand should be settled, is sufficient evidence of a demand, on the issue of a subsequent demand and refusal to a plea of tender. Hayward v. Hague, 4 Esp. 93.

E. EFFECT AND PROOF.

Effect of, as an Admission.]—A tender admits the contract and facts stated in the declaration. Cox v. Brain, 3 Taunt. 95.

A plea of tender merely admits the defendant's liability on the contract to the amount tendered. Willis v. Langridge, 2 H. & W. 250. S. P., Seaton v. Espinasse, 5 Bing. 187; 2 M. & P. 301; 6 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 208.

When a declaration shows substantially a contract, and a tender in compliance with it, the plaintiff is not estopped from contending for the true interpretation of the contract by the fact that he has also set out in his declaration an alternative case of a tender which would not have been a compliance. M'Connel v. Murphy, L. R. 5 P. C. 203 ; 28 L. T. 713 ; 21 W. R. 609.

A lessee, after certain supposed breaches of covenant, tendered money as rent. The lessor refused to receive it as rent, but finally did accept it, though protesting that he took it not as rent under the lease, but as compensation for the occupation of the premises merely, and that he did not mean to waive, but expressly reserved, the right of re-entry :—Quære, whether if there had been any forfeiture by breaches of covenant, this acceptance of the money was a waiver of them. Croft v. Lumley, 6 H. L. Cas. 672 ; 27 L. J., Q. B. 321 ; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 903 ; 6 W. R. 523.

Effect of Plea.]—A promise to pay the debt of another need not be proved to be in writing, when the defendant pleads a tender to the count on such promise. Middleton v. Brewer, Peake, 15 ; 3 R. R. 643.

After a plea of tender the plaintiff cannot be nonsuited. Harding v. Spicer, 1 Camp. 327.

A plea of tender is good in the usual form, alleging the defendant to have always been ready and willing to pay, and before the commencement of the action to have tendered the money. Smith v. Manners, 5 C. B. (N.S.) 632 ; 28 L. J., C. P. 220 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 549.

The meaning of a plea of tender is, that the defendant has always been ready to perform his contract. Poole v. Crompton, 5 D. P. C. 468. S. C., nom. Poole v. Thumbridge, 2 M. & W. 223 ; 6 L. J., Ex. 74. S. P., Hume v. Peploe, 8 East, 168 ; 9 R. R. 399.

Payment into Court.]—If a defendant brings money into court on a plea of tender, the plaintiff may take it out, though he replies that the tender was not made before action. Le Grew v. Cooke, 1 Bos. & P. 332.

If money is paid into court with a defence of tender, the plaintiff only recovers in the action, the excess. James v. Vane, 2 El. & El. 883 ; 29 L. J., Q. B. 169 ; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 731 ; 2 L. T. 281 ; 8 W. R. 446.

A defendant pleaded the general issue as to part, and as to the other part a tender, but omitted to pay the money into court ; judgment having been on that acount signed as for want of a plea, the court set aside the judgment for irregularity. Chapman v. Hicks, 2 D. P. C. 641 ; 2 C. & M. 633 ; 3 L. J., Ex. 219.

If a defendant pleads a tender without paying the money into court, the plaintiff may sign judgment. Anon., 1 Tidd's Prac. 612.

Proof.]—Proof of a tender of 20*l.* 9*s.* 6*d.* in bank-notes and silver is sufficient to support a plea of tender of 20*l.* Dean v. James, 4 B. & Ad. 547 ; 1 N. & M. 393 ; 2 L. J., K. B. 94.

A plea to an avowry of a tender of 16*l.* will not be supported by proof of a tender of 15*l.* 16*s.*, although no more rent was due than the sum proved to have been tendered. John v. Jenkins, 1 C. & M. 227 ; 3 Tyr. 170 ; 2 L. J., Ex. 83.

An entry of a tender and a refusal, made by the deceased clerk of the plaintiff's attorney, in a day-book kept for the purpose of minuting his daily transactions, is admissible in evidence to prove the tender. Marks v. Lahee, 3 Bing. (N.C.) 408 ; 4 Scott, 137 ; 6 L. J., C. P. 69.

In an action on an agreement to let the plaintiff a messuage for a year from the 25th March, the plaintiff to take the fixtures at a valuation and to pay the same on entry :—Held, that it was open to the plaintiff to show a tender on the 10th April. Edman v. Allen, 6 Bing. (N.C.) 19 ; 8 Scott, 261 ; 9 L. J., C. P. 49.

Action for use and occupation, work and labour, money lent and money paid, and for money due on an account stated. Several pleas, as to all but 7*l.*, parcel of the moneys in the declaration ; and a single plea, as to 7*l.*, parcel of the moneys in the declaration, of tender and payment of the sum into court. The pleas did not distinguish the counts. The plaintiff traversed the tender :—Held, that proof of a single tender of 7*l.*, in respect of the use and occupation, satisfied the plea of tender. Robinson v. Ward, 8 Q. B. 920 ; 15 L. J., Q. B. 271 ; 10 Jur. 409.

F. TENDER OF AMENDS.

1. In General.

Replication to Plea of.]—Where a defendant in trespass pleads that he tendered to the plaintiff a certain sum, being a sufficient amends, the plaintiff should reply that the defendant did not tender the sum named, or that that sum was insufficient, and not that he did not tender sufficient amends. Williams v. Price, 3 B. & Ad. 695 ; 1 L. J., K. B. 258.

Local Act where no Plea.]—By a local act commissioners were empowered to cause any present or future sewers, ditches, drains, &c., to be opened, enlarged, altered or cleansed ; and in case any action should be brought against any person for anything done in pursuance of the act, or in relation to the matters therein contained, the plaintiff should not recover in any such action, if tender of amends should have been made to him, or his attorney, by or on behalf of the defendant before such action brought ; and in case no such tender should be made, that it should be lawful for the defendant, by leave of the court, to pay money into court ; and if the matter should appear to have been done in pursuance and under the authority of the act, and after sufficient satisfaction made or tendered, then that the jury should find for the defendant. The commissioners, of whom the defendant was one, appointed a committee to inspect a ditch, with a view to widening the same, and to report thereon. The committee having reported thereon in favour of widening the ditch, the commissioners appointed a second committee, of whom the defendant was one, to confer with a surveyor respecting the work, with power to two of them to act. The defendant being afterwards told by the clerk to the commissioners that he might proceed without further instructions from the commissioners, took the plaintiff's land for the purpose of widening the drain, without having given him notice or obtained his consent. The land was taken for the bonâ fide purpose of widening the drain. The defendant, before action, tendered 10*l.* as amends, which the plaintiff refused to accept ; but no tender was pleaded, nor was the amount paid into court. The jury found the trespass, and that the damage amounted to 5*l.* :—Held, first, that although neither the defendant was, nor the commissioners were, authorised to take the land without the plaintiff's consent in writing, yet the defendant was entitled to the protection of the act. Jones v. Gooday, 9 M. & W. 736 ; 1 D. (N.S.) 914 ; 11 L. J., Ex. 297.

Held, secondly, that the defendant was not bound to plead the tender, or pay the amount tendered into court. Ib.

1. LICENCE.

Necessity for.]—The 10 Geo. 2, c. 28, s. 2, prohibited acting plays for gain, without patent from the king, or licence from the lord chamberlain. Section 5 provided, that no person shall be authorised by patent or licence to act except within the city and liberties of Westminster, or where the king shall be resident:—Held, that the prohibition in s. 2 was not merely co-extensive with the exempting power as limited by s. 5, but prevailed throughout the kingdom. Rex v. Neville, 1 B. & Ad. 489.

Neither letters patent from the crown, nor a licence from the lord chamberlain, could be granted for any dramatic performances within 10 Geo. 2, c. 28, except in Westminster or some place where her majesty was residing. Dramatic performances, therefore, within twenty miles of London or Westminster, and not in Westminster, or in the place of her majesty's residence, could not be rendered legal by any authority whatever; for 25 Geo. 2, c. 36, extends only to music and dancing. Levy v. Yates, 3 N. & P. 249 ; 1 W., W. & H. 219 ; 8 A. & E. 129 ; 7 L. J., Q. B. 138.

Discretion of Justices — Condition — Excise Licence.]—Upon an application for a stage licence a licensing committee are entitled in the exercise of their discretion to take into consideration the fact that the holder of a stage licence can thereby obtain an excise licence for the sale of intoxicating liquors from the excise authorities under s. 7 of 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 39, and the refusal of such an application, unless the applicant undertakes not to apply for an excise licence, is no ground for interfering with the exercise of the committee's discretion. Reg. v. Yorkshire (West Riding) County Council, 65 L. J., M. C. 136 ; [1896] 2 Q. B. 386 ; 75 L. T. 252 ; 44 W. R. 650 ; 60 J. P. 550.

Unlicensed Theatre—Contracts Relating to.]—Where the plaintiff was participant in the concern, he could not recover money which he had paid at the request of the defendant in the conduct of an unlicensed theatre. De Begnis v. Armistead, 10 Bing. 107 ; 3 M. & Scott, 511 ; 2 L. J., C. P. 214.

No action will lie for the breach of an agreement to hire a theatre for the performance of plays, if it appears that no licence can be granted by the lord chamberlain for that theatre, on the ground of its not coming within the provisions of 10 Geo. 2, c. 28. Levy v. Yates, 3 N. & P. 249 ; 1 W., W. & H. 219 ; 8 A. & E. 129 ; 7 L. J., Q. B. 138.

No play can lawfully be acted for hire, gain, or reward, within twenty miles of London, without the authority of letters patent from the king, or of a licence from the lord chamberlain ; and no such letters patent, or licence, can be granted so as to authorise the performance of plays at any place except within the city or liberties of Westminster, or where the king may happen to reside. An agreement, therefore, for a partnership in acting plays at a theatre situate within twenty miles of London, but not within the city or liberties of Westminster, or in the place of the king's residence, is one to which the court will not give effect. Ewing v. Osbaldiston, 2 Myl. & C. 53 ; 6 L. J., Ch. 161 ; 1 Jur. 50.

Having regard to the provisions of 10 Geo. 2, c. 28, s. 2, and 25 Geo. 2, c. 36, ss. 2, 3, no action can be maintained for the breach of an agreement "to dance at the king's theatre in the Haymarket, or at such other place as the plaintiff should appoint," if it appear that no licence for that theatre was granted by the lord chamberlain, as required by the 10 Geo. 2, c. 28 ; and that the plaintiff did not request the defendant to dance at any other place which was licensed. Gallini v. Laborie, 5 Term Rep. 242 ; 2 R. R. 581.

Letters Patent.]—The court refused to seal a patent for representing Italian operas, because the provisions for carrying it on were by agreement with the lord chamberlain, his executors and administrators, and the right to the patent was not sufficiently connected with the property in the house. Not sufficient for the party applying merely to answer objections, but he must lay a proper case. Upon such application the court will take care that the king is not deceived, or his object disappointed, and will represent the whole to the king, but will not decide upon the merits of the various claimants. Essential to the complaint of an old market against a new one set up near it, that the old is competent in the accommodation of the public ; so here the old proprietors must be able to keep it up properly, the accommodation of the public being the principal thing. O'Reilly, Ex parte, 1 Ves. J. 112 ; 1 R. R. 89.

By the 26 Geo. 3, c. 57, s. 1, the crown was authorised to grant letters patent for establishing and keeping a theatre in Dublin ; and, by s. 2, it was enacted that no person should, for hire, act any play in any theatre in Dublin, except in such theatre as should be so established by letters patent, under the penalty of forfeiting 300*l.* for every such offence, to be sued for by the common informer. Under this statute, the crown granted letters patent to H., authorising him, during a certain time, to keep a theatre in Dublin, and his majesty prohibited and forbid all persons whatsoever during the term that they presume to keep open, in any manner, any theatre in Dublin, and therein to act any play, unless they should be thereunto authorised by his majesty:—Held, that the patentee could not maintain a bill for an injunction to restrain unauthorised persons acting plays in a theatre in Dublin, for the keeping of which no patent had been granted. Such a bill can only be maintained upon the ground of interest in the plaintiff; and unless he can sustain an action in the case, the injunction cannot be supported. Calcraft v. West, 2 Jo. & Lat. 123; 8 Ir. Eq. R. 74.

Evidence as to.]—In an action against a performer for not performing at a licensed theatre, pursuant to his contract, evidence that the performances have gone on without interruption is sufficient primâ facie evidence that the theatre is duly licensed. Rodwell v. Redge, 1 Car. & P. 220.

Proof that a party was the acting manager of a theatre, and that he paid the salary of and dismissed one of the performers, is sufficient proof that he caused the performances; and if he caused the performances, it is not material whether he did so as the agent of others or not. Parsons v. Chapman, 5 Car. & P. 33.

When Required—House or Place.]—A booth theatre, which is taken to pieces and carried from place to place for theatrical performances, is not a "house or other place of public resort for the public performance of stage plays," within 6 & 7 Vict. c. 68, s. 2. Davys v. Douglas, 4 H. & N. 180; 28 L. J., M. C. 193; 7 W. R. 327.

The appellant was the owner and occupier of a building which he gratuitously allowed to be used on a few occasions for the performance of stage plays, to which the public were admitted on payment, for the benefit of a charity. The appellant had no licence for the performance of stage plays in such building:—Held, that he was rightly convicted, of having or keeping a house for the public performance of stage plays without a licence, under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 68, s. 2. Shelley v. Bethell, 53 L. J., M. C. 16; 12 Q. B. D. 11; 49 L. T. 779; 32 W. R. 276; 48 J. P. 244.

But a booth theatre, which is taken to pieces and carried from place to place for theatrical representations, is a place within 6 & 7 Vict. c. 68, s. 11, and a person causing a stage play to be acted therein for hire, is liable to the penalty imposed by that section, if it be not licensed, and not a patent theatre. Fredericks v. Payne, 1 H. & C. 584; 32 L. J., M. C. 14; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1109; 7 L. T. 329; 11 W. R. 36.

A person hired a room for six nights, paying 7*l.* for the hire, and then issued playbills announcing theatrical representations, and also collected at the door the money paid for admission by those attending the same. The place was not licensed for stage plays:—Held, that he could not be convicted, under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 68, s. 2, of having and keeping a house or place for performance of stage plays; but he might be convicted, under s. 11, of causing stage plays to be represented. Reg. v. Rosenthal or Strugnell, 7 B. & S. 124; 35 L. J., M. C. 78; L. R. 1 Q. B. 93; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 269; 13 L. T. 433; 14 W. R. 193.

A person who, without licence, acts stage plays for hire in a temporary booth, brings himself within the penalty imposed by 6 & 7 Vict. c. 68, s. 11, on a person peforming stage plays "in any place not being a patent theatre, or duly licensed as a theatre." Tarling v. Fredericks, 28 L. T. 814; 21 W. R. 785.

Stage Play, what is.]—A dramatic performance (a duologue) by two persons is a stage play, within the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 68, s. 23. Thorne v. Colson, 3 L. T. 697.

A house, licensed for music and dancing, was used to represent an entertainment in which there was a dialogue between parties bodily on the stage (with all its accessories), and also dramatic action, and a regular plot performed by other parties, not upon the stage, but whose images were reflected upon it:—Held, a stage play. Day v. Simpson, 18 C. B. (N.S.) 680; 34 L. J., M. C. 149; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 487; 12 L. T. 386; 13 W. R. 748.

S. occupied a house of public resort, licensed for music and dancing. There were a pit and private boxes, a band, a stage, and curtain. Upon this stage was performed a ballet divertissement by dancers dressed as ballet dancers, who danced, and in so doing described, by certain gestures and motions, the ideas of war, peace, and reconciliation:—Held, first, that the question whether a performance is a stage play within 6 & 7 Vict. c. 68, s. 23, is a question of fact. Wigan v. Strange, 35 L. J., M. C. 31; L. R. 1 C. P. 175; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 9; 13 L. T. 371; 14 W. R. 103.

Held, secondly, that the performance was a stage play, within the meaning of the act. Ib.

Tumbling is not an entertainment of the stage within 10 Geo. 2, c. 28. Rex v. Handy, 6 Term Rep. 286.

Power of Police to enter Unlicensed Places.]—A portable theatre or booth, consisting of two caravans or waggons, drawn from place to place by horses, and when joined together forming a temporary structure for the performance thereon of stage plays, is not a tenement within 2 & 3 Vict. c. 47, s. 46. Fredericks v. Howie, 1 H. & C. 381; 31 L. J., M. C. 249; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 750; 6 L. T. 544; 10 W. R. 796.

Convictions.]—The plaintiff was convicted under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 68, s. 2, and fined 5*l.*; he was then ordered to be detained in custody, and a warrant of distress, reciting that he had been adjudged to pay a penalty of 5*l.* and 12*s.* costs, was issued to levy the amount. Under this warrant the plaintiff's goods were seized on the same day, and he was discharged out of custody on the following morning; and within a few days his goods were sold to satisfy the penalty and costs. The conviction was quashed on appeal:—Held, by Coleridge and Wightman, JJ., that, assuming they had power, under 5 Geo. 4, c. 18, s. 1, to detain the plaintiff until it was ascertained whether he had goods to satisfy the distress, the order for the detention of the plaintiff was made without jurisdiction, being indefinite as to time and object. Leary v. Patrick, 15 Q. B. 266; 4 New Sess. Cas. 258; 19 L. J., M. C. 211; 14 Jur. 932.

Held, by the court, that, assuming that costs could be awarded in addition to the penalty, the warrant of distress was issued without jurisdiction, notwithstanding s. 19 of the 6 & 7 Vict.

c. 68, because the conviction was silent as to costs. Ib.

Held, by Lord Campbell, C. J., and Patteson, J., that the warrant of distress being illegal, the imprisonment which was founded upon it was without jurisdiction. Ib.

Held, by the court, that the justices having exceeded their jurisdiction, and the conviction having been quashed, the case was within 11 & 12 Vict. c. 44, s. 2, and therefore trespass was the proper form of action. Ib.

2. PRIVILEGES OF ADMISSION.

Rights of Renters of Stalls or Boxes.]—Trustees acting for the shareholders or rentallers of a theatre, called the Queen's Theatre and Opera House, who had obtained a feu right to the site, granted in 1858 a disposition of the ground and buildings to one J. B., a subject, inter alia, to the real burden of a perpetual annuity of 2*l.* per share to each rentaller of the said Queen's Theatre and Opera House, and to the successors or assignees of them; and it was further declared that each of the said rentallers, or the assignees or successors of such, should at all times be entitled, inter alia, to free admission to the auditorium of the said Queen's Theatre and Opera House; also declaring that J. B. should not convert the said theatre to any other use; and that he should keep it open for performance six months in each year. There was no stipulation as to insurance of the theatre or as to the re-building of it in case of destruction by fire or otherwise. In 1865 the theatre was entirely destroyed by fire, and was re-built by J. B.'s trustee and called by another name. In 1875 it was again entirely burnt down, and again re-built. From 1865 to 1879 the theatre, under the new name, was twice sold, but in each case the conveyance was granted subject to the "real burdens, conditions, provisions, declarations, and others," specified in the original disposition of 1858, and especially under the burden of payment of the annuities to the rentallers, and of allowing these parties the privileges to which they were entitled. The privilege of free admission was enjoyed by the rentallers for fourteen years after the destruction of the first theatre. But in 1879 disputes arose as to the validity of the rentallers' right to, inter alia, the privilege of free admission. The trustees maintained that the rentallers were entitled under the disposition of 1858 and the succeeding conveyances to the same privileges in the new theatre which they had in the first:—Held, that the privileges conferred on the rentallers by the original dispositions—other than the payment of the annuities which was constituted a real burden—rested only on the personal obligation of the original disponee, and were confined to the theatre then in existence, and that the subsequent deeds, to which the rentallers were not parties, were not intended to, and did not, confer on them any new right. Scott v. Howard, 6 App. Cas. 285—H. L. (Sc.)

A new renter of Drury Lane Theatre, under 1 Geo. 4, c. 60, is entitled to free admission to any disengaged stall, the stalls being a portion of the "usual audience part of the theatre" within the meaning of s. 3. Dauney v. Chatterton, 45 L. J., C. P. 293; 33 L. T. 628—C. A.

When once the new renter has given up his ticket, and been shown to a seat in that portion of the usual audience part to which he first seeks admission, he is entitled, during the remainder of the performance, to no greater privilege than an ordinary member of the public who has been admitted by payment to that portion of the usual audience part of the theatre. Ib.

W., in 1816, became, under an order of the court, purchaser of the opera house, and was in possession as equitable owner until possession was delivered to C. in 1821. No assignment of the terms of years for which the premises were held was made to W., but the same were vested in T., who, in 1821, on behalf of and by the direction of W., assigned the terms to C. (who was mortgagee of the premises), but "subject to the right of possession of W., his executors, &c., to the box numbered 124, usually occupied by him, or his or their nominees, not exceeding in number six persons nightly, during the remainder of the several terms granted by the indenture, and of the terms covenanted by the indenture to be granted." In 1823 W. assigned his leasehold or other interest in the opera house and other property to H. W., in trust for the benefit of his creditors, and he, as such trustee, or his solicitor, received the rents and profits of the opera box numbered 124, to 1838, and his solicitor continued to receive the rents to 1850. In 1823 C. filed a bill for specific performance of the contract of 1821, and in 1829 a decree was made to that effect, and it declared that he was entitled to the leasehold premises of the opera house, to the rents, and to a renewal at the cost of W. C., from 1821 to 1845, paid the rents of the box to, or permitted the same to be received by, H. W. or his solicitor, by virtue of the reservation in the assignment of 1821. In 1845 the assignees of C. sold the opera house to L. for the residue of the terms subsisting by virtue of the covenants for renewal in the indenture of 1821. In the contract for sale the indenture of 1821 was noticed, and it was provided that it should be subject to such rights to boxes as the premises were then subject to. A renewed lease was granted in 1845. L., from 1845 to 1850, paid the rents of the box to the solicitor of H. W., or persons claiming under him; but since 1850 he had refused to pay any rent for such box. In 1855 the plaintiff was appointed a new trustee under the deed of assignment by E. W. of 1823. By the renewed lease of 1845 L. was restrained from disposing of boxes for more than one year, except forty-one boxes, to be selected within five years, which he was at liberty to dispose of at pleasure, but after that period provision was made for his acquiring, with the assent of the lessors, the right of disposing of other boxes. In May, 1856, L. assigned the lease of 1845 to the defendant, who, as alleged, had notice of the plaintiff's claim to the box. On a bill filed by the plaintiff for a declaration that he was entitled to the box, or to an equivalent in money for the residue of the renewed term of 1845:—Held, that the defendant refusing to make compensation in money or otherwise, the plaintiff was entitled to the relief sought. Helling v. Lumley, 28 L. J., Ch. 249; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 301; 7 W. R. 152—L.JJ.

Trespass to Sub-Lessee's Boxes and Stalls.]—The lessee of a theatre held it under a lease in which he covenanted not to convert it to any other use than for acting or performing operas or theatrical entertainments. He demised certain boxes and stalls to a sub-lessee, reserving power of access for the purpose of repairing; the sub-lessee covenanted only to use the same for the purpose of viewing and hearing the operas and other entertainments. The under-leases contained covenants for quiet enjoyment. The lessee demised the theatre for a term of three months for the purpose of holding religious meetings. To enable these meetings to be held, the stalls were covered with a flooring, the division between the boxes removed, and other temporary structural alterations made:—Held, that a trespass had been committed by the lessee and persons claiming under him in thus entering upon the sub-lessee's boxes and stalls without his licence, and that the conversion of the theatre for other than theatrical purposes was a derogation from the grant and a breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment. Leader v. Moody, 44 L. J., Ch. 711; L. R. 20 Eq. 145; 32 L. T. 422; 23 W. R. 606.

Covenant in Lease Granting—Validity of.]—A., in 1792, granted a lease of a theatre to B., B. covenanting not to grant rights of admission, except 250 free admissions, without the consent of A.; and in case of any of the covenants being broken, the lease to be void. B. then assigned his interest to trustees, to receive the profits and pay the debts, who left B. in the management and direction of the concern: in the course of which, in 1799, B. granted a ticket of admission to C. for twenty-one years. In 1800, the trustees took possession of the theatre, but suffered C. to exercise his privilege of admission till 1814, when the ticket was stopped on the ground that B. had no right to make such a grant:—Held, first, that the covenant by B. with A., not to grant rights of admission, supposing it to have been broken, did not avoid the grant to C.; secondly, that as the trustees had left B. in the management of the theatre, they must be taken to have authorised the grant, and could not afterwards disavow it; thirdly, that this was not an interest in land, but a licence to C. to enjoy the privilege of admission: and, therefore, that it was not necessary that it should pass by deed, or that B. should have been authorised by the trustees, in writing, to make such a grant. Tayler v. Waters, 2 Marsh. 551; 7 Taunt. 374; 18 R. R. 499.

An agreement that the plaintiff should be paid 360*l.* on the 31st December, 1834, for 313*l.* lent by him on the 26th April, 1834, if four persons named should be alive on the 31st December, and that the plaintiff should have the use of two boxes at the V. theatre, in the intermediate time, gratuitously: but if either of the four persons should die, the plaintiff should pay a reasonable sum for the use of the boxes; is not an agreement running with the land, and is therefore not binding, as to the use of the boxes, on an assignee of the theatre. Flight v. Glossop, 2 Scott, 220; 2 Bing. (N.C.) 125; 1 Hodges, 263; 4 L. J., C. P. 268.

—— Specific Performance of.]—An owner of a theatre, in 1839, for valuable consideration, covenanted to confirm to certain debenture holders the privilege of free admission to the theatre. A. was entitled as a debenture holder to the benefits of the deed, but subsequently lost his debenture. Afterwards B. became lessee of the theatre, with notice of the deed:—Held, that A. was not entitled specifically to enforce against B. the privilege of free admission created by the deed. Malone v. Harris, 11 Ir. Ch. R. 33.

—— Determination of.]—By lease not under seal, two trustees on behalf of themselves and the other proprietors of a theatre demised it to S. for three years, reserving to themselves and the other proprietors free liberty of admission to the theatre. S., by lease not under seal, let the theatre to the plaintiff for two nights subject to the terms on which he held the theatre:—Held, that the licence was determined, and that trespass might be maintained by the plaintiff against the defendant, a proprietor, who entered the theatre during his tenancy. Coleman v. Foster, 1 H. & N. 37; 4 W. R. 489.

Covenant in Lease not to Grant.]—A lease contained a covenant not to grant away, assign, dispose of, &c., the stalls or boxes "for any longer period than one year or season." On the 21st December, 1851, the lessee leased certain boxes for one year, to commence from March, 1852. On the 1st of August, 1852, he made another lease of the same boxes to a different person, with his habendum, "from the 1st of February now next ensuing, or from such subsequent day during the year upon which the theatre shall be opened, and thenceforth for the full term of one year to be computed from that day:—Held, that this was not a breach of the covenant. Croft v. Lumley, 6 H. L. Cas. 672; 27 L. J., Q. B. 321; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 903; 6 W. R. 523.

Ratability of Lessee of Box.]—The lessee of a private box at a theatre is ratable to the poor rates in respect of it, under a local act by which the rate was to be laid on every person who shall inhabit, hold, occupy, possess, or enjoy any land, house, shop, wharf, warehouse, or any other building, tenement, or hereditament; although the proprietors of the theatre were also rated for the theatre. Reg. v. St. Martin's-in-the-Fields Overseers, 3 Q. B. 204; 11 L. J., M. C. 112.

3. Contracts relating to.

Commencement of Season.]—On the 16th August, 1871, F. agreed with M. to act for him "for the season of not less than nine months; to commence on the 2nd of October, 1871." F. subsequently, on the 2nd of March, agreed to a renewal of his engagement on the same terms for the next season:—Held, that such second season commenced on the 2nd October, 1872, and terminated in July, 1873. Montague v. Flockton, 42 L. J., Ch. 677; L. R. 16 Eq. 189; 28 L. T. 580; 21 W. R. 668.

Refusal of Actor to Perform.]—Where a father signed a letter, in which he agreed that his daughter should perform at a theatre during the remainder of a season, and consented that she should enter into articles for three following seasons; an action may be maintained on the first part of the agreement for the refusal of the daughter to perform, but the latter part is a mere consent, and not an agreement. Morris v. Paton, 1 Car. & P. 189.

A declaration stated, that the defendant agreed that he and his wife should for three months perform as equestrians on the stage and in the ring in all entertainments which might be produced at A. or elsewhere under the direction of the plaintiff, in such parts as the plaintiff should require, and should attend all calls and rehearsals; that although the plaintiff had an establishment at P. under his direction for equestrian entertainments, and although the plaintiff required the defendant and his wife to join the plaintiff's establishment at P. for the purpose of performing in entertainments to be produced there, and although a reasonable time for joining elapsed before action, yet the defendant and his wife did not join or perform in the entertainments to be produced at P. :—Held, good, inasmuch as it sufficiently appeared that the requisition by the plaintiff was to appear and perform as equestrians on the stage or in the ring. Batty v. Melillo, 10 C. B. 282 ; 1 L. M. & P. 571 ; 19 L. J., C. P. 362.

Held, also, that the breach was good, showing substantially an entire refusal to perform the contract. Ib.

Right of Actor to Notice — Condition Precedent.]—A performer who is called on to resume, in consequence of the illness of another, a part in which by previous performances she had acquired celebrity, is entitled to reasonable notice previously to the time of the performance ; such notice to be proportioned to the reputation at stake. Graddon v. Price, 2 Car. & P. 610 ; 31 R. R. 704.

Agreement "not to Perform elsewhere"—Injunction.]—Where W. agreed with L. that she would sing at his theatre during a certain period of time, and would not sing elsewhere without his written authority :—Held, on a bill filed to restrain her from singing for a third party, and granting an injunction for that purpose, that the positive and negative stipulations of the agreement formed but one contract, and that the court would interfere to prevent the violation of the negative stipulation, although it could not enforce the specific performance of the entire contract. Lumley v. Wagner, 1 De G. M. & G. 604 ; 21 L. J., Ch. 898 ; 16 Jur. 871. Overruling Kemble v. Kean, 6 Sim. 333.

—— Implied Term.]—D., an actor, contracted with the manager of a theatre to play at his theatre for twelve consecutive nights, commencing on a certain day, stipulating that he should be at liberty during those nights to perform (among other characters) three which were named ; but there was no express condition that he should not act elsewhere during the twelve nights. On the approach of the day appointed for commencing the engagement, D. declared that he would only act in a piece which could not be produced at the theatre ; and when told that was impossible, declared that he would not act at all, and advertised himself to act at another theatre on the night appointed for the commencement of his engagement :—Held, that an injunction might be granted to prevent D. acting during the twelve nights at any other theatre during the ordinary hours at which the theatre was open for public performance. Webster v. Dillon, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 432 ; 5 W. R. 867.

A manager of a London theatre engaged a provincial actor, desirous of appearing on the London stage, for two years. Though there was nothing expressed on the subject the court inferred an engagement on the part of the manager to employ the actor for a reasonable time, and on his part not to perform elsewhere. The manager having (under these circumstances) delayed the actor's appearance for five months, he broke his engagement and went to another theatre :—Held, that he had a right so to do, and that the manager was not entitled to an interlocutory injunction to prevent his performing there. Fechter v. Montgomery, 33 Beav. 22.

When an actor enters into a contract to perform at a particular theatre during a particular period, a negative stipulation to the effect that he will not perform elsewhere during that period, though not expressed, will be implied. Montague v. Flockton, 42 L. J., Ch. 677 ; L. R. 16 Eq. 189 ; 28 L. T. 580 ; 21 W. R. 668.

On the 16th August, 1871, F. agreed with M. to act for him :—Held that a negative clause was not necessary, but that M. could obtain an injunction to restrain F. from acting at any other theatre, although such acting might not prevent his acting for M. Ib.

—— Music-hall Artiste.]—The plaintiff K., a music-hall artiste, entered into contracts with each of the three defendant companies by which she agreed to perform for ten weeks certain, commencing at a certain date, every evening at the time notified by the management, in "her usual entertainment as mimic" in two of the contracts, "as singer and mimic" in the other, at a salary of 8*l.* per week in respect of each hall, subject to the following conditions (inter alia)—namely, "that the said artiste shall not perform before nor during this engagement at any theatre, music-hall, club, concert or place of entertainment within one mile of the said music-halls respectively." At the end of the contract was this clause : "In the event of the above-named artiste not observing these conditions in every respect, the company shall have the option of cancelling this agreement." During the fulfilment of the engagement she went to a smoking concert at a certain club one Sunday evening within a mile of these music-halls by invitation. Nobody except members and their guests were admitted to this club, and no admission money was paid. At this concert she sang a song and danced for a few minutes. The following night she performed at the halls, but at one of them the manager asked if she had sung at the club, and she replied she had done so. He told her it was against the rules, and that she must not do it again. The following night a letter was handed her cancelling the three engagements, and signed by the manager of the halls. These actions were then brought by the plaintiff to recover damages for wrongful dismissal, and for breach of contract :—Held, that the word "engagement" did not include Sundays, that day in such contracts being a dies non. That the performance was not within the meaning of the word "perform" as contemplated by the parties, for the plaintiff did not use her powers of mimicry. That, although singing was included in one contract, singing before a private audience such as the present case was not a performance. Kelly v. London Pavilion, 77 L. T. 215.

—— After End of Season.]—An opera singer, by an agreement dated only as to the year, 1870, agreed to sing at a theatre for the whole London season, and nowhere else in the kingdom of Great Britain pendant l'annee 1871, without the written consent of the employer. The salary did not extend beyond the season, which ended on the 5th August. On motion for an injunction to restrain him from singing elsewhere after the season was over but during 1871 :—

Held, that the court would not under the circumstances grant an injunction on an interlocutory application. Mapleson v. Bentham, 20 W. R. 176. Affirmed, Ib. 177, n.—L.JJ.

Agreement as to Rehearsals — Conditions precedent.]— A declaration alleged that the plaintiff, a singer, agreed with the defendant, director of the Italian Opera in London, that he would undertake the part of first tenor in the theatres, halls, and drawing-rooms in the United Kingdom during his engagement, to begin on the 30th of March, 1875, and terminate on the 13th of July, 1875, at a salary of 150*l.* per month. That the plaintiff should sing in concerts as well as operas, but should not sing anywhere out of the theatre in the United Kingdom from the 1st of January to the 1st of December, 1875, without the written permission of the defendant, except at more than fifty miles from London, and out of the season of the theatre. The defendant agreed to be in London without fail at least six days before the commencement of his engagement, for the purpose of rehearsals. Averment, that the plaintiff did not sing anywhere in the United Kingdom from the 1st of January, 1875, to the date of the commencement of the action; that the plaintiff was prevented by temporary illness from being in London before the 28th of March, 1875, on which day he arrived in London; and that, save as aforesaid, he was and is ready to perform his part of the contract. Breach, that the defendant refused to receive the plaintiff into his service. Plea, that the plaintiff was not in London six days before the commencement of the engagement ready for rehearsals, as was necessary for him to be, wherefore the defendant refused to receive him into his service:—Held, that the stipulation as to rehearsals was not a condition precedent; for that it did not go to the root of the matter, as the plaintiff was to sing in concerts at halls and drawing-rooms as well as at the theatre, and was also to abstain from singing within fifty miles of London from the 1st of January previously to the commencement of the engagement on the 30th of March, and that the plea was therefore bad. Bettini v. Gye, 45 L. J., Q. B. 209; 1 Q. B. D. 183; 34 L. T. 246; 24 W. R. 551.

Right of Proprietor to Rescind Contract—Inability to Perform.]—The plaintiff agreed in writing with the defendant to sing and play in the chief female part in a new opera about to be brought out at the defendant's theatre, at a weekly salary of 11*l.* for three months, provided the opera ran for that time, commencing on or about the 14th November. The first performance was announced for Saturday, the 28th of November, and no objection was raised by the plaintiff as to this delay. She attended several rehearsals, such attendance, though not expressed in the written engagement, being an implied part of it. Owing to delays of the composer, the music of the latter part of the opera was not in the hands of the defendant till a few days before the 28th of November, and the final rehearsals did not take place till the beginning of the last week. The plaintiff was taken ill, and was unable to attend any of the rehearsals in that week; and, it being uncertain how long her illness might continue, the defendant's manager made a provisional engagement with another artiste, Miss L., to study the part and be ready to take it if the plaintiff was unable. If she was not wanted, Miss L. was to receive a douceur; if she was called on to perform, she was to receive 15*l.* a week till the 25th of December, if the piece ran so long. The plaintiff continued too ill to attend the rehearsals or the first performance on Saturday, the 28th of November, or on the first three days of the next week; Miss L. accordingly performed on those days. On Thursday, the 4th of December, the plaintiff was well enough to perform and tendered her services, which the defendant refused to accept; on which she brought an action for wrongful dismissal. The jury found that the employment of Miss L. by the defendant under the circumstances was reasonable:—Held, that the plaintiff's inability to perform on the opening and early performances went to the root of the matter, and justified the defendant in rescinding the contract. Poussard v. Spiers, 45 L. J., Q. B. 621; 1 Q. B. D. 410; 34 L. T. 572; 24 W. R. 819.

Action for Salary — Agreement by Member on behalf of Orchestra.]—The plaintiff, acting on behalf of the members of an orchestra to which he himself belonged, signed a proposal "on behalf of the members of the orchestra" to continue their services, provided the defendant would guarantee a certain salary then due to them. The defendant accepted this proposition, but failed to pay the salary due. The plaintiff alone brought an action for the whole money due to himself and the rest, and stated the contract to be with himself and the rest. The jury found that he acted on behalf of himself as well as of the rest:—Held, that the contract was joint, and that he could not recover. Lucas v. Beale, 10 C. B. 739; 20 L. J., C. P. 134.

—— Proof of Theatrical Usage.]—An actress having been engaged by a manager of a theatre, for three years, at a salary of 5*l.*, 6*l.*, and 7*l.* per week, in those years respectively:—Held, that this contract being ambiguous, parol evidence was admissible to show, that, under such a contract, it was the theatrical usage to pay a proportion of salary for those nights only during which the theatre was open for performance. Grant v. Maddox, 15 M. & W. 737; 16 L. J., Ex. 227.

—— Arrears are not Work and Labour.]—A performer at a theatre, who is to be paid for nights of performance on which he does not perform, as well as for those on which he does perform, should not declare for work and labour, but for arrears of salary as a hired performer. Frazer v. Bunn, 8 Car. & P. 704.

Acting Manager—Privileges of.]—An acting manager cannot, under the words "usual privileges of his situation," claim, as matter of right, the use of a private box, and the power of giving orders of admission, though both are usually allowed as matter of courtesy. Lacy v. Osbaldiston, 8 Car. & P. 80.

—— Right of Proprietor to Dismiss.]—If the acting manager of a theatre conducts himself in such an improper manner as to make it injurious to the interests of the theatre to keep him, the lessee or proprietor may lawfully dismiss him. Lacy v. Osbaldiston, 8 Car. & P. 80.

Evidence as against Proprietor.]—What a stage manager says at the close of a season, in his farewell address from the stage, as to the success of the theatre, is evidence against the lessee or proprietor upon that subject. Lacy v. Osbaldiston, 8 Car. & P. 80.

Lease of Opera House—Covenants therein—When broken.]—A lease of the opera house contained covenants on the part of the lessee, first, not to use the house for any but purposes of a theatrical kind, and to use his best endeavours to improve the house for that purpose. The house was closed at the end of the season of 1852, and was not opened at all during the following year:—Held, that this was not a breach of the covenant. Croft v. Lumley, 6 H. L. Cas. 672; 27 L. J., Q. B. 321; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 903; 6 W. R. 523.

And a second covenant was, not to charge nor incumber the theatre, or the income thereof, or the terms hereby granted, by mortgaging the same, or granting any rent-charges, or any other incumbrance whatever." The lessee was greatly in debt. In respect of his debts, he granted warrants of attorney, one of which was to secure payment of bills not due, and another provided that it was a concurrent security, with an indenture therein recited, that judgment was to be entered up when the grantee thought fit, and to be registered; and judgments were signed against him on those warrants of attorney, and upon judges' orders and registered:—Held, that no breach of this covenant had been committed. Ib.

Relating to Unlicensed Theatres.]—See cases, ante, col. 30.

Contract with Dramatic Author.]—Contract with the proprietors of a theatre not to write dramatic pieces for any other, legal; as similar restraint of a performer would be; not resembling a covenant restraining trade generally. Morris v. Coleman, 18 Ves. 437; 11 R. R. 230.

Partnership.]—The court will entertain a bill to compel partners to act according to the provisions of instruments into which they have entered; and where it will interfere for that purpose, will take care that the decree shall not be defeated by anything done in the meantime. Thus, where, in 1812, the then proprietors of Covent Garden Theatre executed a deed, by which they covenanted and agreed that the profits of the theatre should be exclusively appropriated to particular purposes, and that the treasurer for the time being should be irrevocably directed so to apply the profits; and in 1822, parties then entitled under the former proprietors, to seven-eighths of the theatre, entered into an agreement, which provided, in some respects, for a different application of the profits, and otherwise affected the rights of a party interested in the remaining eighth, who was not consulted on the subject; the court, upon a bill filed by that party, for the specific performance of the covenants and agreements contained in the deed of 1812, appointed a receiver. Const v. Harris, Turn. & R. 496; 24 R. R. 108.

Partnership in the opera house dissolved by the conduct of the parties making it impossible to carry it on upon the terms stipulated. Decree accordingly for sale of the whole concern; restraining the managing partner from acting with liberty to either party, and to lay proposals before the master for management until sale. Waters v. Taylor, 2 Ves. & B. 299; 13 R. R. 91.

4. TORTS RELATING TO.

Enticing Actress away from Theatre.]—A count stated a contract between the plaintiff and W. that she would perform at the plaintiff's theatres, in operas, for three months, on certain terms, and that she would not during that time sing or use her talents elsewhere than in his theatre. Averment, that the defendant maliciously intending to injure the plaintiff, and to prevent W. from performing according to her contract, whilst the agreement was in force, and before the commencement of the period for which W. was engaged, wrongfully and maliciously enticed and procured W. to refuse to sing or perform at the theatre, and to depart from and abandon her contract with the plaintiff, and all service thereunder; by means of which enticement and procurement W. unlawfully and wrongfully refused to perform her contract. Another count stated that W. was hired and engaged by the plaintiff to sing and perform at his theatre for a certain time as his dramatic artiste, for reward, and had become and was such dramatic artiste, and that the defendant, maliciously intending to injure him, enticed and procured her to depart from his employment:—Held, that the action was maintainable. Lumley v. Gye, 2 El. & Bl. 216; 22 L. J., Q. B. 463; 17 Jur. 827; 1 W. R. 432.

Libel on Performer—Action by Manager.]—The proprietor of a theatre cannot maintain an action against a man for a libel on one of his performers, by reason whereof she was deterred from appearing on the stage. Ashley v. Harrison, Peake, 194; 1 Esp. 48; 3 R. R. 686.

Assaulting Performer—Action by Manager for Loss of Service.]—An action with a per quod servitium amisit will not lie by the manager of a place of public entertainment against a person for beating one of the performers, who is thereby prevented from performing. Taylor v. Neri, 1 Esp. 386.

Trespass to Sub-Lessee's Boxes and Stalls.]—The lessee of a theatre held it under a lease in which he covenanted not to convert it to any other use than for acting or performing operas or theatrical entertainments. He demised certain boxes and stalls to a sub-lessee, reserving power of access for the purpose of repairing; the sub-lessee covenanted only to use the same for the purpose of viewing and hearing the operas and other entertainments. The underleases contained covenants for quiet enjoyment. The lessee demised the theatre for a term of three months for the purpose of holding religious meetings. To enable these meetings to be held, the stalls were covered with a flooring, the division between the boxes removed, and other temporary structural alterations made:—Held, that a trespass had been committed by the lessee and persons claiming under him in thus entering upon the sub-lessee's boxes and stalls without his license, and the conversion of the theatre for other than theatrical purposes was a derogation from the grant and a breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment. Leader v. Moody, 44 L. J., Ch. 711; L. R. 20 Eq. 145; 32 L. T. 422; 23 W. R. 606.

5. Rights of Spectators.

To Hiss or Applaud.]—It is no riot of the spectators in a theatre to express their feelings spontaneously by applauding or hissing the piece or the actors. Clifford v. Brandon, 2 Camp. 358; 11 R. R. 731.

Conspiracy to Drive Actor from the Stage.]—The public, who go to a theatre, have a right to express their free and unbiassed opinions of the merits of the performers who appear upon the stage; but parties have no right to go to a theatre by a preconcerted plan, to make such a noise that an actor, without any judgment being formed of his performance, should be driven from the stage; and, if two persons are shown to have laid a preconcerted plan to deprive a person who comes out as an actor of the benefits which he expected to result from his appearance on the stage, they are liable for a conspiracy. Gregory v. Brunswick (Duke), 1 Car. & K. 24. See S. C., 6 Man. & G. 205; 1 D. & L. 518; 6 Scott (N.R.) 809.

In an action for conspiracy to hiss an actor, the defendant cannot, under the general issue, give in evidence libels published by the plaintiff, with a view of showing that the plaintiff was hissed on account of those libels, and not by reason of any conspiracy of the defendants. Ib.

Payment for Seats—No Room—Assault.]—If three persons are told on entering a theatre that there is room, when in fact there is not, their proper course is to leave the theatre, and demand the return of their money; and such persons are not justified in getting into a private box in the theatre, and if they do, the proprietor may remove them, using no more force than is necessary; and if in going out of the theatre one of them strikes a servant of the proprietor's in the presence of a constable, such constable will be justified in taking all the three persons into custody, if the jury is satisfied that they were acting with a common purpose. Lewis v. Arnold, 4 Car. & P. 354.

1. Computation of.

a. Generally.

Relation Back—Issuing of Writ.]—To issue a writ of summons is not a judicial act, and the court may inquire at what period of the day it was issued. It appeared from the statement of claim that the writ of summons in the action was issued on the 2nd of July, and that the cause of action arose on the same day, but before the issue of the writ. The statement of claim was demurred to on the ground that the issuing of the writ was a judicial act, and must, therefore, be presumed to have taken place at the earliest moment of the day, before the cause of action accrued:—Held, that the court could inquire whether or not the writ was in fact issued after the cause of action accrued. Clarke v. Bradlaugh, 51 L. J., Q. B. 1; 8 Q. B. D. 63; 46 L. T. 49; 30 W. R. 53; 46 J. P. 278—C. A.

—— Signing Judgment.]—Judicial proceedings are to be considered as taking place at the earliest period of the day on which they are done. Wright v. Mills, 4 H. & N. 488; 28 L. J., Ex. 223; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 771; 7 W. R. 498.

Therefore where judgment was signed at the opening of the office at its usual hour, eleven a.m., the defendant having died at half-past nine a.m. on the same morning:—Held, regular. Ib.

Time for Sitting of Court—Greenwich Time.]—The time appointed for the sitting of the court must be understood as the meantime at the place where the court sits, and not Greenwich time, unless it is so expressed. Curtis v. Marsh, 3 H. & N. 866; 28 L. J., Ex. 36; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1112.

b. Days.

Hours.]—A policy upon a ship contained a printed clause covering her "until she had moored at anchor twenty-four hours in good safety," and also a written stipulation extending the period of the risk "during thirty days' stay in her last port of discharge":—Held, that the thirty days were not substituted for the twenty-four hours, and that they did not begin to run until the twenty-four hours had elapsed. Mercantile Marine Insurance Co. v. Titherington, 5 B. & S. 765; 34 L. J., Q. B. 11; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 62; 11 L. T. 340; 13 W. R. 141.

Clear Days.]—Where there was a right of forfeiture of shares, on giving ten clear days' notice:—Held, that a notice to forfeit "on Monday the 9th" was insufficient, the 9th being on a Friday. Watson v. Eales, 23 Beav. 294.

Days Inclusive, or Exclusive.]—There is no general rule, in computing time from an act or event, that the day is to be inclusive or exclusive; it depends on the reason of the thing according to the circumstances. Lester v. Garland, 15 Ves. 248; 10 R. R. 68.

The twenty-one days for which the sheriff must have held the debtor's goods under an execution in order to constitute the act of bankruptcy created by s. 1 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1890, are exclusive of the day upon which the seizure takes place. North, In re, Hasluck, Ex parte, 64 L. J., Q. B. 694; [1895] 2 Q. B. 264; 14 R. 436; 72 L. T. 854; 59 J. P. 724; 2 Manson, 326—C. A.

Where an arbitrator enlarges the time for making an award till a given day, the time is to be computed as including that day. Kerr v. Jeston, 1 D. (N.S.) 538.

Where a certain number of days' notice of an intention to do an act is required, the day of the service of the notice is excluded from the computation, and that on which the act is to be done is included,—unless there are some special provisions requiring a different mode of computation. Rex v. Cumberland JJ., 4 N. & M. 378; 1 H. & W. 16; 4 L. J., M. C. 72.

"Within" certain Number of Days after.]—Where a statute empowers justices, on information laid at special sessions, to make orders on specified parties for the payment of money, notice of the intended information being first given to such parties, and empowers them to appeal, giving notice of such appeal within six days after such order shall be made or given, the time for notice of appeal runs from the making of the order, not from the service. Reg. v. Derbyshire JJ., 7 Q. B. 193.

A conviction having taken place under the Turnpike Act, on Monday, the 2nd of May, and notice of appeal served on the following Monday, the 9th of May:—Held, that it was too late, for that it was not "within six days after the cause of complaint," within 4 Geo. 4, c. 95, s. 87. Reg. v. Middlesex JJ., 2 D. (N.S.) 716; 12 L. J., M. C. 59; 7 Jur. 396.

In construing the 2 Will. & M. stat. 1, c. 5, s. 2, which authorises the sale of goods distrained within five days next after the taking, the days must be so calculated as the rule now is in other cases, inclusively of the last, and exclusively of the day of taking. Robinson v. Waddington, 13 Q. B. 753; 18 L. J., Q. B. 250; 13 Jur. 537.

Under 3 Geo. 4, c. 39, which makes void, as against the assignees of a bankrupt, any warrant of attorney executed by him unless filed "within twenty-one days after execution," the days are to be reckoned exclusively of the day of execution; and a warrant therefore executed on the 9th is duly filed on the 30th of the month. Williams v. Burgess, 4 P. & D. 348; 12 A. & E. 635; 9 D. P. C. 544; 10 L. J., Q. B. 10.

D. and L., being both domiciled in England, left London for Scotland on the evening of the 30th June, 1870, for the purpose of contracting a clandestine marriage. They arrived at Edinburgh between five and six on the following morning, July 1st, and lived in Scotland until the 21st July, when they contracted an irregular marriage before the registrar at Edinburgh about 11.30 on the morning of that day. By 19 & 20 Vict. c. 96, s. 1, no irregular marriage contracted in Scotland by declaration, acknowledgment, or ceremony, shall be valid, unless one of the parties had at the date thereof his or her usual place of residence there, or had lived in Scotland for twenty-one days next preceding such marriage:—Held, that, according to the mode of computing time by Scotch law, the parties had not lived the prescribed time in Scotland, and that therefore the marriage was invalid. Lawford (otherwise Davies) v. Davies, 47 L. J., P. 38; 4 P. D. 61; 39 L. T. 111; 26 W. R. 424.

"Until" a certain Day.]—A trader having petitioned the court of bankruptcy for arrangement under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 211, praying that "his person and property might be protected from all process until further order," the commissioner made an order, which, after reciting the petition, proceeded thus, "I hereby grant such protection, and order that the person and property of the trader be protected from process until the 29th July next"; and the court appointed a meeting for twelve o'clock on that day, for the creditors to assent to or dissent from the arrangement proposed by the trader:—Held, that the word "until" in the order must be understood inclusive of the 29th July, the day until which the protection was given. Backhouse v. Mellor, 4 H. & N. 116; 28 L. J., Ex. 141; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 175.

A party insured his goods against fire with an insurance company by a policy for six months, whereby it was provided that, from the 14th of February, 1868, until the 14th of August, 1868, and for so long after as the assured should pay the sum of 225 dollars, and the company, at the time above mentioned, accept the same, the funds should be liable to make good losses by fire to the goods. The assured intended to keep up this policy, and the company knew his intention, but the renewal premium was not demanded or paid on the 14th of August, 1868. On that day a fire took place which destroyed the goods. The course of business between the assured and the company was, that the company should come to the assured and demand the renewal premium:—Held, that under the terms of the policy the whole of the 14th of August was protected; and that the company was therefore liable for loss caused by a fire happening on that day. Isaacs v. Royal Insurance Co., 39 L. J., Ex. 189; L. R. 5 Ex. 296; 22 L. T. 681; 18 W. R. 982.

"Not less than" Fourteen Days.]—An interval of not less than fourteen days which is to elapse between two acts done in an interval of fourteen clear days exclusive of the days on which such acts were to be done. Railway Sleepers Supply Co., In re, 54 L. J., Ch. 720; 29 Ch. D. 204; 52 L. T. 731; 33 W. R. 595.

So many Days "at the least" before.]—Where an act is required by a statute to be done so many days at least before a given event, the time must be reckoned excluding both the day of the act and that of the event. Reg. v. Shropshire JJ., 8 A. & E. 173.

Where an act directed that seven days' notice at least should be given of an appeal:—Held, that the meaning was, that so many clear days should be given; and, therefore, the day on which the notice was given should be excluded from the computation. Reg. v. Middlesex JJ.,

2 New Sess. Cas. 73 ; 3 D. & L. 169 ; 14 L. J., M. C. 139 ; 9 Jur. 758.

The 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 51, requires that a summons to appear before justices, and answer a summons, shall be served ten days, at least, before the hearing. A party was summoned on the 20th day of the month to appear on the 30th, and was convicted for default of appearance :—Held, that the justices had no jurisdiction, as the ten days must be reckoned exclusively of the day of serving the summons and that of convicting. Mitchell v. Foster, 4 P. & D. 150 ; 12 A. & E. 472 ; 9 D. P. C. 527 ; 9 L. J., M. C. 95.

By a local act it was enacted, that no meeting of the commissioners should be held for putting in execution any of its powers, unless previous notice should be given in some local newspaper, published and circulated in the county, at least sixteen days before such meeting. Notice of a meeting of the commissioners to be held on the 12th February was inserted in a county newspaper, dated the 27th January, on which day the notice itself was also dated, but the newspaper was printed and partially circulated on the 26th January :—Held, that the notice was not given until the 27th of January, and therefore was not given "at least sixteen days before such meeting," in pursuance of the act, the sixteen days being reckoned exclusively of the day of notice and the day of meeting. Reg. v. Aberdare Canal Co., 14 Q. B. 854 ; 19 L. J., Q. B. 251 ; 14 Jur. 735.

A notice to be given "three days at the least before the commencement of the term," must be given exclusive of the day on which the notice is given, and of the first day of the term to which it relates. Prangley, In re, 4 A. & E. 781 ; 6 N. & M. 421 ; 2 H. & W. 65 ; 6 L. J., K. B. 259.

Fractions of a Day.]—A pauper entered upon the occupation of premises at twelve o'clock on the 30th September, 1850, and on the same evening signed a memorandum, which stated that the tenancy was for one year, commencing on the 30th September instant. He continued in possession until the 29th September, 1851, about four o'clock in the afternoon of which day he gave up possession to an incoming tenant :—Held, that the fractions of the days on which the pauper entered and gave up possession were not to be regarded, and therefore he had occupied the premises "for one whole year at the least," within 1 Will. 4, c. 18, s. 1. Reg. v. St. Mary, Warwick, 1 El. & Bl. 816 ; 1 C. L. R. 192 ; 22 L. J., M. C. 109 ; 17 Jur. 551 ; 1 W. R. 307.

Where an adjudication in bankruptcy and appointment of an official assignee take place at an earlier period of the same day on which a writ of extent is issued against the bankrupt for a crown debt, a fraction of a day cannot be taken in account where the conflict is between the right of the crown and the right of the subject, and the title of the crown must prevail against the right of the subject. Edwards v. Reg., 9 Ex. 628 ; 2 C. L. R. 590 ; 23 L. J. Ex. 165 ; 18 Jur. 384 ; 2 W. R. 333—Ex. Ch.

Where it is necessary to show which of two events first took place, the court may enter into the question of the fraction of a day ; therefore, the court will regard the particular hour at which a defendant dies, so as to see whether execution issued previously to his demise. Clinch v. Smith, 8 D. P. C. 337.

By 20 Vict. c. 5, s. 8, if any person shall keep a dog without having in force a licence granted under this act, he shall forfeit 5*l*. Sect. 5 provides that every licence shall commence on the day on which the same shall be granted :—Held, that "on the day on which" must be taken to mean "at and from the time when," and that it is no answer to a charge of having kept a dog without a licence on a particular day to produce a licence taken out on that day, if it is proved that the licence was applied for later in the day than the detection of the offence charged. Campbell v. Strangeways, 47 L. J., M. C. 6 ; 3 C. P. D. 105 ; 37 L. T. 672. See also Cases ante, col. 44.

In an arbitration under the Building Societies Act, 1874, one of the parties to the arbitration obtained at chambers an order nisi calling upon the arbitrators to show cause why they should not be required to state a case for the opinion of the court. Later on the same day but without having had notice of the order nisi the arbitrators made and signed their award :—Held, that the jurisdiction of the court was not ousted and that the order nisi was rightly made absolute. Tabernacle Permanent Building Society v. Knight, 62 L. J., Q. B. 50 ; [1892] A. C. 298 ; 67 L. T. 483 ; 41 W. R. 207 ; 56 J. P. 709—H. L. (E.)

Fraction of a day to support a commission of bankruptcy, by evidence that it was committed before the commission sealed on the same day. Dufrene, Ex parte, 1 Ves. & B. 54.

Fraction of a day allowed, in support of a commission of bankruptcy, by admitting evidence, that the act of bankruptcy, though on the same day, was previously to the issuing, i.e. the awarding and sealing the commission. Wydown's Case, 14 Ves. 80.

Under 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 81, where the computation of time is to be from an act done, the day when such act is done is to be included. For some purposes the court notices the fraction of a day. Farquhar, Ex parte, Mont. & M'Ar. 7.

Fraction of a day in notices to prevent reputed ownership. Bignold, Ex parte, Newton, In re, 3 Mont. & Ayr. 13.

Sundays—When Reckoned.]—The general rule of law is, that "days" mean "consecutive days," except Sunday is the first or the last day ; but in commercial cases it is sometimes otherwise, because mercantile contracts are to be construed with reference to mercantile usage. Brown v. Johnson, Car. & M. 440 ; 10 M. & W. 331 ; 11 L. J., Ex. 373.

A charterparty by which it was agreed that a ship should receive on board a cargo of coals, and proceed with them to Constantinople (and, or) Odessa, contained these words : "The vessel to be loaded in Liverpool in fourteen days, and to be discharged, weather permitting, at not less than twenty-five tons per working day (holidays excepted), the days to commence on the ship's being in turn and ready to deliver ; all days above the said days to be paid demurrage at the rate of 5*l*. sterling per day" :—Held, that the words "holidays excepted" did not apply to the fourteen days, within which the vessel was to be loaded ; and therefore, that, although two Sundays occurred within the fourteen days, still that was the period of fourteen days only within which she was to be loaded. Niemann v. Moss, 29 L. J., Q. B. 206 ; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 775.

In reckoning the twenty-one days within which an appeal must be entered, the computation must be made exclusive of Sundays. Hicks, Ex parte, Ball, In re, 44 L. J., Bk. 106 ; L. R. 20 Eq. 143 ; 32 L. T. 432 ; 23 W. R. 852.

And in reckoning the twenty-one days allowed by r. 143 of the Bankruptcy Rules of 1870 for appealing, Sundays are, by virtue of the rule in bankruptcy of 26th of May, 1873, not to be taken into account. Hall, Ex parte, Alven, In re, 50 L. J., Ch. 400; 16 Ch. D. 501; 44 L. T. 8; 29 W. R. 298—C. A.

Since the Judicature Acts the time for appealing to the court of appeal from orders made by the chief judge in bankruptcy is regulated by the Rules of Court, 1875. Viney, Ex parte, Gilbert, In re, 46 L. J., Bk. 80; 4 Ch. D. 794; 36 L. T. 43; 25 W. R. 364—C. A.

Therefore, in calculating the twenty-one days allowed for appealing, Sundays are not to be excluded, and the material date is, not that of entering the appeal with the registrar, but that of service of notice of the appeal on the respondent. Ib.

The two days' notice of countermand is two business days, and therefore, notice on Saturday for Monday is insufficient. Rose v. Macgregor, 12 M. & W. 517; 1 D. & L. 583; 13 L. J., Ex. 110; 8 Jur. 86.

Sunday is to be included in the three days within which the appellant is to transmit a case to the court. Pennell v. Uxbridge Overseers, 31 L. J., M. C. 92; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 99; 5 L. T. 685; 10 W. R. 319.

Appearance on the 26th April; order on the 8th May, staying proceedings until security for costs should be given; security given on the 4th December; cause set down pro confesso on the 24th January, the 23rd being Sunday:—Held, irregular, the defendant having the whole of the 24th to answer. White v. White, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 425.

In the number of days for notice of the time and place of examining a witness, an intermediate Sunday is to be reckoned. M'Intosh v. G. W. Ry., 1 Hare, 328; 11 L. J. Ch. 283; 6 Jur. 454.

A bill of sale through inadvertence not being registered within the time limited by the Bills of Sale Act, 1879, leave was given on the ex parte application of the grantee to register within three days, and the bill of sale was registered on the fourth day from the order, reckoning an intervening Sunday:—Held, that Sunday was not to be counted in the three days limited by the order for registration, and that therefore the registration had been effected within the time prescribed by that order. Parke, In re, 13 L. R., Ir. 85.

Sunday will reckon as one day. Bumps, Ex parte, 5 D. P. C. 713; W. W. & D. 350.

The 15th April, which, by 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 70, s. 6, is constituted the first day of Easter Term, falling on Easter Sunday, a delivery three days before the 18th April, of the notices for the admission of an attorney, was sufficient. Bayley, Ex parte, 6 D. P. C. 516; 1 W. W. & H. 175; 2 Jur. 326.

—— When Last Day for doing an Act.]—Sunday is to be computed in the three days allowed for an application to justices to state a case for the opinion of one of the superior courts, under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, s. 2, although it is the last day. Peacock v. Reg., 4 C. B. (N.S.) 264; 27 L. J., C. P. 224; 6 W. R. 517. S. P., Wynne v. Ronaldson, 12 L. T. 711; 13 W. R. 899.

So in computing the two days allowed by the Nuisances Removal Act (18 & 19 Vict. c. 121), s. 40, to an appellant for entering into recognisance after giving notice of appeal, Sunday is to be reckoned as one, though it falls on the last day. Simkin, Ex parte, 2 El. & El. 392; 29 L. J., M. C. 23; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 144.

But under 18 & 19 Vict. c. 67 (the Bills of Exchange Act), Sunday was not included in the days for appearance, if it was the last day, as r. 174, H. T. 16 Vict. applied. Lewis v. Calor, 1 F. & F. 906.

In the computation of time, where the last day falls on a Sunday or a holiday, and the act is to be done by the court, and not by the party, ex. gr. the sealing of a writ, it may be done on the next practicable day. Hughes v. Griffith, 13 C. B. (N.S.) 324; 32 L. J., C. P. 47.

A warrant under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 52, was issued by a county court judge, upon an affidavit that the defendant was about to go abroad. The seven days limited for issuing a capias expired on Good Friday:—Held, that a capias issued on the following Wednesday was in time, that being the earliest day on which it was practicable to issue the writ. Ib.

In calculating the time within which to serve notice of motion by way of appeal from an order of a judge at chambers, Sundays cannot be excluded; so that when the last day on which notice of motion could be served was a Sunday, and notice of motion was not given until the Monday, it was held that the notice was out of time. Chambon v. Heighwey, 54 J. P. 520.

When the last of the eight days, limited by Ord. LIV. r. 6, for appealing from a decision at chambers expires on a Sunday, the appellant has the following Monday for appealing. Taylor v. Jones, 45 L. J., C. P. 110; 34 L. T. 131.

If the eighth day after service of an order nisi for confirming a report is a Sunday, that day is not to be reckoned. Milburn v. Lister, 5 Sim. 565.

By a judge's order, debt and costs were to be paid by instalments of 2*l.* on the 25th of each month. The 25th happened to be on a Sunday; the instalment was offered on Monday and refused, and judgment was signed on the following day. The court set aside the judgment, holding that the defendant had the whole of Monday to pay the money. Morris v. Barrett, 7 C. B. (N.S.) 139; 29 L. J., C. P. 102; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 609; 1 L. T. 38; 8 W. R. 45.

In computing the eight days allowed by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, s. 27, to a defendant who is proceeded against by a writ of summons specially indorsed, Sunday must be reckoned as one, whether it falls on the last day or not. Rowberry v. Morgan, 2 C. L. R. 1026; 9 Ex. 730; 23 L. J., Ex. 191; 18 Jur. 452; 2 W. R. 431.

—— Promissory Note due on.]—The plaintiff in the action sued on a promissory note at three months, dated the 11th March, 1874; the note was therefore primâ facie due on the 14th June of the same year. The 14th of June was a Sunday. The writ in the action bore date the 14th June, 1880, which was a Monday. It was contended that the right of action was barred by the statute of limitations:—Held, that the action was barred, and that, as the mercantile usage in the matter of days of grace had the effect of law, it had the like effect on the custom of bills and notes falling due on a Sunday becoming payable on the previous Saturday, and that Ord. LVII. r. 3 of the Judicature Act of 1875 did not apply to such a case as the present one, as it was not intended to extend the time fixed by the statute of limitations. Morris v. Richards, 45 L. T. 210; 46 J. P. 37.

—— Under Rules of Supreme Court, 1883.]—See Ord. LXIV. rr. 2 and 3.

c. Week.

What is.]—A week's order to examine means exclusive of that day sennight. Otherwise in Irish courts. Donovan v. Keatinge, 2 Moll. 327.

The answer became sufficient on the 2nd August, and the four weeks allowed from that time to amend the bill, extra the vacation, expired on the 18th November. The defendant served notice of motion to dismiss at half-past seven o'clock on the evening of the 18th November:—Held, that the four weeks did not expire till twelve o'clock at night, and consequently that the notice of motion was given before the plaintiff was in default. Motion dismissed with costs. Preston v. Collett, 20 L. J. Ch. 228.

d. Months.

In Statutes.]—Before 13 & 14 Vict. c. 21, when the word "month" was used in a statute, without the addition of "calendar," or any other words to show that the legislature intended "calendar," it was understood to mean a lunar month. Lacon v. Hooper, 6 Term Rep. 224; 1 Esp. 246.

The six months given to tenants to redeem under the statutes of ejectment for non-payment of rent, are calendar months, and the day on which the habere is executed is not to be included in the calculation. Where a right would be devested or a forfeiture incurred by including the day of the act done, the computation will be made exclusive of it. Dowling v. Foxall, 1 Ball & B. 193, 196.

The six months for redemption given to the tenant, after the execution of the habere, by 4 Geo. 1, c. 5, are calendar and not lunar months. Devereux v. Bradstreet, Wall. Lyn. 338.

The nine months allowed by the stat. 8 Geo. 1, c. 2, s. 4, to a mortgagee of an evicted lease to redeem, are calendar months. Biddulph v. St. John, 2 Sch. & Lef. 521.

Under the act against stock-jobbing, the six months in the first section means lunar months, and no discovery lies where the cause of action arose prior to the expiration of six lunar months. Windale v. Fall, 3 Bro. C. C. 11.

Section 23 of 28 Geo. 3, c. 37 provided that any action brought against any person for anything done by him in pursuance of the act should be commenced within three months next after the matter or thing done:—Held, that the three months were to be computed as lunar and not as calendar months. Crook v. McTavish, 1 Bing. 307; 8 Moore, 265; 1 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 107.

Months ought to be considered in equity as calendar months; but in acts of parliament it means lunar months, except in the case of tempus semestre, with regard to the lapse of livings, and other instances of six months, allowed to prohibition. Franco v. Alvares, 3 Atk. 346.

In Legal Proceedings.]—In most orders of the courts of law and equity "month" means a lunar month; and it so means in an order for payment of money. Att.-Gen. v. Newbury Corporation, C. P. Cooper, 383.

Three months' time to plead meant three lunar months. Soper v. Curtis, 2 D. P. C. 237; 3 L. J., Ex. 61.

Under an order permitting a plaintiff to amend within a month, the amendment must be made within a lunar month. Creswell v. Harris, 2 Sim. & S. 476; 4 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 94.

In legal matters, a month means a lunar month; but in commercial matters, a month always means a calendar month. Hart v. Middleton, 2 Car. & K. 9.

Condition in Will.]—Limitation in a will that the tenant for life, who should be of full age, should reside at the house for six months in every year, to be computed from January to January, or in default forfeit 1,000*l.*:—Held, to mean a personal presence at the house for the period of six lunar months. Walcot v. Botfield, 2 Eq. R. 758; 1 Kay, 534; 18 Jur. 570; 2 W. R. 393.

In Contracts.]—The word "month" may mean lunar or calendar month, according to the intention of the contracting parties; therefore, where, upon a sale of land on the 24th of January, it was agreed by the conditions of sale that an abstract of the title should be delivered to the purchaser within a fortnight from the date thereof, to be returned by him at the end of two months from the said date, and that a draft of the conveyance should be delivered within three months from the said date, to be redelivered within four months from said date, and the purchase to be completed on the 24th of June, making a period of precisely five calendar months from the date of the sale and conditions; the word "months" was held to mean calendar and not lunar months, by reference to the whole period fixed for the completion of the contract. Lang v. Gale, 1 M. & S. 111.

The word "month" in all contracts, except there is some evidence to show that calendar month is meant, means lunar month, except in mercantile transactions in the city of London, where month means calendar month. Turner v. Barlow, 3 F. & F. 946.

Therefore, where an artist agreed to engrave a copy of a picture in twenty-one months from the date of its receipt by him, having it in his possession at intervals as might be agreed upon for fourteen months for that purpose:—Held, that the word "months" in this contract meant lunar months in the absence of evidence to the contrary, and that such a work was not a mercantile transaction to bring it within the custom in the city of London, to construe the word "month" to mean calendar month in mercantile transactions. Ib.

Where parties contract that the purchase of lands shall be completed within so many months, calendar, and not lunar, months are intended. Hipwell v. Knight, 1 Y. & Coll. 401; 4 L. J., Ex. Eq. 52.

If a clerk and foreman is engaged at a weekly salary, and to have two suits of clothes per annum, it is a yearly hiring within s. 48 of 6 Geo. 4, c. 16. The words "six months" in s. 48 mean "six lunar months." Humphreys, Ex parte, Mont. & Bli. 413; 3 Deac. & C. 114; 2 L. J., Bk. 71.

An auctioneer was employed to sell land, under a written contract that he should be paid one per cent. commission; but if the estate was not sold within two months after the day of the auction, only one-half per cent.:—Held, that this by itself meant two lunar months, unless there was evidence that the parties meant calendar months. Simpson v. Margitson, 11 Q. B. 23; 17 L. J., Q. B. 81; 12 Jur. 155.

The plaintiff hired chattels of the defendant by a hiring agreement, by which he agreed to pay him a certain sum once a week, the hiring to be for twenty-six months from the date of the first payment. The plaintiff afterwards gave the defendant a bill of sale of the same and other chattels to secure money owed by him to the defendant. An account was ordered of the dealings between the plaintiff and defendant, the bill of sale to be a security for what should be found due on such account. The defendant claimed that in taking the account the twenty-six months should be taken to be calendar, and not lunar months:—Held, that the months must be taken to be lunar. Hulton v. Brown, 45 L. T. 343; 29 W. R. 928.

A house and land were taken by lease "for the term of six months from the 1st day of January next" (1830), "and so on, for six months to six months, until one of the parties shall give to the other of them six calendar months' notice in writing to determine the tenancy, at and under the rent of 13*l.* for every six months, the first payment to be made on the 1st day of July, 1830":—Held, that the months here spoken of were shown by the context to be calendar months, and that this was a taking for a year at least. Reg. v. Chawton, 1 Q. B. 247; 4 P. & D. 525; 10 L. J., M. C. 55.

A custom of letting on a particular estate cannot be imported into an agreement so as to give to the word "month" the meaning of "calendar month," unless, perhaps, in the case of an estate so large that all persons living in the district may be presumed to know of the custom. Rogers v. Hull Dock Co., 4 N. R. 494; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1245; 11 L. T. 42, 463; 12 W. R. 1101; 13 W. R. 217.

How Calculated.]—In calculating a calendar month, if the computation commences during the course of a month, the right method is to proceed from a given day in one month to the day with the corresponding number in the ensuing month. Freeman v. Read, 4 B. & S. 174; 32 L. J., M. C. 226; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 149; 8 L. T. 458; 11 W. R. 802.

Where one calendar month's notice of action at least was necessary, a notice was given on the 28th of April, and an action was commenced on the 29th of May:—Held, that the action was rightly commenced. Ib.

In the computation of a calendar month's notice of action to a justice, required by 24 Geo. 2, c. 44, s. 1, the day of giving the notice and the day of suing out the writ were both to be excluded. Young v. Higgon, 6 M. & W. 49; 8 D. P. C. 212; 9 L. J., M. C. 29.

In computing the six months for bringing an action against a magistrate for false imprisonment, the day of discharge from imprisonment is to be reckoned exclusively. Hardy v. Ryle, 7 L. J. (O.S.) M. C. 118.

In computing the one calendar month within which complaint must be made under s. 14 of 12 & 13 Vict. c. 92, the day on which the offence was committed is not to be included. Radcliffe v. Bartholomew, 61 L. J. M. C. 63; [1892] 1 Q. B. 161; 65 L. T. 677; 40 W. R. 63; 56 J. P. 262.

The plaintiffs, a tramway company, effected with the defendants an insurance against accidents for twelve calendar months from November 24, 1887. An accident happened on November 24, 1888:—Held, that the effect of "from" in the expression "for twelve calendar months from November 24, 1887," was to exclude November 24, 1887, and to include November 24, 1888, in the period of the insurance, and that the defendants were therefore liable. South Staffordshire Tramways v. Sickness and Accident Assurance Association, 60 L. J., Q. B. 47; [1891] 1 Q. B. 402; 63 L. T. 807; 55 J. P. 168.

Bequest of residue in trust in case A. shall, within six calendar months after the testator's decease, give security not to marry B., then and not otherwise to pay to the children of A.; with a proviso to go over if she shall refuse or neglect to give such security; a condition precedent: the six months are exclusive of the day of the testator's death; therefore, as he died on the 12th January, between eight and nine in the evening, a security given on the 12th July about nine in the evening was held sufficient. Lester v. Garland, 15 Ves. 248; 10 R. R. 68.

A patent dated 10th May contained a proviso that a specification should be inrolled within one calendar month next and immediately after the date thereof. The specification was inrolled on the 10th of June following:—Held, that the month did not begin to run till the day after the date of the patent, and that the specification was in time. Watson v. Pears, 2 Camp. 294; 11 R. R. 712.

The 13 Geo. 2, c. 18, s. 5, directs, that no order of justices shall be removed, unless the certiorari is applied for within six months after the order is made. Where an act directs justices to make an order, and that it should be subsequently confirmed by an order of sessions the period of six months is to be calculated from the date of the latter order. Rex v. Middlesex JJ., 1 N. & P. 92; 2 H. & W. 407; 5 A. & E. 626; 6 L. J., M. C. 10.

If a party purchases goods, to be paid for in two calendar months, the credit does not expire till the end of the corresponding day of the second month. Webb v. Fairmaner, 3 M. & W. 473; 6 D. P. C. 493; 7 L. J., Ex. 140.

A., in London, consigned goods to B. at Bristol, to be disposed of for him by B., and, after they were shipped off, wrote to B., inclosing the bill of lading, and requesting leave to draw on B. in about three months; to which B. replied, "that the moment the goods arrived A. might depend on hearing from him, when he might draw upon him; or that B. would send him a banker's draft." The goods arrived, and a bill at two months' sight was presented to B., which he, being a creditor of A., refused to accept:—Held, that the three months were to be reckoned from the date of the letter, and not from the arrival of the goods. Smith v. Brown, 2 Marsh. 41; 6 Taunt. 340.

By s. 6, sub-s. 1 (c), Bankruptcy Act, 1883, "a creditor shall not be entitled to present a bankruptcy petition against a debtor unless the act of bankruptcy on which the petition is grounded has occurred within three months before the presentation of the petition." A debtor committed an act of bankruptcy on the 13th August, and a petition was presented on the 13th November:—Held, that the petition was presented in time. Foster, Ex parte, Hanson, In re, 56 L. T. 573; 35 W. R. 456; 4 Morrell, 98.

By s. 4, sub-s. (g) of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, a debtor commits an act of bankruptcy if a creditor has served on him a bankruptcy notice, and he does not "within seven days after the service of the notice" comply with its requirements. By s. 141, where any limited time from or after any date or event is appointed or allowed for the doing of any act or the taking of any proceeding, then, in the computation of that limited time, the same shall be taken as exclusive of the day of that date, or of the happening of that event, and as commencing at the beginning of the next following day. On the 4th December a petition was presented by T. against a debtor, the act of bankruptcy relied on being non-compliance with a bankruptcy notice served on the 20th November. On the 2nd January the debtor paid T. 100*l.*, and the petition was dismissed. On the 28th February a second petition was presented by W., based on another act of bankruptcy, on which a receiving order was made:—Held, that the first act of bankruptcy was complete under s. 4 on the 27th November, and was not within three months of the petition subsequently presented on the 28th February; that the payment to T. was therefore valid, and could not be set aside by the trustee in bankruptcy. Townend, Ex parte, Maud, In re, 64 L. T. 743; 40 W. R. 47; 8 Morrell, 144.

Computation of Time of Imprisonment.]—Where a term of one calendar month's imprisonment begins in one month and ends in another, the month must be calculated from the day on which the imprisonment commences to the day before the (numerically) corresponding day in the following month. If there be no such numerically corresponding day, the term will end on the last day of the following month. Migotti v. Colvrille, 48 L. J., C. P. 695; 4 C. P. D. 233; 40 L. T. 747; 27 W. R. 744; 14 Cox, C. C. 305—C. A.

e. Terms and Years.

Terms.]—The terms into which the legal year was formerly divided are kept alive by s. 26 of the Judicature Act, 1873, in cases where they are used as a measure for determining the time within which any act is required to be done. Christ's Hospital (Brecknock) v. Martin, 46 L. J., Q. B. 591; 3 Q. B. D. 16; 36 L. T. 537; 25 W. R. 637.

Therefore when, after the Judicature Acts, an award was made before Easter term, and an application was made during Easter sittings, but after the 8th of May (the last day of Easter term), to set it aside, under 9 & 10 Will. 3, c. 15, s. 2:—Held, that the application was too late. Ib.

When all the days included between the Thursday before and the Wednesday after Easter day (both inclusive), fall within Easter term, that term must be prolonged by five business days, and Trinity term commence five days later accordingly. Downes v. Bostock, 5 Jur. 103.

Years—How Reckoned.]—By 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, s. 58, if a living continues "for the space of one whole year" under sequestration for non-residence, such living shall be deemed void, and the patron may appoint thereto:—Held, that this meant one whole year on which the sequestration issued, and not a year commencing on the 1st January, and ending on the 31st December, both inclusive, as defined in s. 120. Bartlett v. Kirwood, 2 El. & Bl. 771; 2 C. L. R. 253; 23 L. J., Q. B. 9; 18 Jur. 173; 2 W. R. 17.

B., by an indenture, dated and made 19th July, 1851, demised to A. premises, habendum to A. from 25th December, 1849, for and during and until the full end and term of fourteen years thence next ensuing, determinable as therein mentioned: proviso that it should be lawful for either B. or A. to determine the demise at the expiration of the first seven years thereof, by six months' notice; and thereupon that demise, and every covenant therein contained, should cease and determine accordingly:—Held, that the seven years were to be reckoned from 25th December, 1849, and that the lease might be determined on the 25th December, 1856. Bird v. Baker, 1 El. & El. 12; 28 L. J., Q. B. 7; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1148; 7 W. R. 8.

Original letters patent, for a term of fourteen years, were dated on the 26th of February, 1825; and renewed letters patent were dated on the 26th day of February, 1839:—Held, that the day of the date must be reckoned inclusively, and that the former term expired on the 25th of February, 1839, and, consequently, the renewed letters patent were granted after the original letters patent had expired. Russell v. Ledsam, 14 M. & W. 574; 14 L. J., Ex. 353; 9 Jur. 557.

In computing time, under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 5, s. 2, avoiding letters patent, on failure in payment of stamp duties:—Held, that the day of the date is excluded, and that the three years do not expire until twelve o'clock at night of the anniversary of the day on which the letters patent were granted. Williams v. Nash, 28 Beav. 93; 28 L. J., Ch. 886; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 696.

In a letter of licence from creditors to a debtor, "for and during the term of one year from the date hereof," the day of the date should be excluded from the computation of the year. Ammerman v. Digges, 12 Ir. C. L. R. App. i.

Neglect to Perform Condition.]—Under the limitations of a will, each devisee, becoming entitled to the actual possession of the devised lands, was directed to take the name and bear the arms of the testator, subject to forfeiture on neglect to do so for the space of one year next after becoming entitled to the possession of the estates. A tenant for life of the devised estates died on the 9th April, 1888, and on the 9th April, 1889, the next remainderman did what, if in time, was admittedly a compliance with the condition:—Held, that in the computation of time for this purpose the day of the death of the tenant for life was not to be counted, and that, therefore, the condition was duly complied with. Riggs-Miller v. Wheatley, 28 L. R., Ir. 144.

Attaining Majority.]—Devise to A. as soon as he shall accomplish his full age of twenty-one years. A. was born on the 16th August, 1725, and died on the 15th August, 1746:—Held, that he lived to attain his full age of twenty-one. Toder v. Sansam, 1 Bro. P. C. 469.

f. Particular Words as to.

Directly.]—A contract to be performed "directly" means to be performed not "within a reasonable time," but "speedily," or at least "as soon as practicable." Duncan v. Topham, 8 C. B. 255 ; 18 L. J., C. P. 310.

On the 18th of February A. wrote to B., offering to supply him with linseed cake at 10*l.* 15*s.* per ton. On the 19th B. replied, "I can take five tons at 10*l.* 10*s.*, but it must be put on board directly," and on the 22nd A. again wrote, "I shall ship you five tons best cakes to-morrow" : —Held, that this correspondence did not prove a contract on the part of B. to accept cake, "to be delivered within a reasonable time." Ib.

As soon as Possible.]—A contract by a manufacturer to furnish certain specified goods "as soon as possible," means within a reasonable time, regard being had to the manufacturer's ability to produce them, and the orders he may already have in hand. Attwood v. Emery, 1 C. B. (N.S.) 110 ; 26 L. J., C. P. 73 ; 5 W. R. 19.

"Forthwith."]—When an act is required by a statute or a rule of court to be done "forthwith," the word "forthwith" must be construed with regard to the object of the provision and the circumstances of the case. The London agents of the country solicitors of an appellant from an order made by a county court in bankruptcy entered the appeal with the registrar of appeals in London, on Friday, the 5th August, the last possible day, but did not post a copy of the appeal notice to the country solicitors until the following day, and it was not received by them until Monday, the 8th August, and on that day they sent a copy of the notice to the registrar of the county court :—Held, that the copy of the notice had not been sent to the registrar of the county court "forthwith" on entering the appeal as required by r. 144, and that consequently the appeal was out of time. Lamb, Ex parte, Southam, In re, 51 L. J., Ch. 207 ; 19 Ch. D. 169 ; 45 L. T. 639 ; 30 W. R. 126—C. A.

Where the registrar of the county court from which an appeal is brought did not in fact receive notice of an appeal until three days after the time for appealing had elapsed :—Held, that the notice not having been sent "forthwith," the appeal was out of time and could not be heard. Lyon, Ex parte, Lyon, In re, 45 L. T. 768.

An order of a county court was made on the 17th December. Notice of appeal was entered in London on the 22nd December. On the five following days the county court office was closed, and in consequence the county court registrar did not receive a copy of the appeal notice till the 28th. The respondents' country solicitors, however, received notice of the appeal on the 23rd December :—Held, that the copy notice had been sent to the county court registrar "forthwith" within the meaning of r. 144 of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1870. Williams, Ex parte, Jones, In re, 46 L. T. 242—C. A. Reversing 30 W. R. 416.

Rule 144 of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1870, requires that upon entering an appeal a copy of the appeal notice shall be sent forthwith to the registrar of the court appealed from :—Held, that "forthwith" must be read with reference to the period of twenty-one days within which, by r. 143, a notice of appeal must be entered with the registrar of appeals, and that it means within twenty-one days from the date of the order appealed from, or as soon as possible afterwards. Sillence, In re, Sillence, Ex parte, 47 L. Where an order for the discharge of a patient has been given under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 100, s. 72, by the person who signed the order for the reception of such patient, the proprietor of the asylum is bound to discharge the patient forthwith, that is, as soon as practically possible under the circumstances. Lowe v. Fox, 54 L. The word "forthwith" in a notice to a party charged criminally, and out on bail to appear, on pain of forfeiting his recognisance, means, within a reasonable time from the service, and not from the date of the notice. Reg. v. Price, 8 Moore, P. C. 203.

"Forthwith" in a contract held not to mean immediately, but without delay or loss of time. Roberts v. Brett, 11 H. L. Cas. 337 ; 34 L. J., C. P. 241 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 377 ; 12 L. T. 286 ; 13 W. R. 587.

Immediately.]—A., being indebted to B., executed in his favour, by way of security, a bill of sale of his furniture, thereby covenanting that he would, "immediately upon demand in writing," pay the principal and interest ; and in case he did not immediately upon such demand pay the money, B. was empowered to seize and sell. A demand in writing, signed by B.'s attorney, of the immediate payment of the principal and interest, was served upon A. by a bailiff, who had authority to receive the money, but did not communicate the fact to A. ; and who, in default of payment, seized the goods, which were afterwards sold :—Held, that there was a sufficient demand of payment, but no default, inasmuch as no reasonable time was afforded to A. for compliance with it, and that the action, therefore, was maintainable. Toms v. Wilson, 4 B. & S. 442 ; 32 L. J., Q. B. 382 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 201 ; 8 L. T. 799 ; 11 W. R. 952—Ex. Ch. S. P., Moore v. Shelley, 52 L. J., P. C. 35 ; 8 App. Cas. 285 ; 48 L. T. 918 ; Trevor, Ex parte, Burghart, In re, 45 L. Next following.]—By an award, dated the 13th of October, 1840, it was ordered that a sum of money be paid on the 28th day of October next : —Held, that the money was payable on the 28th day of that present month of October. Brown v. Smith, 8 D. P. C. 867.

A proviso for payment "on the —— of February next ensuing," properly means of next February ; but "on the 29th of February next ensuing," means the 29th of February in next leapyear, in order to give effect to the words. Chapman v. Beecham, 3 G. & D. 71 ; 3 Q. B. 723 ; 12 L. J., Q. B. 42.

On.]—Whatever meaning may be given to the word "on" in an act of parliament, it is very difficult to extend it to above a year. It is not necessary to express an opinion as to what time should be allowed, but it is not to be conceived that a period of more than a year can be included in the word "on." "On," if not confined to the time of making the decree, must mean shortly after. Robertson v. Robertson, 8 P. D. 96 ; 48 L. T. 591 ; 31 W. R. 652.

g. Reasonable Time.

What is.]—The overseers of a township agreed with the plaintiff and several other persons, who had given notices of appeal against a poor-rate, that all matters in difference between the overseers and the plaintiff, and the other appellants, should be referred; and that the costs of the plaintiff and the other appellants, incurred in relation to the appeals, up to the time of the agreement, should be taxed and payed by the overseers. A declaration against the overseers for nonpayment of such costs, alleged that they were taxed in a reasonable time after the making of the agreement, and they were requested to pay the amount, but they had not paid it. They pleaded, that the costs were not taxed in a reasonable time after the making of the agreement, on which issue was joined and found for the overseers: —Held, that the question whether such a reasonable time had elapsed was a question for the decision of the jury and not of the judge. Burton v. Griffiths, 11 M. & W. 817.

What is reasonable time, in compliance with request of landlord, to pay a fine on renewal of leases in Ireland. In considering what reasonable time is after demand, the previous transactions are to be taken into the account. Jackson v. Saunders, 2 Dow, 444.

Reasonable time in mercantile transactions not applicable to cases of contracts respecting real property. Jessop v. King, 2 Ball & B. 95.

—— To elapse between Summons and Hearing.]—The 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 2, authorises justices to proceed ex parte, where it is proved on oath that the summons has been served upon the defendant a reasonable time before the time appointed for the hearing. A summons to answer a charge of assault was served upon the defendant's wife, at his house, at nine o'clock in the morning, to appear the next day at eleven o'clock, at a place eight miles distant. The defendant, who was a collier, had gone to his work at the time, and did not return till eleven at night. The next morning, having left some work unfinished, he went to the mine. The justices proceeded to hear in his absence, and adjudged him guilty of an assault, and sentenced him to pay a fine or be imprisoned:—Held, that it was for the justices to decide whether the time was reasonable under the circumstances; and that, having so decided, the court would not review their decision. Williams, Ex parte, 2 L. M. & P. 580; 21 L. J., M. C. 46.

—— For Notice.]—By deed made on the 30th January, 1860, in consideration of 410*l.* lent to A. by B., A. assigned household furniture, farming stock, and goods and chattels and future personal estate and effects to A., subject to a proviso for redemption if A. should pay to B. 410*l.* "on the 30th January, 1870, or at such earlier day or time as B., or his attorney or agent, should appoint for payment, by notice in writing, sent by post, or delivered to or left at the house or last known place of abode" of A.; with a power of immediate entry and sale on default of payment contrary to the proviso and the true intent and meaning of the deed; and there was a proviso, that until default A. should hold possession, and use the goods, chattels, and effects, without any hindrance or disturbance by B. B. at noon of the 20th February, 1860, gave A. notice to pay the money to him at half-past twelve of the same day, and at that time, he not paying the money, seized the goods, and afterwards sold them:—Held, that the notice under the proviso must be reasonable, and that the notice given was not given in a reasonable time. Brighty v. Norton, 3 B. & S. 305; 32 L. J., Q. B. 38; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 495; 7 L. T. 422; 11 W. R. 167.

—— For Rescission of Contract for Sale of Land.]—When, after a contract for the sale of land has been entered into, a notice is given to make time of the essence of the contract, the question whether the notice is reasonable or not must be judged of as at the date when it is given. The plaintiff held a lease from the defendant which gave him an option of purchasing the demised property at any time during the term, on giving the lessor three months' previous notice in writing. On the 24th of March, 1877, the plaintiff gave the defendant notice of his intention to exercise the option. There were some difficulties in completing the defendant's title to the property, and an abstract of title was not delivered to the plaintiff's solicitor till the 17th of June, 1878. The plaintiff's solicitor not having acknowledged the receipt of the abstract, and having neglected to answer several letters from the defendant's solicitors, they, on the 16th of September, wrote to the plaintiff himself, asking whether he intended to complete the purchase. The plaintiff replied the next day that he would write at once to his solicitor. On the 24th of September, 1878, no further communication having been received from the plaintiff or his solicitor, the defendant gave the plaintiff a notice in writing, requiring him to complete the purchase, and stating that, unless he completed it on or before the 31st of October, 1878, the defendant would treat the contract as rescinded, and that in that respect time should be deemed of the essence of the contract. On the 26th of September, 1878, the plaintiff acknowledged the receipt of the notice, and said that he had seen his solicitor, who had promised to proceed as soon as possible. On the 1st of November, 1878, no further communications having been received from the plaintiff or his solicitor, the defendant's solicitors wrote to the plaintiff that the defendant, in pursuance of his notice, declared the contract at an end; and they requested the return of the abstract, and demanded payment of rent for the property. The plaintiff had been in possession of the property ever since his notice to purchase, but had refused to pay any rent after the 24th of June, 1877. On the 21st of November, 1878, the plaintiff commenced his action for the specific performance of the contract to purchase:—Held, that the notice of the 24th of September fixed an unreasonably short time for the completion of the purchase, and was therefore invalid. Specific performance was decreed, and the defendant was ordered to pay the costs of the action up to and including the trial. Crawford v. Toogood, 49 L. J., Ch. 108; 13 Ch. D. 153; 41 L. T. 549; 28 W. R. 248.

When time is not originally made of the essence of a contract for the sale of land, one of the parties is not entitled afterwards by notice to make it of the essence, unless there has been some default or unreasonable delay by the other party. After a delay of two years on the part of a vendor, he gave notice to the purchaser to complete his contract within three weeks, and that, if he did not do so, the vendor would treat the contract as at an end:—Held, that the time limited for completion was, under the circumstances, unreasonably short, and the notice thereof of no effect. Green v. Sevin, 49 L. J., Ch. 166; 13 Ch. D. 589; 41 L. T. 724; 44 J. P. 282.

1. GENERALLY.

a. Validity of, and Right to.

Bad Custom.]—A custom that a meter of a borough should have a toll on all goods imported within the borough, whether meted or not, is bad in law, unless it can be connected with some obligation to do something beneficial to the person to be charged with the toll. Jenkins v. Harvey, 1 Gale, 454; 5 Tyr. 871. See Laybourn v. Crisp, 4 M. & W. 320; 8 L. J., Ex. 118; 8 Car. & P. 397.

Rankness.]—No objection can be made on the ground of rankness to a toll, the right to levy which depends upon a correspondent obligation to do something beneficially to the payers of the toll. Ib.

Account—Custom.]—Though validity of custom of toll has been established in a former suit, yet this court has jurisdiction to decree an account of toll. Norfolk (Duke) v. Myers, 4 Madd. 83.

Plaintiffs having first established their title to tolls at law, equity will decree account of such as are subtracted. Reading Corporation v. Winkworth, 5 Price, 473.

Tolls Traverse and Thorough.]—A toll traverse, i.e. a toll for the mere use of a public way, is bad. Lawrence v. Hitch, 9 B. & S. 467; 37 L. J., Q. B. 209; L. R. 3 Q. B. 521; 18 L. T. 483; 16 W. R. 813—Ex. Ch.

The repair of some streets in a town is not sufficient consideration to support a claim of toll thorough in all parts of the town. Brett v. Beales, 10 B. & C. 508; M. & M. 416; 31 R. R. 744.

Right to.]—Under charters granting to a dean and chapter, "that they and all their men shall be quit of toll, passage, cheminage, &c., in city and borough, fair and market, in the passage of bridges, and all parts of the sea, in all places throughout England," their lay tenant of lands included in the charters is exempt from market toll and toll traverse, not only for articles going to or coming from the lands for the necessary manurance and enjoyment of them, but also for the goods sent out or coming in for the purpose of merchandise. Middleton (Lord) v. Lambert, 1 A. & E. 401; 3 N. & M. 841.

If a person, claiming a toll for passing over a highway, can show an immemorial usage, and that the soil and toll were, before the time of legal memory, in the same hands, though severed since, it will be presumed that the soil was originally granted to the public in consideration of the toll. Pelham (Lord) v. Pickersgill, 1 Term Rep. 660; 1 R. R. 348.

When an act authorises the exaction of a toll, the accommodation for which the toll is authorised must be provided. Aiton v. Stephen, 1 App. Cas. 456—H. L. (Sc.)

—— "Coach"—Tramcar.]—An act of parliament, passed in 1766, empowered the owners of a ferry across a creek to build a bridge over the creek and to demand certain tolls for the passage of the bridge, including, amongst others, the following: "For every coach, chariot, berlin, chaise, chair, or calash drawn by more than two horses, the sum of sixpence," and "for every waggon, wain, dray, car, cart, or sledge, or other carriage drawn by three or four horses or oxen, the sum of fourpence":—Held, that the toll payable in respect of a tramcar drawn by three horses was that payable in respect of a "coach." Plymouth, Stonehouse, and Devonport Tramways Co. v. General Tolls Co., 75 L. T. 467—C. A. Affirmed in H. L.

—— Evidence of.]—Where the crown granted to S. the castle and honour of H., and "all that toll and all those tolls called 'traverse,' to be taken in manner accustomed, i.e. of all saleable things passing through the town of H. and also through the towns of Ware, B., T., and elsewhere, in divers places in the same county;" and it appeared that a toll had always been taken at Ware Bridge, and that in various ancient documents it had been described as "the traverse," and "the toll traverse" of the bridge of W., and that S. and his ancestors for twenty years past had repaired the bridge :—Held, that the burden was cast on S. to show that the toll was a toll-thorough and not traverse, although the bridge was a public highway ; and that the sessions, in the absence of any such evidence, were warranted in inferring that it was a toll traverse. Reg. v. Salisbury (Marquis), 3 N. & P. 476 ; 8 A. & E. 716 ; 1 W. W. & H. 444 ; 7 L. J., M. C. 110.

—— Right of Corporation to.]—In an action for tolls upon live stock driven through a borough and upon waggons and carriages with four wheels, passing to, through and from a borough and manor, a market company claimed—as representing by virtue of a statute a municipal corporation which was the lord of the manor in which the borough was, and holder of land within the borough, and entitled by prescription or grant to drift tolls and dues payable within the borough on horned cattle, sheep, and swine driven through the borough, and waggons and carriages with four wheels passing to, through and from the borough—to be entitled to such tolls from a railway company, incorporated by acts passed in 1862 and 1863, who had made a portion of their line of railway and station on lands within the borough, acquired by them for the purposes of their railway, and used their line and station for the conveyance of goods and live stock and passengers in carriages and trucks, in, to, and through the borough :—Held, that such tolls could only be claimed as tolls traverse, but that inasmuch as the enjoyment of the railway company was a proprietary one of their own land acquired by them without any reservation of any rights by their vendors, enabling them to earn such a toll (if such rights could legally exist), neither the corporation, as a grantee of any such toll, nor the market company, as their representative, could have a right to take such tolls. Brecon Markets Co. v. Neath and Brecon Ry., 41 L. J., C. P. 257 ; L. R. 7 C. P. 555 ; 27 L. T. 316. Affirmed, 42 L. J., C. P. 63 ; L. R. 8 C. P. 157—Ex. Ch.

A passenger from Paris to England, by registering his luggage, places it under "the special care and charge of the master of the vessel," in which it is conveyed to Dover, so as to exempt it from the porterage regulations of the town of Dover, under 11 Geo. 4, c. cxvii. s. 60. Richardson v. Dover Corporation, 6 W. R. 15.

Import Duties—"Grain brought into Port for Sale."]—Grain brought into the port of London for the purpose of being dealt with, and which is actually dealt with, in such a manner as to change its character and name in a commercial sense, and which after being so changed is then sold, is not "grain brought into the port of London for sale" within the meaning of s. 4 of the Metage on Grain (Port of London) Act, 1872, and is not liable to the duty thereby imposed. Cotton v. Vogan, 65 L. J., Q. B. 486 ; [1896] A. C. 457 ; 74 L. T. 598 ; 61 J. P. 36—H. L. (E.) Affirming, 14 R. 763 ; 44 W. R. 55—C. A.

The importation of an article for the purpose of its manufacture or conversion into a form other than that in which it is imported, is not an importation of such article for sale, notwithstanding that it may at the time of importation be intended for sale when manufactured or converted. Where, therefore, a local act rendered grain brought into a port for sale liable to duty, such duty was held not to be leviable upon grain imported by a miller for the purposes of his business. Scott v. Taylor, 48 J. P. 424.

—— Parts beyond the Seas.]—By a dock act, 48 Geo. 3, c. xi. s. 38, certain duties were imposed "on goods, wares, and merchandises, imported from parts beyond the seas, and not brought by inland navigation into the port of Bristol" :—Held, that goods imported from Ireland were brought from parts beyond the seas. Battersby v. Kirk, 2 Bing. (N.C.) 584 ; 3 Scott, 11 ; 1 Hodges, 451 ; 5 L. J., C. P. 166.

—— Coastwise.]—By another branch of the statute, other duties were imposed "on goods, wares, and merchandises brought coastwise into the said port, of foreign growth or importation, but not of British growth or manufacture" :—Held, that Irish linens imported to Bristol from Dublin, were not brought coastwise. Ib.

Railway Trucks or Carriages.]—Where, by an act for paving, lighting, and cleansing a town, tolls were imposed on all stage-coaches and other such public carriages carrying passengers for hire, and coming to or going from or out of the town and the precincts, and also on all wains, waggons, carts, or other such carriages carrying goods for hire, and coming to or going from or out of the town and the precincts :—Held, that railway carriages carrying passengers for hire, and coming into the town by a railway, and railway trucks carrying goods for hire, and coming into the town by a railway, were not liable to the tolls. Newmarket Ry. v. Foster, 2 C. L. R. 1617 ; 3 El. & Bl. 94 ; 18 Jur. 572 ; 2 W. R. 532.

Coals brought by Railway into Town.]—A private act of parliament imposed a duty of 2*s.* per chaldron upon all coal "imported and landed at the town of H., or otherwise brought or delivered within the limits of the town." The act gave a remedy against the shipowner by distraining the ship and tackle as well as the coals in default of payment. At the time that the act was passed no coals were brought into H. except by sea :—Held, that coals brought into the town by railway were liable to the duty, and not only sea-borne coals ; and that the railway company, as the persons who brought the coals into the town, were primarily liable to pay the duty. G. E. Ry. v. Harwich Corporation, 41 L. T. 533 ; 44 J. P. 104—H. L. (E.)

—— "Dealing with"—Tonnage Rate.]—The plaintiffs conveyed coal for use on their line from various collieries within the borough of K., where it was wanted for their own consumption :—Held, that this was a "dealing" with coal so as to compel them to show a pit note and pay a tonnage rate under the Kingston-upon-Hull Improvement Act, 1854. N. E. Ry. v. Kingston-upon-Hull, 55 J. P. 518—C. A. S. P., Wilson v. Kingston-upon-Hull Local Board, 12 Jur. (N.S.) 706 ; 14 W. R. 638.

Letting of.]—Tolls traverse of a bridge cannot be let by parol, the demise must be by deed. Reg. v. Salisbury (Marquis), 3 N. & P. 476 ; 8 A. & E. 716 ; 1 W. W. & H. 444 ; 7 L. J., M. C. 110.

Action on a deed made between five commissioners of an inland navigation, under the authority of several acts of parliament, and the defendant, whereby the commissioners, in consideration of rent, demised the tolls of the navigation to the defendant for a year, from the 1st January, 1850, at the rent of 3,470*l.*, together with other payments, and the defendant covenanted with them, and also with the whole body of commissioners, in a separate covenant, for the payment of the rent. The declaration alleged an entry by virtue of the demise, and the occupying and receiving of the tolls during the entire year. Breach, non-payment of the rent. Plea, that the commissioners never executed the lease, and that the entry and occupation were at the will of the commissioners only, and not under the demise. Replication, that the defendant entered and received and enjoyed the tolls, by the permission of the commissioners, under the terms of the deed:—Held, that as the lessors had not executed the lease, the lessee had never received the consideration for which he had stipulated, namely, a permanent estate during the demise and under its terms, and therefore that he was not liable to be sued upon his covenant in the lease. Swatman v. Ambler, 8 Ex. 72; 22 L. J., Ex. 81.

A dock company was liable, under an act of parliament, to pay a harbour and pier board deficiencies of their income. The board had power to compound for tolls:—Held, that, as against the company they could not let the whole annual tolls. Southampton Dock Co. v. Southampton Harbour and Pier Board, 41 L. J., Ch. 832; 14 L. R., Eq. 595.

Reduction of.]—The board had power to reduce or alter their tolls:—Held, that, as against the company, they had no power to remit tolls on particular classes of goods. Ib.

Liability of Persons receiving.]—A private person or a company having a right to levy tolls in respect of the performance of a particular work, will be liable for injuries occasioned by performing it improperly. Mersey Docks v. Gibbs, 11 H. L. Cas. 686; 35 L. J., Ex. 225; L. R. 1 H. L. 93; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 571; 14 L. T. 677; 14 W. R. 872.

A corporate body authorised to perform such a work, and receiving tolls in respect of it, though obtaining no profit for itself from such tolls, but collecting them for the maintenance of the work and the possible future benefit of the public, is equally responsible for injuries arising from the improper performance of such work, and the funds thus obtained must discharge that liability. Ib.

b. Rate of Charge.

Rights to Tolls for Fractional Parts of Mile Traversed.]—By a local act of 1739, s. 23, the plaintiffs are empowered to take from every person conveying goods upon the river between Maidstone and Forest-row, or any part thereof (which all person and persons should and might lawfully do), such rates and duties for lockage and riverage as the plaintiffs should think fit, not exceeding 4*d.* per mile for every ton weight of goods from Maidstone up the river to Branbridge, and not exceeding 6*d.* per mile for every ton weight of goods from Branbridge up the river to Forest Row, and so in proportion for a greater or less quantity. By s. 28, the plaintiffs are from time to time to publicly fix up the duties for lockage and riverage charged by them. By s. 31, nothing in the act is to be construed to extend the plaintiff's authority to the execution of any works below Mrs. Edmonds' wharf in Maidstone. By s. 38, any action, suit or information for anything done in pursuance of this act, or in relation to the premises, shall be commenced within three months after the facts committed. Maidstone extends along the river upwards about three furlongs from Mrs. Edmonds' wharf to the College Lock, constructed by the plaintiffs, Maidstone bridge being between the two. The plaintiffs, besides other works on the river, had scoured a shoal between the bridge and Mrs. Edmonds' wharf, and on their annual survey they always disembarked at that wharf. In 1874, the plaintiffs amended their toll list, so as to charge, for the first time, tolls proportioned to a fractional part of a mile traversed. An owner of oil mills situate on the Medway, less than a mile above the College Lock, but more than a mile above Mrs. Edmonds' wharf, refused to pay to the plaintiffs any toll upon barges coming up the river to his mills:—Held, that they were entitled to charge tolls proportioned to a fractional part of a mile traversed since the amendment of their list, without reference to the three months' limitation provided by s. 38. Medway Navigation v. Brook, 33 L. T. 843.

A clause in a private act granted tolls for "a fraction of a mile beyond four miles," &c.; the company claimed such tolls when the whole distance traversed was less than four miles. The Lord Chancellor (Earl Cairns) and Lord Selborne were of opinion that the charge was, on the whole, warranted by the words of the act, and that the judgment of the court below must on this point also be affirmed. Lord Penzance and Lord O'Hagan, applying the principle that no charge could be imposed on the public but by the clearly expressed intention of the legislature, held that in this case the legislature had not clearly expressed an intention, nor had intended to authorise such a charge. Pryce v. Monmouthshire Canal & Ry., 49 L. J., Ex. 130; 4 App. Cas. 197; 40 L. T. 630; 27 W. R. 666—H. L. (E.)

Publication of Tolls.]—A company obtained an act (8 & 9 Vict. c. clxix.) authorising it to construct a railway and to demand tolls for the conveyance of passengers and goods thereon. The charge for the conveyance of goods was generally thus expressed, "per ton per mile not exceeding," &c. One clause provided that "for articles or persons conveyed on the railway for a less distance than four miles" there might be, "in addition to the prescribed tolls for conveyance, a reasonable charge for the expense of stopping, loading, and unloading." No publication of this charge in the form of a "toll" had been made upon the toll board:—Held, that this "charge" for stopping was not properly a "toll," and that the non-publication of it on the toll-board in the form required by the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, ss. 93 and 95, did not prevent the company from demanding it. Ib.

A pier company was authorised by act of parliament to charge, for goods laden or unladen on the pier, the rates specified in a schedule to the act; but they could only demand them so long as "the rates for the time being authorised to be taken as thereinbefore mentioned" were painted on a board affixed to the premises. By a subsequent section power was given to lower the tolls or to raise them to such sums as the company should think proper, not exceeding the sums authorised by the act. The company lowered some of the rates, but put up a board showing the tolls contained in the schedule to the act:—Held, that the act required the actual tolls in force for the time being, and not the maximum tolls authorised by the act, to be painted on the board. Gregson v. Potter, 48 L. J., M. C. 86; 4 Ex. D. 142; 27 W. R. 840.

Alteration and Variation.]—A toll reasonable in amount, but varying from time to time according to the value of money, is valid in point of law. Lawrence v. Hitch, 9 B. & S. 467; 37 L. J., Q. B. 209; L. R. 3 Q. B. 521; 18 L. T. 483; 16 W. R. 813—Ex. Ch.

If the lessee of tolls under a corporation varies, by temporary agreement, the amount of toll claimed of individuals, it will not affect the right to the tolls, if it appears to have been a variation, not for the purpose of claiming more at one time than another, but for the convenience of both parties. Lancum v. Lovell, 6 Car. & P. 463.

Trustees empowered, by one section of a local act, to take such tolls as they might at any meeting direct, up to a certain maximum, are not entitled, under that power, to remit a half toll on return loads, imposed by another section. Any alteration of tolls must affect the different classes mentioned in the act equally. Barton v. Bennett, 12 W. R. 709.

But one who had taken a lease of the tolls, subject to an order purporting to remit the half tolls:—Held, not entitled to exact them. Ib.

A trading company empowered by statute to take tolls for certain matters, is not bound, unless there is an enactment to that effect, to exact one uniform toll from all persons alike, but may charge a smaller toll to a particular class than to another. Hungerford Market Co. v. City Steamboat Co., 3 El. & El. 365; 30 L. J., Q. B. 25; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 67; 3 L. T. 732.

c. Levy.

Conviction for Wrongful Levy.]—A mere claim of a right to take tolls, without showing clearly that it is a bonâ fide claim, is not sufficient to oust justices of the jurisdiction, to convict for taking them improperly. Rex v. Hampshire JJ., 3 D. P. C. 47.

By Action.]—Indebitatus assumpsit lies for fish claimed as toll for the use of a capstan and windlass in drawing fishing boats up on the beach out of the sea. Falmouth (Earl) v. Penrose, 9 D. & R. 452; 8 B. & C. 452.

A power of distress implies an antecedent right of action. G. E. Ry. v. Harwich (Corporation), 41 L. T. 533; 44 J. P. 44—H. L. (E.)

TONTINE.

Annuity — Deed.]—In 1792, 32,000*l.* were raised by way of tontine, viz. by subscribers, who were to receive during the lives of cestuis que vient nominated by them annuities proportioned to the amounts subscribed, which were secured by conveying to trustees freehold lands, upon trust to raise an annuity of 880*l.*, and divide it among the subscribers during the lives of their cestuis que vient. Each subscriber had a debenture handed to him, in which the amount of his subscription and of his annuity at that date, and the name and age of the cestui que vie were set forth; and it was expressly provided in the deed, that any person holding the debenture might give a receipt for the annuity due on the debenture, and that no payment could be made to any subscriber without his producing the debenture at the time of payment:—Held, that the annuity to which a subscriber was thus entitled was an interest in lands which could not pass by delivery of the debenture, but required a deed, and in the case of a married woman required a fine (before 1833). O'Hara's Tontine, In re, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1145; 6 W. R. 45.

The provision, that any person holding the debenture should have power to give a receipt, only operates so as to discharge the trustees, and does not enable the right itself to pass by delivery. Ib.

Succession Duty.]—A tontine is a contract for value, and therefore within the exceptions of s. 17 of the Succession Duty Act, 1853. Oldfield v. Preston, 3 De G. F. & J. 398; 31 L. J., Ch. 256; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 107; 5 L. T. 650; 10 W. R. 257.

An interest accruing immediately under a tontine does not create the relation of predecessor and successor, so as to make succession duty payable in respect of the accrued interest. Ib.

Where a father subscribed to a tontine in the names of three of his children, two of whom died before the time appointed for the commencement of the act, but the third survived it:—Held, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that such surviving child took, not by succession, but in its own right, by way of advancement, and that no duty was payable in respect thereof. Ib.

Insurance Company—Winding-up.]—The circumstance that policies of a life insurance company are still in force, and that the liabilities of the company upon them cannot be settled for many years, is not sufficient to render it inexpedient to make an order for winding-up such a company under the provisions of the winding-up acts. Dee, Ex parte, Universal Tontine Life Insurance Co., In re, 3 De G. & Sm. 112.

1. GENERALLY.

No Legal Wrong without a Remedy.]—Where a person has an exclusive right which is infringed upon, if an action of trespass will not lie, he may have an action on the case; for the law will not permit a man who has a right to be without a remedy. Whitchurch v. Hide, 2 Atk. 392.

Non Injuria—Malice.]—An act which does not amount to a legal injury cannot be actionable because it is done with a bad intent. Stevenson v. Newnham, 13 C. B. 285; 22 L. J., C. P. 110—Ex. Ch. S. P., Bradford Corporation v. Pickles, 64 L. J., Ch. 759; [1895] A. C. 587; 11 R. 286; 73 L. T. 353; 44 W. R. 190; 60 J. P. 3—H. L. (E.)

The plaintiffs alleged in their statement of claim that their house had been called "Ashford Lodge" for sixty years, and the adjoining house belonging to the defendant had been called "Ashford Villa" for forty years, and that the defendant had recently altered the name of his house to that of the plaintiffs' house. The plaintiffs alleged that this act of the defendant had caused them great inconvenience and annoyance, and had materially diminished the value of their property, and they claimed an injunction to restrain the defendant from continuing to use the name of their house:—Held, that the alleged act of the defendant in calling his house by the name of the plaintiffs' house was not a violation of any legal right of the plaintiffs, and there being no allegation of malicious intention, a demurrer to the statement of claim was allowed. Day v. Brownrigg, 48 L. J., Ch. 173; 10 Ch. D. 294; 39 L. T. 553; 27 W. R. 217—C. A.

In the case of damage occasioned by a wrongful act, though such as the law esteems an injury, malice is not a necessary ingredient to the maintenance of an action. Rogers v. Rajendro Dutt, 13 Moore, P. C. 209; 3 L. T. 160; 9 W. R. 149.

It is essential to an action of tort that the act complained of should be legally wrongful as regards the party complaining, i.e. it must prejudicially affect him in some legal right. The fact that it will, however directly, do him harm in his interests is not enough. Ib.

A summons and plaint complaining that the plaintiff, a corn merchant, was possessed of stores adjacent to a public thoroughfare and market-place, and the defendant, contriving and unjustly intending to injure the plaintiff in his business of a corn merchant, and to prevent his customers from coming to the premises and stores to sell and dispose of their corn to the plaintiff, wrongfully and injuriously prevented certain parties named, under colour of requiring from them the payment of some alleged or pretended tolls or other duties not legally demandable or payable from sellers, from disposing of their corn to the plaintiff, and stopped and detained the carts and animals laden with corn while proceeding to the premises and stores of he plaintiff, and thereby obstructed and hindered the plaintiff from carrying on his business, is bad. Higgins v. O'Donnell, Ir. R. 4 C. L. 91; 18 W. R. 378.

Physical Harm caused by Words.]—A false statement made wilfully, the direct and natural effect of which is to cause a mental shock resulting in the illness of the person to whom it is made, is an infringement of the right to personal safety, and actionable. It is wilful injuria, although no malicious purpose to cause the harm nor motive of spite be imputed, and its effect—illness from mental shock—may be, and in this case was, not too remote to be in law regarded as a consequence for which the speaker is answerable in damages. Wilkinson v. Downton, 66 L. J., Q. B. 493; [1897] 2 Q. B. 57; 76 L. T. 493; 45 W. R. 525.

Failure to prove Special Damage.]—The principle ordinarily applicable to actions of tort is that a plaintiff is never precluded from recovering ordinary damages by reason of his failing to prove the special damage he has laid, unless the special damage is the gist of the action. Mudun Mohun Doss v. Gokul Doss, 14 L. T. 646; 14 W. R. 590—P. C.

Committed Abroad.]—Where, by the law of a foreign country, compensation or damages may be recovered in such country for an assault there committed, an action is maintainable in England by a British subject for such assault, although proceedings taken at his instance are pending in the foreign court in respect of the same assault. Scott v. Seymour (Lord), 1 H. & C. 219; 32 L. J., Ex. 61; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 522; 8 L. T. 511; 11 W. R. 169.

If by the law of a foreign country a person is justified or is excused, or has been justified or excused, in respect of a particular act, he is not answerable in this country in respect of such act as being a tort. The M. Moxham, 46 L. J., P. 17; 1 P. D. 107; 34 L. T. 559; 24 W. R. 650.

The rule as to property and civil contracts, that an act, unless intended to take effect elsewhere, shall, as regards its effects and incidents, if a conflict of law arises between the lex loci and the lex fori, be governed by the former, applies also to the case of an act causing a personal injury. If such an act is either enjoined or rendered lawful by the law of the country where it is done, an action cannot be maintained here in respect of it. Phillips v. Eyre, 10 B. & S. 1004; 40 L. J., Q. B. 28; L. R. 6 Q. B. 1; 22 L. T. 869—Ex. Ch. Affirming 17 W. R. 375.

Where a wrongful act inflicting personal injury is committed in a colony, an act of the colonial legislature rendering legal the wrongful act done, subsequently passed before an action has been brought in this country, takes away the right of action, not only in the courts of the colony, but also in those of this country. Ib.

Where the tort has been committed by the governor of the colony, it is no objection to the validity of the act of the colonial legislature, legalising the wrongs committed, that the assent of the governor was necessary to the passing of the act. Ib.

In order that an action may lie between parties in this country in respect of an act committed in a foreign country, the act must be one which if committed in this country would be actionable, and one which is not innocent according to the law of the country where it was committed; but it is not necessary that it should be the subject of civil proceedings in that country. The rule laid down in Phillips v. Eyre (supra) and The M. Moxham (supra) applied. Machado v. Fontes, 66 L. J., Q. B. 542; [1897] 2 Q. B. 231; 76 L. T. 588; 45 W. R. 565—C. A.

3. Joint Tortfeasors.

Contribution Between.]—If A. recover in tort against two defendants, and levy the whole damages on one, that one cannot recover a moiety against the other for his contribution; aliter in assumpsit. Merryweather v. Nixan, 8 Term Rep. 186. S. P., Lingard v. Bromley. infra.

Where a liability arises from the wrongful act of several parties, each is liable for all the consequences, and there is no contribution between them, and each case is distinct, depending upon the evidence against each party

Att.-Gen. v. Wilson, Cr. & Ph. 1 ; 10 L. J., Ch. 53 ; 4 Jur. 1174. And see S. C. on demurrer, 9 Sim. 30 ; 7 L. J., Ch. 76 ; 1 Jur. 890.

The rule that wrongdoers cannot have redress or contribution against each other is confined to cases where the person seeking redress must be presumed to have known that he was doing an unlawful act. Adamson v. Jarvis, 4 Bing. 66 ; 5 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 68. S. P., Pearson v. Skelton, 1 M. & W. 504 ; 1 Tyr. & G. 848.

Or the act is of an obviously illegal character. Betts v. Gibbins, 2 A. & E. 57 ; 4 N. & M. 64 ; 4 L. J., K. B. 1.

Nor does the rule extend to a case in which there is any bonâ fide doubt whether in point of law the act was authorised. Ib.

So also the rule that a tortfeasor cannot recover upon a promise to indemnify made by the person at whose request the tortious act is committed, must be similarly confined. Ib.

The principle that no rights of indemnity and contribution exist as between wrongdoers is confined to cases where the transaction is actually illegal or void, or where the fraud is so great that on moral grounds the court will not entertain a suit for the relief of the malfeasors. The principle is further limited to cases where the fraudulent or illegal transaction is itself the basis of the claim, and does not apply where the transaction, though leading to that which is the basis of the claim, is separable from it. Power v. Hoey, 19 W. R. 916.

Where the joint author of a quasi-delict whose acts or omissions are not tainted with fraud or other moral delinquency whereby they partake of the nature of a delict, has paid the entire judgment debt for which he is jointly and severally liable, he has by the law of Scotland a right of recourse against his co-delinquents. Semble, the rule in Merryweather v. Nixan (8 Term Rep. 186) was correctly qualified in Adamson v. Jarvis (4 Bing. 66 ; 5 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 68), per Lord Herschell, L.C., dub. Lord Halsbury. Palmer v. Wick Steam Shipping Co., [1894] A. C. 318 ; 6 R. 245 ; 71 L. T. 163—H. L. (Sc.)

Where the injured party's claim of damages is liquidated by a joint and several decree against all the delinquents, the sum decreed is a civil debt, and while each debtor is liable under the decree in solidum to the pursuer, inter se each is liable only pro ratâ. Ib.

Contribution enforced among assignees in bankruptcy, to reimburse a payment by one under an order for a loss occasioned by their joint act ; and the objection that the defendants acted only for conformity upon the representation and advice of the plaintiff did not prevail. Lingard v. Bromley, 1 Ves. & B. 114 ; 12 R. R. 195.

—— Proportion of Liability of Joint Tort Feasors.]—Where two persons are jointly sued for false imprisonment, one of whom has acted from improper motives, the damages ought not to be assessed with reference to the act and motives of the most guilty or the most innocent party, but the true criterion of damage is the whole injury the party has sustained from the joint act of trespass. Clark v. Newsam, 1 Ex. 131 ; 16 L. J., Ex. 296.

Damages cannot be severed where the count is for a joint trespass, and the jury finds the defendants guilty accordingly. Hill v. Goodchild, 5 Burr. 2790.

—— Agency.]—There is no agency as between wrongdoers ; each of them is personally liable. Heugh v. Abergavenny (Earl), 23 W. R. 40.

—— Form of Decree.]—In a collision action in rem where a tug and tow are both pronounced to blame for a collision with another vessel, the owner of the latter vessel may enforce the judgment for the whole of his damages against either or both the defendants, and the defendants are not entitled to have the decree so drawn up that half only of the total damages is recoverable from each defendant. The Thomas Joliffe or The Avon, [1891] P. 7 ; 63 L. T. 712 ; 39 W. R. 176 ; 6 Asp. M. C. 605.

Effect of Discharge of one of two joint Tortfeasors.]—A covenant not to sue one of two joint tortfeasors does not operate as a release so as to discharge the other. An agreement to accept a sum of money from one of two joint tortfeasors in full discharge of his liability, without prejudice to the right to claim against the other, ought to be construed, not as a release, but as a covenant not to sue. Duck v. Mayeu, 62 L. J., Q. B. 69 ; [1892] 2 Q. B. 511 ; 4 R. 38 ; 67 L. T. 547 ; 41 W. R. 56 ; 57 J. P. 23—C. A.

TOWN.

What is.]—On the trial of an issue whether a railway was passing through a town, within the meaning of the Railways Clauses Act (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), s. 11, the judge merely told the jury that the word "town" was to be understood in the ordinary and popular sense :—Held, a misdirection, inasmuch as the judge ought to have given such a definition of the word "town" as would have enabled the jury to decide the issue. Elliott v. South Devon Ry., 2 Ex. 725 ; 5 Railw. Cas. 500 ; 17 L. J., Ex. 262.

"Town," in that act, means a collection of inhabited houses, so near to each other that they may reasonably be said to be continuous ; and the term will include a space of open ground, surrounded by continuous houses. Ib.

A local act created trustees of turnpike roads, which were described by definite points, some in the town of T. The act was to be in operation for thirty-one years. It enacted, that it should not be lawful for the trustees to continue or erect any turnpike or toll gate across the roads, in the towns of T. and W., or in any other town through or into which the roads might pass or be made:—Held, on an indictment for erecting and continuing a turnpike gate within the town of T., that the jury was rightly directed that the word "town" was to be understood in a popular sense, as a congregation of houses, and they were to consider whether the spot where the gate stood was surrounded by houses so reasonably near that the inhabitants might fairly be said to dwell together. Reg. v. Cottle, 16 Q. B. 412; 20 L. J., M. C. 162; 15 Jur. 721.

The 1 & 2 Vict. c. ii., for better paving, &c., the town of M., by s. 23 required the commissioners to repair, &c., all or any of the streets then paved or thereafter to be paved, cleansed and lighted under the provisions of the act: and s. 35 empowered the commissioners to light streets "within the town," although they were not public. The limits of the act were not defined. In pursuance of 25 & 26 Vict. c. 61, s. 7, the county was divided into highway districts, one of which included that part of the parish of M. "not within the town of M." Since 1862 certain highways in the parish of M. had been lighted by the commissioners: before they were so lighted they were not within the town. Upon complaint before justices against the highway district board for not repairing them:—Held, first, that the word "town" in the local act meant the town of M., not as it existed at the time of the passing of the act, but as it extended from time to time. Milton next-Sittingbourne Commissioners v. Faversham Highway Board, 10 B. & S. 548.

Held, secondly, that a highway was within the town if there was a continuous series of houses in it so contiguous as to form a congregation of human habitations. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the fact of lighting the highways was not conclusive as to their being in the town. Ib.

By a local act passed in 1822 it was enacted that no person should sell any fish within the town of Rochdale except in the market-places, and that any person offending against this provision should forfeit a sum of money. In 1876, W. sold fish in Molesworth-street, which then was a main thoroughfare of the town of Rochdale; but in 1822 its site was green fields; Molesworth Street was not within the market-places of Rochdale:—Held, that the word "town," as used in the local act, meant the collection of buildings from time to time called the town of Rochdale, and that W. had been guilty of an offence against that act. Collier v. Worth, 1 Ex. D. 464; 35 L. T. 345.

—— Within the Lands Clauses Act.]—Quære, whether Teddington, in Middlesex, is a town within the Lands Clauses Act (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), s. 128. The lands near it situated close to the railway station, and not continuously built upon, are not lands within a town, nor lands used for building purposes, within the meaning of that section. L. & S. W. Ry. v. Blackmore, 39 L. J., Ch. 713; L. R. 4 H. L. 610; 23 L. T. 504; 19 W. R. 805.

When premises are within the municipal boundaries of a town, but not surrounded by houses:—Held, that they were not in a town within the meaning of s. 93 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845. Falkner v. Somerset and Dorset Ry., 42 L. J., Ch. 851; L. R. 16 Eq. 458.

The words "lands situate within a town" in s. 128 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, mean lands surrounded by buildings which constitute the town; and therefore lands outside the buildings, although within the borough boundary, are not within the exception of the section. Carington v. Wycombe Ry., 37 L. A. TRADE.

1. TRADE NAME.

a. In General.

Name and Mark—Distinction between.]—There is a distinction between trade names and trade marks—the latter being always assumed and invented by a trader for the purpose of his goods; and there is no necessity for him to adopt a trade mark like that of another trader, except for the purpose of passing off his goods as those of that trader. Turton v. Turton, 58 L. J., Ch. 677; 42 Ch. D. 128; 61 L. T. 571; 38 W. R. 22—C. A.

Name.]—The name of the first maker of an article may in time become a mere sign of the quality of the article, and cease to be a representation that the article is the manufacture of any particular person. Hall v. Barrows, 4 De G., J. & S. 150; 3 N. R. 259; 33 L. J., Ch. 204; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 55; 9 L. T. 561; 12 W. R. 322.

A name may become a trade denomination, and as such the property of a particular person who first gives it to a particular article of manufacture. The employment of the name by another person for the purpose of describing an imitation of that article is an invasion of the right of the original manufacturer, who is entitled to protection by injunction. Wotherspoon v. Currie, 42 L. J., Ch. 130; L. R. 5 H. L. 508; 27 L. T. 393.

A company cannot acquire the right to the exclusive user of a name which is merely descriptive of the class of business carried on by it. Colonial Life Insurance Co. v. Home and Colonial Insurance Co., 33 Beav. 548; 33 L. J., Ch. 741; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 967; 10 L. T. 448; 12 W. R. 783.

The plaintiff in cases relating to trade names has not any property in the particular title, but he has a right to prevent others from personating his business by using such a description as would lead customers to suppose they were trading with the plaintiff. Boulnois v. Peake, 13 Ch. D. 513, n.

Before the court will interfere to prevent one trader from making fraudulent use of the name of another, it requires to be satisfied not only that the course taken by the defendant is calculated to deceive the public, but that representation had been made to him by the plaintiff that it will have that effect. Williams v. Osborne, 13 L. T. 498.

—— Similarity—Injunction.]—A trader who bonâ fide adopts as his trade or business name what is an accurate statement of an existing state of facts—e.g. his own name, if trading alone, or his own in combination with those of his partners, or with a comprehensive description of them, if in partnership—as A. and B. and C., or A. & Sons—cannot, in the absence of fraud, be restrained from so doing, because the name so adopted may by its similarity with that of another trader in the same place—or in the same class of goods—whose name may have acquired a reputation in the market, make it possible, or even probable, that inconvenience may arise, and the goods of the one trader be bought by mistake for those of the other. Turton v. Turton, supra.

To justify the court in granting an injunction, there must be a passing off by the trader sought to be restrained of his goods as those of the other trader. Ib.

A tradesman must not advertise his goods as being those of another tradesman, and will be restrained from doing so, though it is not proved that anyone has been deceived. Jay v. Ladler, 40 Ch. D. 649; 60 L. T. 27; 37 W. R. 505. See Thompson v. Montgomery, post, col. 173, and Bodega Co. v. Owens, post, col. 161.

To obtain an injunction on an interlocutory application to restrain a company from trading under a name very similar to that of a previously established company, it is not enough to show the similarity of the names, but also that there is a reasonable probability of damage in consequence to the business of the plaintiff company. General Reversionary Investment Co. v. General Reversionary Co., 1 Meg. 65.

A man is not entitled to call his goods by a name which is an accurate and true description of such goods when the name is one by which the goods of another manufacturer have already been described and are known to the trade, and the effect of his doing so will be to mislead purchasers into the belief that they are buying the goods of that other. Injunction granted in the form approved in Johnston v. Orr-Ewing (post, col. 110). Burgess v. Burgess (post, col. 83) considered. Reddaway v. Banham, 65 L. J., Q. B. 381; [1896] A. C. 199; 74 L. T. 289; 44 W. R. 638—H. L. (E.)

Injunction granted at the instance of a foreign company trading in England to restrain an English rival from adopting a name so similar to its own act as to be calculated to deceive customers. National Folding Box and Paper Co. v. National Folding Box Co., 13 R. 60; 13 W. R. 156.

The plaintiff company having for many years carried on an insurance business under its name as stated below, the defendant company obtained registration, and began to issue prospectuses and advertisements under the name stated below. The offices of both companies were situated in the city of London. On motion of the plaintiff company, an injunction was granted to restrain the defendant company, until the hearing or further order, from using its name as stated below, or any other name calculated to cause the defendant company to be mistaken for the plaintiff company. Accident Insurance Co. v. Accident, Disease, and General Insurance Corporation, 54 L. J., Ch. 104; 51 L. T. 597.

—— Misleading Statements on Plaintiff's Label.]—A plaintiff is entitled to an injunction restraining a rival trader from the use of a name which is a substantial part of his trade mark, notwithstanding a misrepresentation of fact on the labels constituting the trade mark. Such a misrepresentation, in the absence of any design to mislead, does not disentitle the plaintiff to relief. Cochrane v. McNish, 65 L. J., P. C. 20; [1896] A. C. 225; 74 L. T. 109—P. C.

The appellant, plaintiff in the action, was the owner of a trade mark registered in England and in Jamaica, of which the words "Club Soda" were part. On the mark were the words "manufactured in Ireland by H.M.'s Royal Letters Patent." There was no patent for the manufacture. The respondents, whose labels were easily distinguishable from those of the appellant, used the words "Club Soda" on their labels to describe their own goods:—Held, that the appellant was entitled to an injunction restraining the respondents from the use of those words. Ib.

—— Company Incorporated in Canada—Use of Similar Trade Name in England—Injunction.]—In June, 1893, the Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada, which was duly incorporated in Canada, and had there carried on business for some years under that name, opened an office in the city of London. The Sun Life Assurance Company, which was established in 1810 in this country, its head office being in the city, thereupon commenced proceedings against the Canadian company, and moved for an injunction to restrain the defendant company from carrying on in the united kingdom the business of a life assurance company under the name of the Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada:—Held, that, inasmuch as the mere user by the defendant company of its full name involved no misstatement of fact and was not a fraudulent user, the defendant company was entitled to use in this country its full corporate name, but that the right did not extend to the use of the name of "The Sun" or "The Sun Life" without the addition of the words "of Canada." Saunders v. Sun Life Assurance Co. of Canada, 63 L. J., Ch. 247; [1894] 1 Ch. 537; 8 R. 125; 69 L. T. 755; 42 W. R. 315.

—— "Post Office Directory"—"The Post Office Bradford Directory."]—The plaintiff was the proprietor of a directory entitled the "Post Office Directory of the West Riding of Yorkshire," and he had for several years published post office directories of other counties. The defendants published a directory for the town of Bradford, which is within the West Riding, entitled "The Post Office Bradford Directory," but it was not similar to the plaintiff's directory in price or appearance. There being no evidence to satisfy the court that the words "Post office," in connection with directories, had become necessarily connected in the minds of the public with the name of Kelly:—Held, that the plaintiff had no right to the exclusive use of the words "Post Office Directory." Kelly v. Byles, 49 L. J., Ch. 181; 13 Ch. D. 682; 42 L. T. 338; 28 W. R. 485—C. A.

—— "Radstock Collieries"—"The Radstock Colliery Proprietors and Factors."]—B. was the owner of and worked all the collieries in the parish of Radstock in Somersetshire, and owned all the coal in that parish, with a small exception. She carried on the business of working the collieries and selling the coal in her own name, adding to it on her waggons and billheads the words "Radstock Collieries." The defendants, from 1868, carried on at Radstock the business of coal merchants as the "Radstock Coal Company," having depôts at various railway stations in the south and west of England, at which they sold different kinds of coal. They became in 1876 the lessees of and worked a colliery outside the parish of Radstock, but in a district or basin in which coal was raised similar to that raised within the parish; coal raised in the district, but outside the parish, being known in the market as Radstock coal. In 1873 the defendants began to sell coals at G. in Surrey, by means of a local agent, and in 1875 they bought the goodwill of a retail coal dealer named C. at G., who had become bankrupt. They then advertised themselves in the Surrey newspapers, and otherwise in the neighbourhood, as "The Radstock Colliery Proprietors and Factors, Coal and Coke Merchants (late C. & Co.)," and offered to supply coal of every description direct from the collieries:—Held, that the defendants were not entitled to use the name "The Radstock Colliery Proprietors," unless and until they should acquire a colliery within the parish of Radstock, or to use any style implying that their coal came from the parish of Radstock, unless and until they should become authorised to sell coals raised from a colliery within that parish. Braham v. Beachim, 47 L. J., Ch. 348; 7 Ch. D. 848; 38 L. T. 640; 26 W. R. 654.

Newspaper—User and Reputation.]—The plaintiffs, on the 3rd February, 1888, published the first number of a newspaper, and registered it at Stationers' Hall on the next day. No advertisement had been issued that a newspaper under that name was about to be published. On the 5th February the defendant published the first number of a newspaper with the same name. Very few copies of the plaintiffs' paper had then been sold:—Held, that the plaintiffs could not restrain the defendants from publishing their newspaper under that name, for that the registration at Stationers' Hall gave the plaintiffs no exclusive right to the name, and that a title to it by user and reputation could not be acquired by a publication for three days with a very small sale. Licensed Victuallers' Newspaper Co. v. Bingham, 58 L. J., Ch. 36; 38 Ch. D. 139; 59 L. T. 187; 36 W. R. 433—C. A.

The use for many years of two words of common use, "Newcastle Chronicle," as the name of a newspaper, does not give the owner of the newspaper an exclusive right to the use of one of the words, "Chronicle," so as to entitle him to restrain the defendant from publishing in the same town a newspaper having for its name the word "Chronicle," in conjunction with another, that is to say, "Sporting Chronicle"; the appearance and contents of two papers being dissimilar, there being no evidence of anyone having been deceived, and no apparent intention to deceive on the part of the defendant. Cowen v. Hulton, 46 L. T. 897—C. A.

The right of the proprietor of a newspaper to prevent another person from adopting the same or similar name for a similar publication is not founded on the right of property in the proprietor, but rests upon the equitable doctrine that the user of such name is reasonably calculated to induce the public to believe that the new paper is that of the original proprietor, and to pass off his paper for that of the original proprietor. Walter v. Emmott, infra.

Where the owner of a publication claims an injunction to restrain the issue of another publication with a similar name he must show not only that the assumption of the name by the defendant is calculated to deceive the public, but also that there is a probability of the plaintiff being injured by such deception. Borthwick v. Evening Post, 57 L. J., Ch. 406; 37 Ch. D. 449; 58 L. T. 252; 36 W. R. 434—C. A.

The plaintiff had long been the proprietor of a daily morning newspaper, called the "Morning Post." The defendants commenced a daily evening newspaper called the "Evening Post." There was no evidence of any actual injury having been done to the plaintiff by the conduct of the defendants:—Held, that although the conduct of the defendants in taking the name "Evening Post" might be calculated to deceive the public in supposing that there were was a connection between the two papers, there was no probability that the plaintiff would be injured by such supposition; and an injunction was therefore refused. Ib.

The plaintiff was the proprietor of a newspaper called "The Grocer," published in London, to which there had been originally attached a monthly supplement entitled "The Oil Trade Review," both of which were registered at Stationers' Hall. In 1886 the two were amalgamated under the name of "The Grocer and Oil Trade Review." In 1888, the defendants commenced, in Dublin, the publication of a bimonthly paper called "The Grocer and Wine Merchant and Irish Brewer and Distiller," intended by the defendants to represent and to advocate the interests of a different branch of the trade from the plaintiff's paper:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction to restrain the defendants from using the term "Grocer" as the first or principal part of the title of their paper. Reed v. O'Meara, 21 L. R., Ir. 216.

——Misrepresentation—Interlocutory Injunction.]—The proprietor of an old-established paper called "The Mail," published three days a week at 11 a.m. at the price of 2*d.* in London, but whose principal circulation was in the provinces and abroad, was held not entitled, upon interlocutory application, to an injunction restraining the defendant from using on a daily morning paper which he had just started, and which was published in London at 3 a.m. at the price of ½*d.*, the title of "The Morning Mail." Walter v. Emmott, 54 L. J., Ch. 1059; 53 L. T. 437—C. A.

Person assuming Name.]—In England the assumption of a name, the patronymic of a family, by a stranger, who has never before been called by that name, is not the subject of a civil action, as by the English law there is no right of property in a person to the use of a particular name, to the extent of enabling him to prevent the assumption of his name by another. Du Boulay v. Du Boulay, 6 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 31; 38 L. J., P. C. 35; L. R. 2 P. C. 430; 17 W. R. 594.

Aliter, as to the exclusive use of a name in connection with a trade or a business, which right is recognised, and a party's assuming it, colourably or otherwise, being an invasion of another's rights, is a fraud, for which a remedy lies either at law or equity. Ib.

—— Telegraphic Address.]—The short address "Street, London," was used for many years in sending telegrams from abroad to Street & Co., of Cornhill. A bank adopted by arrangement with the post-office the phrase "Street, London," as a cypher address for telegrams from abroad to themselves:—Held, that the court had no jurisdiction to restrain the bank from using such cypher address. Street v. Union Bank of Spain and England, 55 L. J., Ch. 31; 30 Ch. D. 156; 53 L. T. 262; 33 W. R. 901.

"Castle Album" of Photographs.]—An album for holding photographs containing a printed list of various castles, painted illustrations of which, with short descriptions, appeared on the pages of the album, is not a book within the Copyright Act, 1842. Even if the album were a book, there was no infringement of copyright in taking as a title the words "Castle Album," which had not on the evidence been proved to have acquired a secondary sense in the market designating the plaintiff's album exclusively so as to fall within the principle of Wotherspoon v. Currie (supra, col. 75). Schove v. Schmincke, 55 L. J., Ch. 892; 33 Ch. D. 546; 55 L. T. 212; 34 W. R. 700.

Label on Champagne Bottles—Misrepresentation—Long User.]—In July, 1885, M., of Dizy, in France commenced the consignment to the plaintiff in London, of champagne under the label "Le Court et Cie., Reims," which had then recently been registered in France as his trade-mark, and to which in December, 1886, his right was established in proceedings against X. before the French tribunal. Further consignments were made to the plaintiff down to July, 1886, and advertised and sold by him as Le Court et Cie.'s champagne. In March, 1886, the defendant, trading under the name of Short & Co., began to sell (chiefly at a wine bar across the counter) champagne which was sent to him from France by X. as Le Court et Cie.'s champagne; and it appeared that in 1882 he had proposed to register in France a label with the name Le Court et Cie. as corresponding to his own trade-name of Short & Co., but from difficulties in obtaining registration abandoned the idea. Upon motion by the plaintiff to restrain the use of the name and brand by the defendant:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to an injunction against the defendant: because the evidence failed to show that either by long user or reputation had the wine sold under the name and brand "Le Court et Cie." become so associated with the wine of the plaintiff as to enable him to assert his common law right of restraining another person from passing off his goods as those of the plaintiff. Goodfellow v. Prince, 56 L. J., Ch. 545; 35 Ch. D. 9; 56 L. T. 617; 35 W. R. 488—C. A.

Exclusive Use of another Person's Name.]—F. sought to restrain C. and V. from using the name "Richter Concerts," or from representing themselves as owners of the undertaking known by that name, or from representing that they were carrying on the "Richter Concerts" in succession to F.'s series; and also to restrain V. from acting in the matter as agent for C. F alleged that he engaged Dr. Richter to conduct concerts, and in 1879 had originated the "Richter Concerts"; and that no concerts had ever been given under that name excepting by him. It appeared that C. had announced a series of "Richter Concerts," and that V., notwithstanding a written agreement to act as F.'s agent, had held himself out as the agent of C. It was contended by F. that he had acquired the right to the exclusive use of the term "Richter Concerts," as a "trade-name," by having originally introduced the name and obtained a list of subscribers, and by the introduction of original features as to price and music. Dr. Richter had declined to act any longer as the conductor of F.'s concerts, and had made arrangements with C.:—Held, that it required a strong case to be made out to sustain a claim to the exclusive use of another person's name as a trade-name; that no such case had been established in the present instance, and that there was no ground for saying that the term "Richter Concerts" had become dissociated from Dr. Richter himself, who was at liberty to carry his services to any market he chose. Franke v. Chappell, 57 L. T. 141.

Servant setting up Independent Business.]—Representations contained on the blinds and brasses of a shop front, calculated to induce the public to believe that the owner is connected in business with a firm of established reputation, will be considered upon the same principles as govern rights in trade-marks. Therefore, where a tradesman, in addition to his own name upon his shop front, placed upon his sun blind and upon his brass plate the words "From T. and G." (in whose employment he had been), the court, being of opinion that this was done in such a way as to be likely to mislead, and there being evidence that persons had been actually misled, granted an injunction to restrain such a use of the name of the firm "T. and G." Glenny v. Smith, 2 Dr. & Sm. 476; 6 N. R. 363; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 964; 13 L. T. 11; 13 W. R. 1032.

A trader, who has been a manager or a partner in a firm of established reputation, has a right, on setting up an independent business, to make known to the public that he has been with that firm, but he must take care not to do so in a way calculated to lead the public to believe that he is carrying on the business of the old firm, or is in any way connected with it. An old-established tailor took his foreman into partnership, and the business was carried on under the name of H. and P. The partnership was afterwards dissolved by a decree of the court, in which it was provided that the business of the partnership should belong to the master. The master accordingly kept up the shop under the name of H. & Co. Subsequently the foreman set up a shop only a few doors from the master's shop, and painted over the door the words "P., from H. and P.":—Held, that, having regard to the manner in which the names were painted up, the foreman had done that which was calculated to lead the public to suppose that he was still connected with the old firm, and that the master was entitled to an injunction. Hookham v. Pottage, L. R. 8 Ch. 91; 27 L. T. 595; 21 W. R. 47. S. P., Hart v. Colley, 59 L. J., Ch. 355.

Vendor after Sale of Business.]—Although the fact that a man has sold the goodwill of a business does not prevent him from setting up again immediately in the same trade, the court will nevertheless restrain him from sending special solicitations to the customers of the old house asking them to deal with him at his new place of business, and it will not justify his conduct that he is not in any way holding himself out as continuing to carry on the old business. Labouchere v. Dawson, 41 L. J., Ch. 427; L. R. 13 Eq. 322; 25 L. T. 894; 20 W. R. 309.

L. M. Pinet (trading as Maison Pinet), who carried on a small and recently established business in boots and shoes made for a special purpose, sold that business to the defendant company. One of the objects of the company was, by its memorandum of association, stated to be "to carry on business in England and elsewhere as bootmakers and shoemakers." The plaintiffs had for over forty years carried on business in the manufacture and sale of boots and shoes, their goods being commonly known as "Pinet's." They accordingly applied for an interlocutory injunction to restrain the defendant company from carrying on business as manufacturers or vendors of boots or shoes under the name of "Maison Pinet, Limited," or under any other name or description of which the name "Pinet" formed part, and which was so arranged or contrived as, by colourable imitation of the plaintiffs' trading style or otherwise, to be calculated to represent or lead to the belief that the defendant company were carrying on the plaintiffs' business, and from in any other manner representing or acting so as to lead to such belief as aforesaid:—Held, that, although the business of L. M. Pinet was not the same as the plaintiffs, yet the company formed to acquire it had no intention of restricting their operations in any way, and would probably develop that business as far as possible, and develop it at the expense of the plaintiffs; that, therefore, a case had been made out justifying the interference of the court at the present stage of the proceedings; but that the interlocutory injunction claimed went beyond what the plaintiffs required for their protection; and that it must be limited as in the form in Montgomery v. Thompson (post, col. 109). Pinet v. Maison Pinet, 77 L. T. 322—C. A. But see S. C. at trial, 67 L. J., Ch. 41.

Right of Purchaser to use Vendor's Name.]—The plaintiff sold to the defendant his business premises, and the goodwill of the business carried on by him there. The deed by which the sale was carried out contained no express assignment of the right to use the plaintiff's name:—Held, that the defendant had, by virtue of the assignment of the goodwill, the right to use the plaintiff's name in the business, so as to show that the business was the one formerly carried on by him, but not so as to expose him to any liability by holding him out as the owner of the business, or as one of the persons with whom contracts were to be made. Levy v. Walker (post, col. 86) distinguished. Thynne v. Shove, 59 L. J., Ch. 509; 45 Ch. D. 577; 62 L. T. 803; 38 W. R. 667.

Mortgagee—User of Name.]—The mortgagee of stock-in-trade and goodwill, and of the right to use a name, never having used the name and not intending to use the name, cannot obtain an injunction to restrain persons claiming under the mortgagor from using the name. Beazley v. Soares, 52 L. J., Ch. 201; 22 Ch. D. 660; 31 W. R. 887.

b. Colourable User by Defendant of his own Name.

Defendant carrying on Business in his own Name—Intention to Deceive.]—Semble, when a defendant carries on business in his own name with the object of securing to himself a portion of the plaintiff's business by suggesting to the public that his business is the plaintiff's, the court will grant an injunction restraining him from so doing. Valentine v. Valentine, 31 L. R., Ir. 488.

The plaintiff, Thomas Holloway, sold a medicine as Holloway's pills. The defendant, Henry Holloway, commenced selling pills as H. Holloway's pills, but in boxes, &c., similar to the plaintiff's, and with a view of passing off his pills as the plaintiff's. He was restrained by injunction. Holloway v. Holloway, 13 Beav. 209.

A blacking manufactory had long been carried on under the firm of Day & Martin, at 97, High Holborn. The executors of the survivor continued the business under the same name. A person of the name of Day having obtained the authority of one Martin to use his name, set up the same trade at 90½, Holborn Hill, and sold blacking as of the manufacture of Day & Martin, 90½, Holborn Hill, in bottles and with labels having a general resemblance to those of the original firm. He was restrained by injunction. Principles on which the court interferes with the use of trade marks. Croft v. Day, 7 Beav. 84.

—— No Intention to Deceive.]—Where the manufacturer of an article of trade sells it under his own name, and the article attains great celebrity in the market under that name, the manufacturer does not thereby acquire such an exclusive right in the use of the name or title under which the article has been sold as to prevent the use of it, without fraud, by another person having the same name, in the sale of a similar article manufactured by himself. Burgess v. Burgess, 3 De G. M. & G. 896; 22 L. J., Ch. 675; 17 Jur. 292.

Therefore, where a father had for many years exclusively sold a sauce under the title of "Burgess's" sauce, the court would not restrain his son from selling a similar article under that name, no fraud being proved. Ib.

Delay from October to March in appealing from the refusal of a motion for an injunction held fatal to the appeal. Ib.

Any person who by fair means has gained the knowledge of a trade secret, may, after the death of the original inventor, make and sell the article under the name of the original inventor, provided such person does nothing to induce the public to believe that the article sold by him is made by the successor of the original inventor. James v. James, 41 L. J., Ch. 353; L. R. 13 Eq. 421; 26 L. T. 568; 20 W. R. 434.

A member of the family of R. J., the original inventor of a secret preparation, having by fair means become possessed of the original receipt, made and sold the article by the name given to it by the original inventor, under the signature of R. J., his own name being R. J. J.:—Held, that he was not entitled, as against the successor of the original inventor, to sell the article under the signature of R. J. singly, or to represent that his was the only genuine preparation. Ib.

—— Joint-Stock Company—Defendant registering Company in his own Name—Name calculated to Deceive.]—William Edgcumbe Rendle, the patentee of an invention for glass-roofing, carried on business under the name of "W. Edgcumbe Rendle & Co." His son, John Edgcumbe Rendle, having failed in his business of a bookseller, was taken into his father's glass-roofing business, and entered into an agreement not to carry on any opposition business. The father died, having by his will given his son an interest in the glass-roofing business. The son then started business on his own account under the name of "J. Edgcumbe Rendle & Co." He got into financial difficulties, and made an assignment for the benefit of his creditors of his business and of all his property. A company, of which he was the promoter and manager, was subsequently registered under the name of "J. Edgcumbe Rendle & Co., Limited," to carry on the business of glass-roofing in opposition to W. Edgcumbe Rendle & Co. The trustees of the will of the father thereupon applied to the court for an injunction to restrain the company and their manager from carrying on the business of glass-roofing under the name of "J. Edgcumbe Rendle & Co., Limited," or any other name calculated to mislead the public into the belief that such company was carrying on or had succeeded to the business of W. Edgcumbe Rendle & Co.:—Held, that an injunction must be granted, as the son, who was not at the time carrying on the business of glass-roofing, he having assigned all his interest to his creditors, had no right to lend his name to a company, which name, from its being so like one already attached to an established business, would be calculated to deceive. Rendle v. Rendle, 63 L. T. 94.

The plaintiffs were a registered company carrying on the business of a wax-work exhibition in London under the name of "Madame Tussaud & Sons, Limited." Their exhibition was a very old-established one. The defendant, Louis Tussaud, was a wax-modeller, who had formerly been employed by the plaintiff company, but had never carried on any business on his own account. He promoted a company, of which he was to be manager, to carry on an exhibition similar to that of the plaintiffs, but in another part of London. It was proposed to register the new company under the name of "Louis Tussaud, Limited." The plaintiffs moved for an injunction to restrain the defendant from proceeding with the registration of the new company under the proposed name or any other name so nearly resembling that of the plaintiff company as to be calculated to deceive:—Held, that an injunction ought to be granted in similar terms to the order in Hendriks v. Montagu (post, col. 146). Tussaud v. Tussaud, 59 L. J., Ch. 631; 44 Ch. D. 678; 62 L. T. 633; 38 W. R. 503; 2 Meg. 120.

Semble, that if the defendant had previously carried on an exhibition in his own name, and had sold it with the goodwill to third parties, who had transferred it to the company, registration under the proposed name might have been allowed. Ib.

c. Right to on Dissolution of Partnership.

In General.]—A trader who has been a partner in a firm of established reputation is entitled on setting up a separate business to tell the world that he has been with that firm, but he must not do so in a way calculated to lead the public to believe that he is carrying on the business of the old firm. Hookham v. Pottage, L. R. 8 Ch. 91; 27 L. T. 595; 21 W. R. 47.

Upon the dissolution of a partnership, which had been carried on for a considerable time by J. D. and others, as stuff merchants, under the style or firm of "J. D. & Co.," J. D. assigned all his shares, rights, and interests in the business, and the goodwill thereof, to his late partners and another, who thereupon proceeded to carry on business under a new style or firm, consisting of their own names with the addition of the words "late J. D. & Co." Upon a bill filed by them, J. D. was restrained by injunction from resuming or carrying on the business of a stuff merchant at or in the immediate neighbourhood, either alone or in partnership with any other persons whatsoever, under the style or firm of "J. D. & Co.," or in any other manner holding out that he was carrying on the business of a stuff merchant, in continuation of or in succession to the business carried on by the late firm of J. D. & Co. Churton v. Douglas, 1 Johns. 174; 28 L. J., Ch. 841; 7 W. R. 365.

Under Agreement.]—E. and H. were partners under articles. One of the terms was, that on the decease of either partner his personal representative should have the power, within three months, of electing to continue the share of the deceased partner; and if he declined, then the business, stock in trade, &c., were to be valued, and the surviving partner was to take the whole, giving security for the moiety late belonging to the deceased partner. E. died:—Held, that during the three months, or until E.'s personal representative should elect, the survivor H. was to be prevented by injunction from carrying on the business in any other form than what had been used in the life of E. Evans v. Hughes, 18 Jur. 691.

R. Scott & W. Scott carried on business at N. and G., in partnership, under the firm of R. & W. Scott. By an agreement for dissolution, it was agreed that one of the partners should remain at N., but there was no stipulation by which either party bound himself not to continue the business, but only that they would not carry it on together. There was no disposition of the goodwill to the partner who remained at N. Neither party was to use the name of the firm except so far as might be necessary in winding up the partnership affairs. Shortly after the date of the agreement W. Scott retired from the business and set up business for himself at T., near N. The inscription used by the firm over the door of their place of business at G. had been "R. & W. Scott, of N." R. Scott made over his business at N. and G. to the defendants, who, at their premises at G., made use of the inscription, "Scott & Nixon, late R. & W. Scott, of N." On the application of W. Scott, the court granted an injunction restraining them from using such an inscription, inasmuch as it amounted to a representation that they had succeeded to the business of the late firm. Scott v. Scott, 16 L. T. 143.

Where no Agreement.]—A partnership was carried on for fourteen years between B. and G. under the style of "B. & Co." On the dissolution, the assets were divided, but no arrangement was come to as to the style:—Held, that the name or style of "B. & Co." formed an undivided asset of the partnership which belonged to the partners in common after the dissolution, and that B. was not entitled to prevent G. using the style of "B. & Co." in his business. Banks v. Gibson, 6 N. R. 373; 34 Beav. 566; 34 L. J., Ch. 591; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 680; 13 W. R. 101.

Executor carrying on Business.]—A. and B. carried on the business of a pencil maker, under the firm of A. & L. A. died, and B. carried on the business, under the firm of B. & Co., successors to A. & L. A.'s executor having commenced the same business, under the firm of A. & L., an injunction was granted to restrain him from using that firm until the right should have been tried at law. Lewis v. Langdon, 7 Sim. 421.

Purchase by one Partner—Goodwill included.]—Two ladies, V. C. and M. W., carried on business in London in partnership under the firm of C. & W. V. C. married L. After this a decree for dissolution was made, and it was ordered that "the said partnership business, and the leasehold premises, trade fixtures, stock-in-trade, goodwill, and business," should be sold as a going concern to M. W. or to L. and wife, whichever should be the highest bidder. M. W. became the purchaser of all the property directed to be sold. L. and wife, who carried on business in Paris under the firm of C. et Cie., commenced an action to restrain M. W. from carrying on business under the style or firm of C. & W.:—Held, that L. and wife had no right to restrain M. W. from using the name of the old firm. Levy v. Walker, 48 L. J., Ch. 273; 10 Ch. D. 436; 39 L. T. 654; 27 W. R. 370.

—— Goodwill not included.]—On a dissolution of partnership the whole of the stock-in-trade was purchased at a valuation by one of the partners, but no assignment was made of the goodwill of the business:—Held, that the outgoing partner was entitled to an injunction to restrain the use of his name in the style of the firm. Scott v. Rowland, 26 L. T. 391; 20 W. R. 508. See also Gray v. Smith, 59 L. J., Ch. 145; 43 Ch. D. 208; 62 L. T. 335; 38 W. R. 310—C. A.

d. Right to of Patentee when Patent expired.

No Exclusive Right.]—The court will restrain the use by a third party of an arbitrary name, which a plaintiff has invented and applied to a particular class of goods as sold by him, and which has thus become identified with the plaintiff's goods, where the sale of that class of goods is open to the world. Young v. Macrae, 9 Jur. (N.S.) 322.

But where the class of goods is a patented article, no such protection will be afforded; for the name becomes identified with the goods, not because they are the plaintiff's but because he alone, as patentee, can make and sell them; and if the goods are the same, but made or manufactured in a totally different way and from a totally different natural source, so that there is no infringement of the patent, a third party may use the name fixed upon by the patentee. Ib.

Where the inventor of a new substance has given to it a name, and, having taken out a patent for his invention, has, during the continuance of the patent, alone made and sold the substance by that name, he is nevertheless not entitled to the exclusive use of that name after the expiration of the patent. Linoleum Manufacturing Co. v. Nairn, 47 L. J., Ch. 430; 7 Ch. D. 834; 38 L. T. 448; 26 W. R. 463.

A company, under patents, made floor cloth of a new substance marked with the word "linoleum" :—Held, that "linoleum" being the only name of the new substance, the company, at the expiration of the patents, was not entitled to the exclusive use of that word. Ib.

When articles of a particular kind have become generally known in commerce by the name of an original manufacturer (or patentee as the case may be), any person has a right, after the expiration of the patent, to manufacture such articles and sell them under that name ; but he may not by inscribing the name as a proper name, on his shop-front, or otherwise, lead the public to believe that he is selling as the agent for the original manufacturer. Wheeler & Wilson Manufacturing Co. v. Shakespear, 39 L. J., Ch. 36.

Continued use of word "Patent."]—A trade mark describing the articles on which it is impressed as "patented," is a proper one, if the statement was true at the time the mark was adopted, though the patent has been allowed to drop before its expiration. Leather Cloth Co. v. Hirschfeld, 1 N. R. 551 ; 1 H. & M. 295 ; 11 W. R. 933.

T. took out letters patent, which expired in 1844, for the manufacture of solid-headed pins, and carried on the business, under the firm of "T. & Co.," till 1838. In such business T. used parti-coloured labels, in pink and green, in which the pins were described as "patent pins," "exclusively manufactured by T. & Co." ; and had engraved plates and blocks for striking off such labels. In 1838 T. assigned the letters patent, together with his business and goodwill, and the right to use the plates, labels, &c., and the name of "T. & Co." to S. In 1839 S. became bankrupt. His assignees carried on the trade till 1841, when they agreed to assign the business, patent, plates, labels, &c., and the right to use the name of "T. & Co." to E., the plaintiff, who ever since carried on the business accordingly, and used the said labels. In 1853 E. discovered that V., the defendant, was using labels in palpable imitation of the plaintiff's :—Held, first, that E. was entitled to restrain such palpable imitation by V. Secondly, that E. was not disentitled to sue by reason that the representations on his labels were no longer accurate, although the pins were not now protected by patent, nor manufactured strictly according to the patent, nor exclusively or at all by T., who had long since retired. Thirdly, that V. was not to be precluded altogether from representing that his pins were manufactured according to T.'s patent (now expired), but he was not to do so in a manner liable to mislead. Edleston v. Vick, 11 Hare, 78 ; 1 Eq. R. 413 ; 18 Jur. 7.

Where there is a strong resemblance in matter, colour, and arrangement, the court will presume that it is not fortuitous, but that it was intentional, with a view to mislead purchasers. Ib.

2. Imitation of Goods.

Passing off Goods.]—Where a trader has long been the sole maker of a particular kind of article, and has called it by a non-descriptive trade name by which alone the article has become known in the market, a rival trader is not at liberty to make and sell a similar kind of article under the same name, unless he can so distinguish his goods as to prevent them from being mistaken for the goods of the original maker. The plaintiff having for thirty-five years been the sole maker under a secret recipe of a sauce which he called "Yorkshire Relish," and sold in round glass bottles with labels attached to them containing the name "Yorkshire Relish," and also his own name, the defendants made a similar, but not identical sauce, under the same name, and sold it at a less price, in similar glass bottles, with labels upon them also containing the name "Yorkshire Relish" in conjunction with their own name. The labels were not otherwise similar. The plaintiff's and defendant's sauces were sold by the retail tradesman at the same price, and there was proof that the ultimate purchaser had been in several instances misled into buying the defendant's sauce for the plaintiff's :—Held, that the defendants were not entitled to use the name "Yorkshire Relish" in connection with any sauce other than the plaintiff's without clearly distinguishing such sauce from the plaintiff's. Birmingham Vinegar Brewery Co. v. Powell, 66 L. J., Ch. 763 ; [1897] A. C. 710 ; 76 L. T. 792—H. L. (E.) Affirming 44 W. R. 188. And see Powell v. Birmingham Vinegar Brewery Co., 13 R. 153 ; 71 L. T. 393. Affirmed, [1894] 3 Ch. 449 ; 13 R. 164, n.—C. A.

The general proposition that nobody has a right to represent his goods as the goods of somebody else is without limit as regards name, origin, honesty of manufacture, or otherwise, and applies to a case where the plaintiff's goods largely acquired their value through the exertions of the defendants as the sole importers of those goods. If the plaintiff is entitled to an injunction in such a case, he is also entitled to an account of profits. Lever v. Goodwin (36 Ch. D. 1) followed. Saxlehner v. Apollinaris Co., 66 L. J., Ch. 533 ; [1897] 1 Ch. 893 ; 76 L. T. 617.

If the defendants' goods on the face of them, and having regard to surrounding circumstances, are calculated to deceive, evidence to prove the intent to deceive is unnecessary, since a man must be taken to have intended the reasonable and natural consequences of his own acts. If, on the other hand, a mere comparison of the goods, having regard to the surrounding circumstances, is not sufficient, then it is allowable to prove from other sources that what is or may be apparent innocence was really intended to deceive. Ib.

Public not Retail Dealers deceived—Right to Injunction — Form of Account.]—The defendants, who were soap manufacturers, brought out their soap in packets so closely resembling those in which the plaintiffs, who were also soap manufacturers, had been in the habit of bringing out their soap, as to be calculated to deceive purchasers :—Held, that although the retail dealers who bought soap from the defendants would not be deceived, the defendants, by their imitation of the plaintiffs' packets, put into the hands of the retail dealers an instrument of fraud, and ought to be restrained by injunction. An injunction was accordingly granted, and an account was directed of the profits made by the defendants in selling soap in the form in which it was held that they were not entitled to sell it ; and on an appeal the court held that the injunction had been rightly granted, and that the account was in the proper form, and ought not to be limited by excluding from it soap which the retail dealers sold to persons who bought it as the defendants' soap. Lever v. Goodwin, 36 Ch. D. 1; 57 L. T. 583; 36 W. R. 177—C. A.

"Guaranteed Corset"—Exclusive User.]—A firm of corset manufacturers had for upwards of four years been the exclusive makers and sellers of a corset which they called the "Guaranteed Corset," the wear of which they guaranteed for twelve months by undertaking to supply any purchaser with a new corset in case of complaint within that period. The corset was sold in a box bearing a printed label with the words "Guaranteed Corset" in large and conspicuous type, and in smaller type the words, "This corset is guaranteed to wear twelve months." The defendants, a rival firm of corset manufacturers, subsequently introduced a cheaper and inferior corset, the wear of which they also professed to guarantee for twelve months, and which they sold in a box bearing a printed label with the words "Guaranteed Corset" in large type, and words in smaller type similar to the plaintiffs': —Held, in an action by the plaintiffs for an injunction, that the word "guaranteed" was not so distinctively and exclusively applicable to the plaintiffs' corset as that the court would restrain the defendants from using the same word in connection with their corset. Symington v. Footman, 56 L. T. 696. See Goodfellow v. Prince, ante, col. 80.

Colourable Imitation.]—W. registered the word "Reversi" as a trade-mark for "a game somewhat analogous to draughts." The word was the name of a game of cards popular in France in the 16th century. In the rules of W.'s game the word "reverse" frequently occurred, and the game depended on each player reversing or turning over his adversary's counters. A. brought out a similar game under the name "Annex," and on the labels of the boxes in which he sold it, he added to the name "a game of reverses." W. brought an action to restrain A. from using the word "reverses":—Held, that the use of the words "a game of reverses," which were a fair description of the nature of the game, did not show any design on the part of A. to pass off his game as that of W., and that an injunction ought not to be granted. Waterman v. Ayres, Waterman's Trade-mark, In re, 57 L. J., Ch. 893; 39 Ch. D. 29; 59 L. T. 17; 37 W. R. 110—C. A.

Exclusive Right to Use apart from Legislation.]—In the absence of any legislation for the registration of trade-marks, as soon as a trade-mark has been so employed in the market as to indicate to purchasers that the goods to which it is attached are the manufacture of a particular firm, it becomes to that extent the exclusive property of that firm, and no one else has a right to copy it, or even to appropriate any part of it, if by such appropriation purchasers may be induced to believe that they are getting goods which were made by the firm to which the trade-mark belongs. But the acquisition of such exclusive right to a mark or name in connection with a particular article of commerce cannot entitle the owner of that right to prohibit the use by others of such mark or name in connection with goods of a totally different character. Somerville v. Schembri, 56 L. J., P. C. 61; 12 App. Cas. 453; 56 L. T. 454—P. C.

3. TRADE LIBELS—SLANDER OF TITLE.

Jurisdiction—Injunction.]—The court has now jurisdiction to restrain by injunction the publication of a libel injurious to trade. Thomas v. Williams, 49 L. J., Ch. 605; 14 Ch. D. 864; 43 L. T. 91; 28 W. R. 983.

In order to obtain an injunction in such a case it is sufficient for the plaintiff to show that the libel is calculated to injure his trade; it is not necessary that he should prove actual damage. Ib.

The court has jurisdiction to restrain by injunction a person from making oral statements as well as written statements calculated to injure another person in his business; but with regard to oral statements such jurisdiction will be exercised with great caution. Hermann Loog v. Bean, 53 L. J., Ch. 1128; 26 Ch. D. 306; 51 L. T. 442; 32 W. R. 994.

What must be Proved.]—In order to entitle a plaintiff to maintain an action for damages for, or to obtain an injunction against, statements disparaging his goods, it must be shown that such statements were in disparagement of the goods of the plaintiff in particular; that they were untrue; and that they occasioned special damage. Damages and injunction are two different forms of remedy against the same wrong; and the facts which must be proved to entitle a plaintiff to the first of these remedies must equally be proved to entitle him to the second:—Quære, whether any action is maintainable for the disparagement by a trader, in the course of his trade, of the goods of a rival trader, where the disparagement consists merely of the allegation that the goods of the former are better than those of the latter. White v. Mellin, 64 L. J., Ch. 308; [1895] A. C. 154; 11 R. 141; 72 L. T. 334; 43 W. R. 353; 59 J. P. 628—H. L. (E.)

To obtain an interlocutory injunction restraining the defendant from issuing circulars, &c., stating the wrongful user by the plaintiff upon his manufactured articles of labels claimed by the defendant, and from threatening the plaintiff's customers with legal proceedings for selling his articles bearing the labels in question, the plaintiff must satisfy the court that the statements in the circulars, &c., complained of are in fact untrue. The fact that the defendant, having commenced actions against the plaintiff and his customers for injunctions restraining the wrongful user of the labels in question, had not thought fit to move for interlocutory injunctions:—Held, to be no ground by itself for granting the plaintiff the injunction sought for. Anderson v. Liebig's Extract of Meat Co., 45 L. T. 757.

Wrapper—Descriptive Title.]—It had been established by litigation between the L. company and A. that (1) the words "Liebig's Extract of Meat" is a merely descriptive title open to all the public; (2) that it is equally open to the public to sell the article as "Baron Liebig's Extract of Meat"; or (3) to use a photograph of Baron Justus Von Liebig, the inventor of the receipt. A. then proceeded to use in connection with the extract of meat sold by him a wrapper with a photograph of Baron Liebig, and a statement "this is the only genuine brand," with a reference to the "favourable decision" of the house of lords and the judgments of the various judges who had given judgment in the litigation which had been carried to the house of lords.

The L. company moved to restrain A. from using the wrapper in question:—Held, that the company, who were not carrying on a fraudulent trade, were entitled to an injunction, notwithstanding that they might in their own advertisements have to some extent gone beyond what they were entitled to say. Liebig's Extract of Meat Co. v. Anderson, 55 L. T. 206.

Circular tending to Mislead.]—The plaintiffs and defendants carried on business of a similar description. On the expiration of the term in a lease of certain works to the plaintiffs, where they had carried on their business, the defendants, fifteen months afterwards, had procured a lease of the same works, with the exception of certain mines of clay. The defendants issued a circular and card tending to lead the public to suppose that the defendants had succeeded to the business of the plaintiffs, and were working the same material as the plaintiffs had formerly used:—Held, that, although the words of the circular and card might be literally true, yet, if they tended to mislead the public, the court would restrain them from further circulating or issuing such or any similar circular or card. Harper v. Pearson, 3 L. T. 547.

A circular was issued by parties recently in the employ of a firm of manufacturing engineers, which informed the trade and the public that they had commenced business on their own account, and made precisely the same goods as their former employers, with great improvements in the same, and could sell them at a much reduced price as being satisfied with smaller profits. It appeared that several customers of the former firm had been deceived by this circular, and removed their custom to the new firm:—Held, that the facts contained in the circular not being such as there stated, the same was a deceit upon the trade and the public, and, as such, an injunction granted to restrain the further issuing of the circular, sale, &c. Stevens v. Paine, 18 L. T. 600.

Joseph Thorley died in 1876, having for years carried on the manufacture of a condiment well known as "Thorley's Food for Cattle." His executors continued his business. In 1877 a company was formed for manufacturing the same article, and employed a brother of Joseph Thorley who was acquainted with the secret of the manufacture. The executors published in the newspapers an advertisement warning the public that any food purporting to be Thorley's food for cattle, and not signed "Joseph Thorley," was not the manufacture of the establishment carrying on business as Joseph Thorley, the proprietors of which were alone possessed of the secret for compounding the food. The executors also issued a circular to their customers warning them against the course pursued by the company "in seeking to foist upon the public an article which they pretend is the same as that manufactured by the late Joseph Thorley." The court came to the conclusion that there was no substantial difference between the food sold by the executors and that sold by the company:—Held, that the advertisement and circular contained untrue representations calculated to injure the company in their trade, and that the issuing of them ought to be restrained by injunction. Thorley's Cattle Food Co. v. Massam, 14 Ch. D. 763; 42 L. T. 851; 28 W. R. 966—C. A.

—— Damages.]—The plaintiff, who traded as R. H. & Co., and the defendants, who traded as R. H. & Sons, were rival manufacturers of sail-cloth. The plaintiff had formerly been a partner in the defendant's firm. In 1855 the defendants brought an action against the plaintiff, claiming (inter alia) an injunction to restrain him from representing his firm to be the original firm of R. H. & Sons. At the trial of the action, North, J., dismissed it, without costs as to that issue, and with costs as to the other issues. North, J., was satisfied by the evidence that the then defendant had never made any such representation, but that on two or three occasions one of his agents, without his knowledge or concurrence, had represented that the then defendant's firm was the original firm. The then defendant repudiated this as soon as he knew it, and at the trial he offered by his counsel to give an undertaking that he would never make such a representation. North, J., desired that this undertaking should be inserted in the judgment; the defendant assented, and it was accordingly inserted in the judgment drawn up by the registrar. In 1886 the present defendants distributed a printed circular, which stated that they were the original firm, and after giving the title of the former action, headed by the word "Caution," proceeded: "By the judgment the defendant was ordered to undertake not to represent that his firm is, or that the plaintiffs' firm is not the original firm of R. H. & Sons. Messrs. R. H. & Sons, finding that serious misrepresentations were in circulation to their prejudice, felt themselves compelled to bring the above action":—Held, that the circular contained an untrue statement of the effect of the judgment in the former action; that it was a libel injurious to the plaintiff's trade; that it was not privileged; that the defendants had published it maliciously; and that the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction, with the costs of the action. But there being no evidence of damage to the plaintiff, except his own affidavit that the publication of the circular was calculated to injure him, and had injured him, in his business, which he said had greatly fallen off since the issue of it; and the plaintiff not having brought the action until three months after he knew of the publication of the circular, only 5*l.* damages were awarded to him. Hayward & Co. v. Hayward & Sons, 56 L. J., Ch. 287; 34 Ch. D. 198; 55 L. T. 729; 35 W. R. 392.

Descriptive Use of Name—Circular not calculated to Deceive.]—In an action to restrain the use by the defendant of the plaintiffs' trade name the issues were whether the name was a designation of machines of the plaintiffs' manufacture, or of machines of a particular kind of construction; whether the defendant had used the name for the purpose of appropriating the reputation acquired by machines manufactured by the plaintiff company or not; and whether the defendant had by using the name induced purchasers to believe they were buying machines manufactured by the plaintiff company. Defendant, who sold (as wholesale agent in London of a company in Berlin) to persons in the trade only, described his machines in his circulars and price list as machines manufactured on the "Singer" system, or the "Singer improved system," and by his statement of defence alleged that, as the plaintiff's patent had long since elapsed, they were not entitled to any monopoly of the right of advertising or selling machines manufactured on what was known in the trade as the "Singer system":—Held, that the plaintiff company had no exclusive right to use the word "Singer" as applied to sewing machines, and that there was nothing in the defendant's circular, price lists, and invoices calculated to deceive and induce purchasers to believe they were buying machines manufactured by the plaintiffs. Injunction overruled. Singer Manufacturing Co. v. Loog, 52 L. J., Ch. 481; 8 App. Cas. 15; 48 L. T. 3; 31 W. R. 325—H. L. (E.) And see Singer Manufacturing Co. v. Wilson, 47 L. J., Ch. 481; 3 App. Cas. 376; 38 L. T. 303; 26 W. R. 664—H. L. (E.)

Circular Warning against Infringement of Patent—Balance of Convenience.]—The defendants, who were the owners of patents in Belgium and England for an invention for making glass lamp globes, by a deed executed in Belgium, granted a licence to the plaintiffs to manufacture articles under their invention in Belgium, but not elsewhere. The deed contained a clause for submitting disputes to arbitration. The plaintiffs under this licence manufactured articles in Belgium and sold them in England. The defendants issued a circular warning persons engaged in the trade that the importation and sale of articles made in foreign countries under their invention, except by themselves, would be a violation of their patent. The plaintiffs brought an action to restrain the issue of this circular until the matters in dispute had been determined by arbitration:—Held, that where a trade circular is issued bonâ fide, an interim injunction will not be granted to restrain it unless it is in violation of some contract between the plaintiff and defendant, however much the balance of convenience may be in favour of granting it. Société Anonyme des Manufactures des Glaces v. Tilghman's Patent Sand Blast Co., 53 L. J., Ch. 1; 25 Ch. D. 1; 49 L. T. 451; 32 W. R. 71; 48 J. P. 68—C. A.

The plaintiffs were the makers of "rainbow water raisers or elevators," and they commenced an action for an injunction to restrain the defendants from issuing a circular cautioning the public against the use of such elevators as being direct infringements of certain patents of the defendants. The plaintiffs subsequently gave notice of a motion to restrain the issue of this circular until the trial of the action. The defendants then commenced a cross action, claiming an injunction to restrain the plaintiffs from infringing their patents:—Held, that as there was no evidence of mala fides on the part of the defendants, they ought not to be restrained from issuing the circular until their action had been disposed of; but that they must undertake to prosecute their action without delay. Household v. Fairburn, 51 L. T. 498.

The defendants issued a circular to their customers stating that they were unable to supply a particular electric bell (for which the plaintiff had obtained protection) as it had "been proved to be an infringement" of another patented bell. Up to date of issue of the circular no action or proceeding had been commenced by anyone against the plaintiff in respect of his bell. An action was afterwards commenced, and then abandoned:—Held, that as the alleged infringement had not been proved by any proper proceeding before the court, there was no reasonable and probable cause for the statement in the circular, and the plaintiff was entitled to damages. Crampton v. Swete, 58 L. T. 516.

Actions not abating by Death of Party.]—An action for defamation, either of private character or of a person in relation to his trade, comes to end on the death of the plaintiff, but an action for the publication of a false and malicious statement, causing damage to the plaintiff's personal estate, survives:—Held, therefore, that a claim for falsely and maliciously publishing a statement calculated to injure the plaintiff's right of property in a trade-mark was put an end to by the death of the plaintiff after the commencement of the action only so far as it was a claim for libel, but that so far as the claim was in the nature of slander of title the action survived, and could be continued by his personal representative, who would be entitled to recover on proof of special damage. Hatchard v. Mège, 56 L. J., Q. B. 397; 18 Q. B. D. 771; 56 L. T. 662; 35 W. R. 576; 51 J. P. 277.

Injunction to restrain.]—See SLANDER OF TITLE.

4. INJURY TO TRADE.

By Interception of Customers.]—A declaration stated that the plaintiff was possessed of stores where he carried on the business of a corn merchant in a town; that the defendant, unjustly intending to injure him in his business, prevented certain persons from selling their corn to him by requiring from them the payment of tolls not legally demandable, and stopped and detained the carts and animals of the persons proceeding with corn to his stores, whereby he lost great gains and profits:—Held, as no contract was alleged between the plaintiff and the persons obstructed, and as no right of property or franchise of the plaintiff was shown to have been injured by the obstruction, that such obstruction did not give a cause of action for the loss sustained by the plaintiff. Higgins v. O'Donnell, Ir. R. 4 C. L. 91; 18 W. R. 378.

Loss of Trade by Non-Access to Shop.]—A corporation being authorised by act of parliament to stop up or level a street for the purpose of its act, in the course of operations wrongfully cut into the cellars of a house, which were under the street, leaving them open and exposed; the corporation also, in the course of the works, partially stopped the traffic along the streets; an injunction having been obtained restraining the corporation from cutting into the cellars, with an inquiry as to damages:—Held, that although the owner was entitled to damages for the structural injury to his cellars, he was not entitled to damages for depression caused to his trade by reason of the difficulty of access to his shop, it not being shown that the depression arose from the wrongful, as distinguished from the authorised, act of the corporation. Bigg v. London Corporation, L. R. 15 Eq. 376; 28 L. T. 336.

The erection of a building will not be restrained because it injures the plaintiff by obstructing the view of his place of business. Butt v. Imperial Gas Co., L. R. 2 Ch. 158; 16 L. T. 820; 15 W. R. 92.

Highway—Unreasonable User of, causing particular Injury to Individual.]—When the private right of the owner of a house adjoining a highway to access from his house to the highway is interfered with by an unreasonable user of the highway, he is entitled to recover damages from the wrongdoer in respect of loss of custom in the business which he carries on in his house. He is entitled also to recover damages on the ground that he has suffered a particular injury from a public nuisance. Fritz v. Hobson, 49 L. J., Ch. 321 ; 14 Ch. D. 542 ; 42 L. T. 225 ; 28 W. R. 459.

Passing off Goods as Another's.]—To justify the court in granting an injunction, there must be a passing off by the trader sought to be restrained, of his goods as those of the other trader. Turton v. Turton, 58 L. J., Ch. 677 ; 42 Ch. D. 128 ; 61 L. T. 571 ; 38 W. R. 22 ; 54 J. P. 151—C. A.

Conspiracy—Combination to keep up Freights—Contract in Restraint of Trade—Exclusion of Rival Traders from Combination.]—Owners of ships, in order to secure a carrying trade exclusively for themselves and at profitable rates, formed an association and agreed that the number of ships to be sent by members of the association to the loading port, the division of cargoes and the freights to be demanded, should be the subject of regulation ; that a rebate of 5 per cent. on the freights should be allowed to all shippers who shipped only with members ; and that agents of members should be prohibited on pain of dismissal from acting in the interest of competing shipowners ; any member to be at liberty to withdraw on giving certain notices. The plaintiffs, who were shipowners excluded from the association, sent ships to the loading port to endeavour to obtain cargoes. The associated owners thereupon sent more ships to the port, underbid the plaintiffs, and reduced freights so low that the plaintiffs were obliged to carry at unremunerative rates. They also threatened to dismiss certain agents if they loaded the plaintiffs' ships, and circulated a notice that the rebate of 5 per cent. would not be allowed to any person who shipped cargoes on the plaintiffs' vessels. The plaintiffs having brought an action for damages against the associated owners alleging a conspiracy to injure the plaintiffs :—Held, that since the acts of the defendants were done with the lawful object of protecting and extending their trade and increasing their profits, and since they had not employed any unlawful means, the plaintiffs had no cause of action. Mogul Steamship Co. v. McGregor, 61 L. J., Q. B. 295 ; [1892] A. C. 25 ; 66 L. T. 1 ; 40 W. R. 337 ; 7 Asp. M. C. 120 ; 56 J. P. 101—H. L. (E.)

—— Interlocutory Injunction.]—A confederation or conspiracy by an associated body of shipowners which is calculated to have, and has, the effect of driving the ships of other merchants or owners, and those of the plaintiffs in particular, out of a certain line of trade, even though the immediate and avowed object be not to injure the plaintiffs, but to secure to the conspirators themselves a monopoly of the carrying trade between certain foreign ports and this country, is, or may be, an indictable offence, and therefore actionable, if private and particular damage can be shown. To warrant the court, however, in granting an interim or interlocutory injunction to restrain the parties from continuing to pursue the objectionable course, those who complain must at least show that they have sustained or will sustain "irreparable damage,"—that is, damage for which they cannot obtain adequate compensation without the special interference of the court. S. C., 54 L. J., Q. B. 540 ; 15 Q. B. D. 476 ; 53 L. T. 268 ; 5 Asp. M. C. 467 ; 15 Cox, C. C. 740 ; 49 J. P. 646.

Receiver and Manager of Business—Injunction.]—A business was carried on under the order of the court for ten years by a receiver and manager not previously engaged in business. On proposals for a purchase of the business under the order of the court, the court refused to restrain the receiver and manager from soliciting orders from or doing business with the present customers. Irish, In re, Irish v. Irish, 58 L. J., Ch. 279 ; 40 Ch. D. 49 ; 60 L. T. 224 ; 37 W. R. 231.

Bond — Condition — Injunction — Penalty — Liquidated Damages.] — The defendant on entering the service of the plaintiffs, a banking company, executed a bond in the penal sum of 1,000*l.*, the condition of which was that it should be void if he should perform his duties in the manner therein mentioned, and also if he should pay to the plaintiffs 1,000*l.* as liquidated damages, in case he should at any time within two years after his leaving the service of the plaintiffs accept any employment in any other bank within two miles of the plaintiffs' bank. The defendant resigned his employment in the plaintiffs' bank and immediately entered the service of a rival bank in the same town. The plaintiffs brought an action claiming an injunction to restrain the defendant from holding employment in any rival bank. The defendant was willing and offered to pay the penal sum of 1,000*l.* :—Held, that the defendant could not satisfy his obligation by paying the penal sum ; but that there was an agreement between the parties, to be implied from the bond, that the defendant should not enter into the service of a rival bank, which could be enforced in a court of equity, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to an injunction. National Provincial Bank v. Marshall, 58 L. J., Ch. 229 ; 40 Ch. D. 112 ; 60 L. T. 341 ; 37 W. R. 183—C. A.

5. Trade Custom.

Lien—Custom, how Established.]—A right of general lien can only be established either by contract express, or necessarily implied, or by custom ; and such a custom in a particular trade is not established by mere evidence of the popular opinion of the members of that trade that a right of general lien was or ought to be a privilege of their trade. Provincial Bank, Ex parte, Spotten, In re, Ir. R. 11 Eq. 412.

Local Custom—London—Lien of Agent.]—By the custom of the London dry goods market a broker who purchases for a principal as broker, but without disclosing the name of the principal, is liable for the price of the goods in case the purchaser does not pay. On the 3rd March, 1876, C. sold to D., a broker, for undisclosed principals, eighteen casks of gum sandrac lying at the docks, and signed a delivery order in favour of D. The delivery order was indorsed by D. to B. & Co., his undisclosed principals, who deposited the same with the Imperial Bank as a security for advances. On the 18th March the bank lodged the order at the office of the docks company in Leadenhall Street, with a request for warrants, and notice of the order having been lodged was sent to the long room at the dock house. On the same day D., having heard that B. & Co. had stopped payment, paid C. for the goods, and sent his clerk to the long room, who arrived there before notice of the delivery order having been lodged by the bank had been received, and he, in the name of C., applied for a warrant for the goods, which was made out and delivered to him. C. subsequently indorsed the warrant to L., and gave him a second delivery order. On an action by the bank for a declaration that they were entitled to the goods:—Held, that under the circumstances C.'s lien as an unpaid vendor passed to D., and that the warrant in favour of C. having been obtained before the delivery order had been entered at the warrant office at the docks, D. was entitled to the goods. Imperial Bank v. London and St. Katharine Dock Co., 46 L. J., Ch. 335; 36 L. T. 233.

—— Manchester.]—An arrangement was made between W., R., and G., that W., a manufacturer, should consign cotton cloths to G. in Rangoon, paying him an inclusive commission. The goods were to be exported through R., who acted as shipping agent, and was to see to the goods being finished and packed, for which services he received a commission from G. A particular mark was by arrangement between the three parties adopted for the goods, of which some portions and the general arrangement were new, and other portions consisted of R.'s name and arms, and of a symbol which had formerly been used by G. After goods had been regularly exported for some years under this arrangement, W. ceased to send goods through R., and commenced exporting them to Rangoon through the agency of F., continuing to use the old mark, except that the name and arms of F. were substituted for those of R. At the same time R. commenced exporting other goods under the old mark. Cross actions were commenced for injunctions, in which R. set up an alleged custom in Manchester, giving the right to the trade marks to the shipping agent:—Held, upon the evidence, that no such custom existed. Robinson v. Finlay, 9 Ch. D. 487; 39 L. T. 398; 27 W. R. 294.

Held, also, that neither R. nor W. had any exclusive right to the use of the mark, and that both actions must be dismissed. Ib.

A firm of merchants, formerly carrying on business at Calcutta, sued a firm at Manchester, who had acted as their agents on commission for the purchase and shipping to India of Manchester goods, to have the settled accounts between the parties, extending back for a period of nearly twenty years, opened; and to obtain repayment of certain alleged overcharges made by the defendants in their accounts with the plaintiffs. The defendants were charged with having bought goods at one price and invoiced them to the plaintiffs at an increased price; that having been instructed to buy white goods, they purchased grey goods and got them bleached, charging the plaintiffs more than the price of the grey goods plus the cost of bleaching; that they had not credited the plaintiffs with the discounts allowed to themselves; that they had charged for insurances that they had never effected; that they had sold their own goods to the plaintiffs at a profit; and that they had overcharged the plaintiffs in other ways. The main defences raised were, that the plaintiffs knew of the charges, and that they were in accordance with the custom of the Manchester trade, and that as regarded the insurances which had been charged for but not effected, the defendants had themselves insured:—Held, that the plaintiffs did not know of the overcharges, and that there was no custom of the Manchester trade to make such overcharges. Williamson v. Barbour, 50 L. J., Ch. 147; 9 Ch. D. 529; 37 L. T. 698.

—— Ignorance of—Liverpool.]—Evidence was admitted of a custom in Liverpool, that a lien on goods for a sum agreed to be paid there as freight continued:—Held, also, that where assignees of the bill of lading were resident in Sydney, in New South Wales, and there was no evidence that they were acquainted with the local usage in Liverpool, such evidence of custom was not admissible for the purpose of explaining the effect of the memorandum in the bill of lading, or of showing the terms on which the goods were shipped, in the construction of such bill of lading. Miedbrodt v. Fitzsimon, The Energie, 44 L. J., Adm. 25; L. R. 6 P. C. 306; 32 L. T. 579; 23 W. R. 932.

Although a person who as principal employs a broker to transact business for him in a particular market is bound by the usage of that market, though unknown to him, provided the usage is one that merely regulates the mode of performing the contract, and does not change the intrinsic character of the contract, yet where the usage is one which gives the broker an interest at variance with his duty, as by converting him into a principal instead of a mere agent to establish privity of contract between two principals, such a usage is not binding on a principal who, being ignorant of the usage, employs a broker to whom the usage is known to perform the ordinary and accustomed duties belonging to the office or employment of a broker. The principal is not bound to inquire what the usage may be, or whether there is any particular usage affecting the market in which he proposes to deal. Robinson v. Mollett, 44 L. J., C. P. 362; L. R. 7 H. L. 802.

A Liverpool merchant employed brokers of London to buy tallow for him in the London tallow market. They having other orders, bought in their own name a quantity sufficient to cover all their orders, and by letter they informed the merchant that they had bought on his account so many tons; but they did not mention the name of the seller. A few days after they sent him notice that they were ready to deliver to him so many casks of tallow in fulfilment or part fulfilment of his order, but they did not allude to any third party as the seller. He acknowledged the receipt of these notices without observation. There is a custom on the London tallow market for brokers when they receive orders to contract in their own names, and if their principals refuse to accept or deliver, to buy or sell against them, and charge them with the loss. The merchant was ignorant of this custom. On becoming aware of it, and of the mode in which his orders had been executed, tallow having in the meantime fallen, he refused to take the tallow:—Held, that as the brokers were employed to act as brokers only, the custom which converted them into principals was inconsistent with the employment, and as the merchant was ignorant of it when he gave his orders, he was not bound by the custom. Ib.

Hire Purchase System.]—The custom of letting a piano out on hire under an agreement by which upon the payment of the price fixed for the purchase by monthly instalments extending over a period of three years the hirer becomes the owner of the piano, and which is known as "the three years' hire system," is a well-established and good custom, and will, therefore, prevail to take a piano, hired under such an agreement, out of the order and disposition of the hirer on his becoming bankrupt. Hattersley, Ex parte, Blanchard, In re, 47 L. J., Bk. 113; 8 Ch. D. 601; 38 L. T. 619; 26 W. R. 636.

In Particular Trades—Hop Trade.]—A custom, that purchasers of hops shall leave them upon rent in the hop-merchant's warehouse for re-sale, undistinguished from his stock, will not prevent them from becoming the property of the hop-merchant's assignees upon his bankruptcy, as being in his possession, &c. Thackthwaite v. Cock, 2 Rose, 105; 3 Taunt. 487; 12 R. R. 689.

—— Iron Trade.]—By the usage of the iron trade warrants for goods deliverable (f. o. b.) to A. B., or their assigns, by indorsement hereon, are considered to pass to the holders for value free from vendor's lien. Merchant Banking Co. of London v. Phœnix Bessemer Steel Co., 46 L. J., Ch. 418; 5 Ch. D. 205; 36 L. T. 395; 25 W. R. 457.

—— Navy Agents—Custom of Merchants.]—By the statute 59 Geo. 3, c. 111, navy agents are entitled to make the usual charge for passing accounts before that act, and to charge commission on the full amount of pay without being limited to the money passing through their hands. The defendants having received a sum as returned premiums, without bringing it to account for many years and alleging that they awaited the final adjustment of average; it was referred to the master to inquire whether they were entitled to retain it, according to the custom of merchants. Drury v. Atkins, Tam. 75.

—— Tea Trade.]—Teas are sold, to be paid for at appointed days, the sales being made according to the custom of the trade, whereby the goods, when sold, are left as pledge for full payment with the vendor, who in case of non-payment is at liberty to re-sell, and charge the loss to the original purchaser. The purchase money is not paid at the appointed time; the purchaser becomes bankrupt, and the vendor, having sold part of the teas before the fiat and the rest afterwards, gives the estate credit for the clear proceeds of the sales:—Held, that although there was no delivery of the goods, the original sale was a binding contract within the statute of frauds, and that the vendors were entitled to prove for the residue of the purchase money unsatisfied by the sale. Moffatt, Ex parte, Tate, In re, 2 Mont. D. & D. 170. And see 1 Mont. D. & D. 282; 4 Jur. 659.

A quantity of tea is sold at a price, which is to be paid at a future day. After the day has elapsed the purchaser pays a sum on account, and writes to the vendors, who have retained the warrants in their possession, requesting them to await the arrival of the overland mail, and on its receipt to dispose of the tea. He afterwards became bankrupt:—Held, first, that the vendors have a lien on the tea for the unpaid purchase money; secondly, that an application to the court for an order for sale is not improper or unnecessary; and thirdly, that the letter is a sufficient memorandum to entitle the vendors to costs. Twining, Ex parte, Coles, In re, 1 Mont. D. & D. 691; 10 L. J., Bk. 60; 5 Jur. 536.

—— Wharfinger's Certificates.]—Wharfinger's certificates were not documents of title, and their delivery passes no right to the goods; and no custom of trade can give them the effect of warrants or documents of title as against vendors. Gunn v. Bolckow, Vaughan & Co., 44 L. J., Ch. 732; L. R. 10 Ch. 491; 32 L. T. 781; 23 W. R. 739.

Interest allowed to Creditors in Bankruptcy—Contract Necessary.]—There being a surplus of a bankrupt's estate, interest allowed to creditors, whereby the course of actual trading between the parties and settled accounts, interest was allowed for a certain credit. Accounts made up and delivered from time to time, upon that footing, held good evidence of a contract for the purpose. No allegation of proof of any general custom of trade, could, however, have had that effect; nor anything short of actual evidence of contract between the parties. Champion, Ex parte, 3 Bro. C. C. 436.

6. Trade Secret.

—— Exception to Rule against Restraint of Trade.]—Not against public policy that trader sells secret in trade, and restrains himself generally from use of it. Bryson v. Whitehead, 1 Sim. & S. 74; 1 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 42.

A covenant in restraint of trade, although it is unrestricted in respect of space, is reasonable, and therefore good in law, if it relates to the use of a trade secret. Hagg v. Darley, 47 L. J., Ch. 567; 38 L. T. 312.

—— Communication of—When Restrained.]—Injunction to restrain a defendant from communicating certain recipes for medicines, and vending them, granted, on the ground that he had obtained a knowledge of the mode of preparing them by a breach of trust. Yovatt v. Winyard, 1 J. & W. 394; 21 R. R. 194.

Quære, whether a court of equity, in the exercise of its jurisdiction to decree the specific performance of an agreement, can interfere by injunction to restrain a party from divulging a secret in medicine which is unprotected by patent. In this case an injunction, which had been granted for that and other purposes, was dissolved, upon the affidavit of the defendant (an infant) denying the facts of the case as represented by the plaintiff's affidavit in support of the injunction, and upon the ground that there was no secret in the alleged invention. Williams v. Williams, 3 Mer. 157; 17 R. R. 49.

The court does not recognise property in unpatented articles, and will not interfere to restrain the sale of spurious articles, though described to be the same as those manufactured by another, unless such articles are held out by the imitator to be the manufacture of that other person. Where B. invented and sold a secret medicine called chlorodyne, and F. advertised a spurious imitation of it as "the original chlorodyne," and the evidence showed that F.'s article was not mistaken for B.'s, but only that F. was taken to be the first inventor:—Held, that B. was not entitled to an injunction to restrain F. from issuing such advertisements. Browne v. Freeman, 4 N. R. 476; 12 W. R. 305.

An injunction granted to restrain the use of a secret in the compounding of a medicine not being the subject of a patent, and to restrain the sale of such medicine, by a defendant who acquired a knowledge of the secret in violation of the contract of the party by whom it was communicated, and in breach of trust and confidence. Morison v. Moat, 9 Hare, 241. Affirmed, 21 L. J., Ch. 248; 16 Jur. 321.

A plaintiff not having the privileges of a patentee may have no title to be protected in the exclusive manufacture and sale of a medicine against the world, but he may, notwithstanding, have a good title to protection against the particular defendant. Ib.

The case of a secret acquired by a breach of faith or confidence, but communicated to a purchaser for value, without notice of any obligation affecting it, distinguished from that of a party whose claim of right to use the secret is that of a volunteer. Ib.

The court, in interfering in such cases, upon the grounds of faith or confidence, fastens upon the conscience of the party and enforces the obligation against him as it enforces, against a party to whom a benefit is given, an obligation to perform a promise upon the faith of which the benefit has been conferred, semble. Ib.

In June, 1823, Morison, the sole inventor and proprietor of a medicine not protected by patent, upon the occasion of entering into partnership with Moat as manufacturers and vendors of the medicine, for the purposes of the partnership communicated to the latter the secret of compounding the medicine. By the partnership deed either partner was empowered to introduce another partner, by deed, to be attested by the other; and by mutual bonds of even date, Morison bound himself not to communicate the secret of compounding the medicine to any person, except a partner so introduced; whilst Moat bound himself not to communicate such secret to any person whomsoever. Morison afterwards introduced his sons, the plaintiffs, into the partnership; and Moat, shortly before his death, in breach of his bond, communicated the secret to the defendant, his son; and then by deed, duly attested by Morison, appointed the defendant his successor in the partnership. Shortly after the death of Moat, the defendant joined Morison and the plaintiffs, who were ignorant that he had obtained a knowledge of the secret, in executing a partnership deed, containing a clause declaring the defendant a sleeping partner, and another clause, by which the partners covenanted not to divulge the secret of compounding the medicines to any person whomsoever. The defendant also afterwards executed deeds reciting that the sole property in the secret was in Morison. Morison afterwards died, having by will bequeathed his property in the secret to the plaintiffs. After the determination of the partnership the defendant made use of his knowledge of the secret communicated to him by his father, in manufacturing medicine, which he sold as the medicine originally manufactured by Morison. Upon the application of the plaintiffs the court granted an injunction restraining the defendant from selling, under the title or designation of "Morison's medicine," any medicine manufactured by the defendant; and also from compounding any medicines according to the secret mentioned in the plaintiff's bill, and from in any way making use of such secret. Ib.

Secret obtained by Fair Means—Misrepresentation as to Article Sold.]—Any person who by fair means has gained the knowledge of a trade secret may after the death of the original inventor, make and sell the article under the name of the original inventor, provided such person does nothing to induce the pubilc to believe that the article sold by him is made by the successor of the original inventor. But he must uot assert that his is the only genuine article, or suggest that the article manufactured by the successors of the original discoverer is spurious. James v. James, 41 L. J., Ch. 353; L. R. 13 Eq. 421; 26 L. T. 568; 20 W. R. 434.

A member of the family of R. J., the original inventor of a secret preparation, having by fair means become possessed of the original receipt, made and sold the article by the name given to it by the original inventor, under the signature of R. J., his own name being R. R. J.:—Held, that he was not entitled, as against the successor of the original inventor, to sell the article under the signature of R. J. singly or to represent that his was the only genuine preparation. Ib.

Joseph Thorley for many years manufactured and sold extensively an article called "Thorley's Food for Cattle," made according to a recipe communicated to him and not known to the public, and down to his death he was the only person who made it. His executors continued the business. Shortly after his death a company was formed by other persons, under the name of J. W. Thorley's Cattle Food Company, in which J. W. Thorley, a brother of Joseph Thorley, took a 1*s.* share. J. W. Thorley had been employed by Joseph Thorley, and knew the secret of the manufacture, and was employed by the company to conduct it. The company sold the same article under the name of "Thorley's Food for Cattle":—Held, that the company were not at liberty to use the name "Thorley's Food for Cattle" unless they took such precautions as would prevent purchasers from supposing that the article sold by them was manufactured at the original establishment of Joseph Thorley. Massam v. Thorley's Cattle Food Co., 14 Ch. D. 748; 41 L. T. 543; 42 L. T. 851; 28 W. R. 966. And see S. C., 46 L. J., Ch. 707; 6 Ch. D. 574; 36 L. T. 848.

Articles falsely Represented to be Made according to Secret Recipe of Plaintiff.]—An article, the secret making of which was known only to one maker, had acquired a trade name. An injunction was granted, restraining the application of that name to a different article of the same class, so as to induce the belief that it was the plaintiff's article. Siegert v. Findlater, 47 L. J., Ch. 233; 7 Ch. D. 801; 38 L. T. 349; 26 W. R. 459.

The plaintiff manufactured a fluid which he sold under the name of "Aromatic Bitters," and it was described by this name upon the wrappers of the bottles in which it was sold. It became, however, generally known in the market by the name of "Angostura Bitters," it having been originally manufactured at the town of Angostura, in Venezuela. The name of this town was afterwards, by a decree of the state, changed to Ciudad Bolivar. After this change had taken place, the defendant began to manufacture in the same town a different fluid, which he at first sold under the name of "Aromatic Bitters," but, having been restrained in an English colony from using that name, he adopted the name, "Angostura Bitters," and placed it upon the wrappers of his bottles, also registering his wrapper at Stationers' Hall. His wrappers were very similar to those of the plaintiff, but they contained a statement that the fluid was prepared by the defendant. After this the plaintiff adopted the name "Angostura Bitters," and placed it upon his wrappers, and he brought an action against the defendant, claiming an injunction to restrain him from imitating the plaintiff's wrappers, and from using the name "Angostura Bitters." At the time when the action was brought the plaintiff had ceased to carry on his manufacture at Ciudad Bolivar:—Held, that the defendant had been guilty of an attempt to deceive, and that, though he could not be restrained from using the name "Angostura Bitters," in case he should ever discover the plaintiff's secret, and manufacture the same fluid, yet he must be restrained from using the name so as to deceive the public into the belief that his fluid was the plaintiff's. Ib.

It was alleged by the defendant that the plaintiff was disentitled to relief, because at the time of the trial, he was using wrappers which contained a misrepresentation. The plaintiff did not begin to use those wrappers until after the action had been brought:—Held, that there was in fact no misrepresentation in the wrappers in question, but that, even if there had been, a misrepresentation not made till after the commencement of the action would not have affected the plaintiff's title to relief. Ib.

Injunction to prevent a chemist from selling a quack medicine, under a false and colourable representation that it was a medicine of the plaintiff, an eminent physician, refused. Clark v. Freeman, 11 Beav. 112; 17 L. J., Ch. 142; 12 Jur. 119.

Right to Exclusive Use of Name.]—When a man has learnt a trade secret from his employer, and practised it after the employer's death, selling the article under the old name, he will not acquire such a right to the exclusive use of the name as a trade mark as will be protected in a court of equity. Hovenden v. Lloyd, 18 W. R. 1132.

7. TRADE, CONTRACT IN RESTRAINT OF, see CONTRACT.

B. TRADE MARK.

1. WHAT IS, AND INFRINGEMENT.

a. What is a Trade Mark.

Name of Person or Place.]—When a name, whether of a place or of a person, has, by user by a particular maker of a particular article of manufacture, acquired a secondary signification in connection with that manufacture, and has obtained currency and value in the market as the trade denomination of that particular maker's goods, it becomes in connection with that manufacture the property of that maker as his trade mark or as part of his trade mark. Wotherspoon v. Currie, 42 L. J., Ch. 130; L. R. 5 H. L. 508; 27 L. T. 393. Reversing 18 W. R. 942.

The name of a manufacturer, or a system of numbers adopted and used by him in order to designate goods of his make, may be the subject of the same protection in equity as an ordinary trade mark. Ainsworth v. Walmsley, 35 L. J., Ch. 352; L. R. 1 Eq. 518; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 205; 14 L. T. 220; 14 W. R. 363.

—— Right of Outgoing Partner to use Trade Name.]—B., an outgoing partner, claimed that by the terms of the deed of dissolution between himself and L., he was entitled to manufacture a particular article from an original recipe, the property of the late partnership, and to sell it as "L.'s soap" prepared by B.:—Held, that he was entitled to use the old trade name of the article as his trade mark, and to have it registered, although identical with that of the successors of the old firm. Benbow v. Low, 44 L. T. 875; 29 W. R. 837.

See also PARTNERSHIP.

Name of Place of Origin.]—The name of the place of origin of an article may become a trade mark. Radde v. Norman, 41 L. J., Ch. 525; L. R. 14 Eq. 348; 26 L. T. 788; 20 W. R. 766.

Although where a word is chosen as a trade mark which is in fact a geographical designation of a whole tract of country, where the raw material is grown whence a manufactured article is produced, there cannot be property in the word for all purposes, yet property in the word, as applied by way of stamp upon a particular vendible article, does exist the moment the article goes into the market so stamped, and there obtains acceptance and reputation, whereby the stamp gets currency as an indication of superior quality or of some other circumstance which renders the article so stamped acceptable to the public. M. & Co. were manufacturers of liquorice, and having made in this country a new description of goods from a mixture of juice extracted from roots obtained from Anatolia and Spain, they stamped upon the manufactured article the mark "Anatolia," and sold it to the public, and acquired a reputation for it in the market. This was the first use of the word in this way, though juice had previously been imported from Anatolia. The mark was immediately afterwards imitated by B., at the request of a customer, and attached to their liquorice made from Spanish roots:—Held (affirming 10 Jur. (N.S.) 492; 10 L. T. 65), that the word "Anatolia" so used was a trade mark, and that there had been a sufficient user and adoption of it by M. & Co. to give them a property in it as such. M'Andrew v. Bassett, 4 De G. J. & S. 380; 4 N. R. 12, 123; 33 L. J., Ch. 561; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 550; 10 L. T. 442; 12 W. R. 777.

Letters used with Name.]—A firm having adopted the letters "L. L." to designate a peculiar quality of whiskey sold by them, acquire an exclusive right to the use of those letters as a trade mark, though they were always preceded by the name of the firm upon the labels issued by them. Kinahan v. Bolton, 15 Ir. Ch. R. 75.

Crest.]—Long user of a trade mark gives such a property in it to the owner that another person cannot adopt the same device, even though it is his "family crest." Standish v. Whitwell, 14 W. R. 512.

A trader may establish a trade mark by the use of a "crest," and anything which amounts to an imitation of the crest as a trade mark would be restrained by the court. But the use of a different crest by another trader, if not accompanied by other indicia to make it a colourable imitation of the trade mark of the plaintiff, will not be restrained. Beard v. Turner, 13 L. T. 746.

Title of Book.]—There may be a trade mark in a title of a book, and an action for fraud will lie against a person using the title of a book already published for the purpose of passing off such book as that of a former author. Dicks v. Yates, 50 L. J., Ch. 809 ; 18 Ch. D. 76 ; 44 L. T. 660—C. A.

Mere Description — "Nourishing London Stout."]—An adjective, merely describing the quality of a manufactured article, will not be protected by the court as a trade mark. Raggett v. Findlater, 43 L. J., Ch. 64 ; L. R. 17 Eq. 29 ; 29 L. T. 448 ; 22 W. R. 53.

Therefore, when the plaintiff, who dealt in malt liquors in London, sold stout, which was subjected by him to a particular treatment, under the name of Nourishing London Stout :—Held, that he was not entitled to an injunction restraining the defendant from selling stout under the name of Nourishing Stout. Ib.

—— Filter.]—C., a patentee of a filter, after the expiration of his patent, sold filters marked "C.'s patent filter." W., a rival manufacturer, sold filters made according to the expired patent, marked "C.'s patent filter, manufactured by W." :—Held, to be no infringement of C.'s trade mark. Held, also, that the label was not a trade mark, but only a description of the article sold. Cheavin v. Walker, 46 L. J., Ch. 686 ; 5 Ch. D. 850 ; 37 L. T. 300—C. A. S. C., 36 L. T. 938.

—— "Liebig's Extract of Meat."]—In 1847 Baron von Liebig discovered and published a process for making an extract of meat. The extract was made extensively at the Royal Pharmacy, Munich, and sold there, with the permission of the baron, as Liebig's extract of meat from 1861 to 1864. It became generally known in Germany and other countries, and the term Liebig's extract of meat became used as a term of art in scientific treatises. In 1864 Baron Liebig gave the Fray Bentos company the right of using his name in connection with the extract of meat manufactured by them. In 1864 a company bought the business and property of the Fray Bentos Company, and by a deed-poll, dated the 12th April, 1866, the baron granted to the plaintiff company the exclusive right and privilege to use his name in connection with the extract manufactured by them. The defendants, who had previously sold extract manufactured by the Fray Bentos Company, in 1866, began to sell as "Liebig's extract of meat" an extract manufactured by Mr. Tooth, in Australia, after Liebig's process. On a suit being instituted by the plaintiff company to restrain the defendants from so using the name Liebig's extract of meat :—Held, that the term having been used as a term of art to designate a well-known process long before 1861, the defendants were fully justified in using it, and the bill was dismissed with costs. Liebig's Extract of Meat Co. v. Hanbury, 17 L. T. 298.

—— Patent Plumbago Crucibles.]—The plaintiffs purchased from a firm established in the United States knowledge of a secret mode of making crucibles, which had acquired a reputation in America as "Patent Plumbago Crucibles," although the process never had been patented :—Held, that they could not maintain a bill to restrain others from pirating this designation. Morgan v. M'Adam, 36 L. J., Ch. 228.

Words "Prize Medal."]—The persons to whom prize medals have been awarded by the Commissioners of the International Exhibition have not ipso facto any special property in the nature of a trade mark in the words "prize medal." Therefore, where a person who had not obtained such a medal issued his goods with labels affixed to them bearing the words "prize medal, 1862," the court refused to interfere at the instance of a person who had obtained such a medal. Batty v. Hill, 1 H. & M. 264 ; 2 N. R. 265 ; 8 L. T. 791 ; 11 W. R. 745.

Affixed to Article or Cover.]—A trade mark need not be actually affixed to the article. It is sufficient if the trade mark is on the cover or wrapper in which the article is sold. Jay v. Ladler, 40 Ch. D. 649 ; 60 L. T. 27 ; 37 W. R. 505.

Property in Trade Mark.]—Property in a trade mark is the right to the exclusive use of some mark, name or symbol in connection with a particular manufacture or vendible commodity. Leather Cloth Co. v. American Leather Cloth Co., 11 H. L. Cas. 523 ; 35 L. J., Ch. 53 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 513 ; 12 L. T. 742 ; 13 W. R. 873 ; 6 N. R. 209.

An element in the right to property in a trade mark is the fact of the article to which the stamp or mark is affixed being in the market as a vendible article, with a stamp or mark, at the time when it is imitated. M'Andrew v. Bassett, 4 De G. J. & S. 380 ; 4 N. R. 123 ; 33 L. J., Ch. 561 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 550 ; 10 L. T. 442 ; 12 W. R. 777.

There is no property in a trade mark, but a person who has been in the habit of using a particular mark may prevent other persons from fraudulently taking advantage of the reputation which his goods have acquired, by using his mark in order to pass off their goods as his, to his injury. Collins Co. v. Brown, 3 K. & J. 423 ; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 929 ; 5 W. R. 676. S. P., Boulnois v. Peake, ante, col. 75.

Charles I. having granted a charter to the cardmaker's company to use the mogul stamp on cards, plaintiff, suggesting a sole right, as having appropriated it to himself conformably to the charter, moved for an injunction to restrain defendant ; but lord chancellor refused it. The objection of the defendant taking away the plaintiff's customers by using the same mark (the mogul stamp on his cards) is of no more weight than if one innkeeper should set up the same sign as another. But a cloth-worker may maintain an action against another of the same trade for using his mark, where it is done with a fraudulent design to put off bad cloths, or to draw away customers. The court however, will never establish a right claimed under a charter only from the crown, unless the right has been first tried at law. Blanchard v. Hill, 2 Atk. 484.

There is no exclusive right in a subject not protected by patent, to prevent sale by another person under the same title, not assuming the name and character of the plaintiff. Canham v. Jones, 2 V. & B. 218 ; 13 R. R. 70.

b. What is Infringement.

Colour cannot be Considered.] — In deciding the question of piracy of a trade-mark, the colour of the marks cannot be taken into account, and the only test is a comparison of the uncoloured diagrams. Nuthall v. Vining, 28 W. R. 330—C. A.

Where Difference Reasonably Evident.]—Where, in a stamp used by the defendant as a trade-mark, the form of the printed words, the words themselves, and the pictured symbol introduced among them, so much differed from that of the plaintiffs, that any person with reasonable care and observation must see the difference, and could not be misled into taking the one for the other :—Held, that there had been no infringement. Leather Cloth Co. v. American Leather Cloth Co., 6 N. R. 209 ; 11 H. L. Cas. 253 ; 35 L. J., Ch. 53 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 513 ; 12 L. T. 742 ; 13 W. R. 873. And see S. C., 4 De G. J. & S. 137 ; 2 N. R. 481 ; 3 N. R. 264 ; 33 L. J., Ch. 199 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 81 ; 9 L. T. 558 ; 12 W. R. 289.

Where Acts Likely to Mislead.]—The test of the infringement of a trade-name or trade-mark is whether the acts alleged as an infringement are likely to mislead the public into dealing with the alleged infringer under the belief that they are dealing with the person who first used the name or mark. Lee v. Haley, 39 L. J., Ch. 284 ; L. R. 5 Ch. 155 ; 22 L. T. 251 ; 18 W. R. 242.

The doctrine of the court on this point will not be restricted by any technical rules as to the name or mark in which the tradesman has property. Ib.

When a name denotes a special article to persons in a particular trade, but is used vaguely by persons not in the trade, it is not a misdescription to sell by that name, to persons not in the trade, articles popularly included under the name, but not strictly within the meaning of the word as used in the trade. Ib.

Where no Proof that Public Deceived.]—In 1884 the defendants, who were brewers, and who had no knowledge of the plaintiffs' trade-mark registered in 1879, designed as a trade-mark for their beer a label consisting of a picture of "John Bull" similar to the plaintiffs' picture, and containing the words "John Bull, registered." The defendants' label was registered at Stationers' Hall under the Copyright Acts. In 1885 the defendants applied to have their label registered as a trade-mark. The plaintiffs opposed, and the defendants' application was refused. The defendants, nevertheless, still continued to sell their beer bearing the above-described label :—Held, that the defendants' label, taken as a whole, was an infringement of the plaintiffs' registered trade-mark, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to an injunction, although there was no proof that any of the public had been deceived. Paine & Co. v. Daniells & Sons' Breweries, Paine & Co.'s Trade Marks, In re, post, cols. 157–8.

The plaintiffs made and sold soda water in their own bottles, marked in the glass with their own name, followed by the words "Genuine Superior Aerated Waters," and pasted over the corks with reddish labels, bearing a royal crown and their own name. They charged the bottles and contents in one price per dozen to their customers, and allowed 3*s.* per dozen for the empty bottles. The bottles only cost them 1*s.* 6*d.* per dozen. The defendant, who had been a customer of theirs to some extent, being asked for a dozen of soda water by the plaintiffs' agent sent for that purpose, supplied twelve bottles, seven of which were not stamped in the glass with the plaintiffs' name, and about which no deceit or mistake could arise. The remaining five bottles so supplied bore the plaintiffs' name on the glass, and had been originally made and supplied by the plaintiffs, but to whom in particular did not appear. The labels on all the bottles so sold were similar in colour to the plaintiffs' labels, and had a royal crown, but had not the plaintiffs' name on them. The water was not the plaintiffs' water. They, on such purchase, without asking for any explanation, filed a bill for an injunction to restrain the use, or vending, by the defendant of the plaintiffs' bottles generally, and obtained an ex parte injunction :—Held, that the ex parte injunction must be dissolved with costs, the court being of opinion, upon the evidence, that the defendant was not shown to have used the bottles either with an intention, or so as, in fact, to mislead the public. Welch v. Knott, 4 K. & J. 747 ; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 330.

But the use of such bottles, so as in fact to mislead the public, although unintentionally, would be restrained. Ib.

It is a serious error to allege, in a bill to restrain the improper use of a trade-mark, that the trade-mark complained of is "similar," when it is in fact the same, or vice versâ. Ib.

Sale of Goods calculated to deceive.]—If a person sells his goods with the intention of deceiving purchasers and of inducing them to believe his goods are the goods of another, this is actionable, and entitles the latter to recover nominal damages, even though no special damage is proved. If an article has acquired a distinctive meaning in the trade, connecting it with a particular person's manufacture, and another so advertises or describes, or makes up his goods as to lead purchasers to believe, or to create a probability of their believing, that they are buying the goods of the former, when in fact they are buying the goods of the latter (and this though there is no intention to deceive and no special damage proved), a court of equity will grant relief by way of injunction. The fraudulent intention is essential in the first case ; it is unnecessary in the second. Reddaway v. Bentham Hemp Spinning Co., [1892] 2 Q. B. 639 ; 67 L. T. 301—C. A.

Name calculated to Deceive.]—The plaintiffs registered the word "Sanitas" as a trade mark, under the Patents, Designs and Trade Marks Act, 1883, for goods manufactured and sold by them. The defendant advertised and sold under the name of "Condi-Sanitas" articles of a similar nature to those manufactured by the plaintiffs :—Held, that the word adopted by the defendant so resembled the plaintiffs' trade-mark as to be calculated to deceive and mislead ; and that, therefore, an interlocutory injunction must be granted to restrain the defendant from using the word "Sanitas" in conjunction with "Condi," or in any other way which would infringe the plaintiffs' trade-mark. Sanitas Co. v. Condy, 56 L. T. 621.

A manufacturer who has produced an article of merchandise, e.g. a new pattern of cloth, and applied to it a particular fancy name, and sold it with a particular mark, under which name and mark it has obtained currency in the market, acquires an exclusive right to the use of such name and mark, and is entitled to restrain all other persons from using such name and mark to denote articles similar in kind and appearance, although he may have no exclusive right of manufacturing the article. Hirst v. Denham, 41 L. J., Ch. 752; L. R. 14 Eq. 542; 27 L. T. 56.

If the use of such name and mark, by any other person than the first inventor, has been adopted for the purpose of selling goods of an inferior quality, though of similar external appearance, so that purchasers may be misled into the belief that they are buying the goods of the first inventor, the injury to the first inventor is one for which he is entitled to compensation in damages, and relief by injunction. Ib.

The respondents were long-established brewers at the town of Stone, in Staffordshire, and their ales had long been known in the trade as "Stone Ales." The appellant had recently established a brewery at Stone, and the courts below came to the conclusion that he intended to use the name "Stone" in connection with his own ales in such a way as to lead to the belief that his ales were those of the respondents. Injunction granted restraining the appellant from "carrying on the business of a brewer at Stone under the title 'Stone Brewery' or 'Montgomery's Stone Brewery,' or under any other title so as to represent that the defendant's brewery is the brewery of the plaintiffs, and from selling or causing to be sold, any ale or beer not of the plaintiffs' manufacture under the terms 'Stone Ales' or 'Stone Ale,' or in any way so as to induce the belief that such ale or beer is of the plaintiffs' manufacture, and from infringing the plaintiffs' registered trade marks or any of them." Montgomery v. Thompson, 60 L. J., Ch. 757; [1891] A. C. 217; 64 L. T. 748; 55 J. P. 756—H. L. (E.)

Device on Label.]—The plaintiffs and the defendants were bottlers of beer for export. The plaintiffs' label consisted of a bulldog's head on a black ground surrounded by a circular band on which were the words "Read Brothers, London. The Bull Dog Bottling." The defendants' label represented a rough terrier's head on a black ground surrounded by a red circular band on which were the words "Celebrated Terrier Bottling, E. Richardson." The plaintiffs' beer was well known in the colonies as the "Dog's Head" beer, and they alleged that the defendants, by exporting to certain colonies beer with the terrier's head label, led to their beer being substituted and taken for the plaintiffs' beer:—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to an interim injunction restraining the continuance of the terrier's head in the label on the bottles of beer exported to such colonies by the defendants. Read v. Richardson, 45 L. T. 54—C. A.

Though there is no copyright in a trade-mark, a manufacturer who has adopted a trade-mark, in order to designate some particular article as made by him, has a right to the assistance of a court of equity to prevent anyone from so using the same, or any similar mark, as to induce purchasers to believe, contrary to the fact, that they are buying that particular article to which the mark was originally applied. Farina v. Silverlock, 6 De G. M. & G. 214; 26 L. J., Ch. 11; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1008.

B. & Co. for many years affixed a label or a trade-mark to the bottles in which their ale was sold. D. & Co. adopted a label bearing a general resemblance to that of B. & Co., but differing from it in several particulars. Bill by B. & Co. to restrain D. & Co. from using such label dismissed with costs. Bass v. Dawber, 19 L. T. 626.

Where the plaintiff attached to wire manufactured by him tallies marked with an anchor, and the defendant attached to his manufacture similar tallies marked with the device of a crown and anchor:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction. Edelston v. Edelston, 1 De G. J. & S. 185; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 479; 7 L. T. 768; 11 W. R. 328.

A defendant sold tobacco-pipes packed in boxes or cases, upon which were labels or descriptions of a similar character to those of the plaintiff, using the plaintiff's name as being the real manufacturer, the defendant having a person in his employ of that name:—Held, that such colourable imitation and use of the labels and descriptions could be restrained by injunction. Southorn v. Reynolds, 12 L. T. 575.

A defendant was restrained from selling or exposing for sale, fireworks, not manufactured or sold by the plaintiff, in boxes bearing the plaintiff's labels. Barnett v. Leuchars, 13 L. T. 495; 14 W. R. 166.

Introduction of New Article under known Name—Right to Name.]—Where A. introduces into the market an article which, though previously known to exist, is new as an article of commerce, and has acquired a reputation therefrom in the market by a name not merely descriptive of the article, B. will not be permitted to sell a similar article under the same name; and this, although the peculiarity of the name has long been in common use as applied to goods of a different kind. Braham v. Bustard, 1 Hem. & M. 447; 9 L. T. 199; 11 W. R. 1061.

If the goods of a trader have acquired in the market a name derived from a part of the trade-mark which he affixes to them, a rival trader is not entitled to use a ticket which is likely to lead to the application of the same name to his goods, even though that name is not the only name by which the goods of the first trader have been known, or though it has been always used in conjunction with some other words. Johnston v. Orr-Ewing, 51 L. J., Ch. 797; 7 App. Cas. 219; 46 L. T. 216; 30 W. R. 417—H. L. (E.)

—— Secret or Patent Process.]—An article, the secret making of which was known only to one maker, had acquired a trade name. An injunction was granted, restraining the application of that name to a different article of the same class, so as to induce the belief that it was the plaintiff's article. Siegert v. Findlater, 47 L. J., Ch. 233; 7 Ch. D. 801; 38 L. T. 349; 26 W. R. 459.

The maker of a secret preparation or of a patented article may while the secret remains undiscovered or the patent is unexpired obtain an injunction to restrain the sale of goods of a different kind passed off under the name by which the preparation or article is known. Powell v. Birmingham Vinegar Brewery Co., [1894] 3 Ch. 449; 13 R. 153; 71 L. T. 393. Affirmed in C. A., 13 R. 164, n.

From 1860 to 1893 the plaintiff alone had sold a sauce called "Yorkshire Relish." At the latter date the defendants put upon the market a sauce which was altogether different from the plaintiff's sauce and sold it under the name of their "Yorkshire Relish:"—Held, that though the general appearance of defendant's labels and wrappers was different from those of plaintiff, they had not taken sufficient precautions to prevent customers being misled, and that an interim injunction must be granted. Ib.

The inventor of a sauce gave it the name of the Licensed Victuallers' Relish, and designed a trade-mark for labels on the bottles containing it, and employed his son to sell it. He permitted his son to describe himself in his circulars and invoices as the sole proprietor of the sauce. The son became bankrupt and his trustee sold his interest in the sauce and its trade-mark to the plaintiff, who sought to restrain the inventor from infringing the trade-mark. The plaintiff did not know the defendant's receipt, but made a sauce which the witnesses deposed to be undistinguishable from the defendant's:—Held, that a trade-mark could not exist in gross, and that as the plaintiff did not know the receipt for the original article, he could not have a right to affix the trade-mark to a sham article for the purpose of imposing on the public. Cotton v. Gillard, 44 L. J., Ch. 90.

Joseph Thorley for many years manufactured and sold extensively an article called "Thorley's Food for Cattle," made according to a recipe communicated to him and not known to the public, and down to his death he was the only person who made it. His executors continued the business. Shortly after his death a company was formed by other persons under the name of J. W. Thorley's Cattle Food Company, in which J. W. Thorley, a brother of Joseph Thorley, took a 1*s.* share. J. W. Thorley had been employed by Joseph Thorley, and knew the secret of the manufacture, and was employed by the company to conduct it. The company sold the same article under the name of "Thorley's Food for Cattle":—Held, that the company were not at liberty to use the name "Thorley's Food for Cattle" unless they took such precautions as would prevent purchasers from supposing that the article sold by them was manufactured at the original establishment of Joseph Thorley. Massam v. Thorley's Cattle Food Co., 14 Ch. D. 748; 42 L. T. 851; 28 W. R. 966—C. A.

Using Patented Lockplates to Inferior Rifles.]—The plaintiff was a gunmaker, who manufactured rifles, purchasing some of the different parts from various makers, and putting them together to form a complete rifle, which after having been viewed and approved by him, was stamped with his name and trade-mark on the lock plate as a guarantee that it had been examined and approved by him. He also fitted to the rifles levers manufactured by himself, for which he had taken out a patent, and these levers were also marked with his name. The plaintiff's rifles so marked with his name had a great reputation. He supplied rifles so marked and guaranteed by him to the government, and when they became unsuitable for government purposes, they were taken to pieces and some of the parts mutilated and sold as old stores. The defendant bought some of these old stores, including levers and lockplates with the plaintiff's name and trade-mark upon them, and fitted them to old rifle barrels, which had been cut down to the size of carbine barrels, and were not suited to the action which formed part of the rifles as passed and guaranteed by the plaintiff. At this time his patent for the levers had expired:—Held, that the defendant might be restrained from making and selling such firearms. Richards v. Williamson, 30 L. T. 746; 22 W. R. 765.

Particular Cases—Medicine.]—The plaintiff invented and sold a medicine under his own name. The defendant also made and sold a similar medicine, and on his labels he used the plaintiff's name and certain certificates given of the efficacy of the plaintiff's medicine in such an ingenious manner as primâ facie, though not in fact, to appropriate and apply them to his own medicine:—Held, that although there were other differences in the mode of selling, the proceeding was wrongful, and the defendant was restrained by injunction. Franks v. Weaver, 10 Beav. 291.

—— Omnibus.]—Injunction granted to restrain the defendant from running an omnibus having upon it such names, words and devices as to form a colourable imitation of the words, names, and devices on the omnibuses of the plaintiffs. Knott v. Morgan, 2 Keen, 213.

—— Watches—Foreign Characters.]—Injunction to restrain a party from making and sending to Turkey watches having the plaintiff's name or the word "warranted," engraved thereon in Turkish characters, in imitation of plaintiff's watches. Gout v. Aleploglu, 6 Beav. 69, n.

A man cannot acquire a property merely in a name or mark. Ib.

—— "Ethiopian" Stockings.]—A. and B. filed their bill, alleging a right to a trade mark in the word "Ethiopian" upon black cotton stockings, acquired by A. and a former partner, deceased, praying an injunction and account of profits. Defendants denied plaintiffs' right to the mark as a trade mark, stating that other parties used the word prior to A. and his partner, but admitted that they (defendants) had copied the mark from plaintiffs' stockings, and denied any fraudulent intent in so doing. The evidence as to plaintiffs' right to the mark as a trade mark was very unsatisfactory:—Held, refusing a motion to dissolve an injunction, that defendants having made so complete a copy of plaintiffs' mark, the difference being only nominal, must be taken to have done so with an intent to gain an advantage to which they were not entitled:—Held, also, that, although the personal representative of A.'s deceased partner might have a right to participate in the property (if any) of the mark, A. had such an interest as to entitle him to file this bill. Hine v. Lart, 10 Jur. 106.

—— "Stephens' Blue Black Ink."]—A trader produced and sold an ink which he designated "Stephens' Blue Black," and it was shown to the public in a label in white capital letters of large type. The defendant sold an ink in bottles similar in size, designated as "Steelpens Blue Black," also in white capital letters of large type:—Held, that this was a colourable imitation of the trade mark, and the defendant was restrained by injunction from the further use of it. Stephens v. Peel, 16 L. T. 145.

—— "Schweitzer's Cocoatina."]—Schweitzer sold a preparation of cocoa labelled "Schweitzer's cocoatina." Atkins, who had been in his employ, set up business in partnership with a man also named Schweitzer, and sold a similar preparation of cocoa, labelled "Schweitzer, Atkins & Co.'s cocoatina":—Held, that this was a fraudulent and colourable imitation, and an injunction was granted accordingly. Schweitzer v. Atkins, 37 L. J., Ch. 847; 19 L. T. 6; 16 W. R. 1080.

"Angostura Bitters."]—The plaintiff manufactured a fluid which he sold under the name of "Aromatic Bitters," and it was described by this name upon the wrappers of the bottles in which it was sold. It became, however, generally known in the market by the name of "Angostura Bitters," it having been originally manufactured at the town of Angostura in Venezuela. The name of this town was afterwards, by a decree of the state, changed to Ciudad Bolivar. After this change had taken place, the defendant began to manufacture in the same town a different fluid, which he at first sold under the name of "Aromatic Bitters," but, having been restrained in an English colony from using that name, he adopted the name "Angostura Bitters," and placed it upon the wrappers of his bottles, also registering his wrapper at Stationer's Hall. His wrappers were very similar to those of the plaintiff, but they contained a statement that the fluid was prepared by the defendant. After this the plaintiff adopted the name "Angostura Bitters," and placed it upon his wrappers, and he brought an action against the defendant, claiming an injunction to restrain him from imitating the plaintiff's wrappers, and from using the name "Angostura Bitters." At the time when the action was brought the plaintiff had ceased to carry on his manufacture at Ciudad Bolivar:—Held, that the defendant had been guilty of an attempt to deceive, and that, though he could not be restrained from using the name "Angostura Bitters," in case he should ever discover the plaintiff's secret, and manufacture the same fluid, yet he must be restrained from using the name so as to deceive the public into the belief that his fluid was the plaintiff's. Siegert v. Findlater, ante, col. 102.

"Singer's Sewing Machines."]—A manufacturer using, to describe articles made by him, the name of another manufacturer, must justify the use thus made of a name not his own, by showing that such name is understood by the trade and the public to denote a patented or other article of a particular type, structure or arrangement of parts, and not a mark or sign of a particular manufacturer. It makes no difference in this principle that such name does not appear upon the articles sold, but only in advertisements or price lists; nor that the articles bear the selling manufacturers' own trade mark and labels, stating them to be manufactured by him, and that statements to the same effect appear in the advertisements and price lists. Singer Manufacturing Co. v. Wilson, 47 L. J., Ch. 481; 3 App. Cas. 376; 38 L. T. 303; 26 W. R. 664—H. L. (E.)

When the first producer of an article of manufacture has identified with it a particular name, whether his own name or a name which is a word descriptive of the article itself, such name becomes a trade mark, and cannot be adopted and employed by another person in advertising a similar article. Ib.

Such adoption and employment will be restrained by injunction. Ib.

Singer made a sewing machine, to which he gave his own name; it became known by that name. He afterwards took other persons into partnership with him for the sale of the machines known as the Singer sewing machines, and which were made in great variety, and with many modifications, but though not protected by patents, were established in public favour under that name. W. sold sewing machines, and advertised, among others, Singer sewing machines, but used his own trade mark on the machines, and expressly stated in his advertisements that the machines sold by him were manufactured by himself:—Held, that this, nevertheless, constituted a wrongful invasion of the property of Singer, and that W. might be restrained by injunction. Ib.

Fraud is not necessary to be averred or proved in order to obtain protection for a trade mark. Ib.

"The Singer" Sewing Machines.]—In an action to restrain the use by the defendant of the plaintiffs' trade name, the issues were whether the name was a designation of machines of the plaintiffs' manufacture, or of machines of a particular kind of construction; whether the defendant had used the name for the purpose of appropriating the reputation acquired by machines manufactured by the plaintiff company or not; and whether the defendant had by using the name induced purchasers to believe they were buying machines manufactured by the plaintiff company. Defendant who sold (as wholesale agent in London of a company in Berlin) to persons in the trade only, described his machines in his circulars and price list as machines manufactured on the "Singer" system, or the "Singer improved system," and by his statement of defence alleged that, as the plaintiffs' patent had long since elapsed, they were not entitled to any monopoly of the right of advertising or selling machines manufactured on what was known in the trade as the "Singer system":—Held, that the plaintiff company had no exclusive right to use the word "Singer" as applied to sewing machines, and that there was nothing in the defendant's circular, price lists, and invoices calculated to deceive and induce purchasers to believe they were buying machines manufactured by the plaintiffs. Injunction overruled. Singer Manufacturing Co. v. Loog, 52 L. J., Ch. 481; 8 App. Cas. 15; 48 L. T. 3; 31 W. R. 325—H. L. (E.)

—— "Apollinaris Water"—"London Apollinaris Water."]—A company under a grant from the owners, acquired the exclusive right of importing and selling in Great Britain the mineral water produced by a natural spring, called "Apollinaris," at Ahrweiler, in Prussia, which had for some years been known and sold in the English market under the name of "Apollinaris Water," and advertised and sold the same as "Apollinaris Water." Subsequently, the defendant made and sold an artificial mineral water, being the chemical equivalent of the natural water, under the name and description of "London Apollinaris Water, possessing all the properties of the natural water":—Held, that the company was entitled to an interim injunction to restrain the use of the words "London Apollinaris Water," or of any other name of which the word "Apollinaris" so formed part as to be calculated to mislead the public. Apollinaris Co. v. Norrish, 33 L. T. 242.

"Hemy's Modern Tutor for the Pianoforte."]—The plaintiffs were the publishers of a work entitled "Hemy's Royal Modern Tutor for the Pianoforte," a revised edition of which had been brought out in 1867, and which was well known and had an extensive sale, but was was not so registered as to secure copyright. In 1874 the defendant employed Hemy to revise an old work, entitled "Jousse's Royal Standard Pianoforte Tutor," which had formerly been in high repute, but had entirely fallen into disuse. This revised work the defendant brought out under the title "Hemy's New and Revised Edition of Jousse's Royal Standard Pianoforte Tutor," the word "Hemy's," both on the outside of the book and on the title page, being printed in much larger and more conspicuous type than any other of the words:—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to an injunction restraining the defendant from offering his work for sale with its present form, title-page, and cover, or any other form, title-page, or cover calculated to deceive persons into the belief that it was the plaintiff's work. Metzler v. Wood, 47 L. J., Ch. 625; 8 Ch. D. 606; 38 L. T. 544; 26 W. R. 577—C. A.

—— "The Guinea Coal Company"—"The Pall Mall Guinea Coal Company."]—The plaintiffs were in August, 1869, and had for some time previously been carrying on business under the style of the "Guinea Coal Company," their offices being at No. 22, Pall Mall. In the early part of 1869, the defendant, who had formerly managed their business, established a business on his own account under the style of the "Pall Mall Guinea Coal Company"; his offices being first at Beaufort Buildings, whence in August, 1869, he removed to No. 46, Pall Mall. The defendant solicited orders principally by circular, sending circulars to many of the plaintiffs' customers, and succeeded in obtaining orders, which the customers afterwards said they had intended for the plaintiffs:—Held, that they were entitled to restrain him from using the name "The Pall Mall Guinea Coal Company" in Pall Mall. Lee v. Haley, 39 L. J., Ch. 284; L. R. 5 Ch. 155; 22 L. T. 258; 18 W. R. 242.

The bill was filed on the 24th November, 1869:—Held, that there was no laches, inasmuch as the plaintiffs must wait until sufficient proof of the injury they had received was collected. Ib.

—— "Reading Sauce"—"The Original Reading Sauce."—"Reading Sauce" was first invented and introduced to the public by one James Cocks, but subsequently many manufacturers by unrestrained usage acquired the right to call their articles the "Reading Sauce":—Held, that the description "The Original Reading Sauce" applied only to that made by James Cocks, and those claiming under him, and that they had a right to restrain other parties from using that designation without showing that any purchaser was actually deceived. Cocks v. Chandler, 40 L. J., Ch. 575; L. R. 11 Eq. 446; 24 L. T. 379; 19 W. R. 593.

—— "Eureka Shirts"—"Ford's Eureka Shirts."]—The user by a dealer or a manufacturer in connection with an article of manufacture, of a single word, being a material part of a particular title to which as a trade mark another manufacturer has a right in connexion with the same article, may be an infringement of the trade mark. Ford v. Foster, 41 L. J., Ch. 682; L. R. 7 Ch. 611; 27 L. T. 219; 20 W. R. 818.

Sale by Retail Dealer—Right to use Trade-mark.]—A manufacturer who sells to a dealer, in bulk, an article usually sold and used in small quantities, without any restriction as to its disposal, must be taken to authorise the dealer to sell it as being his vendor's manufacture. The dealer may therefore call the article by the name registered by the manufacturer as his trade mark. Condy v. Taylor, 56 L. T. 891.

—— Without Wilful Misrepresentation.]—A. being a thread manufacturer of repute, B. bought in the market thread, wound on spools, not made by A., of inferior quality, and cheaper than his, and not bearing his name, but marked with the name of a firm of winders of thread who were known to be accustomed to purchase of A. thread in the hank for the purpose of winding and selling it when wound. B. sold the goods to a wholesale customer, with the assurance (given as he said, without knowledge of any misrepresention) that they were of A.'s make, and invoiced them to the customer under the description of certain numbers which A. had adopted and exclusively used in order to designate his particular manufacture. The customer attached A.'s name to the spools of thread, and retailed it to the public as of A.'s make:—Held, that there was not such a degree of wilful misrepresentation on the part of B. as would justify the court in granting an injunction, and the bill was dismissed, but without costs. Ainsworth v. Walmsley, 35 L. J., Ch. 352; L. R. 1 Eq. 518; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 205; 14 L. T. 220; 14 W. R. 363.

Wholesale Manufacturer.]—Where A. is ordered by B. to manufacture an article, and stamp it with a trade mark not B.'s, that alone leads to suspicion; but A., having caused the article to be manufactured, and admitting having casually heard of the party entitled to use such trade mark, must submit to a perpetual injunction, and pay costs. Collins Co. v. Walker, 7 W. R. 222.

—— To what extent Trade Mark may be Used by.]—The office of a trade mark is to denote that the article bearing it was manufactured by the owner of the trade mark; and a man has no right to affix a trade mark to an article not manufactured by himself, except for the purpose of showing that the article was selected or examined or certified by himself. Hirsch v. Jones, 45 L. J., Ch. 364; 3 Ch. D. 584; 35 L. T. 228.

—— When Suggested by Purchaser not Manufacturer of Goods.]—H., a London cigar dealer, registered a label at Stationers' Hall, and communicated the same to a manufacturer of cigars at Havannah, who supplied H. with a particular description of cigars under that label, with the addition of the manufacturer's name and address. Afterwards, the manufacturer commenced to sell the same description of cigars under the same label through a London agent. Upon motion by H., who alleged that he had an exclusive right, in the nature of trade mark, to the label:—Held, that the trade mark was the manufacturer's; and in the absence of evidence of a contract binding him to supply cigars of the particular brand to no one but H., the court refused to grant an interim injunction to restrain the London agent from selling the cigars under the same label. Ib.

—— Under alleged Custom.]—An American company, incorporated, was established and located in the United States, for manufacturing edge tools of a superior description. The company used particular trade-marks and labels on their manufactures, for which they obtained a great reputation. The company discovered that their manufactures were being imitated, and their marks and labels used, by manufacturers in England; and by the defendant, a manufacturer at Birmingham, and the company thereupon filed a bill against him, alleging that he had been for same time past in the habit of making and selling tools bearing a fraudulent imitation of their marks and labels. He, before putting in his answer, submitted to an injunction, and in his answer admitted the use of the trade-marks complained of, but, by way of rebuttal of the charge of fraud, stated, that in so using the trade marks, he had only followed a custom prevalent at Birmingham for manufacturers of goods of the kind sold by the company, to affix on the goods ordered by merchants a particular trade mark, relying on the respectability of the merchant, when known to them, for the fact that those merchants had authority to act as agents of, or by way of licence from, the person entitled to the exclusive use of the trade marks; and that he had been informed that the company themselves had ordered goods to be manufactured at Birmingham, with their own trade mark upon them, for the purpose of sale in foreign countries. These statements were left uncontradicted by the company. On motion for a decree the court ordered the injunction to be continued, the bill to be retained for a year, with liberty to the plaintiffs to proceed at law to establish their legal right to the marks and labels; but if no proceedings at law within that time should be taken, the bill to be dismissed with costs, otherwise further consideration of all matters reserved. Collins Co. v. Reeves, 28 L. J., Ch. 56; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 865; 6 W. R. 717.

Alleged Custom that Shipping Agent has Right to Trade Mark.]—An arrangement was made between W., R., and G., that W., a manufacturer, should consign cotton cloths to G. in Rangoon, paying him an inclusive commission. The goods were to be exported through R., who acted as shipping agent, and was to see to the goods being finished and packed, for which services he received a commission from G. A particular mark was by arrangement between the three parties adopted for the goods, of which some portions and the general arrangement were new, and other portions consisted of R.'s name and arms, and of a symbol which had formerly been used by G. After goods had been regularly exported for some years under this arrangement, W. ceased to send goods through R., and commenced exporting them to Rangoon through the agency of F., continuing to use the old mark, except that the name and arms of F. were substituted for those of R. At the same time R. commenced exporting other goods under the old mark. Cross actions were commenced for injunctions, in which R. set up an alleged custom in Manchester, giving the right to the trade marks to the shipping agent:—Held, upon evidence, that no such custom existed. Robinson v. Finlay, 9 Ch. D. 487; 39 L. T. 398; 27 W. R. 294—C. A.

Held, also, that neither R. nor W. had any exclusive right to the use of the mark, and that both actions must be dismissed. Ib.

2. Action to Restrain Infringement.

a. Principles.

i. In General.

Principles upon which Injunction will be Granted.]—The principles explained on which interlocutory injunctions to restrain infringements of trade marks and names should be granted. Read v. Richardson, 45 L. T. 54—C. A.

The court will not grant an injunction to restrain the issue of goods bearing labels containing a false representation, when such falsehood is not an infringement of any right vested in the plaintiff. Batty v. Hill, 2 N. R. 265; 1 H. & M. 264; 8 L. T. 791; 11 W. R. 745.

The right to ask for the interference of the court in respect of a trade mark is founded, first, on the fact that the plaintiff has acquired the right of using the mark properly: that is to say, that it has not been copied, and does not involve any false representation; secondly, that the article so marked is actually a vendible article in the market; and, thirdly, that the defendant, knowing that to be so, has imitated the mark for the purpose of passing in the market other articles of a similar description. M'Andrew v. Bassett, 4 De G. J. & S. 380; 4 N. R. 123; 33 L. J., Ch. 561; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 550; 10 L. T. 442; 12 W. R. 777.

The essential ingredients for constituting an infringement of a right to a trade mark are—(1) that the mark has been applied by the plaintiffs properly, i.e. that they have not copied any other person's mark, and that the mark does not involve any false representation; (2) that the article so marked is actually a vendible article in the market; (3) that the defendants, knowing that to be so, have imitated the mark for the purpose of passing in the market other articles of a similar description. Ib.

The jurisdiction of the court of chancery in the protection of trade marks rests upon property, and fraud in the defendant is not necessary for the exercise of that jurisdiction. Hall v. Barrows, 4 De G. J. & S. 150; 1 N. R. 543; 3 N. R. 259; 33 L. J., Ch. 204; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 55; 9 L. T. 651; 12 W. R. 322.

The court will grant a perpetual injunction against the use by one tradesman of the trade marks of another, although such marks have been so used in ignorance of their being any person's property, and under the belief that they were merely technical terms. Millington v. Fox, 3 Myl. & Cr. 338.

Fraud is not necessary to be averred or proved in order to obtain protection for a trade mark. Singer Manufacturing Co. v. Wilson, 47 L. J., Ch. 481; 3 App. Cas. 376; 38 L. T. 303; 26 W. R. 664—H. L. (E.)

In order to constitute a ground for interference by a court of equity to protect a manufacturer against the use, by another person, of the particular name of his manufactured article, it is not necessary that there should be a mala mens towards the first purchaser of the article thus imitatively designated. The fault of the imitator is, that the first purchaser may be enabled, through this unwarranted designation. to retail a simulated article at a lower price than would be demanded for the original article, and so the original manufacturer may be injured. Wotherspoon v. Currie, 42 L. J., Ch. 130 ; L. R. 5 H. L. 508 ; 27 L. T. 393.

The court will not restrain the use of a label on the ground of its general resemblance to the trade mark of another manufacturer, if it is different in the points which a customer would look at in order to see whose manufacture he was purchasing. Blackwell v. Crabb, 36 L. J., Ch. 504.

It is not necessary, in order to give a right to an injunction, that a specific trade mark should be infringed ; it is sufficient that the court should be satisfied that there was on the whole, a fraudulent intention of palming off the defendant's goods as those of the plaintiff ; but in such a case it is essential that the imitation should be necessarily calculated to deceive. Woollam v. Ratcliff, 1 H. & M. 259.

It is not necessary in order to maintain a prayer for injunction that the whole of a trade mark should have been imitated. Braham v. Bustard, 9 L. T. 199 ; 11 W. R. 1061.

To entitle a trader to relief against an illegal use of his trade mark, it is not necessary that the imitation should be so close as to deceive persons seeing the two marks side by side ; but the degree of resemblance must be such, that ordinary purchasers proceeding with ordinary caution are likely to be misled. Seixo v. Provezende, L. R. 1 Ch. 192 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 215 ; 14 L. T. 314 ; 14 W. R. 357.

The actual physical resemblance of the two marks is not the sole question for the court, for if the plaintiff's goods have, from his trade-mark, become known in the market by a particular name, the adoption by the defendant of a mark or name which will cause his goods to bear the same name in the market, is as much a violation of the plaintiff's rights as the actual copy of his mark. Ib.

Although the defendant may have some title to the use of a name or mark, he will not be justified in adopting it, if the probable effect of his so doing is to lead the public to suppose, that in purchasing his goods they are purchasing those of the plaintiff. Ib. See also Mitchell v. Henry, post, col. 133.

Resemblance calculated to Deceive.]—The ground on which a court of equity protects trade marks is, that it will not permit a party to sell his own goods as the goods of another ; a party will not, therefore, be allowed to use names, marks, letters, or other indiciæ, by which he may pass off his own goods to purchasers as the manufacture of another person. Perry v. Truefitt, 6 Beav. 66.

In an alleged infringement of a right to trade marks, the court must ascertain whether the resemblances and the differences are such as naturally arise from the necessity of the case, or whether, on the other hand, the differences are simply colourable, and the resemblances such as are obviously intended to deceive the purchaser. The court will restrain by injunction a trader from using such trade marks as, from their resemblance to the trade marks of another firm, are obviously intended to deceive the purchaser into the belief that he is buying the manufactures of this other firm, the differences being merely colourable, and not made bonâ fide for the purpose of distinguishing the articles. Taylor v. Taylor, 2 Eq. R. 290 ; 23 L. J., Ch. 255.

Where there is a strong resemblance in matter, colour, and arrangement between the trade mark and its imitation, the court will presume that this is not fortuitous but intentional, with a view to mislead purchasers. Edelston v. Vick, 11 Hare, 78 ; 18 Jur. 7.

In an action for infringement of a trade mark which is of a type in general use in the trade, it is important to show that the trade mark alleged to infringe, though generally similar to the trade mark alleged to be infringed, was not copied from it, and was adopted without an intention to deceive, and that no case of actual deception has taken place after several years' user. Baker v, Rawson, 60 L. J., Ch. 49 ; 45 Ch. D. 519 ; 63 L. T. 306.

A. discovered a medicine to which he gave the name of chlorodyne, invented by himself as a fancy title, and not previously known in the medical profession. B. advertised for sale a medicine which he called chlorodyne, and sold as B.'s chlorodyne. A. filed a bill against B., but did not press it to a hearing, and obtained an order dismissing it with costs. B. subsequently advertised his medicine as original chlorodyne, asserting that he was the first inventor. Upon motion for an injunction in a second bill by A., to restrain B. from the use of the term original chlorodyne :—Held, that although A., by dismissing his former bill, has abandoned all right to the exclusive use of the term chlorodyne, he would have been entitled to restrain B. from selling his medicine as original chlorodyne, if he had adduced evidence that any one had been misled by the title into buying B.'s instead of A.'s medicine. Browne v. Freeman, 12 W. R. 305.

Different, but calculated to Deceive—"Glenfield Starch."]—When a trade mark is not actually copied, the existence of a fraudulent intention is a necessary element in the consideration of a case of this description. The party complained of must be proved to have done the act with the fraudulent design of passing off his own goods as those of the complainant. It is not necessary, however, to show an exact resemblance between the original and the counterfeit—it is sufficient if there is such a resemblance as will mislead an unwary purchaser. Wotherspoon v. Currie, 42 L. J., Ch. 130 ; L. R. 5 H. L. 508 ; 27 L. T. 393.

In order to constitute a ground for interference by a court of equity to protect a manufacturer against the use, by another person, of the particular name of his manufactured article, it is not necessary that there should be a mala mens towards the first purchaser of the article thus imitatively designated. The fault of the imitator is, that the first purchaser may be enabled, through this unwarranted designation, to retail a simulated article at a lower price than would be demanded for the original article, and so the original manufacturer may be injured. Ib.

W. had been for many years a manufacturer of starch at a small hamlet in Scotland, called Glenfield, where there was a stream of water particularly suited for use in the manufacture. Under the name of "Glenfield Starch" his goods had acquired a great reputation. In 1868, C. set up starch works at Glenfield, and sold starch in packets labelled "Currie & Co., starch manufacturers, Glenfield." In colour these labels resembled those of W., but this colour was used by most starch manufacturers. C.'s agent represented his starch as "Glenfield Starch," and he thereby obtained an increased sale for the article:—Held, that W. was entitled to an injunction to restrain C. from using the word "Glenfield" on his labels, and from representing his starch as Glenfield starch. Ib.

In cases of alleged colourable imitations of trade marks, the court has not to consider whether manufacturers could distinguish between the articles, but whether the public would probably be deceived by the alleged spurious imitation. Shrimpton v. Laight, 18 Beav. 164.

Injunction against imitating a blacking label granted, though the difference appeared on a careful reading. Day v. Binning, C. P. Cooper, 489.

User of Plaintiff's Boxes or Labels.] — The boxes of tin plates made at particular works at Carmarthen were, for a long series of years, branded with the mark "M.C.S." A lessee of those works, who had used that mark, subsequently removed his manufactory to other works at a distance of forty miles, and there used the same mark. The Carmarthen works were, for some years, unoccupied; but afterwards D., and others as co-partners, having taken a lease of them carried them on, and branded their boxes with the mark "M.C.," and styled themselves the "The M. C. Tin Plate Company," S. then obtained an injunction to restrain D. and his partners from using the mark "M. C." or the designation of "The M. C. Tin Plate Company"; but upon appeal the injunction was dissolved, with liberty to S. to bring an action. Motley v. Downman, 3 Myl. & Cr. 1; 6 L. J., Ch. 308.

Principles aud rules upon which the court interferes, by injunction, in such cases. Ib.

Imitation made Innocently.]—A declaration alleged that the plaintiff agreed with the defendant to manufacture for him fire-bricks, to be marked as he should direct; that he directed that they should be marked with R.'s name, he well knowing that R. manufactured fire-bricks marked with that name, to indicate that they were manufactured by him; that the plaintiff ignorant of the manufacture of fire-bricks by R., and that marking fire-bricks according to the direction of the defendant would be wrongful, manufactured fire-bricks for the defendant, and marked them with the name of R.; that R. filed a bill in chancery for an injunction and account against the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff, in order to compromise the suit, paid R. a sum of money:—Held, that the declaration disclosed two grounds of action; first, because the plaintiff was liable to the injunction, although he used the trade mark of R. innocently, and secondly, because the natural consequence of the defendant's act was to involve the plaintiff in a chancery suit, even if he had the means of defending it, by reason of his having used the trade mark of R. innocently. Dixon or Dickson v. Fawcus, 3 El. & El. 537; 30 L. J., Q. B. 137; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 895; 3 L. T. 693; 9 W. R. 414. See also Millington v. Fox, supra, col. 118.

If A. has acquired property in a trade-mark, which is afterwards adopted and used by B., in ignorance of A.'s right, A. is entitled to an injunction, but not to an account of profits or to compensation, except in respect of any user, by B. after he became aware of the prior ownership. Edelston v. Edelston, 1 De G. J. & S. 185; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 479; 7 L. T. 768; 11 W. R. 328.

At law the proper remedy is by an action for deceit, and proof of fraud on the part of the defendant is of the essence of that action; but the court will act on the principle of protecting property alone, and it is not therefore necessary for the party applying for the injunction to prove fraud, or that the credit of the plaintiff was injured by the sale of an inferior article. Ib.

Plaintiff must seek Remedy with Clean Hands.] —Where the owner of a trade mark applies for an injunction to restrain the defendant from injuring his property by making false representations to the public, it is essential that the plaintiff should not in his trade mark or in the business connected with it, be himself guilty of any false or misleading representation. Leather Cloth Co. v. American Leather Cloth Co., 4 De G. J. & S. 137; 3 N. R. 364; 33 L. J., Ch. 199; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 81; 9 L. T. 558; 12 W. R. 289. Affirmed in H. L. ante, col. 107.

It is not a rule either of morality or equity, that a person is not answerable for a falsehood in his trade mark, because it may be so gross and palpable as that no one is likely to be deceived by it. Ib.

On what Grounds Name Protected.]—The plaintiff in these cases has not any property in the particular title, but he has a right to prevent others from personating his business by using such a description as would lead customers to suppose they were trading with the plaintiff. Boulnois v. Peake, 13 Ch. D. 513, n.

Similiarity in Name of Company.]—Where one company assumed a name somewhat similar to the name of another company, but it did not appear that the first company was likely to suffer any injury thereby, a court of equity refused to grant an injunction, leaving the plaintiffs to bring their action. London and Provincial Law Assurance Society v. London and Provincial Joint-Stock Life Insurance Co., 11 Jur. 938.

There is nothing in the Companies Act, 1862, to affect the right of a company registered under a particular name to an injunction restraining another company, which, notwithstanding the prohibition of s. 20, against identity of names, has been registered under an identical or a similar name, from carrying on its business under that name, if it is proved that that name is calculated to deceive; the principles applicable to individuals trading under identical or similar names applying equally to companies. Merchant Banking Co. of London v. Merchant's Joint Stock Bank, 47 L. J., Ch. 828; 9 Ch. D. 560; 26 W. R. 847.

A limited company having once obtained a registered name has the same rights and limitations as to trading under that name as an individual trading in his own name. Ib.

The plaintiffs, the Guardian Fire and Life Assurance Company, were established in 1821, and carried on the business of fire and life insurance at 11, Lombard-street. A company called the Guardian Horse and Vehicle Insurance Association (Limited) was established in 1877, and carried on, at No. 31, Lombard-street, the business of insurance of horses and vehicles against accident until the year 1880, when the company transferred its business to the defendants, a new company incorporated in March, 1880, and called the Guardian and General Insurance Company (Limited). This new company, in addition to insuring horses and vehicles and persons against accident, proposed to engage in fire insurance business:—Held, in an action by the plaintiffs to restrain the defendants from carrying on their business so as to deceive, that the plaintiff's' and defendants' names were so similar as to lead to confusion, and that an injunction would have been granted to restrain the defendants from carrying on business under the name of the Guardian and General Insurance Company (Limited) had they not given an undertaking to change their name to the Guardian Horse, Vehicle and General Insurance Company (Limited). Guardian Fire and Life Assurance Co. v. Guardian and General Insurance Co., 50 L. J., Ch. 253; 43 L. T. 791.

The plaintiff was the proprietor of an old-established library business at the West-end of London. The defendants being the promoters of a projected company, having for a principal object the carrying on of a library business in another quarter of the West-end, proposed to adopt as the title of their undertaking the same trade name as that which the plaintiff had used for a considerable period, but with the addition of the word "Limited":—Held, that the defendants must be restrained from carrying on, in or near London, the business in question under the proposed title, or under any other title, only colourably differing from the name of the plaintiff's business, and also from advertising the intended commencement thereof under such title. Hoby v. Grosvenor Library Co. 28 W. R. 638.

User of Own Name with Another's.]—A perpetual injunction will be granted to restrain a trader from filling and sending out to the public articles of his own manufacture in bottles, casks, or other receptacles having indelibly impressed thereon the name of another trader, who manufactures an article of a like description, even although such trader places on such bottles, casks, or receptacles a label having his own name thereon. Rose v. Loftus, 47 L. J., Ch. 576; 38 L. T. 409.

User with Knowledge that another intends to use Name.]—A tradesman may use a name, although he is aware that a neighbouring tradesman intends to use that name. A bootmaker having a shop running up Bedford-street, with the front and entrance in the Strand, wrote up over his shop the words "Civil Service Boot Supply." The Civil Service Supply Association were at that time building a large store at the other end of Bedford-street, in which when finished, they opened a general shop, and they afterwards opened a boot and shoe shop in Tavistock-street, which was not far off. One of the customers of the association had gone to the shop of the bootmaker, mistaking it for that of the association. The association brought an action to restrain the bootmaker from using the words:—Held, that under the circumstances there was no intention on the part of the bootmaker to deceive, and that no rational person would have been deceived by the words so used; and action dismissed. Civil Service Supply Association v. Dean, 13 Ch. D. 512.

Name of Place.]—An injunction will be granted on an interlocutory motion to restrain the use or imitation of the name of a place, used as a trade mark, if the plaintiff proves primâ facie that such name in the market has come to mean his article obtained from such place. Radde v. Norman, 41 L. J., Ch. 525; L. R. 14 Eq. 348; 26 L. T. 788; 20 W. R. 766.

Equity against Printer supplying Imitative Labels.]—Where a manufacturer has the exclusive right to use a particular trade mark, which he has been in the habit of procuring to be printed upon paper labels and wrappers, which he pasted on and wrapped round his manufactures, he may obtain an injunction, upon interlocutory motion, against a printer who has made and printed, and is in the habit of selling, imitations of the plaintiff's labels to persons for the purpose of using them fraudulently, to pass off other goods as those of the plaintiff, although the printer himself makes no such use of them; so also, if the plaintiff alleges that persons bought the labels of the defendant for such a fraudulent purpose, and proves that the defendant was in the habit of selling them to anyone who asked for them; and the defendant denies collusion with anyone, and also denies the plaintiff's right to the exclusive use of the mark, and insists upon his own right to continue the printing and selling, the injunction will be granted, although the plaintiff does not allege or prove that the defendant sold them with a fraudulent purpose, and does not distinctly prove that any of the labels sold by defendant were in fact made use of to defraud the plaintiff. The ground of this equity is, that the defendant, by knowingly printing labels in imitation of the plaintiffs' trade mark, and selling them to anyone who asked for them, was supplying the means of committing, and was thus a party to frauds, which courts of equity would interfere to stop at their source. Farina v. Silverlock, 1 K. & J. 509; 24 L. J., Ch. 632. And see S. C., 1 K. & J. 650; 3 Eq. R. 883; 3 W. R. 352.

On appeal the lord chancellor dissolved the injunction on the ground that as the mark consisted of a label in a certain form, and it was shown that in very many instances labels the same as or similar to it might be sold for a legitimate purpose, the court, in the absence of any proof of actual fraud, would not restrain the printing and sale of such labels until the manufacturer, who alleged that they were used for a fraudulent purpose, had established his case by an action at law. S. C., 6 De G. M. & G. 214; 26 L. J., Ch. 11; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1008; 4 W. R. 731—L. C.

Importation and Exportation—Action against Carriers—Discovery.]—A firm of forwarding agents in London received from carriers abroad several boxes of cigars bearing forged brands, which were to be delivered to several persons in England. On application by the makers whose brand had been forged, the agents gave information as to the consignors, and offered either to send back the cigars or erase the brands:—Held, on a bill for injunction by the makers whose brands were forged, that the fact of the agents being merely carriers was no defence to the suit; but as they had given sufficient information, and offered to erase the brands, they were not to pay costs. Upmann v. Elkan, 41 L. J., Ch.

An action will lie against shipowners who have shipped goods bearing counterfeits of the plaintiff's trade marks for discovery of the names of the consignor from whom the goods were received. Orr v. Diaper, 46 L. J., Ch. 41; 4 Ch. D. 92; 35 L. T. 468; 25 W. R. 23.

—— Action by Foreigner—Restraining Deceitful User of Trade Mark in England for Exported Goods.]—The plaintiffs, who were a company formed in the United States for manufacturing edge tools which they exported to different countries, sought to restrain the defendant, a manufacturer in England, from the use of their trade mark:—Held, upon demurrer, that every alien friend was entitled to apply to the courts of this country for the restraint of a deceitful and fraudulent use of his trade mark practised in England. Collin's Co. v. Cohen, 3 K. & J. 423; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 929; 5 W. R. 676.

An alien may sue in this country to restrain the fraudulent appropriation of his trade mark, although the goods to which such trade mark applies are not usually sold by him in this country. Collin's Co. v. Reeves, 28 L. J., Ch. 56; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 865; 6 W. R. 717.

—— Restraining Exportation of Goods calculated to deceive.]—Where a trader has a right to a trade-mark on goods sold in a foreign market, an injunction will be granted to restrain the export of goods under another trade mark which may deceive the ultimate purchasers, although it would not deceive Englishmen or the dealers in the foreign market. Johnston v. Orr-Ewing, 51 L. J., Ch. 797; 7 App. Cas. 219; 46 L. T. 216; 30 W. R. 417—H. L. (E.)

Injunction against the use of trade-mark by defendant was made general, although the plaintiff had never used his trade mark except in the Indian market. Ib.

Power of Excluding Goods from particular Markets.]—Your lordships are not called upon to decide whether a ticket, which was a rightful and bonâ fide trade mark of a trader using it, could be excluded by injunction from particular markets (though unimpeachable everywhere else) merely because in those markets it might be liable to be called by a name which the mark of another trader had already acquired there. To that proposition I should not myself, as at present advised, be prepared to assent. Johnston v. Orr-Ewing, supra—Per Blackburn (Lord).

Registration for Entire Class—User for Part of Class—Exclusive Title for Entire Class.]—In 1879 the plaintiff registered as his trade mark for the whole of class 45: i.e. "tobacco whether manufactured or unmanufactured," a device consisting of (inter alia) a shield with three crowns, and the word "Mixture," underneath; since registration the plaintiff used this trade mark solely on packages containing cut tobacco; subsequently the plaintiff used the shield and three crowns without the word "Mixture," a trade term not appropriate to cigars, or boxes of cigars. The defendants, cigar manufacturers, labelled their boxes with a device consisting of a shield and three crowns. On an application for an injunction to restrain this infringement:—Held, that registration of a trade-mark for an entire class followed by user on one description of goods only, did not give the exclusive right to the use of such trade mark for all descriptions of goods in that class, and that under the circumstances the plaintiff was not entitled to an injunction. Edwards v. Dennis (30 Ch. D. 454) discussed and applied. Hargreave v. Freeman, 61 L. J., Ch. 23; [1891] 3 Ch. 39; 65 L. T. 487.

Non-registration—Label.]—In July, 1885, M., of Dizy, in France, commenced the consignment to the plaintiff in London of champagne under the label "Le Court et Cie., Reims," which had then recently been registered in France as his trade mark, and to which in December, 1886, his right was established in proceedings against X. before the French tribunal. Further consignments were made to the plaintiff down to July, 1886, and advertised and sold by him as Le Court et Cie.'s champagne. In March, 1886, the defendant, trading under the name of Short & Co., began to sell (chiefly at a wine bar across the counter) champagne which was sent to him from France by X. as Le Court et Cie.'s champagne; and it appeared that in 1882 he had proposed to register in France a label with the name Le Court et Cie. as corresponding to his own trade name of Short & Co., but from difficulties in obtaining registration abandoned the idea. Upon motion by the plaintiff to restrain the use of the name and brand by the defendant:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to an injunction against the defendant; because, the label being capable of registration in this country and not having been registered, the plaintiff was precluded by s. 77 of the Trade Marks Act, 1883, from instituting proceedings to restrain infringement of a trade-mark. Goodfellow v. Prince, 56 L. J., Ch. 545; 35 Ch. D. 9; 56 L. T. 617; 35 W. R. 488—C. A.

Compromise of Prosecution for User.]—A prosecution instituted by the defendants against the plaintiff under the Merchandise Marks Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 88), was by agreement compromised, and the plaintiff gave the defendants a written apology, requesting them not further to continue proceedings against him, and authorising them to make such use of the apology as they might think necessary. Upon demurrer to a bill to restrain the excessive publication of this apology:—Held, that the court had no jurisdiction to interfere. Fisher v. Apollinaris Co., 44 L. J., Ch. 500; L. R. 10 Ch. 297; 32 L. T. 628; 23 W. R. 460.

—— Subsequent Sale of Goods Previously Purchased.]—J. sold, under a trade mark, a medicine known as J.'s ointment. O., without authority, sold an ointment as J.'s ointment, under an imitation of J.'s label. J. having threatened proceedings against O., an agreement was made, by which, after reciting that O. alleged that his invasion of the rights of J. was inadvertent, and that he had discontinued the same, and agreed not again to infringe on such rights, all claims in respect of the invasion, not only with respect to O., but to include all parties who may have purchased the ointment from him, shall be settled and discharged by the payment of 1,000*l.*, the receipt of which was acknowledged; this agreement also contained an undertaking to execute a formal release of all claims and demands in respect of the infringement. J. having commenced suits against persons who had purchased the ointment from O. previously to the agreement, but retailed it afterwards, O. filed a petition specifically to enforce the agreement, and to restrain J. from proceeding in the suits against the purchasers from O. :—Held, that the agreement did not authorise any sale, after the date of it, of ointment previously purchased from O. Oldham v. James, 14 Ir. Ch. R. 81—C. A.

Held, secondly, that, even if the terms of the agreement required the construction that J. was to permit ointment previously purchased from O. to be sold under the imitated mark, the court would not specifically enforce such an agreement, as it would be a fraud on the public. Ib.

ii. Delay and Acquiescence. Effect of.

Effect of Delay.]—In a suit to restrain the user of names in trade in a fraudulent manner, the right to an interlocutory injunction is lost by a delay in filing the bill of nine or ten months since the discovery of the user. Isaacson v. Thompson, 41 L. J., Ch. 101.

No trader has a right to use a trade mark so nearly resembling that of another trader as to be calculated to mislead incautious purchasers. The use of such a trade mark may be restrained by injunction, although no purchaser has actually been misled; for the very life of a trade mark depends upon the promptitude with which it is vindicated. Johnston v. Orr-Ewing, 51 L. J., Ch. 797; 7 App. Cas. 219; 46 L. T. 216; 30 W. R. 417—H. L. (E.)

The court will not refuse to grant an injunction to restrain the infringement of a trade mark, on the mere ground that a great number of years have elapsed since it was first infringed by the defendant. But when many years have elapsed before the plaintiff takes steps to restrain the infringement, the court will require clearer proof than it would otherwise have done that the trade mark was adopted by the defendant originally with fraudulent intent, and will require the plaintiff to prove that he has been actually injured by the infringement. Rodgers v. Rodgers, 31 L. T. 285; 22 W. R. 887—L.JJ.

Infringement took place early in 1869. The bill was filed on the 24th November :—Held, that there was no laches, inasmuch as the plaintiffs must wait until sufficient proof of the injury they had received was collected. Lee v. Haley, 39 L. J., Ch. 284; L. R. 5 Ch. 155; 22 L. T. 251; 18 W. R. 242.

—— "Estcourt's Hop Supplement."]—The plaintiff, who was a manufacturer of an article used as a substitute for hops called "Estcourt's Hop Supplement," employed his son C. as his agent, who thereupon undertook not to disclose the secret of the compound, or at any time be connected with the sale of any article which could be used as a substitute for hops. During the time of his agency C. discovered the secret of the manufacture. He shortly afterwards terminated his agency, and began to sell a practically similar compound, which he called "Hop Essence." A bill was filed against him by the plaintiff to restrain him from continuing the sale, when he submitted and signed an agreement binding himself to observe the former agreement and do the plaintiff no injury in his trade. Subsequently C. associated himself with Taylor, and circulars were issued advertising the sale of "Estcourt's Hop Essence; sole proprietor, James Taylor." A company was formed for the purpose of selling the "Hop Essence" under the name of "Estcourt's Hop Essence." Although the plaintiff ascertained in January, 1874, that a circular had been issued by Taylor, headed "Estcourt's Hop Essence Company," he did not apply to the court until the following August :—Held, that the plaintiff was precluded by delay from any right to relief. Estcourt v. Estcourt Hop Essence Co., 44 L. J., Ch. 223; L. R. 10 Ch. 276; 32 L. T. 80; 23 W. R. 313.

—— Of Acquiescence.]—A plaintiff laid by for two years before filing a bill for an injunction, having seen labels of the defendant exhibited publicly, which he now complained of as being colourable imitations of his labels :—Held, that such laches disentitled him to relief. Beard v. Turner, 13 L. T. 746.

In 1847 Joseph R. & Sons obtained an injunction to restrain N. and William R. from using the trade mark "J. R. & Sons." Soon afterwards W. R. entered into partnership with his father, John R., and with a brother, and the three used the trade mark "J. R. & Sons," with a colourable addition. Upon the plaintiffs moving, in 1853, to commit W. R., and denying notice of the breach of the injunction before July, 1852 :—Held, that they were entitled to the order, and that acquiescence, to constitute a defence to such a motion, must amount to a licence to use the mark :—Held, also that the plaintiffs might move to commit W. R. without bringing his partners before the court. Rodgers v. Nowill, 3 De G. M. & G. 614; 22 L. J., Ch. 404; 17 Jur. 109, 171; 1 W. R. 122, 205, 216.

—— Knowledge Must be Proved.]—In order to prove acquiescence by a firm in the piratical use of their trade mark, knowledge of such use must be proved; and that is not accomplished by the proof of publication of advertisements, which would have been an invasion of the rights of the firm if these advertisements have been issued not steadily or uniformly, but interchangeably with other advertisements in some respects similar, but not infringing the rights of the firm. Kinahan v. Bolton, 15 Ir. Ch. R. 75.

iii. Misrepresentation by Plaintiff. Effect of.

Remedy Refused in First Instance.]—If a plaintiff, coming for an injunction in a trade mark case, appears to have been guilty of misrepresentations to the public, a court of equity will not interfere in the first instance. Perry v. Truefitt, 6 Beav. 66.

Where the plaintiff had used a considerable degree of misrepresentation in statements made to the public respecting the mode of procuring and making up a new description of tea, called "Howqua's mixture," an injunction to restrain the defendant from selling tea under the name employed by the plaintiff, and in a particular kind of package, which the plaintiff had introduced, was refused, until the plaintiff had established his title in a court of common law. Pidding v. How, 8 Sim. 477; 6 L. J., Ch. 345.

Plaintiffs' Conduct barring Remedy—Alleged Custom in Tobacco Trade—"Dressing up" Goods.]—The plaintiffs, who were manufacturers of and dealers in cigars in England, imported from Germany cigars made of Havannah tobacco. There was no direct evidence as to the place where they were manufactured, but the court found as a fact that they were also manufactured in Germany. Plaintiffs sold these cigars in England in boxes on which was a label containing their trade mark (registered under the Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875), and consisted of the words "La Pureza," and a pictorial representation of an Indian woman in a state of semi-nudity holding up a bundle of cigars, two winged boys each holding a shield, and a background representing a portion of some tropical country. On one shield was depicted the arms of Spain, and on the other those of Havannah. In the trade mark as registered the shields were blank. A smaller label contained what was apparently the lithographed signature of "Ramon Romnedo." On each box were branded the words "La Pureza" and "Habana." It was proved that "La Pureza" was an old brand, long disused, of Havannah cigars, and that there was no known existing person of the name of "Ramon Romnedo." The court held, that, it having been a general custom in the tobacco trade for over twenty-five years to mark cigar-boxes with the word "Habana," though the cigars had not been imported from Havannah, such a marking did not disentitle the owner of a trade mark for cigars from seeking to prevent infringement; and that, the defendants having used similar marks on their cigar-boxes, the plaintiffs were entitled to an injunction and an account:—Held, on appeal, that, as the trade mark and other marks on the plaintiffs' boxes together amounted to a "dressing-up" of the plaintiffs' cigars, and a misrepresentation that they were cigars manufactured in the Havannah, the action must be dismissed, but without costs, the defendants being entitled only to the costs of the appeal. Newman v. Pinto, 57 L. T. 31—C. A.

Word ceasing to be "Special and Distinctive."]—In 1876 A. registered as his trade mark the word "Eton," which had been used since 1869, and become known in the trade as denoting cigarettes of his manufacture. He had also been in the habit of selling, and supplying for the purposes of sale, "Eton" cigarettes in boxes so labelled (in conformity with an alleged custom in the trade) as to imply that such cigarettes were manufactured at St. Petersburg by a Russian firm:—Held, that A., by so acting in connection with the word "Eton" as to suggest to persons not in the trade that the cigarettes were not of his making, had destroyed the value of the word as "special and distinctive" within the Trade Marks Act, 1875, s. 10, and accordingly that at the time of registration it had ceased to be his special and distinctive mark capable of registration. And as five years on the register does not (on the authorities) give an indefeasible title to a mark which, from not properly constituting a trade mark within the meaning of the act, ought not to have been registered, A.'s action to restrain an infringement of the mark by B. was dismissed, and rectification of the register by removing the mark on B.'s application allowed. Wood's Trade Mark, In re, Wood v. Lambert, 55 L. J., Ch. 377; 32 Ch. D. 247; 54 L. T. 314—C. A.

Words "Trade Mark" attached to unregistered Mark—Use of registered Mark not belonging to Plaintiff.]—A firm of retail dealers, who carried on business in several different branches of trade, registered a trade mark for wearing-apparel. They subsequently employed the same mark, with the words "Trade Mark" attached thereto, upon the labels used in their tobacco department. No such mark had in fact been registered by them in respect of tobacco. Upon the same labels the firm used a device which had been registered by R. in respect of tobacco, and had been assigned by him to W., an employé of the firm. W., having left the employment of the firm, granted a licence to G. to use his trade marks, and G. sold tobacco with a label similar to that of the firm. The firm commenced proceedings against G. to restrain him from passing off his goods as and for the goods of the firm. Upon motion for an interim injunction:—Held, that the use of the words "Trade Mark" on goods, attached to a device, amounted to a representation to the public that that device was a registered trade mark; that there was also a representation that the device registered by R. was the registered trade mark of the plaintiffs; and that the plaintiffs, having been guilty of misrepresentation to the public, were not entitled to relief. Lewis's v. Goodbody, 67 L. T. 194.

Conduct not Barring Remedy—Misrepresentation after Action brought.]—It was alleged by the defendant that the plaintiff was disentitled to relief, because at the time of the trial he was using wrappers which contained a misrepresentation. The plaintiff did not begin to use those wrappers until after the action had been brought:—Held, that there was in fact no misrepresentation in the wrappers in question, but that, even if there had been, a misrepresentation not made till after the commencement of the action would not have affected the plaintiff's title to relief. Siegert v. Findlater, 47 L. J., Ch. 233; 7 Ch. D. 801; 38 L. T. 349; 26 W. R. 459.

—— Word "Patent" used of Unpatented Article.]—The word "Patent" having come to be applied in common language to various manufactured articles as descriptive of a particular quality, without any reference to letters patent, the use of the words "patent thread" as part of the trade mark on an unpatented article, will not prevent a court of equity from protecting such trade mark. Marshall v. Ross, 39 L. J., Ch. 225; L. R. 8 Eq. 651; 21 L. T. 260; 17 W. R. 1086.

—— Misrepresentation not forming part of Trade Mark.]—Since a misrepresentation, not forming a part of the trade mark itself, although used in connection with the trade mark, and with the article to which the trade mark applies, would be no answer to an action of a party to establish his title at law, neither will such a misrepresentation disentitle him to a relief in equity. Ford, a shirt manufacturer, gave the name Eureka to a particular shape of shirt invented by him, and stamped all such shirts with the words "Ford's Eureka Shirts," and with a statement that such words were his trade mark. He advertised the shirts, falsely calling himself the patentee of them, and he falsely described himself on his billheads, &c., as patentee of the shirts. Shirts of the particular shape came to be commonly known in the trade as Eureka. Certain wholesale shirt manufacturers made shirts of the same shape, and stamped them in the same part of the shirts as "Eureka Shirts":—Held, that Ford was entitled to an injunction to restrain the wholesale manufacturers from using the word "Eureka" as applied to shirts not of Ford's manufacture, except that they were to be at liberty to advertise their shirts as "Eureka" in their trade lists. But having regard to his misrepresentations, the account against them was confined to the time from the filing the bill. Ford v. Foster, 41 L. J., Ch. 682; L. R. 7 Ch. 611; 27 L. T. 219; 20 W. R. 818.

b. Practice.

i. Generally.

Action at Common Law for Infringement.]—If A., a manufacturer, uses the mark of B. for the purpose of giving to articles manufactured by A. the appearance of being of the manufacture of B., B. may maintain an action against A., although A.'s articles are not inferior in quality to B.'s, and although it is not shown that B. has sustained actual damage. Blofeld v. Payne, 1 N. & M. 353; 4 B. & Ad. 410; 2 L. J., K. B. 68.

Where a plaintiff marked his goods, "Sykes' Patent," to show that they were his own manufacture, and the defendant copied the mark on his goods to show that they were the plaintiff's manufacture, and sold them, so marked, as and for his manufacture:—Held, that an action would lie for the injury, though neither party had a valid patent, and both were named "Sykes." Sykes v. Sykes, 5 D. & R. 292; 3 B. & C. 541; 3 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 46; 27 R. R. 420.

An action may be maintained by a manufacturer against another manufacturer who marks his goods with the known and accustomed mark of the plaintiff, where the mark used by the defendant resembles the plaintiff's mark so closely as to be calculated to deceive, and as to induce persons to believe the defendant's goods to be of the plaintiff's manufacture, and the defendant uses such mark with intent to deceive and sells the goods so marked as and for goods of the plaintiff's manufacture, and proof of special damage is not necessary. Rodgers v. Nowill, 5 C. B. 109; 17 L. J., C. P. 52; 11 Jur. 1039.

In such cases it is enough, at least after verdict, to allege generally that by means of the premises the plaintiff was deprived of the sale of divers large quantities of goods, and lost the profits that would otherwise have accrued to him therefrom. Ib.

A declaration alleged that the plaintiffs prepared, vended and sold for profit, medicines called "Morison's Universal Medicines," which they sold in boxes wrapped up in paper, having those words printed thereon; that the defendant, intending to injure the plaintiffs in the sale of the medicines, and to deprive them of profits, deceitfully and fraudulently prepared and made medicines in imitation of the medicines so prepared by the plaintiffs, and wrapped up the same in paper, having "Morison's Universal Medicines" printed thereon, in order to denote that such medicine was the genuine medicine prepared, vended and sold by the plaintiffs; and that the defendant deceitfully and fraudulently vended and sold for his own lucre and gain the last-mentioned boxes of the articles, represented and termed by him to be medicine, by the name and description of "Morison's Universal Medicines," which had been prepared, vended and sold by the plaintiffs; whereas, in truth, the plaintiffs had never been the preparers, venders or sellers thereof:—Held, that the declaration disclosed a good cause of action. Morison v. Salmon, 2 Scott (N.R.) 449; 2 Man. & G. 385; 10 L. J., C. P. 91.

—— Imitation—Jury to say if calculated to Mislead.]—Action for wrongfully, knowingly and fraudulently stamping bars of iron, made by the defendants, with a stamp resembling one used by the plaintiff, which the defendants knew and intended to be in imitation of the plaintiff's, and which was used by the defendants in order to denote that their iron was made by the plaintiff; and for knowingly selling the iron so marked as and for the plaintiff's iron. A correspondence between the parties was given in evidence, in which the plaintiff charged the defendants with using the mark, as being a fraud upon him. The defendants, in answer, asserted that they had used the mark for many years continuously. This was not so in fact; but it was shown that the mark had been adopted by them in the execution of orders received from foreign correspondents:—Held, that it was properly left to the jury to say, first, whether the defendants' mark bore such a close resemblance to the plaintiff's as was calculated to deceive the unwary and injure the sale of the plaintiff's goods; and secondly, whether the defendants used the mark with the intention of supplanting the plaintiff, or whether it was done in the ordinary course of business in execution of orders. Crawshay v. Thompson, 4 Man. & G. 357; 5 Scott (N.R.) 562; 11 L. J., C. P. 301.

—— Conflict of Evidence as to, on Interlocutory Application.]—The plaintiffs registered a trade mark for worsted goods described as "a white selvage on each side of the piece having a red and white mottled thread interwoven the full length of the selvage between the edge of the piece and the edge of the selvage," and deposited a specimen at the patent office museum. The specimen so deposited was undyed, and the selvage was white, the warp being white cotton and the woof white mohair, and nearly in the middle of the selvage was a compound warp thread composed of a thread of white cotton and a thread of Turkey red cotton twisted together. When the goods were dyed black the cotton threads took the dye imperfectly, so that the warp threads in the selvage became grey, while the woof became black, so as to make the selvage dark grey, with a dark red mottled line running along it. The defendants sold black mohair goods with a dark grey selvage of nearly the same shade as that of the plaintiffs, with a twisted thread running along its inner edge, which thread was originally white, red, and yellow, but in the course of dyeing the white became dark grey, and the yellow a dark olive, which could hardly be distinguished. The plaintiffs sought to restrain the sale of these goods as an infringement, and moved for an injunction. There was evidence that the selvage, though not actually white, was what was known in the trade as a white selvage:—Held, by Jessel, M.R., that as the plaintiffs' selvage was not white, and the mottled thread of the defendants was different, and in a different position from that of the plaintiffs, there was no infringement, and that an injunction must be refused. But held by the court of appeal that the principles according to which the court acts in preventing a man from passing off his goods as those of another are not altered by the Trade Marks Registration Act, and that the question could not be disposed of by simple inspection of the patterns without considering whether the selvage was not, according to the understanding of the trade, a white selvage, and if it was, then whether the differences in quality and position of the defendants' mottled thread were sufficient to distinguish the defendants' goods from those of the plaintiffs, so as to prevent purchasers from being misled, and that as there was a conflict of evidence on these points the motion must stand over till the trial, the defendants undertaking to keep an account. Mitchell v. Henry, 15 Ch. D. 181; 43 L. T. 186—C. A.

Jurisdiction of Court of Chancery.] — The jurisdiction of the court of chancery in the protection given to trade marks rests upon property, and the court interferes by injunction, because that is the only mode by which property of this description can be effectually protected. Leather Cloth Co. v. American Leather Cloth Co., 3 N. R. 264; 4 De G. J. & S. 137; 33 L. J., Ch. 199; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 81; 9 L. T. 558; 12 W. R. 289—Per Westbury, C. Affirmed in H. L., ante, col. 107.

The jurisdiction of the court of chancery, in the protection of trade marks, rests upon property, and fraud in the defendant is not necessary for the exercise of the jurisdiction. Hall v. Barrows, 4 De G. J. & S. 150; 3 N. R. 259; 33 L. J., Ch. 204; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 55; 9 L. T. 561; 12 W. R. 322.

Where a name, once affixed to a manufactured article, continues to be used after the death of the manufacturer, the name in time becomes a mere trade mark or sign of quality, and ceases to denote, or to be current as indicating, that any particular person was the maker, and would, therefore, be protected. Ib.

Where the court is of opinion that the use of a particular mark is likely to deceive, it will not require evidence of actual deception. Braham v. Bustard, 1 H. & M. 447; 2 N. R. 572; 9 L. T. 199; 11 W. R. 1061; S. P., Braham v. Beachim, ante, cols. 77—8.

At law the proper remedy is by an action for deceit, and proof of fraud on the part of the defendant is of the essence of that action; but the court will act on the principle of protecting property alone, and it is not therefore necessary for obtaining the injunction to prove fraud, or that the credit of the plaintiff was injured by the sale of an inferior article. Edelston v. Edelston, 1 De G. J. & S. 185; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 479; 7 L. T. 768; 11 W. R. 328.

An injury by loss of custom is sufficient to support a title to relief, and it is not necessary that proof should be given of persons having been actually deceived, in having bought goods with the defendants' mark, under the belief that they were of the manufacture of the plaintiff. Ib.

An owner of a trade mark will not be deprived of remedy in equity, even if it is shown that all who bought goods bearing the mark from the defendant were well aware that the goods were not of the plaintiff's manufacture. Ib.

It is enough if the goods were supplied by the defendant for the purpose of being sold again in the market, nor is it necessary to show that any person was deceived, if the resemblance of the articles is such as would be likely to cause one mark to be mistaken for the other. Ib.

In granting injunctions to prevent the infringement of trade marks, the court exercises its jurisdiction in aid of courts of law, i.e. where an action could be maintained in a court of law. But it does not exercise an independent jurisdiction. The cases on this subject reviewed and considered. Foot v. Lea, 13 Ir. Eq. R. 484.

An injunction to restrain a defendant from using the particular style or title adopted by the plaintiff will not be granted if the court entertains the slightest doubt of the plaintiff's right to sustain his title at law. Purser v. Brain, 17 L. J., Ch. 141.

The court refused to interfere by injunction, on the application of the plaintiff, the owner of a manufactory, to restrain the occupiers of the original manufactory from using a particular mark, but gave him liberty to bring an action at law. Mottley v. Downman, 3 Myl. & Cr. 1; 6 L. J., Ch. 308.

In case of claims to the exclusive right to particular marks on manufactures, the court exercises a jurisdiction over a legal right, and therefore will not interfere by injunction in the first instance, except in strong cases, and it generally does so by putting the parties on the terms of asserting their legal right by action at law. Ib.

Registration—Not a Condition precedent to Action.]—A Dutch company moved to restrain a commission agent from infringing its trade mark, and from shipping goods abroad with its trade mark stamped on them. The writ in the action was issued after the time for registration of trade marks limited by the Trade Marks Registration Amendment Act, 1876, had expired, and before the Trade Marks Registration Extension Act, 1877, had come into force. The company had not before the motion for injunction registered its trade mark:—Held, that registration was not a condition precedent to the company's right to an injunction. Twentsche Stoom Bleekery Goor v. Ellinger, 26 W. R. 70.

—— For one Class—User for another Class.] —The owner of a trade mark can only sue in respect of an infringement of that trade mark in connection with the particular goods or classes of goods for which his trade mark is registered. Hart v. Colley, 59 L. J., Ch. 355; 44 Ch. D. 193; 62 L. T. 623; 38 W. R. 440.

Counterfeit of Brand on Wine—Action against Wharfingers for Delivery—Restrained by Injunction.]—The plaintiffs, who were wharfingers, warehoused a quantity of wine branded in imitation of the trade mark of the Veuve Clicquot champagne. The dock warrants passed into the possession of the defendant, who had advanced money upon them. The plaintiffs were afterwards informed that the brand was counterfeit, and that an injunction was about to be applied for, to restrain them from parting with the wine. After the injunction had been granted, but before they had received notice of it, the defendant produced the warrants and demanded the wine on payment of the plaintiffs' charges. The plaintiffs refused to give it up. The defendant sued them at law, and the plaintiffs filed a bill to restrain him from prose-

ii. Parties.

Who must be joined.] — A plaintiff and another person, who carried on distinct trades at different places of business, had derived, from a common predecessor in their respective businesses, the right to use the name of Dent as a trade mark. The defendant having infringed this right:—Held, that the plaintiff, without averring special damage, might sue alone for an injunction, and for the delivery up of the articles so marked to have the name erased. Dent v. Turpin, 2 J. & H. 139; 30 L. J., Ch. 495; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 673; 4 L. T. 637; 9 W. R. 548.

Held, also, that he might sue alone for an account of profits made by the defendant out of articles so marked, and for payment to the plaintiff of such part of such profits as he should be entitled to. Ib.

Two persons, sons of a father, who had originated a manufacture of tobacco pipes, and designated them as "Southorn's Brosely pipes," on the death of their father, manufactured at Brosely, but at separate establishments, and for their separate benefit, pipes of a like character; one of the brothers instituted a suit to restrain the use of this trade mark, the other declining to join in such suit:—Held, that the one brother might alone file a bill for an injunction and account. Southorn v. Reynolds, 12 L. T. 575.

Persons having no Interest.]—A., the inventor of a medicine, employed B., a foreigner residing abroad, to manufacture it for him there, and sold it in England for his own sole profit; a label and seal, denoting that the medicine was manufactured by B., and sold by A., were affixed to each of the bottles in which it was sold. The defendants imitated the labels and seals; demurrer allowed to a bill by A. and B. to restrain the imitation, and for an account of the sales of the spurious labels and seals, A. having no interest. Delondre v. Shaw, 2 Sim. 237.

—— Agents—Amendment.]—In 1883 H. & Co. agreed to consign their wine for sale in the United Kingdom or its colonies exclusively to the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs brought an action to restrain the defendants, London wine merchants, from selling wine under a name in colourable imitation of H. & Co.'s trade mark. The defendants raised the point of law that the plaintiffs were not capable of suing as they were not themselves proprietors of the trade mark:—Held, that the plaintiffs had no right to bring this action; they had no interest in the trade marks, and had no right to restrain a fraudulent use of them. Leave given to amend the action by making the present owners of the trade mark plaintiffs. Richards v. Butcher, 62 L. T. 867.

iii. Evidence and Discovery.

Evidence—Of Fraud.]—Where a trader has innocently adopted a trade mark which is calculated to deceive by its similarity to another person's trade mark, his continuing to use it after complaint has been made is strong evidence of fraud. Orr-Ewing v. Johnston, ante, col. 127.

—— Of Deception.]—In a trade mark case, the fact that one person has been deceived is not conclusive as to the misrepresentation. Civil Service Supply Association v. Dean, 13 Ch. D. 512.

In suits to restrain the fraudulent use of a trader's name, or of a trade mark, it is not necessary to give proof of actual deception; it is enough if the acts of the defendant are calculated to deceive. Hookham v. Pottage, 26 L. T. 755; 20 W. R. 720. Affirmed, L. R. 8 Ch. 91; 27 L. T. 595; 21 W. R. 47.

The court does not interfere to prevent the infringement of a trade mark, unless, in the first place, it has evidence that the public has been actually deceived, or is from inspection satisfied that there is either an intention to deceive or a probability of deception. Cope v. Evans, L. R. 18 Eq. 138; 30 L. T. 292; 22 W. R. 450.

—— Of Skilled Witnesses.]— Evidence of skilled witnesses, that in their opinion the public is likely to be deceived by the similarity of two trade marks, is not of itself sufficient evidence of infringement. Ib.

Discovery.]—In a suit to restrain the infringement of trade marks, the defendants refused to disclose the names of their customers, the places to which they had consigned their goods, and the prices which had been paid for them. They also, while producing their books, which confessedly showed orders for goods bearing some of the trade marks claimed by the plaintiffs, sealed up such portions of entries therein as they swore contained orders for the impression of devices other than those claimed by the plaintiffs:—Held, that the defendants need not disclose the names of their customers or the prices of the goods, as such disclosure could not be material to the plaintiffs, and might injure the defendants in their business, but that they must make the rest of the disclosure which they objected to, and that where one of a line of trade marks had been disclosed in the order-book, the whole line must be disclosed. Carver v. Pinto Leite, 41 L. J., Ch. 92; L. R. 7 Ch. 90; 25 L. T. 722; 20 W. R. 134.

Where a decree has been made directing the defendant to account for all goods sold by him with a stamp thereon, he is compellable to disclose the names of all persons to whom he has sold any such goods; and if he be unable to give such information precisely, he may then (but not otherwise) be required to disclose the names of all persons to whom he has sold any goods which he will not swear positively were unstamped. Leather Cloth Co. v. Hirschfeld, 1 H. & M. 295; 1 N. R. 551; 11 W. R. 933.

iv. Account of Profits.

Scienter.]—If A. has acquired property in a trade mark, which is afterwards adopted and used by B., in ignorance of A.'s right, A. is entitled to an injunction, but not to an account of profits or to compensation, except in respect of any user by B. after he became aware of the prior ownership. Edelston v. Edelston, 1 De G.

J. & S. 185; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 479; 7 L. T. 768; 11 W. R. 328.

Where a defendant is ordered to account for the profits made by him through a wrongful use of the plaintiff's trade mark, he cannot be charged with bad debts as profits; but on the other hand he cannot charge the plaintiff with the costs of manufacturing the goods in respect of which the bad debts were incurred. S. C., 10 L. T. 780; 12 W. R. 1026.

A defendant is liable, in equity, to account for the profits made by the user of a plaintiff's trade mark, though, at the time of the user, he may have been ignorant of the rights and of the existence of the plaintiff, and notwithstanding that, to entitle him to recover damages at law, it may be necessary to prove a scienter. Cartier v. Carlile, 31 Beav. 292.

A person innocently selling goods bearing the spurious trade mark of another person is not, in equity, liable to account for the profits made thereby, but the owner of the trade mark is entitled to an injunction. Moet v. Couston, 33 Beav. 578; 4 N. R. 86; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1012; 10 L. T. 395.

Effect of Failure to Prove Damage.]—The plaintiffs had obtained a decree restraining the defendants from the use of a trade mark in sales of cloth, and directing an inquiry whether the plaintiffs had sustained any and what damage. The plaintiffs did not prove any direct damage, but, in the absence of evidence to what extent the defendants had used the trade marks, they claimed damages equal to the profits made by the defendants on all their sales of cloth:—Held, that they had failed to prove any damage. Leather Cloth Co. v. Hirschfeld, 13 L. T. 427; 14 W. R. 78. And see 1 H. & M. 295; 1 N. R. 551.

—— Of Misrepresentations by Plaintiff.]—Ford, a shirt manufacturer, gave the name Eureka to a particular shape of shirt invented by him, and stamped all such shirts with the words "Ford's Eureka Shirts," and with a statement that such words were his trade mark. He advertised the shirts, falsely calling himself the patentee of them, and he falsely described himself on his bill-heads, &c., as patentee of the shirts. Shirts of the particular shape came to be commonly known in the trade as Eureka. Certain wholesale shirt manufacturers made shirts of the same shape, and stamped them in the same part of the shirts as "Eureka Shirts":—Held, that Ford was entitled to an injunction to restrain the wholesale manufacturers from using the word "Eureka" as applied to shirts not of Ford's manufacture, except that they were to be at liberty to advertise their shirts as "Eureka" in their trade lists. But having regard to his misrepresentations, the account against them was confined to the time from the filing the bill. Ford v. Foster, 41 L. J., Ch. 682; L. R. 7 Ch. 611; 27 L. T. 219; 20 W. R. 311, 818.

—— Of Delay.]—Injunction granted to restrain the use of the plaintiff's trade mark by the defendant, though the scienter was not proved, but an account of profits refused on the ground of delay by the plaintiffs in commencing the suit. Harrison v. Taylor, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 408; 12 L. T. 339.

—— Of Offer of Compromise.]—W.'s manager, without the personal knowledge of W., affixed tickets with T.'s name printed thereon to certain goods of inferior quality to T.'s and made by another manufacturer. On T.'s complaining of this, W. offered to give an undertaking that he would not use such tickets again, and to pay a certain sum, but declined to make a public admission that he had used the tickets in order to defraud T.:—Held, that, notwithstanding W.'s offer, T. was entitled to an injunction with costs, and also to an inquiry as to damages at his own risk. Tonge v. Ward, 21 L. T. 480.

v. Costs.

When given against Defendant.]—A defendant whom the court held, on the chief point in issue, in a suit for infringement of a trade mark, to have been guilty of a fraudulent misrepresentation, was, though successful on another point, ordered to pay the whole costs. Wheeler & Wilson Manufacturing Co. v. Shakespear, 39 L. J., Ch. 36.

The defendant, in a trade mark suit, insisting on an adverse right, after being made aware that the plaintiff had been defrauded through his agency, ordered to pay the costs of all the proceedings, both at law and in equity. Farina v. Silverlock, 4 K. & J. 650. And see Tonge v. Ward, supra.

The defendant innocently used the plaintiff's trade marks, and on being served with the bill, he removed the labels, and gave an undertaking not to sell any more, but refused to pay the costs. No application was made to the defendant before suit, and he said he would have desisted if applied to. At the hearing, the account of profits, which were very trifling, was waived, but a perpetual injunction was granted:—Held, that the defendant must pay the whole costs of suit. Burgess v. Hill, 26 Beav. 244; 28 L. J., Ch. 356; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 233; 7 W. R. 158. S. P., Burgess v. Hateley, 26 Beav. 249.

—— Innocent Consignee.]—The defendant, who was a china manufacturer, purchased abroad for his own private use a large number of cigars which were consigned to him at the docks here in cases bearing a spurious brand, purporting to be that of the plaintiffs, who were cigar manufacturers. The defendant was not aware that the brand was spurious, nor, except from seeing it on the invoice, that any such brand was in use. Immediately upon the plaintiffs issuing their writ and serving the defendant with notice of motion for an injunction to restrain him from selling the cigars, the defendant stated that he had no intention of selling the cigars, and offered all the relief asked for by the writ, and afterwards at the motion agreed to an undertaking in the terms of the writ, the question of costs being reserved:—Held, that the defendant must pay all the costs of the action. Upmann v. Forester, 52 L. J., Ch. 946; 24 Ch. D. 231; 49 L. T. 122; 32 W. R. 28; 47 J. P. 807.

—— Innocent Purchaser.] — Defendants bought from E., at a cost of 17*s.* 6*d.*, a box of 500 cigarettes bearing a label which was a very close imitation of the registered trade mark used by the plaintiffs upon the boxes in which they sold the cigarettes made by them. The defendants bought the cigarettes under the belief that they were made by the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs served the defendants with a writ and notice of motion for an injunction to restrain them from infringing their trade mark or selling the cigarettes. The defendants at once returned to E. the greater part of the cigarettes, and, by their affidavit, submitted to abide by any order the court should make, but contended that they ought not to be made to pay the costs:—Held, that there ought to be no order as to costs. Upmann v. Forester (supra) discussed. American Tobacco Co. v. Guest, 61 L. J., Ch. 242; [1892] 1 Ch. 630; 66 L. T. 257; 40 W. R. 364.

A person having in his hands or under his control goods bearing a forged trade mark, is bound, upon the fact being brought to his knowledge, at once to submit to do whatever he might be compelled to do upon a bill filed; otherwise, however innocently the goods may have come to him, he will be liable for the costs of a suit instituted by the person whose right is infringed for the purpose of obtaining relief. Upmann v. Elkan, 40 L. J., Ch. 475; L. R. 12 Eq. 140; 24 L. T. 896; 19 W. R. 867.

The plaintiffs, in a suit to restrain infringement of their trade mark, are entitled to have a spurious imitation of their mark removed from goods, and to a lien on the goods for costs, provided that the owners of the goods, who were not before the court, should not see fit to intervene. Ib.

But on appeal, held that he was not bound to pay costs, being entirely innocent of the fraud. S. C., 20 W. R. 131.

—— Infant Defendant.]—An infant who had sold spurious articles, representing them to have been manufactured by the plaintiff, ordered to pay the costs of suit for an injunction. Chubb v. Griffiths, 35 Beav. 127.

When Disallowed—To Plaintiff.]—An owner of a trade mark, having asked for an injunction, together with an account of profits, to which he was not entitled, was not allowed any costs of suit. Moet v. Couston, 33 Beav. 578; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1012; 10 L. T. 395; 4 N. R. 86.

Where an order has been made for an interim injunction to restrain an alleged infringement of a trade mark, and the defendant, wishing to avoid further litigation, agreed to pay all costs, and to give an undertaking not to use the trade mark complained of:—Held, that the plaintiff, persisting in carrying on the suit to a hearing, was not entitled to his costs. Hudson v. Bennett, 12 Jur. (N.S.) 519; 14 L. T. 698; 14 W. R. 911.

—— To Defendant.]—If a trader imitates another person's label or trade mark, and sails so near the wind as just to avoid an injunction, though the court does not grant the injunction, it will not willingly give him any costs of the proceedings. Bass v. Dawber, 19 L. T. 626.

—— To Plaintiff and Defendant—Where both Parties deceive Public.]—The court will give no costs on either side in a case where both parties are engaged in the manufacture of an article intended to be used to deceive and mislead the public. Estcourt v. Estcourt Hop Essence Co., 44 L. J., Ch. 223; L. R. 10 Ch. 276; 32 L. T. 80; 23 W. R. 313.

Effect of Apology after Writ.]—On 12th June, 1886, an order was received by the defendant for certain goods with labels attached which infringed the plaintiff's registered trade mark, and on 6th July, 1886, a writ was issued to restrain the infringement. On the 7th July, 1886, the defendants offered to compensate the plaintiff without the necessity of legal proceedings, and to destroy the labels and comply with any reasonable request of the plaintiff; on 16th July the plaintiff moved for an injunction:—Held, that, notwithstanding the defendant's offer, the motion was not an unnecessary proceeding, and the defendants must pay the costs caused by what they had done. Fennessy v. Day, 55 L. T. 161.

An offer by defendants after bill filed to discontinue the use of a trade mark, unless it be also accompanied by an offer to pay the costs and expenses up to that time, or to let the case be argued only upon the question of costs, will not relieve the defendants from the payment of the costs of the suit. M'Andrew v. Bassett, 10 Jur. (N.S.) 492; 10 L. T. 65; 4 N. R. 12.

On Higher or Lower Scale.]—A submission to a perpetual injunction with costs by a defendant in an action for the infringement of a trade mark does not afford a special ground upon which the court will direct taxation of the costs upon the higher scale under the provisions of Ord. LXV. r. 9. Hudson v. Osgerby, 50 L. T. 323; 32 W. R. 566.

Lien for—Priority.]—Wine marked with a counterfeit of the plaintiffs' brand had been imported into this country, and A. had made bonâ fide advances on the security of the dock warrants. An injunction having been granted to restrain the dock company from parting with it, the court, on the application of A., ordered the wine to be delivered to him, on the counterfeit brand being removed, but made A. pay the costs of the application:—Held, that the priority of charges on the wine was, first, the expenses of the dock company; secondly, A.'s claim; and, thirdly, the plaintiffs' costs of suit. Ponsardin v. Peto, Uzielli, In re, 3 N. R. 237; 33 Beav. 642; 33 L. J., Ch. 371; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 66; 9 L. T. 567; 12 W. R. 198.

A wine merchant brought an action against another wine merchant to restrain him from pirating his trade mark by branding it on the corks of his bottles. Some of the wine in bottles with the pirated trade mark was in the warehouse of certain wharfingers, who were made defendants to the action. In their defence they disclaimed all interest in the matter in dispute, and submitted to act as the court might direct upon having their charges and costs paid. At the trial they contended at the bar that the plaintiff, if his right was established, ought not to touch the bottles for the purpose of removing the branded corks without first paying their charges:—Held, that the wharfingers had done nothing to disentitle them to their costs of the action; and that if the plaintiff had any lien on the wine for his costs it must be postponed to the wharfingers' lien for their charges. Moet v. Pickering, 47 L. J., Ch. 527; 8 Ch. D. 372; 38 L. T. 799; 26 W. R. 637—C. A. See Upmann v. Elkan, supra.

3. Assignment, and User by Firms and Representatives.

Assignability.]—The question, how far by the general law a trade mark is assignable, depends greatly upon the nature of the mark and the mode in which it has been used. A corporate trade mark granted by the Cutlers' Company at Sheffield to a person not free of the company, is, so far as the special acts governing the company are concerned, assignable. Bury v. Bedford, 4 De G. J. & S. 352; 4 N. R. 180; 33 L. J., Ch. 465; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 503; 10 L. T. 470; 12 W. R. 726.

An American company manufactured a metal, the main use of which was in bearings for machinery. They had not sold any bearings in this country, but had by means of an English partnership trading under their authority procured bearings to be made, and had a commercial interest in their being made, and they had a reversionary right in the goodwill of the business so carried on:—Held, that the American company had a business concerned with the metal bearings, in connection with the goodwill of which a trade mark registered for bearings made of the metal in question could be assigned under s. 70 of the Trade Marks Acts, 1883. Magnolia Metal Co.'s Trade Mark, In re, Atlas Co., Ex parte, 66 L. J., Ch. 598; [1897] 2 Ch. 371; 76 L. T. 672—C. A. Varying 45 W. R. 406.

Right of Assignee to use Trade Mark.]—Where a trade mark contains an emblem with such a collocation of words as amounts to an advertisement of the character and quality of the goods, and contains statements which, though true as regards the original adopter of the trade mark, are calculated to deceive the public when used by his assignee, the assignee is not to be entitled to protection in the use of such trade mark. Leather Cloth Co. v. American Leather Cloth Co., 11 H. L. Cas. 523; 35 L. J., Ch. 53; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 513; 12 L. T. 742; 13 W. R. 873. And see S. C., 4 De G. J. & S. 137; 2 N. R. 481; 3 N. R. 264; 33 L. J., Ch. 199; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 81; 9 L. T. 558; 12 W. R. 289.

Although a trader may have a property in a trade mark, giving him a right to exclude all others from using it, if his goods derive their increased value from the personal skill or ability of the adopter of the trade mark, he cannot give any other person the right to affix his name or mark upon their goods, for the effect thereof would be to give them the right to practise a fraud upon the public. Ib.

A company purchased all the property, utensils, goodwill of business, and trade marks of a manufacturer; this purchase would authorise the company, really carrying on business at the same place, to continue the use of the manufacturer's name and marks, so as to be protected therein against the infringement of the same. There may be a property in a trade mark which, on the sale of the right to manufacture the goods which it designates, may also be sold and transferred. Ib.

Persons of the name of Crockett manufactured leather cloth, and put on it a stamp, describing it as manufactured by them at New Jersey, U.S., and West Ham, Essex, and as being patented, and being tanned. A company bought their manufactured articles, their materials for manufacture, goodwill, and premises, at West Ham, and their trade marks. Semble, that on such a purchase, the continued use by the purchaser of Crockett's original label was not a fraud on their part; and if the use of it had been infringed, it might have been protected. Ib.

Assignment in Gross of Right to use Name—Injunction.]—In 1871. John Forrest, who had carried on in London the business of a watchmaker, and had marked his watches "John Forrest, London," died, and a firm of watchmakers in London purchased the goodwill of the business, but did not continue his business except that until 1874 they put "John Forrest, London," on some of their watches. In that year they granted an exclusive licence to another firm in Liverpool to use for seven years the name "John Forrest, London," on their watches, but after the licence had expired they did not use the name themselves, save only in a very few cases. In 1890 they assigned their assets to a trustee for their creditors, and he in 1891 sold their business and the goodwill and lease of the premises, and on the same day he sold to the plaintiff, a watchmaker in Coventry, the name, title and goodwill of the business of John Forrest, London:—Held, that the plaintiff, being a mere assignee in gross of the right to the name of John Forrest, was not entitled to an injunction to restrain the use of such name on watches made by the defendant, who was also a watchmaker in Coventry. Thorneloe v. Hill, 63 L. J., Ch. 331; [1894] 1 Ch. 569; 8 R. 718; 70 L. T. 124; 42 W. R. 397.

Discovery of Trade Secret.]—When a man has learnt a trade secret from his employer, and practised it after the employer's death, selling the article under the old name, he will not acquire such a right to the exclusive use of the name as a trade mark as will be protected in a court of equity. Horenden v. Lloyd, 18 W. R. 1132.

Any person who by fair means has gained the knowledge of a trade secret, may, after the death of the original inventor, make and sell the article under the name of the original inventor, provided such person does nothing to induce the public to believe that the article sold by him is made by the successor of the original inventor. James v. James, 41 L. J., Ch. 353; L. R. 13 Eq. 421; 26 L. T. 568; 20 W. R. 434.

A member of the family of R. J., the original inventor of a secret preparation, having by fair means become possessed of the original receipt, made and sold the article by the name given to it by the original inventor, under the signature of R. J., his own name being R. R. J.:—Held, that he was not entitled, as against the successor of the original inventor, to sell the article under the signature of R. J. singly, or to represent that his was the only genuine preparation. Ib. Practically overruled in Massam v. Thorley's Cattle Food Co., ante, col. 102.

—— Person of Same Name.]—Any person who has become acquainted with the process of manufacturing an article which is in general secret is entitled to manufacture it, and if the name of the first manufacturer has become attached to the article, any person afterwards manufacturing is entitled to describe it by the name of such original manufacturer, and if he happens to be of the same name as the original manufacturer, he may use his name in describing his business, or allow it to be used by a company formed by him for the purpose of carrying on the business, notwithstanding that the representatives of the original manufacturer continue to carry on the old manufacture under the old name. Massam v. Thorley's Cattle Food Co.,

Son Carrying on Business after his Father's Death.]—Where a person is selling an article in his own name, fraud must be shown to constitute a case for restraining him from so doing, on the ground that the name is one on which another has long been selling a similar article. Burgess v. Burgess, 3 De G. M. & G. 896; 22 L. J., Ch. 675; 17 Jur. 292.

Therefore, where a father had for many years exclusively sold a sauce under the title of "Burgess's" sauce, a court of equity would not restrain his son from selling a similar article under that name, no fraud being proved. Ib.

The plaintiff's father prepared and sold a medicine called "Dr. J.'s Yellow Ointment," for which no patent had been obtained. The plaintiff, after his father's death, continued to sell the same. The defendant sold a medicine under the same name and mark:—Held, that no action could be maintained against him by the plaintiff. Singleton v. Bolton, 3 Dougl. 293.

On Sale of Business.]—In substance there is no distinction between the sale of a business and goodwill by a trader himself, and a sale by his assignees in bankruptcy. Hudson v. Osborne, 39 L. J., Ch. 79; 21 L. T. 386.

Therefore, on sale of a business by a trader's assignees in bankruptcy, the trader has no right, upon setting up a fresh business after his discharge, to use the trade marks of his old business, or in any other way to represent himself as carrying on the identical business which was sold, although he has a right to set up again in business of the same kind next door to his old place of business. Ib.

In such a case it is no objection to the purchaser's coming for the assistance of the court, that he has continued to use the name of the old business which he found there. Ib.

Trade Mark Partnership's Asset.]—Upon the formation of a partnership with a person entitled to the benefit of a trade mark, the mark, in the absence of express provisions in relation to it, becomes an asset of the partnership. Bury v. Bedford, 4 De G. J. & S. 352; 4 N. R. 180; 33 L. J., Ch. 465; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 503; 10 L. T. 470; 12 W. R. 727.

When in the judgment of the court certain initial letters, surmounted by a crown, had, although originally representing the names of certain partners, become and were a trade mark; that is, a brand which had reputation and currency in the market as a well-known sign of quality:—Held, that as such the trade mark was a valuable property of a partnership constituted by successors to the original partners, but not having the same initials, as an addition to their works, and might be properly sold with the works, and therefore properly included as a distinct subject of value in the valuation to the surviving partner. Hall v. Barrows, 4 De G. J. & S. 150; 3 N. R. 259; 33 L. J., Ch. 204; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 55; 9 L. T. 561; 12 W. R. 322.

H. Bollmann Condy and Mitchell carried on business together under the style of "Bollmann Condy & Co.," manufacturing and selling a disinfectant, known as Condy's Fluid. After the dissolution of the partnership H. Bollmann Condy set up a business for the same purpose, under the name "H. Bollmann Condy," and Mitchell afterwards set up a similar business under the name of "The Condy's Fluid Company." H. Bollmann Condy sought to restrain Mitchell from using the name of Condy in connection with the article he sold as Condy's Fluid:—Held, that both the partners had an equal right to the use of the trade name of "Condy's Fluid"; and that Condy's contention failed because he had not shown fraud on the part of Mitchell such as to mislead the public into the belief that the article he sold was in reality manufactured by Condy. Condy v. Mitchell, 37 L. T. 766; 26 W. R. 269—C. A.

A partnership was carried on for fourteen years between B. and G. under the style of B. & Co. On the dissolution the assets were divided, but no arrangement was come to as to the style:—Held, that the name or style of B. & Co. formed an undivided asset of the partnership which belonged to the partners in common after the dissolution, and that B. was not entitled to prevent G. using the style of B. & Co. in his business. Banks v. Gibson, 34 Beav. 566; 34 L. J., Ch. 591; 13 W. R. 1012.

Two ladies, V. C. and M. W., carried on business in London in partnership under the firm of C. & W. V. C. married L. After this a decree for dissolution was made, and it was ordered that "the said partnership business, and the leasehold premises, trade fixtures, stock-in-trade, goodwill, and business," should be sold as a going concern to M. W. or to L. and wife, whichever should be the highest bidder. M. W. became the purchaser of all the property directed to be sold. L. and wife, who carried on business in Paris under the firm of C. et Cie., commenced an action to restrain M. W. from carrying on the business under the style or firm of C. & W.:—Held, reversing Hall, V.-C., that L. and wife had no right to restrain M. W. from using the name of the old firm. Levy v. Walker, 48 L. J., Ch. 273; 10 Ch. D. 436; 39 L. T. 654; 27 W. R. 370—C. A.

B., an outgoing partner, claimed that by the terms of the deed of dissolution between himself and L., he was entitled to manufacture a particular article from an original recipe, the property of the late partnership, and to sell it as "L.'s soap" prepared by B.:—Held, that he was entitled to use the old trade name of the article as his trade mark, and to have it registered, although identical with that of the successors of the old firm. Benbow v. Low, 44 L. T. 875; 29 W. R. 837.

Assignment not Registered.]—Where a trade mark has been registered, an assignee of the registered proprietor can bring an action to prevent the use of the trade mark, without having registered the assignment. Jolee v. Henshaw, 55 L. J., Ch. 273; 31 Ch. D. 323; 53 L. T. 949; 34 W. R. 269.

4. Registration.

a. Who may Register.

Applicant carrying on Business Abroad.]—Whether in order to entitle a person to have a trade mark registered, he must be carrying on or intending to carry on business in England, quære. Rivière's Trade Mark, In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 578; 26 Ch. D. 48; 50 L. T. 763; 32 W. R. 390—C. A.

Joint Mark—Termination of Joint Adventure

—Application by one Party.]—R. J., a merchant in Manchester, for some time prior to the passing of the Trade Marks Act, 1875, shipped cotton drills to A. & Co., a firm at Manilla, for sale on commission, the goods, in common with other goods sold by A. & Co. for other people, bearing a trade mark representing the figure of Britannia, which mark was the property of A. & Co. After the passing of the act, doubts having arisen as to the propriety of using the Britannia mark, R. J. wrote to A. & Co., suggesting the use of a new design; and they sent back a proposed trade mark which represented the house of business at Manilla of A. & Co., with their name on the signboard. Beneath were three columns in Chinese characters. The first represented "R. J., Manchester," the second contained the crest of K. (the Manilla partner of A. & Co.), with words indicating that it was his "chop" or mark, and the third represented "A. & Co., Manilla." On the construction of the letters between the parties, the court held that there was no contract that the mark should be the property of R. J.:—Held, that R. J., after the termination of the joint adventure, was not entitled to register the trade mark in his name, and, semble, that if there had been such a contract, it could not have been enforced, as the trade mark, if registered as the property of R. J., would have been calculated to deceive the public. Jones's Trade Mark, In re, 53 L. T. 1—C. A.

Dissolution of Partnership—Late Partners, by Agreement, Entitled to Carry on Business and Use Trade Marks—Old Marks still on Register.]—Where, upon the dissolution of a partnership consisting of five brothers, it was by deed agreed that four of the brothers under one name, and the other brother under another name, were to be entitled to carry on the business and to use the trade marks of the old firm, and that simultaneous applications were to be made by the two new firms for the registration in their respective names of trade marks identical with and similar to those in use by the old firm, and the comptroller, upon such applications being made, had raised two objections—first, that under s. 72, sub-s. 1, of the Patents, &c., Act, 1883, he could not proceed with the applications until the existing entries on the register had been cancelled; and secondly, that identical and similar new marks ought not to be registered in the names of two different parties—the court refused to direct the comptroller to proceed with the applications. Ehrmann's Trade Marks, In re, 66 L. J., Ch. 699; [1897] 2 Ch. 495; 77 L. T. 200; 45 W. R. 698.

Semble, an order for cancellation of the old marks might be made under s. 91, sub-s. (c), of the act of 1883 simultaneously with the registration of the new marks, if otherwise unobjectionable. Ib.

Quære, whether, for the purposes of the acts, some limitation ought not to be imposed on the application of the doctrine of Dent v. Turpin (post, col. 181), at all events where more than three persons claim to be assignees of a registered mark. Ib.

Assignees—Goodwill—Rectification.]—M. and B., carrying on business as co-partners in New York, instructed their agents in this country, B. and W., to register two trade marks for goods of theirs, of which B. and W. had the exclusive sale. Such trade marks were registered by B. and W. as to one in the name of their firm, and as to the other in the name of W. only. B. and W., having no beneficial ownership in the trade marks, in August, 1884, assigned them to M. and R. In December, 1884, one of the partners in the firm of M. and R. retired, and by deed assigned all his interest in the business of the firm and in the trade marks to the continuing partners. In December, 1885, another partner retired, and three new partners joined the firm, but no assignment was executed by the retiring partner. On a motion by the present partners in the firm of M. and R., and the last retiring partner, under s. 78 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, that proper notices of the assignments of August, 1884, and December, 1884, might be entered on the register, and that the persons entitled under the last-mentioned assignment might be entered as the present proprietors of the trade marks:—Held, that the application might be granted, as the trade marks had been transmitted in connection with the goodwill of the business of M. and R. within the meaning of s. 70 of the act. Wellcome's Trade Mark, In re, 55 L. J., Ch. 542; 32 Ch. D. 213; 54 L. T. 493; 34 W. R. 453.

b. What may be Registered.

i. Generally.

Restrictions—Instructions to Persons applying for Registration.]—Applicants for registration of trade marks, who have given undertakings to owners of previously registered trade marks not to use their proposed trade marks for particular articles, must confine their applications accordingly. Whether or not the instructions issued by the comptroller-general to persons applying for registration are binding on the court, the practice which has been in force for many years ought not to be departed from. König and Ebhardt's Application, In re, 65 L. J., Ch. 404; [1896] 2 Ch. 236; 45 W. R. 230.

Name—Injunction to restrain Company from applying for Registration.]—An injunction was granted to restrain a proposed new company from applying to the registrar of joint-stock companies for registration under a name which, in the opinion of the court, was calculated to deceive, although the company had not begun to carry on its business. It is not necessary, to entitle the plaintiffs to an injunction, that the defendants should have a fraudulent intent. They are responsible for the reasonable consequences of their actions. The statutory right to register must not be exercised in such way as to violate some other right or offend against the law. Hendriks v. Montagu, 50 L. J., Ch. 456; 17 Ch. D. 638; 44 L. T. 879; 30 W. R. 168—C. A.

Regulation of Commissioners of Patents forbidding Words in Foreign Characters.]—A regulation issued by the commissioners of patents forbidding the registration as a trade mark of any word in foreign characters:—Held, to be ultra vires and void. Rotherham's Trade Mark, In re, 27 W. R. 503. Affirmed, 14 Ch. D. 585; 43 L. T. 1—C. A.

"Essential Particular"—Claim in Application.]—In order to support an application for the registration of a trade mark, it must be shown, not merely that the trade mark consists of or contains an essential particular, as defined by s. 64 of the Patents, &c., Acts, 1883 to 1888, but that such essential particular has been claimed as such in the application in accordance with the same section. Bryant and May, In re, 59 L. J., Ch. 763.

"Essential Particular."]—A person named M. Gianaclis having registered in 1885 the words "Gianaclis Cigarettes" in ordinary capital letters, as his trade mark, not used before August, 1875, for cigarettes, in 1889 brought an action against another cigarette dealer for selling cigarettes in boxes bearing labels with the name "N. Gianaclis." The prayer of the claim did not refer to the registered trade mark, but the fact of the registration was set out in detail in the body of the statement of claim. On motion by the defendant for the removal of the mark from the register:—Held, first, that the mark did not possess any "essential particular" within s. 4 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, and had consequently been wrongly registered. Secondly, that the applicant was a "person aggrieved" by the wrongful registration, within s. 90 of the same act, as being the defendant in an action in which it was sought to make some use of the registration against him. Thirdly, that the mark should be removed from the register forthwith, since even if fraud were then proved against the defendant, it would not validate the registration. Fourthly, that the costs of the application should be reserved. Gianaclis' Trade Mark, In re, 58 L. J.. Ch. 782.

In order that a label, as such, may be registered as a trade mark under s. 64 (1) (c) of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, as amended by s. 10 (1) (c) of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1888, it is necessary that it should contain one or more of the essential particulars mentioned in the remaining clauses of the same sub-section. Birmingham Vinegar Brewery Co., In re, 8 R. 237; 70 L. T. 645.

"Somatose" — "Invented Word" — "Word having no reference to Character or Quality of Goods."]—Upon the application to register the word "Somatose" as a trade mark in respect of an article made from meats and called a pharmaceutical product, its object being nourishment of the human body:—Held (Lindley, L.J., diss.), that "Somatose" was not an "invented word," but that, even if it was an invented word, it was not a "word having no reference to the character or quality of the goods" within s. 64 of the Patents, &c., Act, 1883, as amended by s. 10 of the Patents, &c., Act, 1888, and consequently could not be registered. Farbenfabriken's Trade Mark, In re, 63 L. J., Ch. 257; [1894] 1 Ch. 645; 7 R. 439; 70 L. T. 186; 42 W. R. 488—C. A.

"Magnolia"—Description of Character of Goods.]—In order that the name of an article may be the trade mark of the manufacturer it must indicate not the article only, but also that the article is manufactured by the person claiming the name as a trade mark, as distinguished from other persons. The name "Magnolia" being applied to a certain metal, by whomever manufactured, cannot be registered as a trade mark or as the essential part of one. Barlow v. Johnson (7 Rep. Pat. Cas. 395) distinguished. Magnolia Metal Co.'s Trade Marks, In re, Atlas Co., Ex parte, 66 L. J., Ch. 598; [1897] 2 Ch. 371; 76 L. T. 672—C. A. Varying 45 W. R. 406.

The words "Magnolia Anti-friction Metal," as applied to bearings in machinery, have reference to the character and quality of the goods within the meaning of sub-s. 1 (e) of s. 10 of the Trade Marks Act, 1888, "Magnolia" being the name applied to a well-known metal; but the word "Magnolia" alone, as applied to a metal, has not, although it had, prior to the registration of the word as a trade mark, become known as the name of the metal. Ib.

Geographical Name.]—A word does not become a "geographical name" within the meaning of s. 10, sub-s. 1 (e), of the Trade Marks Act, 1888, simply because some place on the earth has been called by it—its primary signification not being geographical, and it not being the name of the place where the article named after it is manufactured. Ib.

Invented Word—Geographical Name—"Eboline."]—A word formed by adding a common adjectival suffix to the name of an existing place is not "an invented word," but is "a geographical name" within the meaning of sub-ss. 1 (d) and 1 (e) respectively, of s. 64 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, as amended by the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1888, s. 10, sub-s. 1. Salt & Co.'s Application, In re, 63 L. J., Ch. 756; [1894] 3 Ch. 166; 8 R. 682; 71 L. T. 386; 42 W. R. 666.

—— Description of Article.]—The word "Satinine" being a descriptive word, not being an "invented word," and having reference to the character and quality of the goods (in this case starch, blue, perfumery, &c.) to which it was proposed to apply it, is not a word which can be registered under s. 10 of the Patents, &c., Act, 1888, which is substituted for s. 64 of the Patents, &c., Act, 1883. Meyerstein's Trade Mark, In re, 59 L. J., Ch. 401; 43 Ch. D. 604; 62 L. T. 526; 38 W. R. 440.

An invented word cannot now be registered as a trade mark if it is intended to be descriptive. Meyerstein's Trade Mark, In re (supra), followed. Talbot's Trade Mark, In re, 63 L. J., Ch. 264; 8 R. 149; 70 L. T. 119; 42 W. R. 501.

——"Solio"—Photographic Paper.]—An application was made to register the word "Solio" in connection with photographic paper. The comptroller-general had objected to register it on the ground that it was the practice of the office to refuse registration as trade marks in respect of photographic papers of marks which consisted of the word "Sun," or its equivalent "Sol," with the addition of some ordinary termination or affix, as having reference to the character or quality of the goods, within the meaning of s. 10, sub-s. 1 (e), of the Patents, &c., Act, 1888:—Held, that the court was bound by Farbenfabriken's Trade Mark, In re (supra), and Densham's Trade Mark, In re (post, col. 153), to decide that if an invented word had reference to the character or quality of the goods to which it was to be applied as a trade mark, it could not be registered; that, although "Solio" was undoubtedly a newly coined word, and in that sense was an invented word, yet it could not be said to have no reference to the character or quality of the goods to which it was intended to be applied—namely, photographic paper; and that, therefore, the refusal to register it was perfectly right. Eastman Photographic Materials Co.'s Trade Mark, In re, 76 L. T. 730—C. A. Reversed in H. L., July, 1898.

Words descriptive of Article—User.]—P. in 1876 registered "braided fixed stars" as a trade mark for matches, alleging that he had used it as a trade mark before the passing of the act. He also at the same time registered a label enveloping the boxes in which his matches were sold, which contained the words "braided fixed stars" in two places so as to be conspicuous on each side of the boxes, but also contained a number of other words. It was shown that at the time when P. introduced the term "braided fixed stars" the term "fixed stars" was known in the trade as denoting a particular class of fusees, and that he had just bought a patent for enveloping the stems of fusees with wire by means of a braiding machine. This patent expired in August, 1881. It appeared from the evidence that P. had not before the act used "braided fixed stars" separately as a trade mark, or otherwise than as a part of the above mentioned label. In October, 1881, an application was made by a rival trader to expunge the registration:—Held, that the registration must be expunged, for that to entitle P. to register these words as a trade mark he must before the act have used them as such alone, and not merely in conjunction with other words:—Held, further, that if they had been so used alone they ought not to have been registered, for that they were only words properly descriptive of the patented article, and that P. had no exclusive right to their use after the patent had expired. Palmer's Trade Mark, In re, 24 Ch. D. 504; 50 L. T. 30; 32 W. R. 306.

In 1884 the word "Monobrut" was registered for champagne; it had been previously registered in France, and a specially dry wine was sold thereunder, the term "brut" being a French word for a dry or raw wine. In 1888 this wine was extensively advertised, and R. (the sole agent in England of champagnes bearing the registered trade mark "Monopole" and "Dry Monopole"), on becoming aware of the registration of the word "Monobrut," applied to expunge it from the register:—Held, that "Monobrut" was merely descriptive, and could not therefore be registered in England, and the fact that it was registered in France made no difference; that R. was a "person aggrieved," and that the mark should be expunged. Semble, that "Monopole" and "Dry Monopole" were proper names, inasmuch as they were not descriptive words, and had been therefore properly registered. Vignier's Trade Mark "Monobrut," In re, 61 L. T. 495. See Grossmith's Trade Mark, In re, post, col. 175.

Messrs. B., being manufacturers of cotton sewing thread, applied for the registration of a considerable number of labels and devices used by them for various periods in their trade, and many of which were registered in foreign countries. The Manchester committee of experts divided the marks into two classes. The registrar refused registration to all the marks in the second class, while, of the marks in the first class, he admitted six to complete separate registration, but refused to register more than one of the remainder as representative of the marks in the first class not separately registered. He further offered a certificate of such representative registration. Upon motion for rectification of the register by registration of all the marks:—Held, that as to the marks placed in the second class, the case was governed by Orr-Ewing, In re (in C. A., but see now in H. L., 28 W. R. 412), and that the court would not review the decision of the committee; and that, as to the marks in respect of which representative registration was offered, the case was governed by Barrows, In re (post, col. 173), and separate registration of each mark could not be granted. Brook, In re, 26 W. R. 791.

Colour Disregarded.]—In the registration of cotton marks, colouring and surrounding lines, edges, and borders, will be disregarded. Ib.

Name of Imaginary Person—"Trilby."]—The name of an imaginary person does not come within clause (a) in s. 10 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1888, but may come within clause (e) "as a word having no reference to the character or quality of the goods" (Kay, L.J., diss.):—The name "Trilby" held accordingly to be a good trade mark within clause (e) in respect of ladies' gloves, aprons, and blouses. Holt's Trade Mark, In re, 65 L. J., Ch. 410; [1896] 1 Ch. 711; 74 L. T. 225; 44 W. R. 369—C. A.

The same construction ought to be placed on the words "individual or firm" in clause (a) as in clause (b)—namely, an individual or firm capable of applying for the registration of a trade mark, and therefore a real individual or firm—Per. A. L. Smith, L.J. Ib.

Entire Class—User for part of Class—Exclusive Title for Entire Class.]—An assignee of the goodwill of a business with the right to a trade mark which has been registered by the assignor under the Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875, in respect of an entire class, but of which the articles dealt with in such business form part only, is not entitled to the exclusive user of the trade mark for the entire class, but only for the particular articles in connection with which it is actually used, even though the trade mark may have been on the register for five years. Edwards v. Dennis, Edwards' Trade Mark, In re, 55 L. J., Ch. 125; 30 Ch. D. 454; 54 L. T. 112—C. A. Reversing 1 Cab. & E. 428.

Semble, it is not the intention of the act that a man registering a trade mark for an entire class, and yet only using it for one description of goods in that class, shall be able to claim for himself the exclusive right to use it for every description of goods in that class. If he desires to extend his business and apply his trade mark to a new description of goods in the class, he should have his trade mark registered in respect of those goods. Quære, whether a man can claim the exclusive use of a registered trade mark not in actual use in connection with particular goods at the time of registration. Ib.

In 1883 E. purchased and took an assignment of the goodwill of the business of an iron merchant and manufacturer, and also of the right to a trade mark, consisting of a device of "Neptune" holding a trident, with the word "Neptune" added, which had been registered by the assignor in 1878, under the Trade Marks Registration Acts, 1875 and 1876, for the whole of class 5, described in the "Trade Marks Journal" as "unwrought and partly wrought metals used in manufacture," E. duly getting himself registered as proprietor of the trade mark. The only business actually carried on by E. and his assignor was and had been that of a manufacturer of iron sheets. In 1880 D. registered a trade mark bearing the word "Neptune" for "steel wire and iron wire" in class 5, his business consisting solely of the manufacture and sale of wire. In 1884 E. brought an action against D. for infringement, on the ground of the alleged similarity of D.'s trade mark. D. then applied by summons under s. 5 of the act of 1875, to have the register rectified by limiting E.'s trade mark to the articles in class 5 other than steel and iron wire:—Held, that inasmuch as the goods sold by E. and D. were entirely distinct, E. was not entitled to an injunction:—Held, also, that, notwithstanding the five years' registration of E.'s trade mark for the whole of class 5, his trade mark must be limited to those articles in the class in connection with which it was being actually used, namely, iron sheets. Ib.

Foreign Trade Mark.]—Under sub-s. 3 of s. 103 of the Patents, &c., Act, 1883, a trade mark which has been applied for in the country of origin, whether capable of being registered in that country or not, may be applied for here, but it will not be registered here unless it is a mark otherwise capable of registration under the law of this country. Carter Medicine Co.'s Trade Mark, In re, 61 L. J., Ch. 716; [1892] 3 Ch. 472; 3 R. 1; 67 L. T. 747; 41 W. R. 13.

—— Fraudulent User of.]—In 1718 G.'s firm, who were manufacturers of iron at Leufsta, in Sweden, registered in Sweden, as their trade mark, the letter L. inclosed in a ring or hoop, commonly known as the "hoop L." In 1878 they registered in England, under the Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875, the hoop L. mark alone, and also in combination with the word "Leufsta." Since 1835 they had exported iron of the highest quality to England for the manufacture of a particular kind of steel known as "blister steel." The hoop L. mark was stamped upon the iron in combination either with the name of their English consignee, or with the word "Leufsta," or with both. They registered these in Sweden as bye-stamps in addition to their original hoop L. mark. H.'s firm, who were English iron and steel and edge tool manufacturers, had for fifty years past used the hoop L. mark, in combination with the name of their firm, as their trade mark upon blister steel manufactured by them from inferior brands of Swedish iron. For this purpose it was necessary to cut off the Swedish mark, as the bars of iron when converted into steel retained upon their surface, unless intentionally obliterated, any marks which might be stamped upon them. A similar practice was adopted by thirty other English firms of iron and steel manufacturers, but this practice did not come to G.'s knowledge until 1881. H. applied, under the Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875, to register the hoop L. mark in combination with the words "Brades Co., Warranted":—Held, that the application must be refused, with costs, upon the ground that, whatever might have been the practice as to the user, it was one which had its inception in fraud, and was calculated to deceive, and therefore, though apparently established by time and usage, could not receive the sanction of the court. Heaton's Trade Mark, In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 959; 27 Ch. D. 570; 51 L. T. 220; 32 W. R. 951.

—— User of Word in Foreign Country.]—Whether a word used alone as a trade mark in a foreign country before the passing of the Trade Marks Act, 1875, can be registered under the act if it has not been so used in this country, quære. Leonard v. Wells, Leonard's Trade Mark, In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 603; 26 Ch. D. 288; 51 L. T. 35—C. A. Affirming 32 W. R. 530.

—— Marks Registered Abroad—Decision of Foreign Tribunal.]—F. had long used and was the registered proprietor of three trade marks for eau-de-cologne, consisting of (1) a label with his signature and a seal in the corner, and used for pasting on the side of the bottle; (2) a circular stamp on a strip of paper, used for pasting on the cork and down the neck of the bottle; (3) a label containing a picture of F.'s business premises, "Gegenüber dem Julichs Platz," Cologne, with medals and letter press, and used for pasting on boxes in which bottles were packed. B., also a manufacturer of eau-de-cologne, applied for registration in his name of three marks similarly composed, and to be respectively used in the same manner. On motion by F. under s. 6 of the above act, for an injunction to restrain B. from proceeding with his application:—Held (1), that the marks were so nearly resembling F.'s marks as to be calculated to deceive, and that the fact that the picture of the house on B.'s label described as "Gegenüber dem Elogius Platz." Cologne, was said to be a correct view of the house in a street leading out of the Elogius Platz, did not prevent B.'s label being a colourable imitation of F.'s registered label, having regard to the similarity in the letterpress and the position of the medals; (2) that the allegation by B. that he had used his marks for several years without interference, did not primâ facie entitle him to registration, since it was not proved that the original proprietor was aware of such user; and (3) that the injunction must go as to all three marks, notwithstanding that the German court of appeal, reversing the judgment of the court of first instance, had permitted registration of the label with the picture of B.'s business premises, the question being purely one of fact, as to which the foreign decisions were to be regarded merely as opposite verdicts by special juries. Farina, In re, 27 W. R. 456.

Foreign Producer—Registration as Importer's Mark.]—The trade mark of a foreign producer cannot be registered by an importer from that producer as his own, whether the goods are produced by a course of manufacture or by a process of nature, nor whether the importer has or has not an exclusive contract for this country, nor whether the producer does or does not consent to the registration. Apollinaris Co.'s Trade Mark, In re, 61 L. J., Ch. 625; [1891] 2 Ch. 186; 65 L. T. 6—C. A.

Intention to Use is generally Presumed.]—Although, in the case of a new trade mark tendered for registration, an intention to use it may usually be presumed, yet registration ought not to be allowed of a mark which has had no prior user, and which it is proved the applicant does not intend to use, but that being an importer of foreign goods, he is only seeking to register the mark for the purpose of excluding from the English market similar goods intended for foreign consumption, and having the mark fixed to them by the foreign producer whose mark it is. Ib.

Label containing Device.]—A label containing with other matters a device to which attention is called as being the "trade mark" ought not to be registered, on the ground that the label is likely to mislead the public into believing that the device alone is protected or claimed. Ib.

ii. Fancy Words—Words not in Common Use.

Name for New Article.]—A name which has been given to a new article, and which is the only name by which it is known, cannot be a "fancy word" as regards that article—Per Fry, L.J. Waterman v. Ayres, Waterman's Trade Mark, In re, infra, col. 155.

Non-descriptive Word—"Bovril."]—"Bovril" was in 1886 a "fancy word not in common use" within the meaning of s. 64, sub-s. 1 (c), of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, and capable of registration as a trade mark in respect of all substances used as food or ingredients for food. "Bovril" Trade Mark, In re, 65 L. J., Ch. 715; [1896] 2 Ch. 600; 74 L. T. 805; 45 W. R. 150—C. A.

To enable a common English word to be registered as a "fancy word" under the sub-section, the word must be such that in its fanciful application it is obviously meaningless and obviously non-descriptive in connection with the particular article to which it is applied. Van Duzer's Trade Mark, In re (Melrose case), and Leaf, Sons & Co.'s Trade Mark, In re (Electric case) (infra, col. 155), explained. Ib.

The fact that a portion of the word "Bovril" has some connection with "ox" does not, the whole word being meaningless, make the word so descriptive as to prevent its being a "fancy word," even though applied to extracts of meat. Farbenfabriken's Trade Mark, In re (Somatose case) (63 L. J., Ch. 257; [1894] 1 Ch. 645), distinguished. Ib.

—— "Mazawattee."]—"Mazawattee," a compound of the Hindustani "mazadhar," luscious, and Singhalese "wattee," growth, or garden, as applied to tea or coffee, is neither descriptive of the character or local origin of the goods, nor deceptive, inasmuch as it conveys no meaning to Englishmen or to any class of Englishmen, or to a Hindoo or to a Singhalese. The fact that a word conveys an idea of the East generally does not justify the court in holding that a trade mark is bad as being geographical, or as referring to a particular locality, or to the quality or character of the goods in the class in which it is registered. A word which is not itself descriptive will not be rendered descriptive merely because descriptive words in foreign languages led to its invention and adoption. Densham's Trade Marks, In re, 64 L. J., Ch. 634; [1895] 2 Ch. 176; 12 R. 283; 72 L. T. 614; 43 W. R. 515—C. A.

Descriptive Word — "Emolliolorum" — Previously registered Trade Mark — "Molliscorium."]—The word "Emolliolorum," used as a trade mark to designate a preparation for rendering every description of leather waterproof and supple, could not be registered as a "fancy word" under s. 64 of the Patents, &c., Act, 1883, inasmuch as it would convey to the mind of an ordinary Englishman the idea that the preparation would act by softening the articles to which it was intended to be applied, and it is, therefore, descriptive, and would not come within the definition of "fancy word" laid down in Van Duzer's Trade Mark, In re (infra, col. 155), nor can it be registered under s. 10 of the Patents, &c. Act, 1888, as an invented word or as a word having no reference to the character or quality of the goods. Talbot's Trade Mark, In re, 63 L. J., Ch. 264; 8 R. 149; 70 L. T. 119; 42 W. R. 501.

Descriptive of Pattern — "Gem."]—Where a name or word was originally, or has come to be, descriptive of the article to which it is applied, so that while indicating what the article is, it does not connect it with any particular manufacturer, such name or word cannot be registered as a trade mark. Accordingly, where at the time of an application made in 1884 for the registration of the word "gem" as a trade mark for air-guns which in 1881 had been newly introduced into England and called "Gem" air-guns by the applicant, the word "gem" had become descriptive of a particular pattern of gun, and not merely of the applicant's gun, it was held that the word could not be registered as the applicant's trade mark for air-guns. The word "gem" having now come to indicate the excellence of the article to which it is applied is not now a "fancy word" within the meaning of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, s. 64, sub-s. 1 (c). Arbenz, In re, "Gem" Trade Mark, In re, 56 L. J., Ch. 524; 35 Ch. D. 248; 56 L. T. 252; 35 W. R. 527—C. A.

"Sanitas."]—"Sanitas" is not a "fancy word not in common use" within the meaning of sub-s. 1 (c) of s. 64 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, and cannot therefore be registered. "Sanitas" Trade Mark, In re, 58 L. T. 166.

"Red, White, and Blue."]—An application to proceed with the registration of the words "Red, White, and Blue," as "fancy words not in common use" within the meaning of s. 64 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, was refused. Hanson's Trade Mark, In re, 57 L. J., Ch. 173; 37 Ch. D. 112; 57 L. T. 859; 36 W. R. 134.

"Reversi."]—W. registered the word "Reversi" as a trade mark for "a game somewhat analogous to draughts." The word was the name of a game of cards popular in France in the 16th century. In the rules of W.'s game the word "reverse" frequently occurred, and the game depended on each player reversing or turning over his adversary's counters. A. brought out a similar game under the name "Annex," and on the labels of the boxes in which he sold it, he added to the name "a game of reverses." W. brought an action to restrain A. from infringing the trade mark, and A. applied to remove the trade mark from the register:—Held, that as the word "Reversi" would suggest to an ordinary Englishman the idea that the game had something to do with reversing, it was not a word which obviously could not have any reference to the character of the article, Van Duzer's Trade Mark, In re (infra); that it therefore was not a "fancy word," and ought to be removed from the register. Waterman v. Ayres, Waterman's Trade Mark, In re, 57 L. J., Ch. 893; 39 Ch. D. 29; 59 L. T. 17; 37 W. R. 110—C. A.

"Hand Grenade Fire Extinguisher."]—The words "Hand Grenade Fire Extinguisher" are not capable of registration as fancy words under the Patents, &c., Act, 1883, s. 64, as a trade mark for an instrument consisting of a glass vessel containing a fire-extinguishing fluid intended to be liberated by means of the vessel being broken when thrown by the hand. Harden Star Hand Grenade Co., In re, 55 L. J., Ch. 596; 54 L. T. 834.

"Melrose"—"Electric."]—The fanciful or abnormal use of a word not in itself obviously non-descriptive, does not make it a "fancy word" within the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, s. 64, sub-s. 1 (c), so as to be capable of registration as a trade mark. Accordingly, applications for a direction to the comptroller-general to proceed with the registration as trade marks of the words "Melrose Favourite Hair Restorer" and "Electric Velveteen," were, in both cases, refused. Trade Mark Alpine, In re (infra), questioned. Van Duzer's Trade Mark, In re, Leaf's Trade Mark, In re, 56 L. J., Ch. 370; 34 Ch. D. 623; 56 L. T. 286; 35 W. R. 294—C. A.

"Jubilee."]—The word "Jubilee" is not obviously meaningless as regards paper or note-paper, because it may signify that the paper is produced in the jubilee year (1887) of her majesty's reign, and it is, moreover, a common English word used by well-known English authors. Consequently the word "jubilee" is not capable of registration as a trade mark for paper, as a fancy word within s. 64 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883. Twigood v. Pirie, 56 L. T. 394; 35 W. R. 729.

"National Sperm."]—An application was made for an order upon the comptroller of trade marks to register a mark having the words "Price's Patent Candle Company" in common letters round the upper border and "National Sperm" in the centre, with the address of the company round the lower border:—Held, that the words "National Sperm" not being fancy words "not in common use," the label did not fulfil the requirements of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, s. 64. Price's Patent Candle Co., In re, 54 L. J., Ch. 210; 27 Ch. D. 681; 51 L. T. 653.

"Shakspeare" Cigars.]—The word "Shakspeare," as applied to cigars, is not a fancy word not in common use within the meaning of s. 64, sub-s. 1 (e), of the Patents, &c., Act, 1883. Banks' and James' Trade Mark, In re, 44 W. R. 32.

"Alpine."]—The word "Alpine" and words of such class, although words in common use and not strictly fancy words, may, when applied to articles such as woollen and cotton goods, be registered as a trade-mark, as they are, if not "fancy words," at least fanciful words when applied to such goods, and so fall within s. 64, sub-s. 1 (c), of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57). Trade Mark "Alpine," In re, 54 L. J., Ch. 727; 29 Ch. D. 877; 53 L. T. 79; 33 W. R. 725.

"Strathmore."]—The plaintiff, who was a wine and spirit merchant, registered a trade mark together with the words "Strathmore Blend," which was the name of a certain blend of various whiskeys made and sold by him, and he advertised the same very widely. Many of the plaintiff's customers were in the habit of ordering his whiskey by calling it "Strathmore whiskey," omitting the word "blend," and the whiskey became known in the market as "Strathmore whiskey." The defendant subsequently registered a trade mark and the name of "Strathmore" for a whiskey blended and sold by him. The question was whether the use of the word "Strathmore" by the defendant was calculated to deceive:—Held, that the word "blend" described simply the operation of manufacturing, and was not an essential part of the name of the plaintiff's whiskey; that the word "Strathmore" was a fancy name; that the use of that word by any person, other than the plaintiff, as a name for whiskey, would be calculated to deceive; and that the defendant must be restrained by injunction from using the word either as part of his trade mark or otherwise. Held, also, that it was not lawful for the defendant to register the word "Strathmore" in combination with his trade mark, and that the register must be rectified by striking out the word. Blair v. Stock, 52 L. T. 123.

Foreign Name of Article.]—The plaintiffs moved for an injunction restraining the defendants from infringing their registered trade marks Boköl and Bokol. The defendants moved under the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, to rectify the register by removing the plaintiffs' trade marks therefrom. The words registered as trade marks were well-known terms in the Norwegian and Swedish language to describe a particular class of beer brewed in Norway, and were the proper and only terms used in Norway and Sweden to denote that class of beer. The plaintiffs were importers of this Norwegian beer, and in 1887 they registered these words as trade marks, and now claimed an exclusive right to their use. The defendants, who were also importers of this class of beer, contended that a foreign word, descriptive of an article manufactured in a foreign country, could not be registered as a fancy word, as that would give the person who first registered the foreign name of any foreign product the monopoly of the sale in England of such product:—Held, that, assuming the article had been unknown in England prior to the registration, the words in question, which properly described the article in the language of the country in which it was produced, could not be registered as fancy words, and applied to that article when imported into England, where it was previously unknown and without a name, and that the trade marks ought to be removed from the register, and the motion for injunction refused. Davis v. Stribolt, Davis's Trade Mark, In re, 59 L. T. 854.

"Fancy Word not in common use"—Resemblance.]—An application was made to the court, under the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, on behalf of a company established in America, that the registration of the word "Kokoko" as a trade mark in respect of cotton goods might be proceeded with, notwithstanding the refusal of the comptroller-general to register the same. The evidence showed that "Kokoko" was an onomatopœic word used by the Chippeway Indians of North America to designate a particular species of owl, the word being composed of sounds supposed to resemble the nocturnal cry of the owl. It was admitted that the device of an owl was in common use in the cotton trade in Manchester; and there was also evidence that the word "Coco" had been used for years in connection with cotton goods consigned from Manchester to foreign markets, although it had not been registered as a trade-mark:—Held, that as the device of an owl was common property, the word "owl" could not be registered as a trade mark, even in a foreign language, and even where, as in the present case, there was no evidence of any trade in cotton goods with the Chippeway Indians, because it was possible that such trade might ultimately extend to them:—Held, further, that the word "Kokoko" too nearly resembled the word "Coco" to be entitled to registration. Jackson & Co.'s Application, "Kokoko" Trade Mark, In re, 60 L. T. 93.

B., in Dec., 1887, applied to register the word "Oomoo" as a trade mark in respect of wines and spirits. The application was opposed by P., who was the registered owner of a trade mark for wines consisting of the word "Emu," with a representation of that bird, on the grounds that the word "Oomoo" was so similar in sound to the word "Emu" as to be calculated to deceive, and that it was not an invented word, or a word having no reference to the character or quality of the goods in respect of which it was intended to be used within s. 10 of the act of 1888, or, if that act was not retrospective so far as s. 10 amended s. 64 of the act of 1883, then that the word "Oomoo" was not a fancy word within such last-mentioned section. The word "Oomoo" was said to be a word meaning "choice" in the language of the aboriginals of Australia:—Held, that s. 10 was not retrospective in reference to marks applied for, as in this case, antecedently to the commencement of the year 1889, when the act of 1888 came into operation; that there was no such similarity as to be calculated to deceive, and that the word "Oomoo" was obviously meaningless to the ordinary Englishman, and was a fancy word not in common use, and that the applicant was entitled to register the mark. Burgoyne's Trade Mark, In re, 61 L. T. 39.

—— Brand—Words having no reference to Character or Quality of Goods.]—The words "John Bull Brand" used by a firm of brewers in respect of beer brewed by them were registered by them as a trade mark under the act of 1883. The evidence was that the mark denoted, in the trade, beer brewed by them and nobody else. On a motion to expunge:—Held, first, that the words were not "fancy words not in common use" under the act of 1883; secondly, that the trade mark could not be supported on the distinct ground of consisting of a "brand"; and thirdly, that the case must be decided under the act of 1883 alone; but semble, the words were not "words having no reference to the character or quality of the goods" within the amending act of 1888. Paine & Co.'s Trade Mark, In re, 61 L. J., Ch. 365; 66 L. T. 642.

—— Geographical Words.]—The names of well-known mineral-water springs, such as "Apollinaris," "Hunyadi Janos," and "Friedrichshall," are geographical names, and are not "fancy words not in common use" within s. 64 of the act of 1883, nor "invented words," or "words having no reference to the character or quality of the goods and not being a geographical name" within the same section, as amended by the act of 1888, whether it is desired to register them in respect of the waters of the springs or of the products of those waters. Apollinaris Co.'s Trade Marks, In re, 61 L. J., Ch. 625; [1891] 2 Ch. 186; 65 L. T. 6—C. A.

Combination of Words in common use—Name of Individual or Firm—Brand.]—The plaintiff sought to restrain the infringement of a trade mark for note-paper registered in 1885, consisting of the words "Pirie's parchment bank." They disclaimed "any right to the exclusive use of either the word 'parchment' or the word 'bank' appearing in connection with this mark," these words being in common use in the trade as descriptive terms in regard to paper. The plaintiffs used the mark for a particular quality of paper, and they used it both on the paper itself as a water-mark, and also on the wrappers containing the paper. The defendants applied to have the mark removed from the register:—Held, that assuming that the disclaimer did not preclude the plaintiffs from claiming the exclusive use of the words in combination, and without deciding whether the mark was or was not a "brand" within s. 64, sub-s. 1, clause (c), of the Patents, &c., Act, 1883, the mark could not be supported under that clause, because it consisted only of words in common use, nor under clause (a) of the same sub-section, because the word "Pirie's" in the genitive was not the name of an individual or firm. Pirie v. Goodall, 61 L. J., Ch. 79; [1892] 1 Ch. 35; 65 L. T. 640; 40 W. R. 81—C. A.

iii. Distinctive Device, Word, Mark, &c.

What is—Word or Combination of Letters.]—A word or distinctive combination of letters is not "a distinctive device, mark, or heading" within the meaning of the Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 91), s. 10, and cannot be registered as a trade mark under the act. Stephens, Ex parte, 46 L. J., Ch. 46; 3 Ch. D. 659; 24 W. R. 963.

—— Series of Combinations of Letters.]—Where a manufacturer places on his goods a series of combinations of letters as trade marks, each of which serves to indicate to purchasers (1) that the goods are made by the persons using the mark, and (2) the quality of the goods as compared with the goods respectively bearing the other marks in the series, the marks, being exclusively used by the manufacturer, are valid trade marks, and may be registered, notwithstanding that they are indicative of the quality of the goods to which they are applied. Ransome v. Graham, 51 L. J., Ch. 897; 47 L. T. 218.

—— Single Letter.]—A single letter which has been used by a firm as a trade mark before the passing of the Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875, is not a trade mark within the definition contained in s. 10, and cannot be registered thereunder. Mitchell, In re, 46 L. J., Ch. 876; 7 Ch. D. 36; 26 W. R. 326.

—— Simple Medallion with Arms.]—A coat-of-arms in a medallion formed an important part of the trade mark of A. This medallion, with the same coat-of-arms, being proposed for registration by B. as his trade mark, A. sought to restrain the registration. The court refused relief, on the ground that the simple medallion could not be mistaken for A.'s compound trade mark. Farina, In re, 26 W. R. 261.

Signature with descriptive Words.]—Where M. applied to register as a trade mark his signature in combination with the descriptive words "Filtre Rapide," he was allowed to register his signature with the above words added, under s. 10 of the Trade Marks Act, 1875, but was compelled to pay the costs of the registrar, who was the only other person appearing on the motion. Maignen's Application, In re, 28 W. R. 759.

Portrait.]—The portrait of the owner of a trade mark may be a "distinctive device" within s. 10, sub-s. 1 (c), of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1888. Rowland v. Michell, 66 L. J., Ch. 110; [1897] 1 Ch. 71; 75 L. T. 498—C. A. But see Anderson's Trade Mark, In re, infra, col. 165.

"Distinctiveness," how Estimated.]—Semble, when a trade mark is claimed consisting of a device associated with certain words, those words may be regarded in estimating the distinctiveness of the mark. Dugdale's Trade Mark, In re, 49 L. J., Ch. 303; 28 W. R. 436.

Independently of Colour.]—Under s. 67 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, a trade mark may be registered in any colour or colours; but, having regard to s. 64, it must be a trade mark that is distinctive independently of colour. A trade mark of which the only distinction is colour cannot be registered. Hanson's Trade Mark, In re, 57 L. J., Ch. 173; 37 Ch. D. 112; 57 L. T. 859; 36 W. R. 134.

In 1872 H., a wholesale grocer, commenced using, for French coffee, a red, white and blue label, and in 1881 he registered it under the Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875, in class 42, for "coffee" only. The label as registered was shaded so as to represent three colours, across it being printed the words "Red, White and Blue." After the passing of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, H. applied for the registration of a red, white and blue label (in colours) for the whole of the goods in class 42, but the comptroller refused to register the label as not being sufficiently distinctive. On a motion by H. for an order on the comptroller to proceed with the registration:—Held, that, having regard to ss. 64 and 67 of the act, the label was not capable of registration as it possessed no distinctive character independently of the colours. Ib.

"Special and Distinctive Words."]—A "special and distinctive word" used in the definition of a trade mark in s. 10 of the Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875, means a word which distinguishes the goods to which it is attached as goods made or sold by the owner of the mark; and by using some additional words so as to induce the general public, as distinguished from persons in the secrets of the particular trade, who would not be deceived, to believe that goods so marked are of foreign brand and manufacture, the inventor of the original word is precluded from saying that such word is distinctive of his own manufacture, so as to be capable of registration as his trade mark. Wood's Trade Mark, In re, Wood v. Lambert, 55 L. J., Ch. 377; 32 Ch. D. 247; 54 L. T. 314—C. A. And see Harbord, In re, infra, col. 162.

An application was made for an order upon the comptroller of trade marks to register a mark having the words "Price's Patent Candle Company" in common letters round the upper border and "National Sperm" in the centre, with the address of the company round the lower border:—Held, that the name of the firm printed in common letters not being distinctive, the label did not fulfil the requirements of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, s. 64. Price's Patent Candle Co., In re, 54 L. J., Ch. 210; 27 Ch. D. 681; 51 L. T. 653.

The words "any distinctive word," s. 74 (1) (b), relate back to the words "Distinctive . . . or fancy word not in common use" in s. 64 (1) (c), and the word "distinctive" in the latter section must be construed as applying to all the words that follow it. "Distinctive" in s. 74 (1) (b) means "primâ facie distinctive," so that any word which, though primâ facie distinctive, is in reality common to the trade, must be disclaimed when registered as part of a combination. Burland v. Broxburn Oil Co., Burland's Trade Mark, In re, 58 L. J., Ch. 816; 42 Ch. D. 274; 61 L. T. 618; 38 W. R. 89.

L. opened in various parts of London, and in other towns in Great Britain, houses of refreshment, in which wines, spirits, and other liquors were sold by the cask, bottle, or glass. Previous to the year 1875 he employed in this business the word "Bodega" as his trade mark, and was duly registered under the Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875, as proprietor of such trade mark. Each of these houses was called and known as "The Bodega," the word having been also adopted and used by L. as a trade name, to designate the establishments conducted by him. He continued this trading and the use of the word "Bodega" until the year 1881, when he sold to the plaintiffs, the Bodega Company (Limited), his business and the goodwill thereof, with the stock-in-trade, and other assets including the trade mark "Bodega" and all right to use the same. Thenceforth the company continued to carry on business in the same way, using the word "Bodega" as a trade mark and trade name; and on the 23rd July, 1883, they were registered as the proprietors of the trade mark in succession to L. The company opened an establishment in the city of Dublin, and called it "The Bodega," and, by agreement between them and their co-plaintiff Riviere, the latter acquired all their right in respect of the Dublin house, and to the exclusive use of the "Bodega" brand in Ireland, and power to open any branch "Bodega," and to use the trade mark in Ireland. "Bodega" is a Spanish word, and is used to designate a building used exclusively for the maturing and storing of Spanish wines, and it would not describe an establishment for the retail sale of wines. In the year 1888 the defendant opened a public-house, or retail wine and spirit shop, in Belfast, under the name of "The Bodega Wine Vaults," and used labels on his bottles containing the word "Bodega" printed thereon. The name "Bodega" was well known to the trade and the public generally, as indicating that an establishment called by that name belonged to, and that the business thereof was carried on by, the plaintiff company or some person authorised by them; the wines sold in these establishments were of good quality, had acquired considerable reputation, and were sold at moderate prices, the same wine was to be obtained at all Bodegas, and at the same price, and the name "Bodega" was regarded as a guarantee of the respectability of the establishment so called and of the quality of the goods sold therein:—Held, that the word "Bodega" was a "special and distinctive word," coming within sub-s. 3 of that section, and s. 10 of the Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 91), that having been used by the predecessors in title of the plaintiffs before the 13th August, 1875, it was properly registered under those acts, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to the exclusive use of it as a trade mark in connection with goods of the classes specified in the registration:—Held, also, that the plaintiffs were entitled to restrain the use by the defendant of the word "Bodega" as a trade name. Bodega Co. v. Owens, 23 L. R. Ir. 371.

Before the passing of the Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875, the appellants used the words "Perry Davis' Vegetable Pain Killer" as their trade mark for a medicine manufactured and sold by them. After the passing of the act they registered the words "Pain Killer" as their trade mark under s. 10. Upon a motion to amend the register:—Held (by Lord Halsbury, L.C., and Lord Morris) that the words "Pain Killer" were not special and distinctive words within the meaning of s. 10 of the Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875, there being nothing to distinguish goods manufactured by the appellants from goods manufactured by other persons. Davis v. Harbord, 60 L. J., Ch. 16; 15 App. Cas. 316; 63 L. T. 389—H. L. (E.)

User before 1875—Name of Individual or Firm.]—Where the name of an individual or firm printed in ordinary type has been used as a trade mark before the 13th of August, 1875, and it points out the goods as being those of a particular manufacturer, it may properly be registered as a "special and distinctive" word or words used as a trade mark before the 13th of August, 1875. Hopkinson's Trade Mark, In re, 61 L. J., Ch. 387; [1892] 2 Ch. 116; 66 L. T. 487.

—— Primâ facie Right to Name—Onus probandi—"Family Salve."]—The plaintiffs had, for fifteen years and upwards, manufactured and sold a medicine under the name of "Reinhardt's Celebrated Family Salve," and in the year 1876 they registered the words "Family Salve" as their trade mark in connection with such medicine, under the Trade Marks Registration Acts. The defendant, in 1868, registered at Stationers' Hall a similar preparation under the title of "Spalding's Universal Family Salve," and he had since manufactured and sold the salve under that name. Both salves were sold in packets encased in wrappers bearing the above titles in full, but the wrappers were so folded that until the packets were opened the words "Family Salve" alone were visible. In an action by the plaintiffs for an injunction:—Held, that the words "Family Salve" were both a "distinctive heading" and also "special and distinctive words used before the passing of the act," within s. 10 of the Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875; that the plaintiffs having by the registration acquired a primâ facie right to the exclusive use of the two words "Family Salve," the onus lay on the defendant to displace that right; and that the defendant having failed to discharge that onus, an injunction must be granted. Reinhardt v. Spalding, 49 L. J., Ch. 57; 28 W. R. 300.

Separate User of Distinctive Words before 1875.]—In 1877 Perry Davis & Son were registered as proprietors of a trade mark consisting of the words "Pain Killer," in respect of which they claimed user for forty years prior to registration, in connection with a medicine sold by them. On an application by L. for the removal of the name from the register, the evidence showed that, although the medicine had been spoken of and ordered as "Pain Killer," it had not been sold under that name alone. The wrapper round the bottles, and a label attached to the bottles, described the article as "Perry Davis' Vegetable Pain Killer;" on the bottles were stamped the words, "Davis' Vegetable Pain Killer," and the government stamp attached bore the description "Pain Killer" alone:—Held, that as the words "Pain Killer" had not been used alone as a trade mark before the passing of the Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875, they were not a proper mark for registration under s. 10 of that act:—Held, also (by Fry and Lopes, L.JJ.), that the words were not "special and distinctive words" within the meaning of that section. Quære, whether words must be special and distinctive from their own proper nature or internal force, or whether they may acquire a distinctive character by user as applied to goods. Harbord, In re, 58 L. T. 695—C. A.

And see S. C., sub nom. Davis v. Harbord, supra.

In order to obtain registration of a word as having become "distinctive" within s. 64, sub-s. 3, of the Trade Marks Act, 1883, by user or recognition in the trade, such user or recognition must have been prior to August, 1875. Accordingly applications for a direction to the comptroller-general to proceed with the registration as trade marks of the words "Melrose Favourite Hair Restorer" and "Electric Velveteen," the use of which by the applicants would, independently of the act, by user and recognition in the trade since August, 1875, have been entitled to protection, were, in both cases, refused. Van Duzer's Trade Mark, In re; Leaf's Trade Mark, In re, 56 L. J., Ch. 370; 34 Ch. D. 623; 56 L. T. 286; 34 W. R. 294—C. A.

In order to entitle a person to register a trade mark under s. 10 of the Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875, consisting of special and distinctive words, or combination of figures or letters, used as a trade mark before the passing of that act, the words must have been used as a trade mark by themselves, and not in conjunction with any other device. In 1876 S. registered the words "Diamond Cast Steel," as a trade mark for steel and for files. The words were never used on goods by themselves, but always in combination with a device and a name. The words were, however, sometimes stamped on one side of the goods, whilst the device and name were stamped on the reverse side. Upon an application to rectify the register of trade marks by expunging this trade mark:—Held, that the case was within the principles upon which Palmer's Trade Mark, In re (infra), was decided; and that as there had been no separate user of the words as a trade mark, the same ought not to have been registered. and must, therefore, be expunged from the register. Spencer's Trade Mark, In re, 54 L. T. 659—C. A.

P. in 1876 registered "braided fixed stars" as a trade mark for matches, alleging that he had used it as a trade mark before the passing of the act. He also at the same time registered a label enveloping the boxes in which his matches were sold, which contained the words "braided fixed stars" in two places so as to be conspicuous on each side of the boxes, but also contained a number of other words. It was shown that at the time when P. introduced the term "braided fixed stars" the term "fixed star" was known in the trade as denoting a particular class of fusees, and that he had just bought a patent for enveloping the stems of fusees with wire by means of a braiding machine. This patent expired in August, 1881. It appeared from the evidence that P. had not before the act used "braided fixed stars" separately as a trade mark or otherwise than as a part of the above-mentioned label. In October, 1881, an application was made by a rival trader, to expunge the registration:—Held, that the registration must be expunged, for that to entitle P. to register these words as a trade mark he must before the act have used them as such alone, and not merely in conjunction with other words:—Held, further, that if they had been so used alone, they ought not to have been registered, for that they were only words properly descriptive of the patented article, and that P. had no exclusive right to their use after the patent had expired. Palmer's Trade Mark, In re, 24 Ch. D. 504; 32 W. R. 306—C. A.

A trade mark will not be registered as a trade mark in use before the 13th August, 1875, when the only user proved before that date was in combination with other matter. Baker v. Rawson, 60 L. J., Ch. 49; 45 Ch. D. 519; 63 L. T. 306.

In 1882 the word "Monopole" was registered as a trade mark under s. 10 of the Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875, as being a special and distinctive word used as a trade mark before the passing of the act. The user alleged was upon labels which contained the word "Monopole" in roman type, and below it "Heidsieck & Co., Reims," in a running hand, upon wrappers which resembled the labels upon corks round which inside the bottle the word "Monopole" was printed, "Heidsieck & Co." being printed round a comet at the bottom, and upon packing cases, on one side of which the word "Monopole" was branded, there being other words and marks on the other sides:—Held, on motion to rectify the register of trade marks by expunging the trade mark "Monople," that the word "Monople" had never been used alone as a trade mark before the passing of the act, and that its registration as a trade mark must be expunged. Richards v. Butcher, 60 L. J., Ch. 530; [1891] 2 Ch. 522—C. A. Affirming 63 L. T. 757.

—— "Heading"—"Valvoline."]—L. and E. invented in 1873 a process for making a certain description of lubricating oil which they called "Valvoline," and in that year registered in America as their trade mark the word accompanied by a device. In August, 1877, they registered the same trade mark in England, and in February, 1878, registered the word "Valvoline" alone as their trade mark. After this mark had been five years on the register they commenced an action against W. to restrain him from selling under the name of Valvoline any oil not made by the plaintiffs. W. moved to rectify the register by striking out the trade mark "Valvoline." The court came to the conclusion on the evidence that L. and E. had not used "Valvoline" alone as a trade mark, either in America or England, before the passing of the Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875, but only in conjunction with a device, and that "Valvoline" was a word invented to describe the particular class of oil at the same time as the process was invented, and was used as a descriptive term for that particular kind of oil. The process was not the subject of a patent:—Held, that a single word cannot be registered under the act, on the ground that it was used as a "heading," unless it was so used before the passing of the act; and that, therefore, the trade mark "Valvoline" must be removed from the register. Leonard v. Wells, Leonard's Trade Mark, In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 603; 26 Ch. D. 288; 51 L. T. 35—C. A. Affirming 32 W. R. 530.

—— User of Distinctive Words in Registered Trade Mark by other Persons at Time of Registration.]—The plaintiffs, who were brewers, in 1879 registered as a trade mark in respect of beer a label having on it a figure of "John Bull," and with the words "John Bull brand" printed on it. The mark was capable of registration. At the time of this registration L., a brewer in another locality, sold beer as "John Bull" beer, unknown to the plaintiffs; in 1890 L. abandoned the use of those words:—Held, that, assuming that L. in 1879 could have prevented the plaintiffs from obtaining registration of the trade mark, no one else had a right to complain of the use of those words by the plaintiffs. The court, therefore, refused to order any rectification of the plaintiffs' registered trade mark at the instance of a rival firm of brewers. Montgomery v. Thompson ([1891] A. C. 217) distinguished. Paine & Co. v. Daniell & Sons' Breweries, Paine & Co.'s Trade Marks, In re, 62 L. J., Ch. 732; [1893] 2 Ch. 567; 2 R. 491; 68 L. T. 891; 42 W. R. 40—C. A.

"Distinctive Mark."]—In 1861 the plaintiffs registered a design for the shape of blocks of black lead, being a cylinder terminated by a dome at one end. From that time they sold black lead in boxes, upon which a black dome was impressed, and they imprinted a dome upon each block of black lead. This they did without regard to the shape of the blocks they sold, and there was evidence that the term "dome black lead" had become known in the trade as denoting black lead of the plaintiff's manufacture. In 1877 they registered a black dome as their trade mark for "black lead." The plaintiffs having brought an action to restrain infringement of their trade mark, the defendants applied to have it expunged from the register :—Held, that there was no reason why a dome should not be a distinctive mark for black lead, that the evidence showed it to be in fact distinctive, that it was therefore capable of registration as a trade mark. James's Trade Mark, In re, or James v. Parry, 55 L. J., Ch. 915 ; 33 Ch. D. 392 ; 55 L. T. 415 ; 35 W. R. 67—C. A.

"Distinctive Label."]—In order that a label may be registered as a trade mark under s. 10 of the act of 1875 as being a "distinctive label," it must be a label distinguishing the goods of the person registering it from all others. Apollinaris Co.'s Trade Marks, In re, 61 L. J., Ch. 625 ; [1891] 2 Ch. 186 ; 65 L. T. 6—C. A.

—— Prize Medal—"Distinctive Device."]—A representation of an exhibition prize medal is not such a "distinctive device" as to be capable of constituting an essential particular, even though no other similar medal was granted for the same class of goods at the same exhibition. Semble, that a label which contains only elements which are themselves incapable of constituting essential particulars is not as a whole a "distinctive label" within the act, even though those elements are combined and arranged in a manner which is new and has been used by no other trader. Bryant & May, In re, 59 L. J., Ch. 763.

"Distinctive Device" — Portrait — Words Publici Juris.]—A device consisting of a portrait of the original inventor of the article sold, with words above and below it, the essential portion of which have become the common property of the trade and publici juris, is not a distinctive device within s. 10 of the Registration of Trade Marks Act, 1875 (repealed by 46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), and cannot be registered as a trade mark under that act. Anderson's Trade Mark, In re, 54 L. J., Ch. 1084—C. A. Affirming 26 Ch. D. 409 ; 32 W. R. 677.

—— Descriptive Words.]—Where one person registers under the Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875, a trade mark consisting of a distinctive device, together with a word descriptive of the article to which the mark is to be applied, another person is entitled, notwithstanding such registration, to register for the same goods a trade mark consisting of a different distinctive device, together with a descriptive word identical with or similar to the word comprised in the earlier trade mark. Horsburgh's Application, In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 237, n. ; 50 L. T. 23, n. ; 32 W. R. 530, n.

iv. Similarity—Calculated to Deceive.

Resemblance calculated to Deceive—Duty of Comptroller.] — Sect. 72, sub-s. 2, of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, provides that, "The comptroller shall not register with respect to the same goods, or description of goods, a trade mark so nearly resembling a trade mark already on the register with respect to such goods, or description of goods, as to be calculated to deceive." The comptroller had refused to register a trade mark in respect of linen and hemp piece-goods, on the ground that it too closely resembled three trade marks which had been already registered in the same class in 1876 and 1884. On a summons to direct the comptroller to proceed with registration of the trade mark :—Held, that, though it were a case in which the similarity might not be such as to induce the court on that fact alone to grant an injunction, it was the duty of the comptroller to consider, having regard to the course of trade, whether the trade mark so nearly resembled the other as to be calculated to deceive, and he would be justified in refusing to register a trade mark so nearly resembling another that registration would encourage litigation ; and that this trade mark was likely to mislead persons wishing to buy linen stamped with one of the earlier trade marks. Speer, In re, 55 L. T. 880. See also Price's Patent Candle Co., In re, post, col. 177.

The object of the acts which regulate the registration of trade marks is to prevent future litigation. Registration ought, therefore, to be refused to new trade marks which, by reason of their similarity to marks already on the register, are likely, if registered and used, to lead to litigation. Marks and Tellefsen's Application, In re, 63 L. T. 234, n.

Application was made for registration of a trade mark consisting of the design of a heart in combination with a number of words including "Parchment Bank," the whole inclosed in a rectangular line, there being on the register a trade-mark for the same class of goods consisting of the words "Pirie's Parchment Bank." The application was rejected on the ground of resemblance calculated to deceive. Goodall's Trade Mark, In re, 42 Ch. D. 566 ; 38 W. R. 189.

The defendants in 1877 registered as a trade-mark a device called a "winged cross." In practice they surrounded the mark with two concentric circles, like those which the plaintiffs used ; but they did not register the circles because they were common to the trade. In 1888 the defendants applied for the registration of the winged cross, surrounded by the circles, with a disclaimer of any exclusive right to the circles. The plaintiffs opposed the registration, on the ground that the mark so nearly resembled their own as to be calculated to deceive :—Held, that the registration could not be allowed. Baker v. Rawson, 45 Ch. D. 519 ; 63 L. T. 306.

Old Mark.]—An application made in November, 1884, by an American firm of oil manufacturers for the registration under the act of 1883 of a trade mark for illuminating oils, which mark had been used by them in America since 1872, and had been known in England as the "White Rose" mark prior to 1875, was refused by the comptroller upon the ground that there had been on the register since 1878 a similar mark for illuminating oils called the "Rosaline" mark, of which an English firm were the proprietors :—Held, that although there was enough similarity between the two marks to render it possible for the public to mistake the one for the other, yet as the "White Rose" was to all intents and purposes an old mark, it ought to be admitted to registration. "White Rose" Trade Mark, In re, 54 L. J., Ch. 961 ; 30 Ch. D. 505 ; 53 L. T. 33 ; 33 W. R. 796.

New Mark—Fraudulent User.]—Registration will not be permitted of a new trade mark which, although unobjectionable in itself at the time of application for registration, yet, from a previous association with fraudulent matter, is calculated to secure to the proprietor the benefit of the fraud. Fuente's Trade Marks, In re, 60 L. J., Ch. 308; [1891] 2 Ch. 166; 64 L. T. 196; 39 W. R. 489.

Upon an application to register as a new mark for tobacco a label which bore the words "Fuente —Vera Cruz" being a true statement of the name of the manufacturer and place of manufacture, but which words had, about the time of the passing of the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887, been substituted on the label for words stating, contrary to the fact, that the place of manufacture was Havannah:—Held, that registration must be refused. Ib.

Fraudulent User of Foreign Trade Mark.]—See Heaton's Trade Mark, In re, ante, col. 152.

Similarity—Mode of Determining.]—The proper mode of determining questions as to the similarity of trade marks is to compare them as actually used, e.g. impressed on metal goods. Jelly, Son & Jones's Application, In re, 51 L. J., Ch. 639, n.; 46 L. T. 381, n.

When comparing a trade mark tendered for registration with another mark already on the register or assigned by the Cutlers' Company, Sheffield, for the purpose of ascertaining whether the new mark so nearly resembles the old one as to be calculated to deceive, the court will have regard to the nature of the goods, to the nature and size of the mark, to the mode of affixing it to the goods, to the probable result in practice, and to all the circumstances of the case, and if, having regard to such circumstances, the new mark would be likely to be mistaken for the old one, registration will be refused. Rosing's Application, In re, 54 L. J., Ch. 975, n.—C. A.

R. applied for the registration of a new mark for cutlery and metal goods included in classes 12 and 13, such trade mark representing a part of his armorial bearings, and consisting of a curved horn, with a twist in the middle, and surmounted by two roses. The application was opposed by the Cutlers' Company of Sheffield, on the ground that the mark so nearly resembled a Sheffield mark for similar articles assigned forty-five years previously to H., as to be calculated to deceive. H.'s mark consisted of a curved horn, suspended by a looped cord. The marks were sufficiently distinct when printed in a large size, but the court of appeal being of opinion that, in practice, when the two marks were stamped in a small size on small metal articles, and having regard also to the probability of blurring taking place in the process of stamping, the one mark would be likely to be mistaken for the other:—Held, that registration must be refused. Ib.

L. had used from 1864, in respect of goods included in class 13, a trade mark consisting of the head of Minerva, down to and including the shoulders, the head bearing a helmet with ringlets hanging down behind. In 1884, being about to extend his business to class 12, he applied to register for that class the same head with the word "Athena" under it. This application was opposed by B., who had used from 1869 a cutler's mark, consisting of a head with the word "way" under it. The head had a sort of wig upon it, with small curls behind, and included the neck and part of the shoulders. In 1884 B. registered this mark under the act of 1883, as an old cutler's mark, but the design actually registered departed from the old mark which he used, the head on the register being an uncovered head with a few sparse hairs upon it, and taking in only a small portion of the neck and no part of the shoulders:—Held, that the question whether a new mark is so like another as to be calculated to deceive is to be decided by considering whether the new mark is so like the other that when both are fairly used one is likely to be mistaken for the other, regard being had to size, the material on which the mark is to be impressed, the effects of wear and tear, and other surrounding circumstances; that L.'s mark was to be compared with the mark B. had put on the register, not with the mark which he had used; and that B., whose evidence was directed to a comparison between L.'s mark and the mark which B. had used, which was much more like L.'s mark than B.'s registered mark was, had not made out that the new mark was calculated to deceive. Lyndon's Trade Mark, In re, 55 L. J., Ch. 456; 32 Ch. D. 109; 54 L. T. 405; 34 W. R. 403—C. A. Cp. Lambert's Trade Mark, In re, post, col. 178.

User in course of Trade.]—Where an application for the registration of a trade mark is opposed by the proprietor of an earlier trade mark already on the register, on the ground that the new mark has too great a resemblance to the old one, regard must be had to the way in which the new mark will be fairly used in the ordinary course of trade; and if, when so used, the mark will be likely to produce deception, registration will be refused. An application by F. for the registration of a device of a charging bison, which he used with many other details on wrappers on tins of mustard, being opposed by Messrs. C., the proprietors of a registered device of a "bull's head," which they used with other details on wrappers on tins of mustard very similar to those used by F., and the general style and colouring of the wrappers and some of the details being in common use in the trade:—Held, that F.'s mark, as it would be used, would be calculated to deceive, and that registration must be refused. Farrow's Application, In re, 63 L. T. 233.

Words in Foreign Characters — Limiting Registration to Goods Exported.]—Where there is already on the register a trade mark consisting of a representation of a golden fan, the court will not direct registration for the same class of a trade mark an essential part of which consists of the words "Golden Fan Brand" in Burmese characters. Dewhurst's Application, In re, 65 L. J., Ch. 618; [1896] 2 Ch. 137; 74 L. T. 388; 44 W. R. 672—C. A.

Consents given by the owners of similar trade marks to such registration are evidence that the mark is not calculated to deceive, but do not bind the comptroller's discretion as to allowing registration. Ib.

The court has jurisdiction to order registration upon conditions, but has no power to order that a registered mark shall be confined to use on goods exported to a particular country. Ib.

—— Invented Word—Similar Sound.]—The two words "Pearl" and "Pirle" must be treated on the same footing on the ground of similarity of sound, and the word "Pearl" being held not registrable as a trade mark, the word "Pirle," which is simply a mis-spelling of the word "Pearl," cannot be registered as a trade mark. Ripley & Son's Trade Mark, In re, 77 L. T. 495.

—— Colour not Considered.]—W. & Co. proposed to register as a trade mark for ale a triangle with a double outline, inscribing within the double outline the words "Beccles Brewery, Established 1830," the inner triangle having within it a conspicuous figure of a church. B. & Co., whose trade mark for pale ale was a plain triangle, which in use was coloured red, applied to prevent the registration of the proposed trade mark as being so similar to theirs as to be calculated to deceive:—Held, by James and Brett, L.JJ. (dissentiente Cotton, L.J.), that as W. & Co. would be at liberty to print their trade mark in whatever colour they pleased, and if printed on a red ground it would be so similar to that of B. & Co. that a purchaser might be misled, the registration ought not to be allowed. Worthington's Trade Mark, In re, 49 L. J., Ch. 646; 14 Ch. D. 8; 42 L. T. 563; 28 W. R. 747—C. A.

—— Rule not applying to Cotton Goods.]—R. applied for registration of a cotton trade mark, which was coloured, being a gold mohur. It had been placed in the first class by the committee of experts, and had been duly deposited for exhibition and advertised in the official paper under the Trade Marks Registration Act and rules, and the additional rules with respect to cotton goods. D. was the proprietor of a cotton trade mark, which was a silver rupee, and he opposed the registration of R.'s mark:—Held, that R.'s mark was not calculated to deceive, for in such cases the mark which is protected is the registered mark, which has been deposited, and of which the representation can be seen at the places mentioned in the advertisement. Robinson's Trade Mark, In re, 29 W. R. 31.

Under Act of 1875.]—The prohibition of s. 6 of the Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875, against registering, in connection with a trade mark, words, the exclusive use of which would not, "by reason of their being calculated to deceive, or otherwise, be deemed entitled to protection in a court of equity," refers to deceptiveness inherent in the words themselves, and not to deceptiveness arising from similarity to words comprised in other trade marks. A device having been registered together with the word "Valvoline" as a trade mark for lubricating oil:—Held, that a different firm might register for the same article the word "Valvoleum" in combination with a different device. Horsburgh's Application, In re, ante, col. 165.

The plaintiffs, who were manufacturers and vendors of condensed milk and other similar articles in 1876 registered, in respect of their goods, a trade mark, the distinctive feature of which was the representation of a milk-maid. Previous to this their goods had become known and were ordered by the public under the description of "Milk Maid" or "Dairy Maid" brand, and in 1884 they registered the same mark in conjunction with the words "Milk Maid Brand." In 1882 the defendant who carried on a similar business, registered a mark which, though not altogether like the plaintiff's mark, consisted of a drawing of a dairy-maid or milk-maid in conjunction with the words "Dairy Maid," the registration being in respect of a class of goods which covered those sold by the plaintiffs. He afterwards used this mark in the sale of condensed milk in tins like those of the plaintiffs:—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to an injunction restraining the defendant from infringing their mark, and also to have the register rectified by limiting the defendant's mark to goods other than those in respect of which the plaintiff's mark was registered. Anglo-Swiss Condensed Milk Co. v. Metcalf, 55 L. J., Ch. 463; 31 Ch. D. 454; 34 W. R. 345. See Jones's Trade Mark, In re, ante, col. 145.

Words calculated to deceive—Application of Words to a different Article.]—E. had for many years used the words "Fruit Salt" as his trade mark for an effervescing drink. D. applied to register the same words as part of his trade mark for a baking powder. E. opposed the registration as interfering with his trade mark and calculated to deceive the public:—Held, by Kay, J., and on appeal by Cotton, L.J., that although E. had no monopoly of the use of the words "Fruit Salt," and though the words were descriptive and not in themselves deceptive, yet that under the circumstances they were calculated to deceive the public within the meaning of s. 73 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, and that the trade mark ought not to be registered:—But held by Lindley and Fry, L.JJ., that although D. had adopted the words "Fruit Salt" on account of the popularity they had acquired through E.'s use of them, yet as D.'s trade mark was a totally different article, which did not interfere with E.'s trade, the court ought not to refuse its registration. Dunn's Trade Marks, In re, 58 L. J., Ch. 604; 41 Ch. D. 439; 61 L. T. 98—C. A. Affirmed, sub nom. Eno v. Dunn, 15 App. Cas. 252; 63 L. T. 6; 39 W. R. 161—H. L. (E.) Disclaimer of Exclusive Use.]—Where an applicant (whose bona fides was undoubted) applies to register a trade mark that in no way resembles a mark upon the register except in respect of certain words, the exclusive use of which is disclaimed by the registered proprietor and the applicant, such mark is not calculated to deceive, and should be registered by the comptroller-general of patents. Lyttus' Trade Mark, In re, 63 L. J., Ch. 52; [1894] 1 Ch. 193; 8 R. 87; 69 L. T. 690; 42 W. R. 251.

—— Star—Subsequent Registration of Words "Red Star Brand."]—Inasmuch as the registration of a device as a trade mark by s. 67 of the Patents, &c., Act of 1883, gives the registered owner the exclusive right to use the same in any colour, a mere description in words of the same device, although confined to some particular colour, cannot be subsequently registered by any other person in respect of the same class of goods. La Société Anonyme des Verreries de l'Etoile (Trade Mark), In re, 63 L. J., Ch. 381; [1894] 2 Ch. 26; 7 R. 183; 70 L. T. 295; 42 W. R. 420—C. A.

In 1876, B. & Co., who were export merchants in London, and were in the habit of purchasing glass in Belgium and shipping it from this country to the colonies, registered as a trade mark a star in connection with their window glass, which became known in the trade as "Star Brand" glass. In 1890 a Belgian company registered in England as a trade mark for window glass the words "Red Star Brand," having in 1885 registered in Belgium the device of a red star which they had ever since 1880 largely used on cases of glass sent to the United Kingdom. B. & Co. having been informed in 1893 that the Belgian company's glass was being sold in New Zealand under the description of "Red Star Brand," learnt for the first time of the registration of the mark in question, and they thereupon moved to have it expunged from the register of trade marks:—Held, that B. & Co. were entitled to have the mark "Red Star Brand" expunged on the ground that it was calculated to deceive, and that they were persons aggrieved within s. 90 of the Patents, &c., Act, 1883, and that there had been under the circumstances no such delay on their part in applying to the court as would preclude them from relief. Ib.

v. Old Marks and Three Mark Rule.

Old Mark Registered for Part of a Class—Registration of New Mark for other Goods in same Class.]—A new mark may be registered for some of the goods in a class, even though an old mark of a similar kind has been already registered for other goods in the same class, provided that the goods and the trades of the proprietors are sufficiently distinct for no confusion to take place. Braby's Application, In re, Shropshire Iron Co.'s Trade Marks, In re, 51 L. J., Ch. 637; 21 Ch D. 223; 46 L. T. 380; 30 W. R. 675. S. P., Jelley, Son & Jones's Application, In re, infra.

A mark which has been used before the coming into operation of the Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875, is an old mark only in respect of the goods on which it has been used. In connection with other goods it is to be treated as a new mark, and will not be granted registration if it clashes with another mark which is old in respect of those goods. Ib.

—— Registration of New Trade Marks resembling Old, by Leave of the Court.]—There being registered under the Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875, four trade marks including an anchor in respect of goods in class 42 of the first schedule to the rules made under the act, the court refused to give leave to register a new trade mark including an anchor in respect of goods in the same class, but different in character from those goods for which the four trade marks had been registered. Hargreaves' Trade Mark, In re, 11 Ch. D. 669; 27 W. R. 450.

—— Allowed if Dissimilar to other Marks on Register.]—The court will under r. 19 direct a trade mark to be registered, if satisfied of its dissimilarity to marks actually registered, without inquiring whether it be distinguishable from other marks the subject of pending applications to register. Dugdale's Trade Mark, In re, 49 L. J., Ch. 303; 28 W. R. 436.

Three-Mark Rule.]—Old marks, whether cutlers' marks or not, may be registered up to the number of three by different persons in respect of the same goods, even if identical; but this does not apply to new marks, and if the same old mark has been used in respect of the same goods by more than three different persons, it is a common mark. Jelley, Son & Jones's Application, In re, 51 L. J., Ch. 639, n.; 46 L. T. 381, n.

The question whether registration should be allowed or not ought to depend upon this: whether or not the party opposing registration would, independently of the registration acts, have been entitled to restrain the use by the applicant of the mark which he proposes to register. Farina, In re, 26 W. R. 261.

When a trade mark has been used by not more than three different persons in the same trade as an old mark—that is, before the 13th of August, 1875—each may register it. Walkden Aërated Waters Co.'s Application, In re, 54 L. J., Ch. 394, n.

When it has been used by one or two persons as an old mark, it can only be registered by another person as a new mark if the consent of the prior owner or owners is obtained. Ib.

Resemblance.]—Semble, that marks which so closely resemble one another that the use of the one might be restrained in an action by the owner of the other, will be treated as identical for the purposes of the above rules. Ib.

Common to the Trade.]—The rule of the court is to permit registration, under s. 6 of the Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875, of identical trade marks up to three, though, if more than three applications are made for the registration of similar trade marks, even though such trade marks are old, registration will be refused on the ground that such trade mark is common property. Benbow v. Low, 44 L. T. 875; 29 W. R. 837.

A mark which had been registered as a trade mark, is at the time of registration "common to the trade" when similar (though not in each case identical) marks are then in use by more than three persons engaged in the same trade, although in some of the cases the mark is not actually placed on the goods, but is only used on billheads, trade circulars, advertisements, or show-cards. Wragg's Trade Mark, In re, 54 L. J., Ch. 391; 29 Ch. D. 551; 52 L. T. 467.

When a trade mark has been used by more than three persons engaged in the same trade, it is common to the trade, and cannot be registered by any one. Hyde & Co.'s Trade Marks, In re, 54 L. J., Ch. 395, n.; 7 Ch. D. 724; 38 L. T. 777.

When a trade mark had been used by more than three different persons in the same trade, it is not distinctive, but common to the trade, and cannot be registered by any of them. Walkden Aërated Waters Co.'s Application, In re, supra.

The words "common to the trade" in s. 74 (1) (b) of the Patents, Designs and Trade Marks Act, 1883, must be interpreted in their ordinary grammatical sense as equivalent to "open to the trade," and are not limited or defined by the explanation in s. 75 (3) as "publicly used by more than three persons." Burland v. Broxburn Oil Co., Burland's Trade Mark, In re, 58 L. J., Ch. 816; 42 Ch. D. 274; 61 L. T. 618; 38 W. R. 89.

The plaintiffs and their predecessors had for a hundred years carried on a brewery at Stone, and their ale had become known as "Stone Ale." They had registered several trade marks which contained the words "Stone Ale" in combination with some device or the name of their firm; and in 1888 they registered as an additional trade mark the words "Stone Ale" alone. The defendant built a brewery at Stone, over which he placed the words "Stone Brewery," and when that was objected to by the plaintiffs, he altered it to "M.'s Stone Brewery," with a device containing the words "Stone Ale" and a monogram somewhat resembling the plaintiffs' trade mark. The plaintiffs brought an action for an injunction, and the defendant moved under s. 74 of the Patents, Designs and Trade Marks Act, 1883, to enter a disclaimer on the part of the plaintiffs of the exclusive use of the word "Stone," and otherwise rectify the register:—Held (1), that the word "Stone" was not a word common to the trade, and consequently the case did not come within s. 74, and the application for a disclaimer must be refused; (2) that, there being no evidence that the plaintiffs had used the expression "Stone Ale" by itself as a trade mark before the 13th of August, 1875, the plaintiffs could not register it as a trade mark under s. 64, sub-s. 3, of the same act; (3) that the plaintiffs had acquired by user a right to the use of the words "Stone Ale" within the principle of the Wotherspoon v. Currie (ante, col. 75), and that the conduct of the defendant being in the opinion of the court calculated to deceive the public into supposing that his ales were brewed by the plaintiffs, the plaintiffs were entitled to an injunction. Thompson v. Montgomery, Joule's Trade Marks, In re, Thompson's Trade Marks, In re, 58 L. J., Ch. 374; 41 Ch. D. 35; 60 L. T. 766; 37 W. R. 637—C. A.

Alteration in Old Mark—Essential Particular—Assignee.]—An assignee of a trade mark registered as an old mark is not entitled to have the name or initials of the former proprietor omitted, and another or others substituted, as they form a material part of the mark. Henry Clay and Bock & Co., In re, 62 L. J., Ch. 143; [1892] 3 Ch. 549; 3 R. 29; 67 L. T. 614.

Sufficiency of User.]—The applicants, who were iron manufacturers, had for a long period before the passing of the Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875, been in the habit of using as trade marks the letters B B H, which were the initials of the firm, and also the same marks coupled with symbols or words common to the trade, denoting the quality of the iron:—Held, that every mark, or combination of marks or words used as a trade mark before the passing of the Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875, which would have entitled the proprietor to maintain a suit for infringement against any person imitating it, may be registered as a trade mark under the act, and a trader is entitled to register a series of such marks which only differ from each other by combining in different modes a mark common to all of them and peculiar to the trader, with words merely indicative of the quality of the goods marked or symbols common to the trade, a note being in such a case entered in the register specifying the portions of the combination as to which no exclusive right is claimed. Barrows' Trade Mark, In re, 46 L. J., Ch. 450; 5 Ch. D. 353; 36 L. T. 291; 25 W. R. 407.

Held, on appeal, that the proper mode of registration was to register the trade mark B B H to be used either alone or with any device or words signifying the quality of the iron. S. C., 46 L. J., Ch. 725; 5 Ch. D. 353; 36 L. T. 780; 25 W. R. 564—C. A.

Where it appeared that the customers of a firm of H. & Co. had for many years been accustomed to ask for a certain article by the name of "Coker Canvas," but it did not appear that the words "H.'s Coker Canvas" had been stamped upon any of the goods of the firm or advertised as a trade mark:—Held, that there had been no use by the firm of the words "H.'s Coker Canvas" as a trade mark. Hayward's Trade Mark, In re, 54 L. J., Ch. 1003; 53 L. T. 487.

Semble, user before the act of a word as part of a trade mark, is not sufficient to render the word registrable as a mark. Rose v. Evans, 48 L. J., Ch. 618.

Whether the scientific name of a particular tree, limetta, is a distinctive word capable of registration as an old mark in respect of lime-juice, a product of the tree, or preparation of lime-juice—quære. Ib.

—— Alone, not in Combination.]—To entitle "any special and distinctive word or words" to be registered as a trade mark under the Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875, s. 10, they must have been used alone as a trade mark before the passing of the act and not merely in combination with other words. Davis v. Harbord, 60 L. J., Ch. 16; 15 App. Cas. 316; 63 L. T. 389—H. L. (E.)

P. in 1876 registered "braided fixed stars" as a trade-mark for matches, alleging that he had used it as a trade mark before the passing of the act of 1875. He also at the same time registered a label enveloping the boxes in which his matches were sold, which contained the words "braided fixed stars" in two places so as to be conspicuous on each side of the boxes, but also contained a number of other words. It was shown that at the time when P. introduced the term "braided fixed stars" the term "fixed stars" was known in the trade as denoting a particular class of fusees, and that he had just bought a patent for enveloping the stems of fusees with wire by means of a braiding machine. This patent expired in August, 1881. It appeared from the evidence that P. had not before the act used "braided fixed stars" separately as a trade mark, or otherwise than as a part of the above-mentioned label. In October, 1881, an application was made by a rival trader to expunge the registration:—Held, that the registration must be expunged, for that to entitle P. to register these words as a trade mark he must before the act have used them as such alone, and not merely in conjunction with other words. Palmer's Trade Mark, In re, 24 Ch. D. 504; 50 L. T. 30; 32 W. R. 306—C. A.

C. & Co. in 1876 registered as a trade mark the words "Excelsior Spring Mattress." In 1883 they commenced an action in the Palatine Court of the Duchy of Lancaster against B. to restrain him from using their trade mark "Excelsior." B. moved to remove the trade mark from the register on the ground that the word "Excelsior" had not been used as a trade mark before the passing of the act of 1875. It appeared that the word had been used on the bills and notices, but always applying to a mattress made under a patent of B.'s predecessors in business which expired in 1883; that it had been used in combination with a device of a man and a banner on metal plates which were affixed to the mattresses; that an indiarubber stamp containing the words alone had been made, and was usually impressed upon the side of the mattress, and that a photograph was constantly used in selling the goods which showed the mattress with a label attached, having on it only the words "Excelsior Spring Mattress":—Held, that there had been sufficient user as a trade mark and the mark was rightly put on the register. Chorlton's Trade Mark, In re, 53 L. T. 337; 34 W. R. 60.

Foreign User.]—In 1844 the predecessors in business of L. and K. invented a trade mark, and used it on all the articles manufactured by them. L. and K. registered this in 1880. M. now applied for the registration of a trade mark identical with that of L. and K., with the exception that he substituted his own name for that of "Murray and Lanman," which appeared in the original trade mark. He alleged foreign user since 1869, and that he had registered abroad, and claimed to have his trade mark registered here as an old mark under the "three-mark rule":—Held, that the resemblance between the two trade marks was so close that the later one must have been copied from the earlier one; that foreign user alone could not entitle the applicant to registration, or bring him within the operation of the "three-mark rule" as being contemporaneous user before the Trade Mark Act, 1875. Munch's Application, In re, 50 L. T. 12.

Abandonment—Evidence of Intention to Abandon.]—An application was made to register the word "emollio" as a trade mark in respect of "an article of perfumery," on the ground that the word was "a special and distinctive word used as a trade mark before the 13th August, 1875," within the meaning of s. 64, sub-s. 3, of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883. The word in question had been used on the labels in connection with a perfumed cream by the applicant's father and predecessor in business, who died in 1867. It was doubtful whether, subsequently to that date, there had been any sale of the article. In 1870 the applicant had destroyed all the labels which had "emollio" upon them, and the word was never subsequently used upon any perfumed cream. Since 1881 the applicant had sold a solid tablet contained in boxes, the covers of which were inscribed with "emollio tablet, registered." Certain price lists of perfumery dealers, issued in 1874 and subsequently, referred to emollio perfumed cream and emollio tablet. The registration was opposed by persons who had sold a soap by the name of "emolline," on the ground that the use of the word "emollio" as a trade mark previously to 1875 had been abandoned:—Held, that the use of the word "emollio" on the labels on the perfumed cream had been abandoned, not only by cessation of the user, but also by the destruction of the labels in 1870, whereby an intention to abandon was clearly indicated. Quære, whether a word like "emollio," descriptive of the effect of using the particular article, could be considered to be "used as a trade mark" within the meaning of s. 64, sub-s. 3, of the act; and also whether the use of the word as claimed would not be "calculated to deceive" within the meaning of s. 73. Grossmith's Trade Mark, "Emollio," In re, 60 L. T. 612.

vi. Words Publici Juris.

What are.]—The test whether a fancy name adopted by a manufacturer as a trade mark for certain goods has become publici juris is the question whether the use of it by other persons in connection with the same goods is calculated to deceive the public, so as to induce them to believe that in purchasing the goods so named they are purchasing goods of the original manufacturer. Consequently, a trade mark may have become publici juris among a certain class, as between the wholesale and retail dealers who will not be deceived by it, and yet may not have become publici juris as between the retail dealers and their ordinary customers. The misrepresentation, such, for example, as falsely calling himself a patentee, which will disentitle a person to relief in equity in respect of an infringement of his trade mark, must be such a misrepresentation as would prevent him from recovering nominal damages in an action brought to establish his right to the trade mark. Ford v. Foster, 41 L. J., Ch. 682; L. R. 7 Ch. 611; 27 L. T. 219; 20 W. R. 818.

Where a word which has been used by the inventor in connection with a particular class of goods, but has not been registered as a trade mark, is made use of by another, not with any fraudulent intention of counterfeiting the goods of the inventor, but to denote the quality and character of the article sold, and has come to be so understood, it becomes publici juris and cannot thereafter be registered as a trade mark. National Starch Manufacturing Co. v. Munn's Patent Maizena and Starch Co., 63 L. J., P. C. 112; [1894] A. C. 275; 6 R. 462—P. C.

Where the inventor, throughout a period of twenty-four years, during which he might have registered the word as a trade mark, takes no step to interfere with its use by other persons in a particular country while protecting it in other places, it may be presumed that it was his intention to allow the word to become publici juris in that country. Ib.

New Article named by Inventor.]—If a person who invents a process for making a new article invents at the same time a new name for describing such article, and the article comes to be known by that name only, he cannot afterwards, when everybody is at liberty to make that article, claim a monopoly in the name; therefore, the defendants were not, by using the name, "valvoline," which was the only name by which the substance in question was known, infringing any rights of the plaintiffs, or representing their goods as made by the plaintiffs, and that the fact that the plaintiffs had in consequence of the registration enjoyed a practical monopoly of the name for five years did not, as the name had been improperly put in the register, give them any better right than they would otherwise have had. Leonard v. Wells, Leonard's Trade Mark, In re, ante, col. 164.

Name of Patented Article.]—Semble, that the name by which a patented article is generally known, and which is therefore descriptive of it, becomes publici juris at the expiration of the patent, and cannot properly be registered as a trade mark. Ralph's Trade Mark, In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 188; 25 Ch. D. 194; 49 L. T. 504; 32 W. R. 168; 48 J. P. 135.

A patentee has no exclusive right to the use of words properly descriptive of a patented article, after the patent has expired. Palmer's Trade Mark, In re, 24 Ch. D. 504; 50 L. T. 30; 32 W. R. 306—C. A.

User in Combination — No Exclusive Right to.]—In March, 1885, H. began to sell a preparation for the manufacture of herb beer under the name "herbalin." In June, 1885, M. began to sell a similar preparation under the name "herbaline." H.'s trade was not large, and it appeared from the evidence that M. had not intended to appropriate the word "herbalin." In June, 1887, H. registered a trade mark consisting of a ship and the word "herbalin" under it, and subsequently brought an action against M. to restrain the infringement thereof. M. moved to expunge the word "herbalin" from the register:—Held, that the word "herbalin," being descriptive, could not properly have been registered alone:—Held, also, that though the word "herbalin" could be registered as part of a trade mark, inasmuch as it was (upon evidence) common to the trade, a note must be entered on the register that H. was not entitled to the exclusive use of the word. Humphries v. Taylor Drug Co. 59 L. T. 820.

Evidence as to—Books of Registrar.]—The books of the registrar of trade marks which show marks the registration of which has been refused, are not evidence that these marks are publici juris. Orr-Ewing v. Johnston, 13 Ch. D. 434, 442.

c. Practice.

i. Generally.

Discretion of Comptroller.]—The Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, confers upon the comptroller a discretion whether to register a trade mark or not, and he ought to refuse registration where it is not clear that deception may not result. Eno v. Dunn, 15 App. Cas. 252; 63 L. T. 6; 39 W. R. 161—H. L. (E.)

The comptroller is justified in refusing to register a label so nearly resembling another label already on the register as to be calculated to deceive, until the opinion of the court should have been obtained authorising him to do so. Price's Patent Candle Co., In re, 54 L. J., Ch. 210; 27 Ch. D. 681; 51 L. T. 653. See also Speer, In re, ante, col. 166.

Appeal to Board of Trade referred to Court—Evidence.]—Since the passing of the Trade Mark Rules, 1890, the board of trade may, on appeal to them from the comptroller, give directions as to evidence, or if the board refers the appeal to the court, the court may be left to direct what evidence is to be adduced. Roger's Trade Mark, In re, 13 R. 90.

Opposition to Application—Jurisdiction of Court.]—Where, upon opposition to an application to register a trade mark, the case stands for the determination of the court under s. 69, sub-s. 4, of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act of 1883, the court has jurisdiction to enter into and determine all questions arising upon the objections, including, in a case where the comptroller has already registered the mark, the question whether the mark has been rightly admitted on the register. Arbenz, In re, 56 L. J., Ch. 524; 35 Ch. D. 248; 56 L. T. 252; 35 W. R. 527—C. A.

An application was made by the Sanitas Company to register the word "Sanitas" as a trade mark for goods in class 3, under the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883. The comptroller-general refused to proceed with the registration, on the ground that there were already on the register two trade marks comprising the word "Sanitas." On the matter being referred to the court, in addition to the objection taken by the comptroller-general, two further objections were raised, and it was contended that no objections ought to be raised that had not been taken by the comptroller:—Held, that any objection could be entertained by the court, and that the refusal to register, based on the previously registered trade marks, was perfectly right. "Sanitas" Trade Mark, In re, 58 L. T. 166.

Discretion to refuse to direct Registration—Similarity to Mark already on the Register.]—When an application is made to direct the comptroller-general of patents to proceed to register a trade mark which has been objected to on the ground of its similarity to a trade mark already on the register, the court has a discretion to determine whether it will direct registration, though the case may not be one where the registration is actually prohibited by the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883. Australian Wine Importers Trade Mark and Mason, In re, 58 L. J., Ch. 380; 41 Ch. D. 278; 60 L. T. 436; 37 W. R. 578—C. A.

O. registered a trade mark for "spirits" in 1881, and another in 1882. In each there was a representation of a golden fleece, with the words "Golden Fleece," adding in one case the words "Old Jamaica Rum," and in the other "Pure Old Scotch Whiskey." In May, 1887, a company which had been formed in that year applied for registration of a trade mark for "wines," with the representation of a golden fleece and the words "Golden Fleece, Australian Champagne, Sparkling Verdeillio." M., who was O.'s successor in business, opposed the registration:—Held, that if wines were of "the same description of goods" as spirits within the meaning of s. 72 (and, semble, they were) the registration of the company's trade mark was prohibited by the act; but if they were not, still the similarity of the marks was such as, having regard to the similarity of wines and spirits, to be calculated to induce the public to believe the company's wines to be the goods of the same persons as M.'s spirits, and that the court ought not to direct the company's mark to be registered. Ib.

Sheffield Register—Old Corporate Mark—Jurisdiction of Cutlers' Company.]—The Cutlers' Company, on the application of L., registered in the Sheffield Registry an old corporate mark of a pipe and dart, of which he was primâ facie owner, notwithstanding notice of opposition by W., the owner of the mark of a pipe only, and without hearing W. W. appealed to the comptroller, who decided that no appeal lay to him against the registration. W. then applied to the court:—Held, that the Cutlers' Company acted rightly in registering L.'s mark without hearing W. in opposition, as the registration was a ministerial duty under sub-s. 2 of s. 81 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883; that there was no appeal to the comptroller; and that L.'s mark was not so similar to that of W. as to be calculated to deceive. Lambert's Trade Mark, In re, 37 W. R. 154.

On an application for registration for metal goods in class 5 which were not included in the Cutlers' Company's Act:—Held, that the Cutlers'

Company were not entitled to oppose with respect to goods not included in their acts, and that registration in class 5, limited to the specified articles, should be allowed. Rosing's Application, In re, 54 L. J., Ch. 975, n.—C. A.

Refusal by Comptroller to Register—Appeal—Board of Trade.]—A person whose application to register a trade mark has been refused by the comptroller cannot appeal direct to the court from such refusal, as a person aggrieved by the omission of his name from the register under s. 90 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, but must take the special course prescribed by s. 62, sub-s. 4, of appealing to the board of trade from the comptroller's decision. "Normal" Trade Mark, In re, 56 L. J., Ch. 513; 35 Ch. D. 231; 56 L. T. 246; 35 W. R. 464—C. A.

House of Lords varying Original Order of Court.]—Where, under the provisions of the Trade Marks Registration Acts, the registrar cannot proceed with the registration of certain marks without the leave of the court, and the original order of the court is varied by the house of lords, it is necessary that the order of the house of lords should be made an order of the chancery division of the high court. Orr-Ewing's Trade Marks, In re, 28 W. R. 412.

Appointment of Agent—Notices—Fresh Application.]—There is nothing in the Trade Marks Act of 1883 to take away the common law right of an applicant for registration who is sui juris to appoint an agent for all the purposes of his application, and if he does so the notices required by the act may properly be sent to him through such agent. If such agent does not inform the applicant of notices received the applicant is entitled to make a fresh application for registration notwithstanding s. 76 of the act of 1883. Jackson v. Napper, Schmidt's Trade Mark. In re, 56 L. J., Ch. 406; 35 Ch. D. 162; 55 L. T. 836; 35 W. R. 228.

Registration not completed within Twelve Months—Abandonment.]—An application for registration of a trade mark was made in the year 1879, but registration was not effected until February, 1885, after the commencement of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883. Sect. 63 of that act provides that "where the registration of a trade mark has not been and shall not be completed within twelve months from the date of the application, by reason of default on the part of the applicant, the application shall be deemed to be abandoned;" and s. 113 provides that the repeal of previous enactments therein contained shall not affect any application pending:—Held, that the effect of s. 63 and s. 113 read together was that such pending applications for registration as were not completed by registration within the period of twelve months prescribed by s. 63 came within the operation of the last-mentioned section, that the registrar of trade marks was therefore bound to treat the application as abandoned, and that the mark was improperly registered. Hayward's Trade Mark, In re, 54 L. J., Ch. 1003; 53 L. T. 487.

Sect. 63 of the Trade Marks Act of 1883 is retrospective in its operation. S., a foreigner, applied in 1876, through an English trade-mark society, for registration of a trade mark. The Cutlers' Company gave notice of a similar mark which had been assigned by them, and the registrar thereupon wrote to S., at the society's address, to say that he could not proceed with the application until S. had obtained the leave of the court. This letter was never communicated to S. by the society, who proceeded no further with the application; but S. having seen the advertisement of his application in the "Trade Marks Journal," believed that his mark had been registered, and N., an agent of his, sold goods in England marked with his mark. In the year 1877 the plaintiffs registered a mark resembling the cutlers' mark, and in 1883 brought an action against N. to restrain him from infringement, and S., finding his mark was not on the register, then made a fresh application for registration:—Held, that S. was "in default," and that his original application must be deemed to have been "abandoned" within the meaning of s. 63 of the act of 1883, and could not now be proceeded with. Jackson v. Napper, supra.

Application by Foreigner—Mark Registered Abroad—Foreign Registration more than Four Months before Application in England.]—In 1885 an American company registered in America a trade mark which had been used by them in that country since 1879. In 1888 they applied for registration of the same mark in England, under s. 103, sub-s. 3, of the Patents, &c., Act, 1883, which provides that a person who has applied for registration of a trade mark in any foreign state with the government of which her majesty is pleased to make any arrangement for the mutual protection of trade marks shall be entitled to registration in this country, provided that his application is made within four months of his applying for registration in the foreign state. At the passing of the act of 1883 no such arrangement existed between this country and the government of any foreign state, but a convention had in 1883 been entered into between certain countries, to which it was contemplated this country might accede, and which was in fact acceded to by this country in 1884, and by America in 1887. It provided that every trade mark registered in the country of origin should be admitted for registration in the other countries of the union:—Held, that the terms of the convention were not carried out by the statute, but that the application could only be dealt with under the statute, according to the true construction of which the application to register in this country, not having been made within the prescribed time, must fail. Californian Fig Syrup Co.'s Trade Mark, In re, 58 L. J., Ch. 341; 40 Ch. D. 620; 60 L. T. 590; 37 W. R. 268.

Cancelling of Registration—Lapse of Five Years—Registration of Mark not authorised to be Registered.]—P. registered "braided fixed stars" as a trade mark for matches. After the expiration of five years another manufacturer applied to cancel the registration, on the ground that the words could not be registered as a trade mark, for that "fixed stars" was a name well known in the trade for a particular description of matches before P. used the alleged trade mark, and that the words "braided fixed stars" were only a proper description of a kind of matches made by P. under a patent which had recently expired, and which matches were at the time of the registration well known in the trade by that name, and differed from the "fixed stars" formerly known by having a braided stem, which was the subject of the patent:—Held, by Chitty, J., that even if s. 3 of the Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875, did not make the lapse of five years conclusive evidence that the alleged trade mark was a proper trade mark, which, semble, it did, it at all events excluded evidence to show that words which primâ facie appeared to be fancy words and proper to constitute a trade mark were not capable of constituting one. His lordship therefore declined to hear evidence on the subject, and refused the application. But held, on appeal, that a mark which is not authorised to be registered as a trade mark does not acquire the character of a trade mark by being on the register for five years, and may be removed from the register though that period has elapsed, and that evidence ought therefore to have been admitted which went to show that at the time of the registration the words "braided fixed stars" were merely descriptive of a kind of matches well known in the trade. Palmer's Application, In re, 51 L. J., Ch. 673; 21 Ch. D. 47; 46 L. T. 787; 46 J. P. 772—C. A.

Whether a person sued for using a name which has been five years on the register as a trade mark can defend himself on the ground that it is not a trade mark, quære. Ib.

Registration as to particular Articles in Class.]—A trade mark registered under one of the classes given by the rules, but in respect to some particular articles in that class, will be protected under the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, as to those articles only. Jay v. Ladler, 40 Ch. D. 649; 60 L. T. 27; 37 W. R. 505.

—— Common Law Rights.]—The common law rights of a tradesman using a trade mark are not affected by the registration of the trade mark, so that, if he has acquired a right to a trade mark as to a certain class of goods, and the trade mark as registered is confined to a part of that class of goods, he will be entitled to protection for the whole class of goods. Ib.

Infringement Action—Joint Right to Trade Mark—Parties to Suit.]—A tradesman who carried on business at several places, by will bequeathed to A. his house of business at W., and to B. his house of business at L., and he had been in the habit of using a trade mark on the articles manufactured and sold by him. The privilege of using this trade mark had been infringed by the defendants. A. and B. instituted suits against these parties to restrain the further use of the trade mark by them. They both had prayed accounts against these parties for the goods sold by them having the trade mark. The defendants raised the question, by way of demurrer, that in both suits by A. and B., as they had not separately the exclusive right to use the trade mark, both were necessary parties in each suit:—Held, that the two suits were well constituted, and each could be maintained. Dent v. Turpin, 30 L. J., Ch. 495; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 673; 4 L. T. 637; 9 W. R. 548.

ii. Rectification of Register.

Jurisdiction—Registered Proprietor domiciled out of Jurisdiction.]—The high court of justice in England has jurisdiction under the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Acts, 1883 and 1888, to rectify the register of trade marks kept under those acts, notwithstanding that the registered proprietor of the mark affected is domiciled in Scotland or Ireland. King & Co.'s Trade Mark, In re, 62 L. J., Ch. 153; [1892] 2 Ch. 462; 67 L. T. 33; 40 W. R. 580—C. A.

—— Service of Notice of Motion to expunge—Registered Proprietor out of Jurisdiction.]—No special procedure is prescribed by the acts or rules as to the service on parties interested of notice of application to expunge a trade mark. Therefore it is sufficient if such notice is given as is required by natural justice. Where the registered proprietor of a trade mark registered in England under the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, was a British subject domiciled in Ireland out of the jurisdiction of the English court, and therefore could not be served with a notice of motion to expunge the trade mark, it was held sufficient to send him a copy of the notice of motion with a letter informing him that proceedings had been commenced which might affect his interests; and the court heard the motion and made an order, although the registered proprietor did not appear. Ib.

Onus of Proof.]—Where a person seeks to remove a trade mark from the register, the onus is upon him to show that it ought to be removed, but though his own evidence may be insufficient for the purpose, the onus is discharged if it appears from the evidence of the owner of the mark that it ought not to be on the register. Leonard v. Wells, Leonard's Trade Mark, In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 603; 26 Ch. D. 288; 51 L. T. 35—C. A.

Limiting Mark to Particular Goods.]—See Anglo-Swiss Milk Co. v. Metcalf, ante, col. 170.

Interlocutory Application before Trial.]—See Gianacli's Trade Mark, In re, ante, col. 147.

Application within what Time—Lapse of Five Years.]—The right to the exclusive use of a trade mark, after the expiration of five years from the date of registration, given by the Trade Marks Act, 1883, s. 76, is subject to and controlled by s. 90, and therefore any person who considers himself aggrieved by any entry made in the register without sufficient cause is not precluded by the expiration of five years from the date of such registration from showing that the mark ought not to have been registered. Lloyd's Trade Mark, In re, Lloyd v. Bottomley, 54 L. J., Ch. 66; 27 Ch. D. 646; 51 L. T. 898.

Sections 3 and 4 of the Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875, do not confer on the first or subsequent registered proprietor of a trade mark who has been on the register for five years the absolute right to the exclusive use of his trade mark as against all the world; the intention of the sections is merely to afford him assistance in bringing an action for infringement by dispensing with the necessity of his adducing evidence in that action of exclusive user; and the sections are no bar to an application under s. 5 to rectify the register on the ground that the trade mark is improperly on the register or should be restricted to certain goods. Edwards v. Dennis, Edwards' Trade Mark, In re, 55 L. J., Ch. 125; 30 Ch. D. 454; 54 L. T. 112—C. A. Reversing 1 Cab. & E. 428.

The registration of a mark as a trade mark and the lapse of five years do not, under s. 76 of the Trade Marks Act, 1883, confer on the person who has made the registration an indefeasible title to the use of the mark as a trade mark if, by reason of its being at the time of registration in common use in the trade, it ought not to have been registered. The lapse of five years cannot make good a registration which was in its inception invalid. A trade mark which was originally improperly registered ought even after the lapse of five years, to be removed from the register, because the registration might enable the person who has made it to commit a fraud. Wraggs' Trade Mark, In re, 54 L. J., Ch. 391; 29 Ch. D. 551; 52 L. T. 467.

—— Old Trade Mark or mere Design.]—A word which has been registered under the trade marks act as an old trade mark, and which has remained on the register for five years unchallenged, will nevertheless be expunged if it be proved to have been used prior to its registration not as a trade mark, but to specify a particular pattern or design. Harrison, McGregor & Co.'s Trade Marks, In re, 59 L. J., Ch. 22; 42 Ch. D. 691; 61 L. T. 484.

Material Misrepresentation.]—The plaintiffs in 1877 registered as a "new" trade mark the device of a lighthouse on a rock, enclosed in two concentric circles. The two circles were in fact common to the trade in which the plaintiffs were engaged. In 1888 the plaintiffs registered a label on which was printed (inter alia) their trade mark. In their application for this registration they stated that they had used the label for upwards of ten years before August, 1875. This statement was in fact untrue, inasmuch as they had not used the trade mark till 1877, and they had not used the rest of the label before 1870. In the opinion of the court the misstatement was not made fraudulently, but through carelessness. In 1888 the plaintiffs brought an action against the defendants (who were engaged in the same trade) for infringement of both the trade mark and the label. The defendants then moved to expunge both registrations:—Held (as to the trade mark), that by reason of the circles being in common use in the trade, the lighthouse with the circles ought never to have been registered, and that, therefore, the lapse of five years since the registration was not, under s. 76 of the Trades Mark Act of 1883, a bar to the defendants' application:—Held (as to the label), that the registration must be expunged, on the ground that it had been obtained by means of material misrepresentation. Baker v. Rawson, 45 Ch. D. 519; 63 L. T. 306.

—— Overlooking Advertisement.]—There is no obligation on persons interested to see an advertisement in the "Trade Marks Journal" of an application for registration, and the fact that they have not seen such an advertisement or opposed the application is no bar to their applying to have the mark removed from the register after the registration is complete. Hyde & Co.'s Trade Mark, In re, 54 L. J., Ch. 395, n.; 7 Ch. D. 724; 38 L. T. 777.

Non-user—Abandonment.]—In order to deprive a manufacturer of his right to a trade mark, the use of which has been practically given up for a period of five years, mere discontinuance of user for lack of demand, though coupled with non-registration, and non-assertion of any right is not enough; there must be evidence of distinct intention to abandon. In 1874, A., a German soap manufacturer, adopted a trade mark for a particular kind of soap, which for about two years was manufactured and sent to this country in large quantities for exportation to Australia, but from 1876 until 1882 the manufacture and sale of soap thus marked fell off, until it practically ceased, and the existence of the particular mark was in May, 1882, forgotten by A. In 1880, B., a manufacturer of soap in the same part of Germany, adopted, in complete ignorance of A.'s mark, a precisely similar mark for soap sent to this country for exportation to Australia, and in August, 1880, he registered his mark under the trade marks act in this country. In July, 1882, after the commencement of proceedings by B. to restrain an infringement of his registered trade mark by A., A. applied for registration of his mark of 1874. Upon application (1) by B. to restrain this infringement of his trade mark; (2) by A. to have his trade mark registered; (3) by A. to have B.'s trade mark removed from the register:—Held (1), that mere non-user by A. of his mark between 1876 and 1882, though coupled with non-registration, did not, having regard to the fact that he had not ceased to carry on his business, and had not broken up the mould, and that a number indicating soap thus marked was retained on his price lists, did not amount to an abandonment by A. of the mark, so as to give B. any exclusive right to his registered mark. (2) That the existence upon the register of B.'s mark did not prevent the court from granting leave for the registration of A.'s mark. (3) That previous bonâ fide registration of B.'s mark in ignorance of any claim by A., followed by large dealings under that mark, prevented A., after the lapse of two years, from getting B.'s mark expunged from the register. Monson v. Boehm, 53 L. J., Ch. 932; 26 Ch. D. 398; 50 L. T. 784; 32 W. R. 612.

Extension of Time.]—Where an application for registration of a trade mark was abandoned within the meaning of s. 63 of the Trade Marks Act, 1883, the court in exercise of the discretion given by s. 90 of the act, instead of directing the mark to be expunged, ordered that the register should be rectified by inserting an entry directing that the five years mentioned in s. 76 should begin to run from the date of such entry. Hayward's Trade Mark, In re, infra.

Mark calculated to Deceive.]—A firm of distillers registered as a trade mark for their cherry brandy, a hunting-scene in connection with the word "Sportsman." Their cherry brandy consequently became generally known as "The Sportsman's," and also as "Huntsman's" and "Hunter's" cherry brandy. Some years afterwards another firm of distillers registered a trade mark consisting of a hunting scene, and the words "Huntsman's cherry brandy." There was, however, no resemblance between the two hunting scenes:—Held, that, notwithstanding the dissimilarity in the designs, the latter trade mark was got up for the purpose of passing off cherry brandy as that manufactured by the proprietors of the first trade mark, and was calculated to deceive; and that the register must be rectified by striking out the latter trade mark. Barker's Trade Mark, In re, 53 L. T. 23. See also Blair v. Stock, ante, col. 156.

Where a trade mark contained the words "sole maker" immediately preceding words descriptive of an article, and it was admitted that the persons registering the mark were not the sole makers of that article, the court ordered the mark to be expunged from the register as being calculated to deceive. Hayward's Trade Mark, In re, 54 L. J., Ch. 1003; 53 L. T. 487.

Y. & Co. registered a trade mark for fermented liquors, consisting of three triangles, two placed on a third, the space in the centre being blank. J. B. subsequently registered another mark for bottled beer, consisting of three triangles interlaced, the space in the centre containing a stag's head:—Held, on the authority of Worthington's Trade Mark, In re (ante, col. 169), that, having regard to the use which the mark subsequently registered might be put to by being coloured, it was calculated to deceive, and that so much of the mark as consisted of the triangular arrangement must be expunged from the register. Biegel's Trade Mark, In re, 57 L. T. 247.

Misleading Use of Words "Trade Mark."]—An application by D., a British cigar manufacturer, to register as a new mark for manufactured tobacco a label containing the words "Star of Hope," and a picture, one item of which was a small six-pointed star, was opposed by W. as the registered proprietor of two marks for the same class of goods, one registered in 1877 as an old mark, and consisting of an eight-pointed star, the other registered in 1886 as a new mark, and consisting of a pictorial label, and by the side of the label an eight-pointed star, to which the words "trade mark" were attached. From 1870 to 1884 W.'s first mark was used, upon cigars manufactured for W. by an English firm, in conjunction with the name of a fictitious Spanish firm and the word "Habana"; but W.'s trade in cigars was merely subsidiary to his trade in packet tobacco, on which this mark was also used. W.'s goods were frequently ordered by the public as "star" goods. D. moved to expunge these marks:—Held, first, that D.'s mark was not calculated to deceive apart from W.'s claim to the exclusive right to the name and design of a star, and that it was entitled to registration. Secondly, distinguishing Wood's Trade Mark, In re (ante, col. 129), that W.'s first mark was not invalidated on the ground of deceptive user, inasmuch as the only representation made by the "star" was the true representation, that the goods were sold by W., and the user in cigars was comparatively small. Thirdly, that W.'s second mark was misleading by reason of the position of the words "trade mark," and ought to be expunged to the extent of the pictorial label. Dexter's Application, In re; Wills's Trade Marks, In re, 62 L. J., Ch. 545; [1893] 2 Ch. 262; 68 L. T. 793. Cp. cases, ante, col. 109.

Substitution of one Name for another.]—R. & Co., wine and spirit merchants at Cognac, for some years exported to M. & Co., wine and spirit merchants at Madras, brandy, which was sold by M. & Co. in India, with a label affixed, bearing a trade mark of a red Maltese cross, and the name M. & Co. This trade mark was first put on the bottles in 1875 by R. & Co. at the instance of M. & Co., but the court found that so much of the mark as consisted of a red Maltese cross had been previously used by R. & Co., and that the intention of R. & Co. was that this mark should be exclusively used by M. & Co. so long only as they took their brandies from R. & Co., after which it should be the mark of R. & Co. In April, 1879, M. & Co. wrote to R. & Co., requesting them to register the mark in England for M. & Co., but in September, 1879, R. & Co. registered the mark of the red Maltese cross in their own names. M. & Co. only discovered this in 1882, after the business relations between the two firms had come to an end, when they applied for rectification of the register by striking out the names of R. & Co. and substituting the names of M. & Co. as owners of the trade mark, but the court refused to strike out the names of R. & Co. on the ground that they had only registered their old mark, and not the mark used by M. & Co.:—Held, also, that even if the names of R. & Co. had been expunged from the register, the court would not, on their application, have inserted the names of M. & Co., inasmuch as the requirements of the Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875, and the rules thereunder as to advertisements, &c., in case of an application to register a trade mark, had not been complied with. Rivière's Trade Mark, In re, 55 L. J., Ch. 545; 53 L. T. 237—C. A. See also Wellcome's Trade Mark, In re, ante, col. 146.

—— Registration without Proprietor's Consent.]—M. obtained the registration in his own name of a trade mark belonging to L. without the knowledge or consent of L. Upon application for relief by L.:—Held, that the register could not be rectified by transferring the registration into the name of L. Marler's Trade Mark, In re, Lawrence, Ex parte, 44 L. T. 98, n.; 29 W. R. 392, n.

Entry in Wrong Name—Rectification or Fresh Application.]—Where trade marks belonging to A. were registered by mistake in the name of B., and an application was made by A. and B. that B.'s name should be expunged and A.'s name substituted, the application was refused so far as it asked for the entry in A.'s name, and A. was directed to proceed in the usual way to obtain registration. Kingsford, Ex parte, 61 L. T. 426.

The sole consignee in England of wines grown at the Auldana vineyards, registered in his own name the word "Auldana" as a trade mark in order to protect the wines coming from that vineyard during the continuance of the agreement constituting him consignee. He became bankrupt, and his trustee sold his business and trade mark to a company who procured themselves to be registered as proprietors of the trade mark; on motion by the holders of the Auldana vineyards:—Held, that the register must be rectified by removing the name of the company and inserting instead that of the owners of the vineyards. Australian Wine Co., In re, 61 L. T. 427, n.

—— In name of one Partner only Instead of that of Firm.]—A trade mark which was the property of a partnership firm was by mistake registered as the property of one of the partners trading under the style of the firm. Upon application to the court by the firm, it was ordered that the register be rectified by cancelling the name of the registered proprietor and registring the names of all the partners trading under the style of the firm. Rust's Trade Mark, In re, 44 L. T. 98, n.; 29 W. R. 393, n.

Certain trade marks belonging to a foreign firm trading with England had, owing to a mistake on the part of the managing members of the firm, been registered in the name of the senior member as sole proprietors. The senior member having died, and the whole goodwill of the business being the property of the firm:—Held, that the proper course to adopt was for the firm to take an assignment of the trade mark from the legal personal representative in England of the deceased. Farina's Trade Marks, In re, 44 L. T. 99, n.; 29 W. R. 391.

Rectification only in case of Error, not on Devolution of Interest.]—The provisions of the Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875, for the rectification of the register by the court, apply only to cases of mistake or error in the original registration, and do not extend to cases where devolution of interest makes it desirable to alter the registration of the name of the proprietor of a trade mark. Ward, Sturt & Sharp's Trade Mark, In re, 50 L. J., Ch. 347; 44 L. T. 97; 29 W. R. 395.

—— Old Mark—Change in Firm Name and Business Address.]—The court allowed the proprietor of a trade mark registered as having been used prior to August 13th, 1875, to alter it on the register by striking out the old firm's name and address and substituting the present firm's name and address. Brown's Trade Marks, In re, 8 R. 762; 71 L. T. 156.

—— Change of Proprietor's Name—Jurisdiction.]—A change of name of the registered proprietor of a trade mark authorises the comptroller to cause the new name to be entered on the register as that of a person who "becomes entitled by operation of law to the trade mark" within the meaning of s. 87 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, as amended by the act of 1888. Neither s. 90 or s. 92 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, applies to the case. Patent Plumbago Crucible Co.'s Trade Marks, In re (7 Rep. Pat. Cas. 282) (s. 90), and National Wholesale Tea Supply Association's Trade Marks (10 Rep. Pat. Cas. 164) (s. 92), not followed. New Ormonde Cycle Co.'s Trade Mark, In re, 65 L. J., Ch. 785; [1896] 2 Ch. 520; 75 L. T. 50.

—— Clerical Errors—Essential Particulars.]—A trade mark for sewing-cotton, as registered, consisted of a lion surrounded with the inscription in Russian, "Ermen and Roby, Manchester." The initial "E" was, however, in the English and not in the Russian character. The owners of the mark had for two years used it in the Russian trade, with the alteration of the English E to the Russian E, and with the insertion of the word "of" in Russian before the word "Manchester." The comptroller having declined to alter the register under s. 91, application to the court was made by the owners, under s. 92 of the Patents, &c., Act, 1883, for leave to add to and alter the registered mark in the manner in which it had been used, and the court acceded to the application on the ground that the addition and alteration were non-essential particulars. Ermen & Roby's Trade Mark, In re, 56 L. J., Ch. 177; 56 L. T. 230.

Alteration of Registered Mark—Old Mark—Omitting words "Trade Mark."]—Leave to alter the registration of old marks registered in 1878 by striking out therefrom the words "trade mark" was refused, because, first, the marks being claimed as old marks should be registered just as they were used, and the proposed alteration was a material alteration; and because, secondly, there being on the mark as registered an indication of an intention to claim the device only as the trade mark, the public were entitled to have the same indication of a restrictive claim retained on the register. Colman's Trade Marks, In re (post, col. 198), distinguished. Phillips' Trade Mark, In re, 61 L. J., Ch. 40; [1891] 3 Ch. 139; 65 L. T. 373.

—— Mark containing word "Patent"—Alteration by Striking out "Patent."]—Labels registered in 1876, as old marks, contained the word "patent" used in connection with the description of the article to which the labels were applied. The predecessor of the registered proprietors had carried on business, and had used three of the labels therein so far back as the year 1832, but it could not now be ascertained that any letters patent had ever been granted in respect of the articles to which the labels were applied. The registered proprietors of the labels now applied, under s. 92 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, for leave to alter the labels by striking out the word "patent," and substituting therefor, in the case of three of the labels, the word "perfect," and in the remaining label the word "polish":—Held, that the court has power under s. 92 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, to give leave to add to or alter a trade mark registered as an old mark; that an old mark must be registered, and must stand upon the register, in all substantial terms, as it was used before the year 1875; and that the word "patent" being an important part of the trade mark for advertising and trade purposes, was a substantial part of the trade mark, and ought not to be struck out. Adams' Trade Mark, In re, 66 L. T. 610.

—— Name or Initials of Proprietor.]—A trade mark registered as an old mark ought to be registered and kept registered just as it was used, and, in the absence of special circumstances rendering alteration necessary, no alteration of such mark ought to be allowed. The circumstance that the proprietor of an old mark, whose name or initials form part of such mark, has transferred to another person the business in connection with which the mark has been used, is not sufficient to induce the court to allow an alteration of the mark by substituting the name or initials of the new proprietor for the name or initials of the former proprietor. Henry Clay and Bock and Co., In re, [1892] 3 Ch. 549; 67 L. T. 614.

User.]—Whether a mark has been used as a trade mark before August 13, 1875 (so as to be entitled to registration as an old mark under s. 64 of the act), is a pure question of fact, and the evidence that the user of the mark has been confined to packing-cases is not decisive of the question.

The words "Yorkshire relish" by themselves having only been used on packing-cases containing bottles of sauce, and with nothing to indicate that the words were used as a trade mark or otherwise than as a description of the contents of the cases :—Held, that the words had not been used as a trade mark. Powell v. Birmingham Vinegar Brewery Co., infra.

—— Onus of Proof.]—On motion to expunge a trade mark registered in 1878 on the grounds (1) that at the time when it was registered, the words had become the ordinary name of the material, and (2) that they had not been used as a trade mark at any time, the burden of proof is on the persons moving to expunge the mark to prove the use of the words as the name of the article before the years 1875 and 1878; and also that the words were not used as a trade mark before 1875. Edgington's Trade Mark, In re, 61 L. T. 323.

—— "Person aggrieved" — Proprietor not "Engaged in any Business, &c."]—The assignee of a patent for a washing machine applied to it the name of "The Home Washer," and registered the name as his trade mark in respect of it. He did not manufacture the machines, or any other goods in the same class, but granted an exclusive right to a manufacturing firm who paid him royalties. They invented and patented various improvements in the machine, and after the expiration of the patent (six years from the registration of the trade mark) they continued to manufacture the improved machines, and to describe them by the old name, but paid no royalties, and the registered proprietor had not, after a year and nine months from the expiration, begun to manufacture, though he had been in negotiation with manufacturers to do so in conjunction with him :—Held, that the former licensees (against whom the registered proprietor was moving for an injunction) were "persons aggrieved" within r. 33, and that the mark must be removed from the register on the ground that, notwithstanding the negotiations, the registered proprietor was not "engaged in any business concerned in the goods within the same class as the goods in respect to which the mark was registered." Ralph's Trade Mark, In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 188; 25 Ch. D. 194; 49 L. T. 504; 32 W. R. 168; 48 J. P. 135.

Semble, that a patentee is "engaged in any business, &c.," so long as he receives royalties under his patent, even though he does not himself manufacture. Ib.

Trade Mark used by Foreign Trader.] — R. & Co. registered a trade mark for brandy in England. M. & Co., who carried on business at Madras, but neither carried it on nor intended to carry it on in England, applied to rectify the register by striking out the name of R. & Co. and substituting that of M. & Co. as owners of the trade mark, alleging that they, M. & Co., were the owners of the trade mark, and had instructed R. & Co. to register it in the name of M. & Co., instead of which R. & Co. had registered it in their own name:—Held, that assuming M. & Co. to have no right to register the trade mark in England, it did not follow as a necessary consequence that they could not be aggrieved by its being registered here in the name of another person, and that the case must be dealt with on the merits. Rivière's Trade Mark, In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 578; 26 Ch. D. 48; 50 L. T. 763; 32 W. R. 390—C. A.

Old Mark—User on Packing-cases only.]—The expression "person aggrieved" as used in s. 90 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883 (relating to rectification of registers), primâ facie includes any person who manufactures or deals in the class of goods in respect of which a trade mark is registered, and the onus of showing that such person is not prejudicially affected by such registration lies on the tradesman who has registered the mark. Powell v. Birmingham Vinegar Brewery Co., 63 L. J., Ch 152; [1894] A. C. 8; 6 R. 52; 70 L. T. 1; 58 J. P. 296—H. L. (E.)

—— Expunging though Re-registration possible.]—Where a trade mark has been improperly registered, and an application to remove it from the register is made by a person aggrieved, the mark will not be allowed to remain on the register on the ground that if it were removed it could (in consequence of a change of circumstances in the meantime) be immediately re-registered on a new application: inasmuch as an opportunity must be given to the public by the insertion of the usual advertisement in the "Trade Marks Journal," to oppose the new application on any proper grounds. Apollinaris Co.'s Trade Marks, In re, 61 L. J., Ch. 625; [1891] 2 Ch. 186; 65 L. T. 6—C. A.

iii. Opposition to Registration.

Opposed Application—Determination of Court thereon.]—In determining on an opposed application for the registration of a trade mark under s. 69, sub-s. 4, of the act of 1883, the court will not direct the comptroller to register a part of the proposed mark, but will only decide whether or not the registration of the mark, as applied for, is to be proceeded with. Meens' Application, In re, 60 L. J., Ch. 96; [1891] 1 Ch. 41; 63 L. T. 610; 39 W. R. 216.

—— Directions as to Manner of Hearing.]—The defendants in an action for infringement of trade mark having applied for the registration of the trade mark, which they had been restrained by injunction from using, an order was made that the manner in which the matter should be brought before the court should be by motion by the applicants to proceed with the registration, with liberty to either party to use the evidence in the action for infringement, and with further provisions as to evidence. Johnston's Trade Mark, In re, 43 L. T. 672.

—— Practice as to determining Mode of Trial.]—Where an application is made for registration of a trade mark, and such application is opposed by the proprietors of a registered trade mark, and the case stands for the determination of the court, under the Trade Marks Rules, 1876, r. 16, the proper course is for the applicant to apply in chambers for directions as to the mode of trial, and not for the opponent to move to restrain the applicant from registring his mark. Simpson's Trade Mark, In re, 15 Ch. D. 525; 42 L. T. 675; 28 W. R. 760.

Amendment of Notice of Opposition—Appeal referred to Court—Evidence—Jurisdiction.]—On an application to register coming on for hearing before the registrar of trade marks, the opponents wished to adduce further evidence, but the registrar refused to admit it, on the ground that it referred to matters not mentioned in the notice of opposition. The opponents did not ask for an adjournment or liberty to amend their notice of opposition, but went on with the hearing, and appealed to the board of trade from the order of the registrar allowing the registration. The board referred the appeal to the court, whereupon the opponents gave notice of motion for the hearing of the appeal, and they also gave notice of motion for liberty to amend their original notice of opposition. On the latter motion coming on for hearing:—Held, that the jurisdiction of the court was only to hear and determine the appeal; that, assuming that the appeal was from the refusal of the registrar to admit fresh evidence, the refusal was right, and that the court had no jurisdiction to give leave to amend the original notice of opposition. Robertson's Application, In re, 61 L. J., Ch. 470; [1892] 2 Ch. 245; 66 L. T. 873; 40 W. R. 569.

Restricted Mode of User—Undertaking—Note upon Register.]—W. applied for the registration of an old trade mark for goods comprised in classes 11, 12 and 13, having used the mark in connection with the goods comprised in those classes in a particular manner. His application was opposed by a firm who had for many years used, and had obtained registration of, a similar mark, which they used in a different manner from that in which W. used his mark, but upon the same classes of goods:—Held, that registration should be granted to W. on his undertaking (to be noted on the register) not to use his mark in the manner in which the opposing firm used their mark, nor otherwise than in the manner in which he had previously used it. Whiteley's Trade Mark, In re, 43 L. T. 627, n.; 29 W. R. 235, n.

Sykes & Company, of Edgeley, a firm of calico-bleachers, having applied for registration as cotton marks of two marks long used by them, the committee of experts placed the marks in the second class, as not being trade marks within the meaning of the act. The marks consisted of (1) a shield in outline, containing the figure of a swan and the letters "S. & Co., E."; it also contained three other letters, subject to variation, being indicative of the date of packing, and the hand employed to pack each particular parcel of calico; (2) a shield in outline, with the letters "R. S. E.," indicative of the former title of the firm, and varying letters as in the other mark. Bleachers' marks are used in a particular mode, being stamped within the fold of the calico before the parcel is stitched up. The committee considered the marks were not trade marks within the act, on the ground that the letters were not quality marks; swans are common marks in the trade, and borders must be disregarded. On application to the court:—Held, that registration of both marks ought to be proceeded with, and that with the registration there should be entered upon the register a note of an undertaking by the applicants not to use the marks otherwise than in the limited mode in which they had formerly applied them. Whiteley, In re (supra), followed. Sykes' Trade Marks, In re, 43 L. T. 626; 29 W. R. 235.

Sheffield Marks—Opposition to Registration—Duty of Cutlers' Company and Comptroller.]—W. and Sons were the registered owners of a trade mark of a tobacco-pipe (stamped on metal) in respect of class 12 in the schedule to the rules under the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883—viz. cutlery and edge-tools. L. was the registered owner of a trade mark of a pipe and dart (stamped) in respect of class 12, and also in respect of other classes relating to machinery and metal goods. Both were old marks issued by the Cutlers' Company many years ago. L.'s mark had been regranted in 1839 to X., a freeman of the company, and this was the last entry in the books of the company. No registration of this mark had been made under the Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875, in the London register established under that act for Sheffield marks. X. had assigned the mark to J. & Co., and on their business being taken by L., the pipe and dart mark had been assigned to a trustee for him. Sub-s. 1 of s. 81 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, provides for the establishment of a new temporary register of trade marks at Sheffield; sub-s. 2 enacts that the Cutlers' Company shall enter in the Sheffield register, in respect of cutlery and other steel and iron goods, marks on the register established under the act of 1875 belonging to persons carrying on business in Hallamshire or within six miles of it, and also enter in such register in respect of the same goods all the trade marks which shall have been assigned by the Cutlers' Company and actually used before the commencement of the act, but not registered under the act of 1875. Other sub-sections provide for the registration of new trade marks by the Cutlers' Company. Sub-s. 12 provides for an appeal to the comptroller by any person aggrieved by a decision of the Cutlers' Company, subject to a further appeal to the court. The marks on the Cutlers' register at Sheffield were to be put on the central register, and after a lapse of five years the new Sheffield register was to be closed. L.'s trade mark was not put on the register in the first instance by the Cutlers' Company, but on the 16th Sept., 1887, on application made by L., the Cutlers' Company entered the mark on the Sheffield register in the name of L. This application was opposed by W. and Sons, but the Cutlers' Company refused to consider their opposition, and the comptroller declined to interfere on the ground that he had no jurisdiction. W. and Sons then moved before North, J., to set aside the refusal of the Cutlers' Company and of the comptroller to hear their opposition to registration; or, in the alternative, to have the register rectified under s. 90 of the act of 1883, but North, J., dismissed the application on both points:—Held, that the Cutlers' Company and the comptroller had a mere ministerial duty to perform—viz. to enter on the new register the old corporate mark, and that their so acting was not a decision under sub-s. 12 of s. 8. Per Bowen, L.J.:—Even if the Cutlers' Company or the comptroller made a mistake, the court could not interfere on behalf of W. and Sons, unless some grievance had been thereby done them; and it was not shown that they had made out a right to ask for the interference of the court:—Held, also, on the question whether W. and Sons were or were not entitled under s. 90, sub-s. 1, of the act of 1883, to have the register rectified by expunging or varying the entry, that this question depended on whether the mark registered in L.'s name was or was not calculated to deceive; that there was no reason to suppose that, when used fairly and without considering any fraudulent user, which had not been alleged, and which the court apart from any question of trade mark could always deal with—L.'s mark was calculated to deceive; and that, even supposing that L. was not entitled to the old corporate mark, W. & Sons had failed to make out that they were persons entitled to relief under s. 90. Lambert's Trade Mark, In re, 61 L. T. 138—C. A.

iv. Committee of Experts.

—— Functions of.]—The committee of experts at Manchester, appointed under the trade marks registration acts, is not a judicial tribunal. It is appointed to consider and give an opinion on technical matters peculiarly within the knowledge of its members. But a person dissatisfied with the opinion of the committee may move the chancery division to consider it; and that court is not bound to adopt the opinion as conclusive, even though the court may have no reason to think that the committee has proceeded on a wrong principle, or has acted in an improper manner. Great weight is properly to be attributed to the opinion of the committee, but it proceeds ex parte, and the court may direct a full consideration of the matter before the registrar himself. Observations on the manner in which the court is to exercise this supervising authority. Orr-Ewing v. Trade Marks Registrar, 48 L. J., Ch. 707; 4 App. Cas. 479; 41 L. T. 239; 28 W. R. 17—H. L. (E.)

The decisions of the Manchester committee of experts, although entitled to weight on consideration, are not final, and must, if necessary, be reviewed by the court. Dugdale's Trade Marks, In re, 49 L. J., Ch. 303; 28 W. R. 436.

It is not the function of the committee of experts to decide questions of title between rival applicants for registration of identical or substantially identical marks, but to consider whether a mark offered for registration contains the particulars necessary to constitute a registrable trade mark. Ede, Ex parte, 28 W. R. 436.

v. Persons Aggrieved.

Who are.]—When a mere word not used as a trade mark before the trade marks registration act, is put on the register, any dealer who has used the word in his trade in connection with or as descriptive of an article in which he deals, is a person aggrieved by the registration within the meaning of s. 5 of the Registration Act, 1875. Rose v. Evans, 48 L. J., Ch. 618.

A person engaged only in trade abroad, and not alleging any intention to carry on trade in this country in connection with the class of goods for which a trade mark has been registered, is not a "person aggrieved" within the meaning of s. 5 of the Trade Marks Act, 1875, so as to be entitled to apply under that section for rectification of the register upon the ground that the registered proprietor has obtained registration in fraud of the true owner of the trade mark. Riviere's Trade Mark, In re, 49 L. T. 506.

The patentee of a washing machine having registered the words "The Home Washer" as a trade mark under the Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875, in respect of goods in class 6, which includes washing machines, afterwards granted an exclusive licence of his patent at a royalty. The patent expired in February, 1882, and the patentee not having for a period of over eighteen months been in any way engaged in business connected with the machine, brought an action for an injunction against the former licensees to retrain them from using the trade mark:—Held, that the former owners of the exclusive licence were persons aggrieved within r. 33, and that upon their application the mark must be removed from the register of trade marks. Ralph's Trade Mark, In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 188; 25 Ch. D. 194; 49 L. T. 504; 32 W. R. 168.

By reason of the action for infringement, the defendants, who were registered in one of the classes in which the plaintiffs were registered, were as to that class "persons aggrieved" by the plaintiffs' registration; the register must as to that class be rectified by adding a note, that so much of the plaintiffs' mark as consisted of the device of two circles was common to the trade. Baker v. Rawson, 45 Ch. D. 519; 63 L. T. 306.

In 1873 the owners of the German spring supplying Apollinaris water purported to give to the A. Company, in England, the sole right of selling the water in Great Britain and the colonies. In 1876 the A. Company registered the trade mark "Apollinaris," under the Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875. In 1878 the owners of the spring purported to give the A. Company the sole right of selling the water all over the world. The A. Company refused to supply the V. Company with the water, and bound their customers not to supply them. The V. Company moved to expunge the mark "Apollinaris" from the register:—Held, that, as the V. Company could not obtain the water except from the A. Company, the existence of the trade mark did not prevent them from doing anything lawful and possible, and that, therefore, they were not persons aggrieved within s. 90 of the Patents, &c., Act, 1883. Apollinaris Trade Mark, In re, 63 L. T. 162. See S. C. in C. A., 35 S. J. 153.

The object of the Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875, s. 5, and the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, s. 90, in requiring an applicant for rectification of the register of trade marks to be a "person aggrieved," is only to prevent the interference of common informers or of persons actuated by merely sentimental motives, and not to make evidence of great or serious damage a condition precedent to the right to apply. Whenever one trader, by the wrongful registration of a trade mark, narrows the area of business open to his rivals, and thereby either immediately excludes, or with reasonable probability will in the future exclude a rival from a portion of the trade into which he desires to enter, that rival is a "person aggrieved." If the effect produced, or likely to be produced, by the wrongful registration is not the exclusion, but the hampering of the rival trader, the rival trader is a "person aggrieved." Anyone who is in the same trade as the person who has wrongfully registered a trade mark, and who desires to deal in goods covered by the wrongful registration, is primâ facie a "person aggrieved." When one trader uses the fact of his having a trade mark already on the register as any part of his case against another trader in any legal proceedings—e.g. for the purpose of supporting an application for the registration of another trade mark which the second trader is opposing, the second trader is a "person aggrieved," and none the less so because he may have other means of defending himself. Apol- linaris Co.'s Trade Marks, In re, 61 L. J., Ch. 625; [1891] 2 Ch. 186; 65 L. T. 6—C. A.

The A. Company were owners of a contract with the owners of the German spring supplying Friedrichshall water, purporting to grant them the sole right of selling the water in Great Britain and the colonies. The owners bound their Continental customers not to export the water from the Continent, and a caution to this effect was printed on the labels and circulars. The A. Company registered the word "Friedrichshall" as their trade mark. The A. Company refused to supply the V. Company, and bound their customers not to supply them. The V. Company moved to expunge the mark "Friedrichshall" from the register:—Held, that the V. Company were not persons aggrieved, as, even if they were to import the water from the owners of the spring or their Continental customers, they would take with notice of the A. Company's rights under their contract with the owners. "Friedrichshall" Trade Mark, In re, 63 L. T. 162. See S. C. in C. A., 35 S. J. 153.

The V. Company moved to expunge the A. Company's mark "Hunyadi Janos," claiming to be persons aggrieved on the ground that the A. Company had threatened proceedings against them for selling a different water under the name of "Hunyadi Lazlo." The application had long stood over, and within less than three weeks of the motion being heard, the A. Company disclaimed the use of the words "Hunyadi" or "Janos," except in combination with each other, which disclaimer was repeated at the bar:—Held, that by reason of the threats the V. Company were persons aggrieved, but that the grievance was so far removed by the disclaimer that the court, having a discretion under s. 90 of the Patents, &c., Act, 1883, would not now entertain the motion to expunge. "Hunyadi Janos" Trade Mark, In re, 63 L. T. 162. See S. C. in C. A., 35 S. J. 153.

For some time prior to 1895 A. had been carrying on business in America, under the style of the B. Company, as a maker of cameras, registered in America as "Bull's-eye." The B. Company were in the habit of supplying these cameras to the C. Company—an English company—who claimed to be, but were not in fact, sole agents in this country. In June, 1895, the C. Company registered that trade mark in this country, and in August, 1895, the business of the B. Company was sold by A. to D. On a motion by D. to rectify the register by expunging the trade mark registered by the C. Company it was held that, as such registration appeared to have been effected without sufficient cause, D. was a "person aggrieved" within the meaning of s. 90 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, and rectification was ordered accordingly. European Blair Camera Co.'s Trade Mark, In re, 75 L. T. 63.

Under s. 90 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, requiring an applicant for rectification of the register of trade marks to be a "person aggrieved," any person who is in the same trade as the person who has registered the mark which is alleged to be wrongfully registered, and who may at some future time in the ordinary scope of his business desire to deal in the article covered by the registration, even though at the time of making the application to rectify he has no present or immediate intention or desire to deal in it, is primâ facie a "person aggrieved." Powell's Trade Mark, In re, 62 L. J., Ch. 848; [1893] 2 Ch. 388; 2 R. 456; 69 L. T. 60; 41 W. R. 627—C. A. Affirmed, 63 L. J., Ch. 152; [1894] A. C. 8; 6 R. 52; 70 L. T. 1—H. L. (E.)

The words "Yorkshire Relish" alone had, prior to 1875, only been used on packing cases containing bottles of sauce; the bottles of sauce themselves that were in these cases were marked with another trade mark:—Held, upon the evidence, that the user of the words "Yorkshire Relish" upon the packing cases had not constituted user as a trade mark prior to the passing of the Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875, and the words must accordingly be expunged. Ib.

And see Vignier's Trade Mark, "Monobrut," In re, ante, col. 149, and Gianacli's Trade Mark, In re, ante, col. 147.

Proceedings on Refusal to Register.]—An application to the court by a person aggrieved by the refusal of the registrar to enter his name upon the register as the proprietor of a trade mark under 38 & 39 Vict. c. 91, s. 5, r. 43, may be by way of motion that the register may be rectified by entering his name as such proprietor, two clear days' notice of motion being given to the registrar. Stephens, Ex parte, 24 W. R. 819.

By the Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875, the registrar acts under the direction of the commissioners of patents. By their direction the registrar refused to allow an advertisement in which the word "registered" was part of the proposed trade mark to appear in the official journal. The trade mark had in fact been registered under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 68. On a summons by the applicant:—Held, that the court could not order his name to be inserted on the register, there not having been the necessary advertisement; and that it could not interfere with the direction of the commissioners to the registrar. Meikle, In re, 46 L. J., Ch. 17; 24 W. R. 1067.

Part of Mark common to Trade—Note on Register.]—Where a trade mark, consisting of an essential particular, combined with a device common to the trade, has been registered under the act of 1875, the register may, on the application of a person aggrieved, be rectified by adding a note stating that the added device is common to the trade. Baker v. Rawson, 45 Ch. D. 519; 63 L. T. 306.

Wrongful Claim of Old User.]—Where a trade mark has been registered with a claim of user prior to the 13th of August, 1875, and such trade mark was in fact not used as a whole before that date, the mark will be expunged from the register on the application of a person aggrieved. Ib.

Expunging though Re-registration possible.]—Where a trade mark has been improperly registered, and an application to remove it from the register is made by a person aggrieved, the mark will not be allowed to remain on the register on the ground that if it were removed it could (in consequence of a change of circumstances in the meantime) be immediately re-registered on a new application; inasmuch as an opportunity must be given to the public by the insertion of the usual advertisement in the "Trade Marks Journal," to oppose the new application on any proper grounds. Apollinaris

vi. Common Elements—Disclaimer.

Practice as to.]—H. applied on the 28th of December, 1883, to register as a trade mark a label surrounded by a pattern of ornamental design, and containing in the centre a rectangular black space, bearing the words "Hudson's Carbolic Acid Soap Powder," in white letters. On the outside of the rectangular space were other words descriptive of the purposes and advantages to be derived from the use of the soap powder. This label had not been used before the application:—Held, that the application must be treated as being made under the act of 1875, and the court could not enforce as a term of registration, disclaimer of the words "Carbolic Acid Soap Powder," which were common to the trade and merely descriptive—that act having no provision similar to that contained in s. 74 of the act of 1883; that the label was a distinctive label and capable of registration as a trade mark under the act of 1875, but that only the label as a whole could be claimed as a trade mark, and that no right could be acquired by such registration to the exclusive use of those common words, however long might be the user of them; that, whether under the act of 1875 or of 1883, the fact of there having been no previous user did not prevent the registration—the act of 1875 having effected a change in the law previously existing by making the mere act of registration, as regards any of the particulars specified in s. 10, equivalent to the public user which before that act was the essence of a trade mark. Hudson's Trade Marks, In re, 55 L. J., Ch. 531; 32 Ch. D. 311; 55 L. T. 228; 34 W. R. 616—C. A.

When an application is made for the registration of a trade mark composed in part of distinctive elements and in part of elements common to the trade, the proper form of registration is to register the entire mark, and to add a note disclaiming the exclusive right to the common elements. Kuhn's Trade Marks, In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 238, n.

Objections having been raised by the owner of a registered trade mark to the proposed registration of another trade mark for use in connection with goods included in classes for which the first mark was used, but no formal opposition having been lodged to the application for registration, an agreement was entered into between the registered owner and the applicant that no formal opposition should be lodged; that the applicant should use his mark in connection only with goods actually exported to certain specified countries; and that he would, in connection with the registration, cause a note of this restriction on the use of his trade mark to be entered on the register. Upon an ex parte application by the applicant, in pursuance of this agreement, the court directed the comptroller of trade marks to enter such a note on the register. Keep's Trade Mark, In re, 54 L. J., Ch. 637; 26 Ch. D. 187; 50 L. T. 453; 32 W. R. 427.

Where a trade mark, not otherwise objectionable, contained words which were admitted to be common in the trade, the court directed the register to be rectified by entering thereon a disclaimer of the intention to claim any right of exclusive use of such words. Hayward's Trade Mark, In re, 54 L. J., Ch. 1003; 53 L. T. 487.

Two manufacturers of whiskey applied for registration of a trade mark consisting of (amongst other things) the words "Cruiskeen Lawn," and entered into an agreement that they should respectively be at liberty to register their trade marks, but that the user should be restricted, and that a note of the restriction should be entered on the register, with liberty for either party to apply as a person aggrieved for rectification of the register. The marks were registered without a note of the restriction. On the application of both parties an order was made for the rectification of the register by adding a note that the user was limited by the agreement. Notice of the rectification to be given to the comptroller. Mitchell's Trade Mark, In re, 54 L. J., Ch. 216; 28 Ch. D. 666; 51 L. T. 900; 33 W. R. 148.

The entry on the register of two similar trade marks in the same class, of a note that the use of the marks registered is restricted by an agreement between the respective owners (the effect of which is not stated) is irregular, and contrary to the provisions of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883; but a note of the mutual undertakings not to use the marks except in a certain manner and within specified districts may be entered on the register. S. C., 54 L. J., Ch. 809; 28 Ch. D. 666; 52 L. T. 575; 33 W. R. 480.

Time for.]—A disclaimer under s. 74 (2) of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, of the right to the exclusive use of a common particular must be made in the application for registration. Goodall's Trade Mark, In re, 42 Ch. D. 566; 38 W. R. 189. See now, Patents Act, 1888, s. 13.

Re-registration with Disclaimed Addition.]—A trade mark already on the register will not be reregistered with the addition only of a device common to the trade, which is disclaimed. Baker v. Rawson, 45 Ch. D. 519; 63 L. T. 306.

—— Alteration of Registered Mark by Omitting words "Trade Mark"—Terms.]—Proprietors of a number of labels registered as trade marks under the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, for articles manufactured by them, applied under s. 92 of the act for leave to alter the registration of their trade marks by striking out the words "trade mark" which appeared on the labels in proximity to certain portions thereof. The labels in question had been registered prior to the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1888:—Held, that the alteration as to new marks should only be allowed upon the terms of the applicants stating the essential particulars of their trade marks, and disclaiming any right to the exclusive use of added matter, in the same way as would have been required by s. 10 of the act of 1888 if the original application for registration had been made under that act. Colman's Trade Marks, In re, 60 L. J., Ch. 550; [1891] 2 Ch. 402; 64 L. T. 507; 39 W. R. 488.

—— Label—Trade Name—Refusal to Register without Disclaimer—Appeal from Comptroller.]—The whole name of a person who applies a trade mark containing his own name need not appear on the trade mark, nor need the whole name of each partner in a firm or the whole name of the firm appear on the face of a trade mark containing the firm name, but it is sufficient if the name is used fairly and bonâ fide on the face of the trade mark in such a way that it cannot be mistaken for anything else than the name of the owner of the trade mark and the manufacturer of the goods to which the mark relates. Colman's Trade Mark, In re, 63 L. J., Ch. 403; [1894] 2 Ch. 115; 8 R. 208; 70 L. T. 398; 42 W. R. 555.

The firm of J. & J. Colman, consisting of five persons, all of whom were named Colman, applied to register as a trade mark a label which contained the words "Colman's Mustard." They disclaimed the words "mustard":—Held, that they were not bound to disclaim the word "Colman's," as it was their "own name" within the proviso in s. 64, sub-s. 3 (i), of the Patents, &c., Act, 1883, as amended by s. 10 of the Patents, &c., Act, 1888. The doctrine apparently laid down by Lindley, L.J., in Pirie v. Goodall (ante, col. 158) not applied. Ib.

—— Own Name.]—The trade name of a business, to which an applicant has succeeded, is not "his own name" within the meaning of the proviso to s. 10 of the act of 1888, and, if it forms part of a trade mark (e.g. a label) sought to be registered, he may be required to disclaim it. Birmingham Vinegar Brewery Co., In re, 8 R. 237; 70 L. T. 646.

—— Crown—Coronet—Added Matter—Disclaimer of Right to Exclusive Use.]—The royal crown, of which the instructions forbid the representation, is the circlet surmounted by two arches which appears on the royal arms. A representation of a coronet is added matter within s. 74 of the act of 1883 and s. 16 of the act of 1888, the right to the exclusive use of which must be disclaimed. König and Ebhardt's Application, In re, 65 L. J., Ch. 404; [1896] 2 Ch. 236.

"Addition to Trade Mark"—Name of Company—"Smokeless Powder."]—Under the Patents, &c., Act, 1883, a trade mark for gunpowder was registered by the Smokeless Powder Company, Limited. The mark was a device or label in the form of a circular target or disc, supported on the one side by a figure of a sportsman, and on the other by a figure of a soldier in uniform. The disc contained an inner circle, within which were certain words and letters, together with figures of bullets or cannon balls. Between this inner circle and the line forming the outside of the disc appeared the words "Smokeless Powder Company, Limited," in large and conspicuous type. No right to the exclusive user of the words "Smokeless Powder" was claimed by the company. On motion by rival traders to rectify the register by expunging the mark, on the ground that the company should have entered on the register a disclaimer of the words "smokeless powder":—Held, that no disclaimer of the words in question was required by s. 74 of the act of 1883, because, first, they were not, within s. 64, sub-s. 1, and s. 74, sub-s. 1*a*, as read together, distinctive words, or a distinctive combination of words, but were ordinary English words forming part of the name of the company, and indicating that it made smokeless powder; and because, secondly, they were part of the whole device or label which formed the mark, and, therefore, not an "addition" thereto within s. 74, sub-s. 1:—Held, also, that the mark was not calculated to deceive within s. 73. The court therefore dismissed the motion, but under the special circumstances of the case dismissed it without costs. Smokeless Powder Co.'s Trade Mark, In re, 61 L. J., Ch. 391; [1892] 1 Ch. 590; 66 L. T. 407; 40 W. R. 507.

Injunction—Letters calculated to deceive—Effect of Disclaimer by Plaintiff.]—The plaintiff, W. R., a corset-maker, stamped his corsets in a particular way with the letters "W. R.," and by these and other means his corsets had become known in the market as "W. R." corsets. The defendants, also corset-makers, trading as "W. R. & Co.," sold corsets stamped with the letters "W. R." in precisely the same way in which the plaintiff's corsets were stamped, but with a get-up different in all other respects. The plaintiff moved for an injunction to restrain the defendants from selling their corsets as or for corsets of his make, and from marking their corsets "W. R." in such a manner as to lead to the belief that they were corsets of his make, and he produced evidence tending to show that the public and the trade would be deceived; but this was disputed by the defendants and their witnesses:—Held, that, having regard to the fact that the plaintiff had registered certain trade marks which contained the letters "W. R." with other added matter, and had in each case, after claiming matter which did not include the "W. R.," disclaimed any right to the exclusive use of the added matter, no interlocutory injunction could be granted. Rosenthal v. Reynolds, 61 L. J., Ch. 508; [1892] 2 Ch. 301; 67 L. T. 162; 40 W. R. 521.

vii. Costs.

Costs before Comptroller—Jurisdiction.]—The court has no jurisdiction to order an unsuccessful applicant for registration to pay the costs incurred by the opponent before the comptroller. Australian Wine Importers' Trade Mark, and Mason, In re, 58 L. J., Ch. 380; 41 Ch. D. 278; 60 L. T. 436; 37 W. R. 578—C. A.

Where an application to register a trade mark is unsuccessful, the applicant may be ordered to pay the costs of persons opposing the application from the time when, under the Trade Marks Registration Rules, r. 16, the matter is deemed to stand for the determination of the court, but cannot be ordered to pay any costs incurred before that time. Brandreth, In re, 47 L. J., Ch. 816; 9 Ch. D. 618; 27 W. R. 281.

Jurisdiction to Order Comptroller to pay Costs.]—Where the comptroller-general of patents unsuccessfully opposes an application for registration, the court has no jurisdiction to order him to pay the costs of the applicant, but may refuse to give him any costs. Leaf's Trade Mark, In re, 55 L. J., Ch. 740; 33 Ch. D. 477; 55 L. T. 254; 35 W. R. 99.

Costs of Registrar not opposing Application.]—Where the registrar is served with notice of an application to the court for leave to be given him to proceed with a registration, and he appears, but does not oppose the application, he must be paid his costs of appearance. Orr-Ewing's Trade Mark, In re, 47 L. J., Ch. 807; 8 Ch. D. 794; 38 L. T. 695; 26 W. R. 777—C. A. See also Maignen's Application, In re, ante, col. 159.

Costs of Appeal to Court.]—The costs of a successful appeal to the court from a refusal by the comptroller-general to register a trade mark must be paid by the appellant. "Alpine" Trade Mark, In re, 54 L. J., Ch. 727; 29 Ch. D. 877; 53 L. T. 79; 33 W. R. 725.

—— To Court of Appeal.]—The court of appeal has no jurisdiction to give costs against the registrar when the latter is unsuccessful. Rotherham's Trade Mark, In re, 49 L. J., Ch. 511; 14 Ch. D. 585; 43 L. T. 1.

Rectification of Register—Costs.]—If a person registers a trade mark to which he was not entitled, although he does so with a bonâ fide belief that he is entitled to it, and after due advertisement in the "Trade Marks Journal," and although no opposition is made to the registration, he may have to pay the costs of a motion to rectify the register by removing the mark. Hyde, In re, 7 Ch. D. 724; 38 L. T. 777; 26 W. R. 625.

On an application under s. 5 of the Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 91), to remove from the register a trade mark of H. & Co., who had registered it as an old mark after advertisement in the "Trade Marks Journal," claiming forty-one years' user, it appeared that for the greater part of that time the mark had been a common mark, and for about six years had been so to the knowledge of H. & Co., and that the applicants, who had long used the same trade mark, were not aware of the advertisement, and had not opposed the registration:—Held, that the trade mark must be ordered to be removed from the register; that there had been no laches on the part of the applicants, and that the respondents must pay the costs. Ib.

Where the registration of certain trade marks, composed in part of elements common to the trade, was ordered to be rectified, and the registered proprietor did not consent to the rectification but appeared by counsel on the hearing of the motion:—Held, that the respondents must pay the costs of the application, notwithstanding that no previous notice of it had been given them, and that they had sent notice to all the trade when their registration was effected, after which a year and a half had passed before the motion to rectify was made. Barrows' Trade Mark, In re (ante, col. 173), commented on. Kuhn's Trade Marks, In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 238, n.

But, semble, that if it had been proved that the common elements in the marks had become common solely by the former common piracy of the applicants for rectification, the respondents being foreigners, the latter would not have been made to pay the costs. Ib.

A person who registers a trade mark does so at his own risk, and if he registers one which is common to the trade it will be removed from the register on the application of the parties aggrieved, and he will have to pay the costs of the application. It makes no difference that he was the person who was the first to adopt the trade mark if it had become common at the date of registration. Hyde and Co.'s Trade Mark, In re, 54 L. J., Ch. 395, n.; 7 Ch. D. 724; 38 L. T. 777.

C. MERCHANDISE MARKS.

False Trade Description—Intent to Defraud.]—It is no defence to a charge against a person, under s. 2, sub-s. 2, of the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887, of having in his possession for sale, goods to which a false trade description is applied, that there was no intent to defraud the immediate purchaser, and that he was not in fact deceived. Wood v. Burgess, 59 L. J., M. C. 11; 24 Q. B. D. 162; 61 L. T. 593; 38 W. R. 331; 16 Cox, C. C. 729; 54 J. P. 325.

S., the original patentee, without fraud, sold in packets S.'s patent refined isinglass, a well-known article, which was really only gelatine:—Held, that he ought not to be convicted under s. 2 of the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887, of a "false trade description" merely because the description was not in the strict sense of the words an accurate indication of the material in the packet. To constitute the offence there must be an intention to mislead. Gridley v. Swinborne, 52 J. P. 791.

A patentee, who, after the expiration of his patent, continues selling the same articles under the description of patent articles, and with the royal arms on the wrappers, is not necessarily guilty of describing the goods falsely as the subject of an existing patent; it is a question of fact for the jury or the magistrate to determine. Ib.

The respondents, an English company, entered into a contract with her majesty's government for the supply within a stipulated time of 5,000 barrels of gunpowder of a description known as R.L.G.4. There was no stipulation in the contract that the gunpowder should be of respondents' own manufacture, or of English manufacture. The respondents were, however, manufacturers of the kind of gunpowder mentioned in the contract, and at the time of making such contract intended to manufacture the gunpowder which they had agreed to supply. Owing, however, to two explosions, the respondents' mills became useless for the time being for the manufacture of gunpowder; and in order to fulfil this contract the respondents imported the whole of the gunpowder from Germany, which upon its arrival at the respondents' mills, was placed in barrels supplied by the Government, and a label attached with the words "Chilworth Gunpowder Company, Limited," inserted in the place where the name of the contractor was required to be inserted. There was no indication upon the label that the gunpowder was of German manufacture, but the description of the powder was equal in quality to the powder manufactured by the respondents:—Held, upon the above facts, that the respondents had committed an offence under the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887, s. 2, sub-s. 1 (d), inasmuch as they had applied a false description to goods, and had acted with intent to defraud by reason of not having disclosed to the government the fact that the gunpowder was not of their manufacture. Starey v. Chilworth Gunpowder Co., 59 L. J., M. C. 13; 24 Q. B. D. 90; 62 L. T. 73; 38 W. R. 204; 17 Cox, C. C. 55; 54 J. P. 436.

Application to Goods—Place of Manufacture and Production.]—Where at his establishment in Ireland, the appellant Lipton sold ham, which had been manufactured in America under the descriptions (a) "Lipton's prime mild cure" and (b) "Finest quality smoked ham own cure at Lipton's market." These descriptions are not "a false trade description" within the meaning of the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887. Where the appellant sold ham as "Tracey's mild cure," Tracey being the foreman curer of the appellant:—Held, that the appellant was rightly convicted of an offence under s. 3, sub-s. 3 (c), of the act. Sub-s. 3 is to be construed disjunctively and not conjunctively as regards its subdivisions (b) and (c). Reg. v. Lipton, 32 L. R., Ir. 115.

—— Goods partly manufactured Abroad and finished in England.]—The country in which goods are made or produced within the meaning of s. 3, sub-s. 1 (b) of the Merchandise Marks Act, 1867, is the country where such goods received their finished form.

A person had in his possession for sale margarine packed in cardboard boxes, marked with the words "French Factory." The margarine consisted of a substance manufactured from animal fat at a factory in Paris, and sent thence to an English factory where, by admixture with Danish butter and English milk, it assumed the form in which it was offered for sale:—Held, that as the margarine became the finished product for the first time in England, the words "French Factory" on the boxes was a false trade description within the meaning of ss. 2 and 3 of the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887. Bischop v. Toler, 65 L. J., M. C. 1; 15 R. 607; 73 L. T. 402; 44 W. R. 189; 18 Cox, C. C. 199; 59 J. P. 807.

—— Cask of Beer containing less than Thirty-six Gallons—Invoice of "Barrel."]—Section 5, sub-s. 1 (d), of the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887, by which a person is deemed to apply a trade description to goods, who uses a trade description in any manner calculated to lead to the belief that the goods in connection with which it is used are designated or described by it, is not limited to cases in which a trade description is used in actual physical connection with goods. An invoice was delivered with a cask of beer of less capacity than thirty-six gallons, in which the cask was described as a "barrel," that is, a vessel containing thirty-six gallons. An information having been preferred against the brewer delivering it, under s. 2, sub-s. 1 (d), of the act, for applying a false trade-mark description to the cask:—Held, that the delivery of the invoice might be an application of a trade description to the cask within the meaning of the act; that if the justices held it to be so, the onus of proof was upon the defendant to show that he had acted without intent to defraud; and that upon this point the prosecutor was entitled to give evidence of previous transactions. Budd v. Lucas, 60 L. J., M. C. 95; [1891] 1 Q. B. 408; 64 L. T. 292; 39 W. R. 350; 17 Cox, C. C. 248; 55 J. P. 550.

Statute.]—54 Vict. c. 15, amends the Merchandise Marks Acts, 1887.

57 & 58 Vict. c. 19, enables the Board of Agriculture to undertake Prosecutions in certain cases.

D. DESIGNS.

Rules.]—See W. N. 1889, p. 362.

Previous Publication — Samples — Marking registered Designs.]—The inventor of a design for trimmings for corsets submitted it, before taking any steps to obtain registration, to his commission agent, who, in his turn, showed it to certain customers, and obtained orders to be executed at a future time. Registration was effected before any orders were executed. The trimming to which the design was applied was sold in lengths of several yards wrapped round with a paper band, on which were printed the word "Rd." and the registration number:—Held, that the design had been published in the United Kingdom previously to registration, and that the trimming was marked in accordance with the statutory requirements. Blank v. Footman, 57 L. J., Ch. 909; 39 Ch. D. 678; 59 L. T. 507; 36 W. R. 921.

Article erroneously marked—Proper Steps to insure Marking.]—Section 51 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, applies to the delivery on sale of articles to which a design registered under the act of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 100, has been applied, and the marking of such goods since the act of 1883 came into operation is regulated by that act. Consequently, the proprietor of a design registered under the act 5 & 6 Vict. c. 100, is in a proper case entitled to the benefit of the proviso contained in s. 51, which relieves him from the forfeiture of his copyright resulting from the omission to mark the articles with the prescribed mark, if he shows that he "took all proper steps to ensure the marking." The proprietor of a registered design instructed the manufacturer, who made for him the articles to which the design was applied, to stamp the proper mark upon them, and furnished him with a die for the purpose. By inadvertence the manufacturer marked some of the articles with a mark which belonged to another design registered by the same proprietor, the copyright of which had expired, using for the purpose by mistake an old die which remained in his possession, and the proprietor, after the act of 1883 came into operation, sold some of the articles thus wrongly marked, without observing the error. The letters "Rd." formed part of both the marks:—Held, that the proprietor had not forfeited his copyright, but that he was protected by the proviso in s. 51. Upmann v. Forester (ante, col. 138) followed. Wittmann v. Oppenheim, 54 L. J., Ch. 56; 27 Ch. D. 260; 50 L. T. 713; 32 W. R. 767.

What can be Subject-matter of Registration.]—Where a man claimed registration under the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, for the "pattern of a basket, consisting in the osiers being worked in singly, and all the butt ends being outside":—Held, that this did not disclose a proper subject for registration as a design, as it applied to the process of manufacture and to utility, and not to "shape or configuration or ornament." Moody v. Tree, 40 W. R. 558.

New or Original Design.]—A design is not a proper subject of registration under the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, unless there is a clearly marked and defined difference involving substantial novelty between it and any design previously in use. Le May v. Welch, 54 L. J., Ch. 279; 28 Ch. D. 24; 51 L. T. 867; 33 W. R. 33—C. A.

A design for a shirt collar was registered, the advantages claimed for which were—the height of the collar above the stud which fastened it in front, the cutting away the corners in the segment of a circle, and the absence of a band. A collar was shown to have been previously in use which had no band, in which the corners were cut away in arcs of circles; but the cutting away was not so wide, and the height above the stud was not so great, as in the registered design: —Held, that the registered design was not new or original within the meaning of the act, and must be removed from the register. Ib.

A design which, looked at as a whole, is an obvious imitation of a registered design, constitutes an infringement, notwithstanding differences in matters of detail which do not alter the general effect as judged by the eye. Harper v. Wright and Butler Lamp Manufacturing Co., 65 L. J., Ch. 161; [1896] 1 Ch. 142; 44 W. R. 274—C. A.

The registration of a design as applicable for pattern, ornament, shape, and configuration, may be good for the design as a whole, although in one particular — for example, shape — the design is not original; and if the whole design is imitated an action for infringement will lie. Ib.

The proprietor of a registered design for a stove, and of later registered designs for particular parts of a stove, sold stoves corresponding with the later designs as regards the parts to which they were applicable, and with the original design in other respects, having placed on such stoves the registered numbers of all the designs:—Held, that, whether he was right or wrong in so marking the stoves, there being no evidence that he had acted fraudulently with intent to mislead the public, he had not thereby lost his rights as registered proprietor. Ib.

A person who makes a slight addition to and omits an immaterial part from an old shape is not entitled to register the whole of the old shape with his alterations so as to secure a monopoly of the old part. Clarke's Registered Design, In re, 65 L. J., Ch. 629; [1896] 2 Ch. 38; 74 L. T. 631—C. A.

The application of an old design to a new substance used for similar purposes will not entitle it to protection. A shape common to all lamps used before electric lighting was introduced does not become new when it is applied to electric lights. Ib.

Common Source.]—In order that a design may be "new and original" within s. 47 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, the novelty and originality consist in the application to an article of manufacture of an idea, and are not destroyed by the design being taken from a source common to mankind. Adams v. Clementson (12 Ch. D. 714) questioned. Saunders v. Wiel, 62 L. J., Q. B. 341; [1893] 1 Q. B. 470; 4 R. 207; 68 L. T. 183; 41 W. R. 356—C. A.

Designs Rules, 1883—Different Classes and Materials.]—Where a design has been registered in one or more of the classes of goods specified in Sched. III. to the Designs Rules, 1883, for a particular article of a certain material, a similar design cannot be registered by another person in another class for a similar article made of a different material, as not being new and original within the meaning of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, s. 47. Read & Greswell's Design, In re, 58 L. J., Ch. 624; 42 Ch. D. 260; 61 L. T. 450; 38 W. R. 88.

A design already on the register may be registered in another class for an article applied to a different purpose, but not for an article merely of a different material. A design for a lamp shade made of china in the shape of a rose, was registered in one class. A design for a lamp shade made of linen, also in the shape of a rose, had previously been registered in another class: —Held, that though the materials were different there was no novelty in the china design, which must, therefore (following Le May v. Welch (supra)), be removed from the register. Bach's Design, In re, 42 Ch. D. 661; 38 W. R. 174.

Registration of Design "for Shape or Configuration" — Utility.]—The Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act of 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), consolidates the law relating to the copyright of designs, and by s. 60 "design" is defined as meaning "any design applicable to any article of manufacture or to any substance," "whether the design is applicable for the pattern, or for the shape or configuration, or for the ornament thereof." The pursuers registered a design for the shape of a kitchen range fire-door with a moulding on the top which had the effect of closing the range to cold air. The defenders manufactured a range fire-door with a moulding on the top which had the same effect:—Held, first, that the court of session in considering whether there had been an infringement of the copyright in the design for the shape of the fire-door were wrong in taking into account the question whether the defenders' design accomplished the same useful object (i.e. that of excluding cold air) as the design of the pursuers; but that there had been in fact an obvious imitation of the registered design and therefore an infringement of the copyright. Hecla Foundry Co. v. Walker, 14 App. Cas. 550—H. L. (Sc.)

Registration—"Proprietor."]—In May, 1885, G., who was acting as the sole agent and consignee in the United Kingdom, during the year 1885, of toys manufactured in the United States by an American company, and consigned to him by them, registered in his own name the designs in accordance with which some of such toys were manufactured. The company had authorised him to register the designs in his own name, but had not assigned to him the designs, or the right to apply them to goods, the only arrangement between them and G. being that G. should sell in the United Kingdom goods manufactured and consigned to him by the company:—Held, that G. was not the proprietor of the designs within s. 61 of the Patents, &c., Act, 1883, and that the registration in his name was therefore wrongful and must be expunged. Guiterman's Registered Designs, In re, 55 L. J., Ch. 309.

Infringement—Action to Restrain—Particulars of Objection—Leave to Amend—Form of Order.]—The practice as to the terms on which the court gives leave to amend particulars of objection in an action to restrain infringement of a patent will be followed in a similar action with regard to a registered design. Morris-Wilson v. Coventry Machinists Co., 60 L. J., Ch. 524; [1891] 3 Ch. 418; 40 W. R. 152.

The discretion of a judge to allow the amendment of particulars in an action for infringement of a patent or design cannot be affected by any practice as to the terms on which such amendment will be allowed. Morris-Wilson v. Coventry Machinists Co. (supra), commented on. Woolley v. Broad, 61 L. J., Q. B. 808; [1892] 2 Q. B. 317; 67 L. T. 67; 40 W. R. 596—C. A.

—— Costs.]—An innocent infringer of a registered design must pay the costs of a motion for an injunction to restrain him from infringing, though the plaintiff had given him no notice of the infringement before serving him with the writ in the action. Wittman v. Oppenheim, supra, col. 204.

"Obvious Imitation."]—A firm of calico printers copied the general effect of a design registered by a rival firm, but carefully avoided copying the exact details of the design:—Held, a "fraudulent and obvious imitation" within the meaning of this section of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, and an injunction was granted on the balance of convenience in preference to defendant's keeping an account. Grafton v. Watson, 51 L. T. 141—C. A.

Agreement for Sale of Goods to which Design applied to one Person exclusively—Right of Action of Purchaser for Infringement.]—The registered proprietor of the copyright in a registered design for lace agreed with a lace-finisher to sell exclusively to him all lace manufactured according to the design in the unfinished state:—Held, that the lace-finisher had no cause of action against a person infringing the design, and thereby injuring him. Woolley v. Broad, 61 L. J., Q. B. 259; [1892] 1 Q. B. 806; 66 L. T. 680; 40 W. R. 511.

E. TRADE UNIONS.

Statutes.]—34 & 35 Vict. c. 31, amends the law of trade unions, and is amended by 39 & 40 Vict. c. 22 (Trade Union Act (1871) Amendment Act, 1876).

59 & 60 Vict. c. 30, is the Conciliation Act, 1896.

Validity at Common Law.]—The condition of a bond recited that the obligors were manufacturers in Wigan and the neighbourhood, and that combinations of workmen preventing free labour by fear of social persecution, injuriously interfered with the management of their manufactories, and that these combinations were sustained by funds extorted from workmen employed by the manufacturers, and that measures were necessary to protect as well the manufacturers in the free management of their capital as the workmen in the free disposal of their labour; wherefore the manufacturers had agreed, in regard to the amount of wages, the periods of engagement, the hours of work and the general management of their establishments, to act for twelve calendar months in conformity with the lawful resolutions of a majority of the manufacturers present at a meeting, and declared that the bond should be void if this agreement was performed:—Held, that the bond was illegal at common law, and could not be enforced, as being contrary to public policy and in restraint of trade. Hilton v. Eckersley, 6 El. & Bl. 47; 25 L. J., Q. B. 199; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 587; 4 W. R. 326—Ex. Ch.

Registration.]—The Home Secretary made a regulation providing that upon an application for the registration of a trade union which was already in operation, the registrar, if he had reason to believe that the applicants had not been duly authorised by such trade union to make the same, might, for the purpose of ascertaining the fact, require from the applicants such evidence as might seem to him necessary. An application was made to the registrar, dated December 28th, requiring him to register the Amalgamated Society of Carpenters and Joiners, signed by persons who stated that they were authorised to make it by resolution passed by the executive council of the society. A second application was made, dated December 30th by different persons, to register a society under the same title, the applicants stating that they were authorised to make it by a vote of the whole of the members of the society. The registrar required evidence from both sets of applicants in support of their applications, and being satisfied from the evidence that differences had arisen which had led to the division of the society into two sections, which were represented by the respective applicants, he refused to register the society upon either application:—Held, that, apart from any question as to the validity of the regulations made by the Home Secretary, the registrar had properly refused the applications, as he was not bound upon an application for registration to inquire into differences which existed within the society, and to alter the position of one party by granting registration upon the application of the other. Reg. v. Friendly Societies Registrar, 41 L. J., Q. B. 366; L. R. 7 Q. B. 741; 27 L. T. 229.

Intimidation—at Common Law.]—Every man has a right to work for the best price he can get; but if others choose to work for less than the usual prices, the law will not permit that violence should be committed towards them, or towards those by whom they are employed, or those with whom they are connected. Rex v. Baar, 6 Car. & P. 329.

—— Injunction in Equity to Restrain.]—The defendants, who were officers of a trade union, gave notice to workmen, by means of placards and advertisements, that they were not to hire themselves to the plaintiffs pending a dispute between the union and the plaintiffs. A bill in equity prayed an injunction to restrain the issuing the placards and advertisements, alleging that by means thereof the defendants had, in fact, intimidated and prevented workmen from hiring themselves to the plaintiffs, and that the plaintiffs were thereby prevented from continuing their business, and the value of their property was seriously injured and materially diminished:—Held, that the acts of the defendants, as alleged by the bill, amounted to a crime, and that a court of equity would interfere by injunction to restrain such acts, inasmuch as they also tended to the destruction or deterioration of property. Springhead Spinning Co. v. Riley, 37 L. J., Ch. 889; L. R. 6 Eq. 551; 19 L. T. 64; 16 W. R. 1138.

Power to acquire and hold Land—Devise of Land—Perpetuity.]—A trade union registered under the trade union acts can, by virtue of the provisions of s. 7 of the Trade Union Act, 1871, but not otherwise, acquire and hold land. The word "purchase" in that section is used in its ordinary sense of "buy for money"; not in the technical legal sense of "acquire otherwise than by descent or escheat," and consequently a devise of land by will to such a society is invalid. Amos, In re, Carrier v. Price, 60 L. J., Ch. 570; [1891] 3 Ch. 159; 65 L. T. 69; 39 W. R. 550.

Rules—Decision of Arbitration Committee—When Binding.]—When a trade is regulated by committees of the masters and workmen respectively, which committees make rules from time to time, and by one of such rules, in case of disputes between a master and his men, an arbitration committee, presided over by a barrister, is to decide, and a particular dispute has been so decided, such decision is not to be considered as imported into all future engagements between masters and men, nor is it binding on persons not parties to that particular reference. Levey v. Hill, 3 H. & N. 702; 27 L. J., Ex. 259; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 589; 6 W. R. 691—Ex. Ch.

Rules—Legality—Winding up—Distribution of Funds.]—Members of a trade association were expelled for breach of rules in restraint of trade. The association passed a resolution to wind up, with a direction to their trustees to divide the surplus assets among the persons entitled under the rules. An inquiry was directed on summons as to who were the persons entitled, and in what proportions:—Held, that the expelled members were properly excluded in the chief clerk's certificate made in answer to the inquiry. Strick v. Swansea Tin Plate Co., 57 L. J., Ch. 438; 36 Ch. D. 558; 57 L. T. 392; 35 W. R. 831.

—— Trade Protection Society—Rule in Restraint of Trade.]—A society established for the protection of a particular trade contained a rule that no member should employ any traveller, carman, or outdoor employé who had left the service of another member without the consent, in writing, of his late employer, till after the expiration of two years:—Quære, whether such a society was to any and what extent within the Trade Union Acts, 1871 and 1876. Mineral Water, &c., Society v. Booth, 36 Ch. D. 465; 57 L. T. 573; 36 W. R. 274—C. A.

—— Misapplication of Money by Officer—Summary Conviction—Extinguishment of Debt.]—The treasurer of a local branch of a trades union fraudulently misapplied certain moneys belonging to his society, and was summarily proceeded against and ordered to pay the amount claimed, and 5*l.* by way of penalty. He made default in payment of the two sums and was sentenced to two months' imprisonment with hard labour. He was afterwards proceeded against by the general secretary of the union in the county court for the amount originally claimed, but the county court judge nonsuited the plaintiff on the ground that he was not entitled to maintain the action. The plaintiff moved to set aside the nonsuit:—Held, on the motion to set aside the nonsuit, that, as the plaintiff had had recourse to the remedy provided by s. 12 of 34 & 35 Vict. c. 31, and the defendant had been punished, the punishment suffered by him operated as an extinguishment of the debt. Knight v. Whitmore, 53 L. T. 233; 33 W. R. 907.

Right of Guardians to Reimbursement.]—A trade union is not a "benefit or friendly society" from which guardians of the poor can claim reimbursement under s. 23 of the Divided Parishes Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 61), s. 23, in respect of the maintenance of a pauper. Winder v. Kingston-upon-Hull, 20 Q. B. D. 412; 58 L. T. 583; 52 J. P. 535.

Application of Funds — Agreement — Direct Enforcement.]—By the Trade Union Act, 1871, s. 4, it is provided that nothing in the act shall enable the court to entertain any legal proceeding instituted with the object of directly enforcing an agreement for the application of the funds of a trade union to provide benefits to its members. The plaintiffs, members of a trade union within the act, sought for an injunction to restrain other members from applying the funds in a manner contrary to an agreement to provide benefits to members:—Held, that such an injunction would not be a direct enforcement of the alleged agreement, and that the court might entertain the proceeding. Wolfe v. Matthews, 51 L. J., Ch. 833; 21 Ch. D. 194; 47 L. T. 158; 30 W. R. 838.

—— Action to enforce Benefit to Member—Jurisdiction.]—Section 10 of the Trade Union Act, 1876, read in conjunction with s. 4 of the Trade Union Act, 1871, does not confer upon the court any jurisdiction to entertain an action by a nominee of a deceased member of a trade union to recover moneys payable under the rules of the trade union on the death of such member. Crocker v. Knight, 61 L. J., Q. B. 466; [1892] 1 Q. B. 702; 66 L. T. 596; 40 W. R. 353; 56 J. P. 420—C. A.

—— Central Society suing Branch for wrongfully dividing Funds.]—The central body of a society brought an action against a branch to restrain the latter from dividing certain funds in possession of the latter. Some of the rules of the society provided for benefits to members, and there were others which were in restraint of freedom of trade:—Held, that the action could not be maintained—(1) as it was brought to enforce an agreement between members of a trade union to provide benefits to members within the meaning of s. 4 of the Trade Unions Act, 1871; and (2) as the agreement could not have been enforced previously to that act. Duke v. Littleboy, 49 L. J., Ch. 802; 43 L. T. 216; 28 W. R. 977.

In such cases it makes no difference whether a central society sues a branch, a society sues an individual, or an individual sues a society. Ib.

—— Claim by expelled Member to participate in Property and Benefit of Union.]—The rules of a trade union provided that the money arising from the subscriptions of its members should be applicable in various ways for their benefit. They also purported to regulate the affairs of that trade, and provided that any journeyman binding his son in a "foul shop" (being a shop in which non-union men were employed) should be fined, and not be entitled to any benefit until such fine had been paid. The plaintiff, a member of the union, who was alleged to have broken the rule as to apprenticeship, and who, having refused to pay the fine, had been expelled from the union, brought an action against the committee and trustees of the union claiming to be entitled to participate in its benefits, and that the defendants might be restrained from excluding him from such participation:—Held, that as the action was brought to enforce an agreement between members of a trade union "to provide benefits to members," within the meaning of the Trade Union Act, 1871, s. 4, which the court was not by that section enabled to enforce; and as, apart from the act, the union was an illegal association, the plaintiff was not entitled to any relief. Rigby v. Connol, 49 L. J., Ch. 328; 14 Ch. D. 482; 42 L. T. 139; 28 W. R. 650.

—— Expulsion of Member of Voluntary Association.]—The foundation of the jurisdiction of the court to prevent a member of a voluntary association from being improperly expelled is the right of property vested in such member of which he is deprived. Ib.

Trade Protection Society—Member—Resignation—Acceptance.]—A member of a voluntary society who has paid his subscription for the current year, and owes no further duties to his fellow-members, may, in the absence of any provision in the rules of the society to the contrary, resign his membership at any time by communicating to the society his intention to resign, and such resignation does not require acceptance. Finch v. Oakes, 65 L. J., Ch. 324; [1896] 1 Ch. 409; 73 L. T. 716; 60 J. P. 309—C. A.

1. GENERALLY.

Parliamentary Deposit—Application of, to Payment of Debts.]—A private act incorporating a tramway company provided that, if within a certain time the undertaking should not be completed or half the capital paid up and expended on the works, the parliamentary deposit, which had been paid into court in pursuance of the standing orders of the houses of parliament, should either be forfeited to the crown, or in the discretion of the court, if the company was insolvent and had been ordered to be wound up, should wholly or in part be applied as part of the assets of the company for the benefit of the creditors. The works were never begun, a small portion of the capital only having been subscribed for, and the company was ordered to be wound up on the ground that it was unable to pay its debts:—Held, that the court could not order the deposited fund to be applied as part of the assets of the company for the payment of its debts, until it was proved that there were debts which could not be paid by means of calls on the shareholders. Bradford Tramways Co., In re, 46 L. J., Ch. 89; 4 Ch. D. 18; 35 L. T. 827; 25 W. R. 88—C. A.

The intention of the board of trade regulations under the Tramways Act, 1870, relative to the ultimate disposal of the deposit made by a tramway company on obtaining a provisional order authorising the construction of their tramway, is, first, that the promoters of the company are not, by any subterfuge or device, to get back the deposit, either directly or indirectly, if the tramway is not completed; secondly, that on an application under r. 28 for the application of the deposit, the creditors only are to be considered, and not the shareholders; and, thirdly, that the only creditors to be considered are meritorious creditors, coming with a bonâ fide case. Otherwise the deposit will be forfeited to the crown. Lowestoft, Yarmouth, and Southwold Tramways Co., In re, 46 L. J., Ch. 393; 6 Ch. D. 484; 36 L. T. 578; 25 W. R. 525.

The parliamentary deposit made by a tramway company that has failed to construct its tramway within the time limited and has been ordered to be wound up, is not a fund from which the liquidator is entitled to be paid his general costs of the winding-up nor his remuneration. Colchester Tramways Co., In re, 62 L. J., Ch. 243; [1893] 1 Ch. 309; 3 R. 168; 67 L. T. 846; 41 W. R. 169.

A company, incorporated under the companies acts, obtained a provisional order to construct a tramway. No tramway was ever commenced, and the company was ordered to be wound up. The only shareholders were the subscribers to the memorandum of association; the only debt due from the company was less than the amount of the deposit fund. The court, on the petition of the official liquidator, under the discretion given by the Tramways Act, 1870, r. 26, ordered the deposit fund to be paid out to the petitioner, to be applied by him for the benefit of the company's creditors, and refused to consider it forfeited to the crown. Tynemouth Borough Tramways Co., In re, 33 L. T. 8.

—— Repayment — Abandonment — "Conclusive" Evidence.]—The court will not, on the abandonment of a tramway, order the payment out of a parliamentary deposit, except on production of notice of abandonment published by the board of trade in accordance with the requirements of s. 18 of the Tramways Act of 1870, unless it is shown beyond all dispute that such notice cannot be forthcoming. Dudley and Kingswinford Tramways Co., In re, 63 L. J., Ch. 108; 8 R. 6; 69 L. T. 711; 42 W. R. 126.

Winding-up—Unregistered Company.] — An unregistered tramway company incorporated by a special act does not fall within the exception of "railway companies incorporated by act of parliament" in s. 199 of the Companies Act, 1862, and it may therefore be wound up under that section. Brentford and Isleworth Tramways Co., In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 624; 26 Ch. D. 527; 50 L. T. 580; 32 W. R. 895.

—— Promoters—Inquiry by Board of Trade.]—Under an order of the board of trade, made in 1882, certain persons therein named as "promoters" were authorised to construct a tramway. The tramway was in fact constructed and worked by the P. Company, although no sale of the undertaking with the consent of the board of trade had been made to them under s. 44 of the Tramways Act, 1870. In 1889 the P. Company went into liquidation, and an official liquidator was appointed. Upon the representation of the local boards having jurisdiction over the roads where the tramway was constructed, the board of trade directed an inquiry under s. 42 of the Tramways Act, 1842, as to the solvency of the promoters. The official liquidator of the P. Company moved to restrain the inquiry:—Held, that the P. Company, not being "promoters" of the tramway within s. 42 of the tramways act, had no interest to stay the inquiry, and that it was not a proceeding against the company which could be stayed under s. 87 of the Companies Act, 1862. Pontypridd and Rhondda Valleys Tramways Co., In re, 58 L. J., Ch. 536; 37 W. R. 570.

Debenture-holders—Manager—Power to appoint.]—A holder of overdue debentures issued by a tramway company incorporated by special act of parliament brought an action to realise his security, and moved for the appointment of a receiver and manager. The company was stated to be insolvent, but had not been ordered to be wound up:—Held, that a tramway company was not within the principle of Gardner v. L. C. & D. Ry. (L. R. 2 Ch. 201), and that the court would appoint a manager. Bartlett v. West Metropolitan Tramways Co., 63 L. J., Ch. 208; [1893] 3 Ch. 437; 69 L. T. 560. And see Cases, infra.

—— Order for Sale of Undertaking.]—The court has power to order a sale of the undertaking of a tramway company as a going concern in an action by holders of debentures secured thereon. Bartlett v. West Metropolitan Tramways Co., 63 L. J., Ch. 519; [1894] 2 Ch. 286; 8 R. 259; 70 L. T. 491; 42 W. R. 500; 1 Manson, 272.

Though an equitable charge or lien usually confers a right to have the property sold, the owner of an equitable charge or lien on an undertaking or business acquired under statutory powers and for public purposes, is not entitled to a judicial sale of such undertakings for the payment of his debt, if the purposes for which it was acquired would be defeated or seriously affected thereby. A tramways company, like a railway company and a waterworks company, is within this exception to the general rule. Gardner v. L. C. & D. Ry. (L. R. 2 Ch. 201) and Blaker v. Herts and Essex Waterworks Co. (41 Ch. D. 399) followed. Hope v. Croydon and Norwood Tramways Co. (34 Ch. D. 730) and Bartlett v. West Metropolitan Tramways Co. ([1894] 2 Ch. 286) disapproved. Marshall v. South Staffordshire Tramways Co., 64 L. J., Ch. 481; [1895] 2 Ch. 36; 12 R. 275; 72 L. T. 542; 43 W. R. 469; 2 Manson, 292—C. A.

—— Appointment of Receiver and Manager—Penalties—Leave to Distrain.]—Although the court will not appoint a receiver and manager of a tramway company (Marshall v. South Staffordshire Tramways Co. (64 L. J., Ch. 481; [1895] 2 Ch. 36, followed), nevertheless, where such a receiver and manager had been appointed prior to the decision in that case, a road authority (empowered by statute to distrain) was given leave to distrain on the property of the tramway company to recover penalties for the non-repair of the tram lines, even though the purposes for which the undertaking was acquired might be defeated or seriously affected thereby. Pegge v. Neath District Tramways Co., 64 L. J., Ch. 737; [1895] 2 Ch. 508; 13 R. 762; 73 L. T. 25; 44 W. R. 72; 2 Manson, 474. Appeal compromised, 65 L. J., Ch. 536; [1896] 1 Ch. 684—C. A.

Costs of Provisional Order—Taxation.]—The costs of applications to the board of trade for provisional orders under the Tramways Act, 1870, are to be taxed on the chancery and not on the parliamentary scale. Morley, In re, L. R. 20 Eq. 17; 32 L. T. 524; 23 W. R. 532.

Dividends Paid "out of Profits"—Maintenance of Works—Profits of Particular Year.]—The articles of association of a limited tramway company provided that no dividend should be declared except "out of profits"; that the directors should, with the sanction of the company, declare annual dividends "out of profits"; and that the directors should, before recommending a dividend, set aside "out of profits," subject to the sanction of the company, "a reserve fund for maintenance, repairs, depreciation, and renewals." The company had for several years carried on their business, paying a dividend half-yearly on their ordinary shares; but they failed to set apart a reserve fund adequate for the maintenance of their tramway, which eventually became worn out. The company having again declared a half-yearly dividend on their ordinary shares, and the total sum appropriated for the dividend being, as it appeared, much less than the sum required to reinstate the tramway:—Held, that the company could only declare a dividend out of the net profits, and that the net profits could not be ascertained without first restoring the tramway to an efficient condition, or making due provision for that purpose out of the company's assets. An injunction was accordingly granted restraining the company from paying the half-yearly dividend they had declared, but leave was given them to move to dissolve the injunction, in the event of their being able to satisfy the court that there were profits available for the dividend. Dent v. London Tramways Co., 50 L. J., Ch. 190; 16 Ch. D. 344; 44 L. T. 91; Davison v. Gillies, 50 L. J., Ch. 192, n.; 16 Ch. D. 347, n.; 44 L. T. 92, n.

—— Preference Shareholders.]—Held, however, that the holders of preference shares, the dividend on which was "dependent upon the profits of the particular year only," were entitled to a dividend out of the profits of any year after setting aside a proportionate amount sufficient for the maintenance of the tramway for that year only; and were not to be deprived of that dividend in order to make good the sums which in previous years should have been set aside by the company for maintenance, but which had been improperly applied by them in paying dividends. Ib.

Compulsory Sale—Power of Local Authority to purchase Part.]—When one tramway has been incorporated with others, by statute, in one undertaking, a local authority has power to purchase such tramway within twenty-one years after the act or order authorising its construction, although no right to purchase the other lines has arisen, or although they may not be within the district of the purchaser's authority, and although the general system of the tram lines "may be disconnected by such purchase." North Metropolitan Tramways Co. v. London County Council, 60 J. P. 23—C. A. Affirming 72 L. T. 586; 43 W. R. 552.

—— Basis of Valuation.]—On a compulsory sale of the undertaking of a tramway company to a local authority, the amount to be paid by the latter under s. 43 of the Tramways Act, 1870, is the value of the tramway—including in that term all real and movable property belonging to the "promoters" necessary for conducting the tramway traffic and all proprietary rights attaching thereto—as successfully constructed and in complete working condition, after deduction of a proper sum for depreciation; but not of rights of user, such rights being conferred upon the "promoters" of the undertaking for the time being by the statute itself and not by the vendors (Lord Ashbourne dissenting). Edinburgh Street Tramways Co. v. Edinburgh (Lord Provost) and London Street Tramways Co. v. London County Council, 63 L. J., Q. B. 769; [1894] A. C. 456, 489; 6 R. 317; 71 L. T. 301—H. L. (E.), H. L. (Sc.) Affirming 58 J. P. 816—C. A.

2. CONSTRUCTION AND MANAGEMENT.

Without Parliamentary Authority—Nuisance.]—A person, without the authority of parliament, but with the concurrence of and by virtue of a contract with the vestry of the parish, laid down in one of the streets of the metropolis a double line of tramways on which omnibuses of a peculiar construction plied for hire. These tramways were dangerous and inconvenient to many of the public, as the wheels of vehicles skidded when crossing the tramway, and horses which put their feet upon it were startled:—Held, that this was a public nuisance, even though those tramways might be for the conveyance of the public generally. Reg. v. Train, 2 B. & S. 640; 31 L. J., M. C. 169; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1151; 6 L. T. 380; 10 W. R. 539; 9 Cox, C. C. 180. S. C., at nisi prius, 3 F. & F. 22.

The defendants had statutory powers to lay down certain tramway lines "with all proper works and conveniences connected therewith," but had no statutory power to purchase land or to construct stabling. The defendants bought some land near the plaintiff's premises and erected thereon a large block of stables which occasioned offensive smells and constituted a nuisance to the plaintiff:—Held, that the defendants had no statutory authority to commit the nuisance complained of, and the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction. The fact that the defendants had taken all reasonable care to prevent a nuisance was, therefore, no legal excuse. Rapier v. London Tramways Co., 63 L. J., Ch. 36; [1893] 2 Ch. 588; 2 R. 448; 69 L. T. 361—C. A.

Distance between Rail and Footpath.]—Case in which the rule that 9 ft. 6 in. shall intervene between the tramway-rail and nearest footpath was departed from by statutory authority. Edinburgh Street Tramways Co. v. Black, L. R. 2 H. L. (Sc.) 336.

Relying on certain preliminary agreements, the frontagers of a narrow thoroughfare abstained from opposing the Edinburgh tramways bill; but as it turned out that the act, when passed, allowed the very thing which the frontagers had been most anxious to prevent, they asked and obtained from the court of session an interdict against its execution. But the house of lords recalled the interdict, holding that the question was determined by the statute, which the tramways company was not only entitled to carry out, but bound to obey. Ib.

Held, also, that the same consequences would have arisen in the case of a provisional order from the board of trade, when confirmed by parliament. Ib.

When the act directs compliance with deposited plans and sections, they are regarded as embodied in the statute. Ib.

User of Wheels flanged so as to Run on Tramway.]—Section 54 of the Tramways Act, 1870, prohibits the user of a tramway by unlicensed persons with carriages "having flange-wheels or other wheels suitable only to run on the rail of such tramway." The appellant, an omnibus proprietor, attached to his vehicle a lever with arms having a small revolving disc or roller which the driver might drop into the groove of the rail at the lower side of each forewheel when on the tramway, such discs operating when down as a flange at the point of contact with the rails, but when withdrawn by means of the lever leaving the vehicle free to travel over any part of the road:—Held, that this contrivance (though no obstruction to the tramway) was within the prohibition of the statute. Cottam v. Guest, 50 L. J., Q. B. 174; 6 Q. B. D. 70; 29 W. R. 305; 45 J. P. 95.

Liability for Accident—Promoters or Lessees.]—The Tramways Act, 1870, regulating tramway companies authorised by statute to use tramcars in the public streets, enacts by s. 55 that, "The promoters or lessees, as the case may be, shall be answerable for all accidents, damages, and injuries happening through their act or default, or through the act or default of any person in their employment, by reason or in consequence of any of their works or carriages. . .":—Held, that s. 55 applies only to a wrongful act or default, and does not make the promoters or lessees answerable for mere accident caused without negligence by their use of tramcars. Brocklehurst v. Manchester Steam Tramways Co., 17 Q. B. D. 118; 55 L. T. 406; 34 W. R. 568; 51 J. P. 55.

Removal of Lines—"Road Authority"—Who to Replace.]—A railway company, which had repaired and maintained for forty years a bridge with its approaches over which the plaintiff tramway company had acquired by statute the right to lay, maintain, and use their tramway lines, found it necessary to reconstruct the bridge in the interests of the public safety, and gave to the plaintiff company statutory notices under s. 32 of the Tramways Act, 1870. They then reconstructed the bridge, and the road over it, with the sanction and approval of the local authorities in whom the road was vested, and for the purposes of such reconstruction removed the plaintiffs' tramways. After the reconstruction the railway company restored the roadway over the bridge and its approaches, and the plaintiffs restored the tramways under protest as to the cost of such restoration :—Held, that the railway company had authority to remove the tramway lines for the purposes aforesaid, and were not under liability to the plaintiffs, provided that they caused as little detriment or inconvenience as possible in carrying out the said repairs. Wolverhampton Tramways Co. v. G. W. Ry., 56 L. J., Q. B. 190 ; 56 L. T. 892.

Running Powers over Line of other Company—Tramway in Defective Condition—Trespass.]—The defendants were a company authorised by act of parliament to run tramcars by steam, and had running powers over the line of another tramway company along a highway. By reason of certain points upon such line being defective, a tramcar of the defendants, while being drawn by a steam-engine, went off the line and injured the plaintiff, who was upon the highway :—Held, that the statutory powers of the defendants could not be taken to authorise them to run their tramcars along the highway upon a tramway in a defective condition ; that, the tramway being defective, the defendants in running their tramcar on the highway were doing an unlawful act : and therefore that the defendants were liable as for a trespass in respect of the injury occasioned to the plaintiff by their immediate action. Sadler v. South Staffordshire Tramways Co., 58 L. J., Q. B. 421 ; 23 Q. B. D. 17 ; 37 W. R. 582 ; 53 J. P. 694—C. A.

Paving—Control of Local Authority—Reference to Arbitration.]—By a local tramway act, passed after and incorporating the Tramways Act, 1870, the space between the rails and for a distance of eighteen inches beyond each external rail was to be paved by the company to the satisfaction of the local authority for the district with wood or other paving to be approved of by the local authority. On an application by the company the local authority declined to approve of a particular paving, and the company thereupon laid it down without such approval. On an application by the local authority for a mandamus to the company to take up the paving so laid down :—Held, that the powers given to the local authority were subject to the provisions of the Tramways Act, 1870, that a difference had arisen within s. 33 of that act which ought to be determined by a referee appointed by the board of trade, and that the mandamus ought not to be granted. Reg. v. Croydon and Norwood Tramways Co., 56 L. J., Q. B. 125 ; 18 Q. B. D. 39 ; 56 L. T. 78 ; 35 W. R. 299 ; 51 J. P. 420—C. A.

A tramway company had constructed a tramway in accordance with the authority given them to do so by a special act and the Tramways Act, 1870, so much of the road as lay between the rails of the tramway and extended eighteen inches on each side of the tramway outside the rails being paved with granite setts. The defendant corporation, who were the road authority of the district in which the tramway in question was laid, gave the company notice of their intention to pave, at their own expense, with wood the whole of the roadway in which the tramway was laid. The company objected on the ground that the work which the corporation proposed to execute was an interference with their tramway, and would largely increase the expense to which they would be put in maintaining and repairing that part of the road which they were bound to repair and maintain, and asked for an injunction to restrain the corporation from so interfering with their tramway :—Held, that the dispute between the parties was not a difference within the meaning of s. 33 of the Tramways Act, 1870, and that the company were not entitled to an injunction. Reg. v. Croydon and Norwood Tramways Co. (18 Q. B. D. 39) distinguished. Bristol Trams and Carriage Co. v. Bristol Corporation, 59 L. J., Q. B. 441 ; 25 Q. B. D. 427 ; 63 L. T. 177 ; 38 W. R. 693 ; 55 J. P. 53—C. A.

Liability for Non-repair of Road—Contract with Road Authority.] — Where a tramway company enters into a contract with the road authority under s. 29 of the Tramways Act, 1870, whereby the road authority undertakes the repair of the portion of the road upon which the tramway is laid, the liability for damage occasioned by the non-repair of that part of the road, which would but for such contract be cast by s. 28 upon the tramway company, is transferred to the road authority. Howitt v. Nottingham and District Tramways Co., 53 L. J., Q. B. 21 ; 12 Q. B. D. 16 ; 50 L. T. 99 ; 32 W. R. 248.

The effect of a contract made in pursuance of the powers given by s. 29 of the Tramways Act, 1870, by a tramway company with the road authority for the maintenance by the latter of the roadway and lines, is to transfer to the road authority the liability primâ facie imposed by s. 28 upon the company for damage occasioned by the roadway being out of repair. Howitt v. Nottingham Tramways (12 Q. B. D. 16) approved. Alldred v. West Metropolitan Tramways, 60 L. J., Q. B. 631 ; [1891] 2 Q. B. 398 ; 65 L. T. 138 ; 39 W. R. 609 ; 55 J. P. 824—C. A.

Repair of Road—Agreement with Local Authority—County Authority.]—By a local tramway act it was provided that in case steam power should be used on the tramway, the tramway company should repair the whole extent of that part of a main road over which their lines passed, but that the company might make such contracts and agreements for the repair of the road with the local authority of the borough as might be approved by the board of trade. It was also provided that no contract or agreement to be entered into under the act should operate to lessen the liability of the company under s. 28 of the Tramways Act, 1870. The road authority of the borough entered into a contract with the company, by which the expenses of maintenance and repair of the road were divided between them. In an action by the borough road authority against the county authority for contribution under s. 13 of the Highways and Locomotives Act, 1878 :—Held, that the county authority were liable to pay out of the county rate one-half of the expenses incurred by the borough authority under the contract. Over-Darwen Corporation v. Lancashire JJ., 58 L. T. 51 ; 36 W. R. 140.

An agreement between a county council and a highway board, under s. 11 of the Local Government Act of 1888, by which the highway board became bound to repair roads, does not take away from the county council their rights and liabilities as the "road authority." Stockport Highway Board v. Cheshire County Council, 61 L. J., Q. B. 22 ; 65 L. T. 85 ; 39 W. R. 606 ; 55 J. P. 808.

—— Expense of Superintendence.]—A vestry, as the road authority under the Tramways Act, 1870, claimed against a tramway company the expenses of superintending their opening and breaking up of roads under s. 26, for the maintenance and renewal of their tramway :—Held, that so far as the company merely raised the sleepers and rails to the level of the road, or raised the stone packing of the road to the level of the surface of the rails, they were maintaining and keeping the road in good condition and repair under s. 28, and were not liable to the superintendence of the road authority under s. 26. St. Luke's Vestry v. North Metropolitan Tramways Co., 1 Q. B. D. 760 ; 35 L. T. 329.

Liability for Obstruction—Nuisance.]—The defendants were the owners of a quay, over which there was a public right of way to their docks. The Great Eastern Railway Company by their private act were empowered to, and did enter into an arrangement with the defendants to lay tramways connecting the docks with the railway system. The company were to keep the tramways in good working order, under the Tramways Act, 1870. The company, as promoters, gave notice to the defendants of their intention to open and break up the road for the purpose of doubling the rails at a particular point. The company did break up the highway for their tramway purposes. The plaintiff was injured by being thrown from his cart through the defective condition of the roadway at the place where the works were being carried out, and brought his action for compensation against the defendants as owners of the highway. The jury at the trial found that the accident to the plaintiff had been caused by the negligence of the railway company, who were in possession of the spot where the occurrence took place, and that the roadway was in a defective condition owing to a breach of duty on the part of the railway company, and gave the plaintiff substantial damages :—Held, that as the railway company were carrying out their works not under the orders or as licensees of the defendants, but under their statutory powers, and were in sole possession of the place where the accident happened, which was entirely under their control, and the negligence causing the accident was that of the railway company and not of the defendants, the verdict ought to be entered for the defendants. Barham v. Ipswich Dock Commissioners, 54 L. T. 23.

User of Steam Engines—Licence of County Authority.]—The steam engines authorised by statute to be used on tramways are not locomotives within the meaning of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878, s. 32, and, therefore, do not require to be licensed by the county authority. Bell v. Stockton Tramways Co., 51 J. P. 804.

Regulation as to Lights on Engine—Breach by Engine-driver.]—A tramway company were convicted before justices of the breach of a regulation of the board of trade, made under a local act, relative to lamps being placed and lighted in a conspicuous position on the front of a tramway engine :—Held, that the regulation was not invalid as a regulation, and that its subject-matter need not have been dealt with by a by-law ; that the offence being stated in the words of the regulation was sufficiently described, and that the company were responsible for the personal neglect of their engine-driver. St. Helens Tramways Co. v. Wood, 60 L. J., M. C. 141 ; 56 J. P. 70.

Liability for Acts of Servants—Scope of Employment.]—Section 52 of the Tramways Act, 1870, which enacts that "it shall be lawful for any officer or servant of the promoters or lessees of any tramway" to detain any person defrauding the company of his fare, must be construed as limited to any officer or servant appointed for that purpose. A tramway company gave to their conductors printed instructions, in which it was ordered that, except in cases of assault, conductors were not to give passengers into custody without the authority of an inspector or timekeeper. The conductor of a car, in which the plaintiff was a passenger, detained the plaintiff, and gave her into custody on a charge of passing bad money :—Held, in an action for false imprisonment against the company, that the defendants were not liable. Charleston v. London Tramways Co., 36 W. R. 367. Affirmed, 32 S. J. 557—C. A.

A passenger on a tramway tendered a half sovereign to the conductor of the car in payment of the fare. The conductor, supposing the coin to be counterfeit, gave the passenger in charge to the police. Sections 51 and 52 of the Tramways Act, 1870, empower officers or servants of the promoters or lessees of any tramway, to seize and detain any person seeking to avoid payment of his fare :—Held, that the tramway company were liable in an action against them by the passenger for false imprisonment. Furlong v. South London Tramways Co., 1 Cab. & E. 316 ; 48 J. P. 329.

—— Drunken man entering Tramcar—Duty of Conductor.]—A person acts illegally and wrongfully in forcing his way, when intoxicated, into a tramcar while it is in motion, and by so doing places himself in a position of peril, and the conductor in a position of difficulty ; assuming the latter did not, under the circumstances, act with the most perfect presence of mind, but still was not guilty of vexatiousness or unnecessary violence, the tramway company is not liable for damages for negligence. Delany v. Dublin Tramways Co., 30 L. R., Ir. 725—C. A.

Fares — By-laws of Company.] — P. was charged by the conductor of a tramway company, under a by-law, which says, "Every passenger shall upon demand pay the fare legally demandable for the journey," with not paying upon demand made. The fare was demanded during the journey, and P. objected that it was not legally demandable until the completion of the journey. The company was authorised by act of parliament to "make regulations for regulating the travelling in or upon any carriage belonging to them," and their act also provided that "the tolls, &c., shall be paid to such persons and at such places upon or near to the tramways and in such manner and under such regulations as the company shall by notice appoint" :—Held, that the by-law was authorised by the act, that it was reasonable, and that, as P. had become a passenger and was travelling upon the tramway, he was liable to pay the fare whenever it was demanded of him by the conductor. Eggington v. Pearl, 33 L. T. 428.

—— Amount of.]—A tramway company scheduled to their act of parliament distinct agreements with municipal authorities not to charge tramway passengers above a fixed fare; but they afterwards obtained legislative authority to substitute omnibuses on certain routes in lieu of the tramways, and to charge a higher fare on these routes:—Held, that the company had no power to increase the fare of passengers using the tramways only. Edinburgh Street Tramways Co. v. Torbain, 3 App. Cas. 58; 37 L. T. 288—H. L. (Sc.)

—— Malicious Prosecution — Criminal Proceedings.]—Proceedings by a tramway company under ss. 51 and 52 of the Tramways Act, 1870 (which relate to non-payment of fares), are of a criminal character, and therefore the company are liable in an action for malicious prosecution brought by the person against whom a summons in respect of such an offence has been dismissed. Rayson v. South London Tramways Co., 62 L. J., Q. B. 593: [1893] 2 Q. B. 204; 4 R. 522; 69 L. T. 491; 42 W. R. 21; 17 Cox, C. C. 691; 58 J. P. 20—C. A.

Validity of Agreements regulating Services of Conductors.]—A conductor, at the time of entering the employ of a tramway company, deposited with them the sum of 5*l.*, which, together with any wages due, was agreed to be forfeited in case of any breach by him of the company's rules. It was further agreed that the company's manager was to be the sole judge of whether the company was entitled to retain the whole of the deposit-money and wages due, and that his certificate of the cause of retention should be binding and conclusive evidence between the parties in all courts of justice and before all stipendiary magistrates, and should bar the conductor of all right to recover under any circumstances the moneys so certified to be retained. After three months' service the conductor was discharged from his employ, and the deposit-money as well as wages due were certified by the manager to be forfeited for non-observance of certain rules:—Held, that, in the absence of fraud, such certificate was binding, there being nothing in the agreement that was illegal or void. London Tramways Co. v. Bailey, 47 L. J., M. C. 3; 3 Q. B. D. 217; 37 L. T. 499; 26 W. R. 494.

Under an Agreement — Right of Way.]—Tenants of quarries situated about three miles from their works, who were accustomed to convey the stones from the quarries to the works by carts, entered into an agreement with their landlord to construct a tramway from the quarry to the works, to run, inter alia, "by the end of the policy" of the landlord; and they further agreed to compensate the farm tenants along the line for any damage done to their farms during the currency of their leases. The landlord agreed, inter alia, to give gratuitously the land required for the tramway. Outside the policy ground there was a private road, the property of the landlord, which, before it reached the tenants' works, ran through another tenant's stone pavement yard. This was the only practical route outside the policy for the tramway; and it was alleged that the only obstacle to laying it along that road was, that the other tenant might refuse to allow it being laid on that part passing through his yard, but for this there were no termini habiles. The tenants claimed that the landlord was bound to give them the use and possession of land for the purpose of the tramway, and that, either (1) "within and by the end of the policy," or (2) "in any other place as suitable and convenient for them in every respect":—Held, that under the agreement the stipulation was that the tramway should pass outside the walls which inclose the policy of the landlord; and that, by agreeing to give gratuitously the lands required, the landlord merely undertook to give the tenants such rights as were vested in him, leaving them (with the power to use his name) to settle with any persons who might have a right or interest entitling them to object to the formation of the tramway. Sinclair v. Caithness Flagstone Quarrying Co., 6 App. Cas. 340—H. L. (Sc.)

By-laws — Emission of Steam.] — H. was driver of a steam-engine on a tramway; one of the by-laws enacting that no steam shall be emitted from the engine, so as to be a reasonable ground of complaint to passengers or the public. H. as driver was resting the engine, which was not in good repair, and he could not help emitting steam, and one passenger only, when passing, complained of it:—Held, that H. was rightly convicted, as the by-law was imperative and the evidence was sufficient, though he had no mens rea, and one passenger only complained. Hartley v. Wilkinson, 49 J. P. 726.

—— Passenger to Show or "deliver up Ticket or pay Fare."]—A by-law of a tramway company provided that "each person shall show his ticket (if any) when required so to do to the conductor or any duly authorised servant of the company, and shall also, when required so to do, either deliver up his ticket or pay the fare legally demandable for the distance travelled over by such passenger." A passenger, having paid his fare and received a ticket, inadvertently tore up the ticket, and on being required to deliver it up was unable to do so, and refused to pay the fare a second time:—Held, that the by-law was good, and that the passenger committed an offence against it. Hanks v. Bridgman, 65 L. J., M. C. 41; [1896] 1 Q. B. 253; 74 L. T. 26; 44 W. R. 285; 18 Cox, C. C. 224; 60 J. P. 312.

A by-law under the Tramways Act, 1870, provided that each passenger should show his ticket (if any) when required so to do to the conductor or any duly authorised officer of the tramway company. A further by-law imposed a penalty for its breach:—Held, that the by-law was reasonable, and a passenger having a ticket which he refused to show had infringed it, and had incurred a penalty. Lowe v. Volp, 65 L. J., M. C. 43; [1896] 1 Q. B. 256; 74 L. T. 143; 44 W. R. 442; 18 Cox, C. C. 253; 60 J. P. 232.

The by-law of a tramway company which provides that each passenger shall deliver up his ticket when required to do so, or pay the fare for the distance travelled over, is a reasonable by-law. A passenger travelling under such circumstances, who shows his ticket, but refuses to deliver it up on the ground that his journey has not terminated, is liable to the penalty prescribed by the by-law. Heap v. Day, 34 W. R. 627 ; 51 J. P. 213.

—— Regulating number of Passengers.]—It is competent to the local authority of any borough to make and to enforce a by-law under s. 48 of the Tramways Act, 1870, for regulating the number of passengers to be carried in and upon tramcars, and the extent of accommodation to be afforded to them. The assent of the lessees of the line (under s. 46) is not necessary to the validity of such by-law. Smith v. Butler, 16 Q. B. D. 349 ; 34 W. R. 416 ; 50 J. P. 260.

A tramway company made by-laws forbidding more than a certain number of persons to be carried in a car, and providing that conductors should be liable to a penalty for infringement of any of the by-laws :—Held, that a passenger incommoded by an excessive number of passengers was entitled to prosecute a conductor for breach of the by-law. Badcock v. Sankey, 54 J. P. 564.

A. TO THE PERSON.

1. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

Assault excludes Consent.]—An assault ex vi termini excludes consent ; therefore, a plea of leave and licence to a declaration charging an assault amounts to not guilty. Christopherson v. Bare, 11 Q. B. 473 ; 17 L. J., Q. B. 109 ; 12 Jur. 374.

What is Actionable.]—Trespass lies for originally throwing a squib, which, after having been thrown about in self-defence by other persons, at last put out the plaintiff's eye. Scott v. Shepherd, 2 W. Bl. 892 ; 3 Wils. K. B. 403.

If one of two persons, fighting, unintentionally strikes a third, he is answerable for an assault, and the absence of intention can only be urged in mitigation of damages. James v. Campbell, 5 Car. & P. 372.

Throwing water on a person is a battery. Purcell v. Horne, 3 N. & P. 564; 8 A. & E. 602; 7 L. J., Q. B. 228.

Where A. threw a stick, which struck the plaintiff, but it did not appear for what purpose the stick was thrown:—Held, that it was fair to conclude that the stick was thrown for a proper purpose, and that the striking of the plaintiff was an accident. Alderson v. Waistell, 1 Car. & K. 358.

A policeman prevented a member of a society from entering the society's room:—Held, that if the policeman was wholly passive, and merely obstructed the entrance as any inanimate object would, this was not an assault by the policeman. Jones v. Wylie, 1 Car. & K. 257.

A person cannot justify giving another into custody for merely laying hands on him to attract his attention, provided it is not done hostilely. Coward v. Baddeley, 4 H. & N. 478; 28 L. J., Ex. 260; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 414; 7 W. R. 466.

Detaining a person after the detainer has ceased to be lawful is actionable. Trespass, and not case, was the proper form of action in such circumstances. Magnay v. Burt, 5 Q. B. 381; D. & M. 652; 7 Jur. 1116—Ex. Ch.

Trespass will not lie against a plaintiff who, without notice, takes a defendant in execution for a debt in respect of which the latter has been discharged under the Irish insolvent act. But if the plaintiff maliciously sued out the writ he was liable to an action on the case. Ewart v. Jones, 3 D. & L. 252; 14 M. & W. 774; 15 L. J., Ex. 18.

Threats.]—Riding after a person, and obliging him to run away into a garden to avoid being beaten, is an assault. Martin v. Shoppee, 3 Car. & P. 373.

A. was advancing in a threatening attitude with an intention to strike B., so that his blow would have almost immediately reached B. if he had not been stopped:—Held, that it was an assault in point of law, though, at the particular moment when A. was stopped, he was not near enough for his blow to take effect. Stephens v. Myers, 4 Car. & P. 349.

A declaration stated that the defendant assaulted the plaintiff, "and also then presented a pistol, loaded with gunpowder, ball and shot, at the plaintiff, and threatened and offered therewith to shoot the plaintiff, and blow out his brains." It was proved, that the parties being on board a ship, the defendant (who was the captain) went into his cabin, and brought out a pistol and cocked it, and presented it at the plaintiff's head, saying, that, if the plaintiff was not quiet, he would blow his brains out:—Held, that if the defendant, at the time he presented the pistol, used words showing that it was not his intention to shoot the plaintiff, this would be no assault. Blake v. Barnard, 9 Car. & P. 626.

But a threat to shoot a person, coupled with the act of presenting a loaded fire-arm at him, although it is half-cocked, is, in law, an assault. Osborne v. Veitch, 1 F. & F. 317.

The plaintiff being in the defendant's workshop, and refusing to quit when desired, the defendant and his servant surrounded him, and tucking up their sleeves and aprons, threatened to break his neck if he did not go out, whereupon the plaintiff, apprehensive of violence, departed:—Held, an assault. Read v. Coker, 13 C. B. 850; 1 C. L. R. 746; 22 L. J., C. P. 201; 17 Jur. 190; 1 W. R. 413.

To Person and Goods—Same wrongful Act—Estoppel.]—Damage to goods, and injury to the person, although they have been occasioned by one and the same wrongful act, are infringements of different rights, and give rise to distinct causes of action; and therefore the recovery in an action of compensation for the damage to the goods is no bar to an action subsequently commenced for the injury to the person. Brunsden v. Humphrey, 53 L. J., Q. B. 476; 14 Q. B. D. 141; 51 L. T. 529; 32 W. R. 944; 49 J. P. 4—C. A.

Injury to be Actionable must be Wilful or Negligent.]—To maintain an action for injury to the person the injurious act must be wilful or the result of negligence. Holmes v. Mather, 44 L. J., Ex. 176; L. R. 10 Ex. 261; 33 L. T. 361; 23 W. R. 864. S. P., Stanley v. Powell, 60 L. J., Q. B. 52; [1891] 1 Q. B. 86; 63 L. T. 809; 39 W. R. 76; 55 J. P. 327.

The defendant's horses, while being driven by his servant in the public highway, ran away, and became so unmanageable that the servant could not stop them, but could, to some extent, guide them. The defendant, who sat beside his servant, was requested by him not to interfere with the driving, and complied. While unsuccessfully trying to turn a corner safely, the servant guided them so that, without his intending it, they knocked down and injured the plaintiff, who was in the highway. The plaintiff having sued the defendant for negligence and in trespass, the jury found that there was no negligence in any one:—Held, that, even assuming the defendant to be as much responsible as his servant, no action was maintainable; for since the servant had done his best under the circumstances, the act of alleged trespass in giving the horses the direction towards the plaintiff was not a wrongful act. Holmes v. Mather, supra.

Committed Abroad.]—It is no bar to an action in this country for an assault and false imprisonment committed by one Englishman upon another at Naples, that by the law of Naples, no proceeding to recover damages for the trespass could be maintained by the plaintiff until after the defendant had been found guilty, and condemned by the criminal tribunal at Naples, before which he had been arraigned in respect thereof; nor is it any bar to such action for the assault that, by the law of Naples, damages in respect of it could only be recovered in one particular form of proceeding, which had been commenced and was still pending. Scott v. Seymour (Lord), 1 H. & C. 219; 32 L. J., Ex. 61; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 522; 8 L. T. 511; 11 W. R. 169—Ex. Ch.

Injury caused by Animals—Liability of Owner.]—The plaintiff, a labourer, was digging a hole in the garden of a house adjoining that of the defendant. A low wall belonging to the defendant divided the gardens. While the plaintiff was at work at the bottom of the hole a dog belonging to the defendant, going over land belonging to third persons on his way to the defendant's garden, leaped into the hole, and, falling on the defendant, injured him severely:—Held, that as the dog was not shown to be mischievous to the knowledge of the owner, no action would lie either for trespass or any breach of duty. Sanders v. Teape, 51 L. T. 263.

—— Animal feræ naturæ—Liability of Owner—Scienter.]—A person who keeps an animal not belonging to that class which, according to the experience of mankind, is not dangerous to man, keeps it at his own risk; he is therefore liable for injuries caused by such an animal (e.g. an elephant), and his liability is not affected by his ignorance of its dangerous character. Filburn v. People's Palace Co., 59 L. J., Q. B. 471; 25 Q. B. D. 258; 38 W. R. 706; 55 J. P. 181—C. A. S. P., Besozzi v. Harris, 1 F. & F. 92. See also May v. Burdett, 9 Q. B. 101; 16 L. J., Q. B. 64; 10 Jur. 692.

Parish Officers Cutting Pauper's Hair.]—If parish officers cut off the hair of a pauper in the poor-house by force, and against the will of such pauper, this is an assault; and if done as matter of degradation, and not with a view to cleanliness, that will be an aggravation, and go to increase the damages. Forde v. Skinner, 4 Car. & P. 239.

Medical Examination—Evidence of Non-Consent or Coercion.]—For a female servant to successfully maintain an action against her mistress and a medical man for an assault upon her, consisting of an examination of her person by such medical man on the instructions of the plaintiff's mistress, the plaintiff must show that she was overpowered by force or had reasonable cause for apprehending violence. Therefore, where the facts showed that the plaintiff reluctantly submitted to her mistress's orders, it was held that the plaintiff failed. Latter v. Braddell, 50 L. J., Q. B. 448; 44 L. T. 369; 29 W. R. 366; 45 J. P. 520—C. A.

An examination by medical men, in pursuance of an order of a magistrate, of the person of a female, in custody upon the charge of concealing the birth of her illegitimate child, constitutes an assault. Agnew v. Jobson, 13 Cox, C. C. 625.

Communication of Disease by Sexual Intercourse.]—The communication of venereal disease during illicit sexual intercourse is not an actionable wrong if the act of intercourse has been voluntary; and consent to the intercourse is not vitiated by the fact that it has been induced through wilful concealment of the disease. On the principle ex turpi causâ non oritur actio, such an action is unsustainable. Reg. v. Bennett (4 F. & F. 1105) and Reg. v. Sinclair (13 Cox, C. C. 28) distinguished, and held not to apply to a civil action. Hegarty v. Shine, 4 L. R., Ir. 288; 14 Cox, C. C. 145.

Liability of Candidate at Election—Acts of Mob.]—A candidate for election as member of parliament was accompanied through a borough by a crowd of persons forming a procession in his honour. The windows of certain houses, belonging to members of the opposite political party, were broken by the mob in their course; and he, standing up in a carriage, waved his hat in the air, but with no intention of encouraging the mob in their acts of violence, and made no attempt to leave the carriage or stop the procession, though he remonstrated with those who could hear him on the disgraceful character of their proceedings:—Held, that, under the circumstances, he was not liable for the damage caused by the breaking of the windows. Peacock v. Young, 21 L. T. 527; 18 W. R. 134.

Tramway in Defective Condition—Tramcar Running off Line and Injuring Person.]—A tramway company was authorised by statute to run cars by steam along a highway. Owing to the defective state of the line, a tramcar, while being drawn by a steam-engine, went off the line and injured the plaintiff, who was upon the highway:—Held, that the defendants' statutory powers could not be taken to authorise the running of tramcars along the highway upon a tramway in a defective condition; that, the tramway being defective, the defendants, in running their tramcar on the highway, were doing an unlawful act; and, therefore, that the defendants were liable as for a trespass in respect of the injury occasioned to the plaintiff by their immediate action. Sadler v. South Staffordshire Tramways Co., 58 L. J., Q. B. 421; 23 Q. B. D. 17; 37 W. R. 582; 53 J. P. 694—C. A.

Joint Trespass.]—A sailor, who had lodged for some weeks at a public-house, and also received advances of cash from the person who kept it, having been paid his wages in the presence of the father of the publican, went to the house of the latter, and drinking some spirits, became intoxicated and fell asleep. The father of the publican, in his son's presence, desired a young woman, an acquaintance of the sailor, to take the money out of his pocket, which she did, and laid it on the table. It was 13*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.* The publican took it up, and said he would keep it till the man got sober. When he awoke and asked for his money, the father said it was all right till the morning. After this, by desire of the sailor, a pound in silver was given to the young woman out of the money, and the next morning, on his applying for the remainder, he was offered 2*s.* and some copper as the balance, after deducting what he owed the publican:—Held, that a joint action of trespass was maintainable against both the publican and his father, and that the sailor was entitled to recover the whole amount taken from him, without any other deduction than that of the pound afterwards given to the woman. Peddell v. Rutter, 8 Car. & P. 337.

—— Evidence of Statements by Defendant after Trespass.]—It is competent for the jury to consider the words which the defendant used subsequently to the trespass, in coming to the conclusion whether he was a joint trespasser with those actually committing the mischief. M'Laughlin v. Pryor, 4 Scott (N.R.) 655; Car. & M. 354; 4 Man. & G. 48; 11 L. J., C. P. 169.

A party, consisting of the defendant and others, hired for a day's excursion a carriage and post horses driven by postillions, who were the servants of the owner of the horses. The defendant rode upon the box. The postillions, in endeavouring to force their way into a line of carriages, overturned a gig and seriously injured the plaintiff, who was in the gig. The defendant, at the time and afterwards, held himself out as responsible for the accident, and used expressions showing that he had a control over the postillions at the time it happened:—Held, that he was liable in trespass. Ib.

Evidence of Authority to Commit.]—On the trial, in an action for assault, the plaintiff proved that he was present in the gallery of a large hall where there was a meeting convened by members of an association, and that the defendant acted as chairman. There was an interruption in the gallery near to the place where the plaintiff was standing, upon which the defendant said, "I shall be obliged to bring those men to the front who are making the disturbance. Bring those men to the front." The plaintiff was making no disturbance, but, according to his statement, he was seized by a man with a white ribbon in his coat and two policemen, and dragged over some benches to the front part of the gallery, and thereby injured. There was nothing to show the position or duty of those who seized him, or whether any instructions as to keeping order had been given them by the defendant, before the act complained of:—Held, that there was not evidence of any liability on the part of the defendant, as there was not the ordinary relation of master and servant between him and those who assaulted the plaintiff; but only a particular direction as to a particular matter, and that the words used by the defendant did not authorise the officers to act upon their judgment as to who were the persons making the disturbance. Lucas v. Mason, 44 L. J., Ex. 145; L. R. 10 Ex. 251; 33 L. T. 13; 23 W. R. 924.

Evidence of Son Assault Demesne.]—In an action for an assault it is competent to the defendant to give evidence of an assault by the plaintiff, without a plea of son assault demesne. Syers v. Chapman, 2 C. B. (N.S.) 438.

—— Defendant guilty of Excess.]—Where the defendant pleads this plea, the plaintiff may, under a replication joining issue on the plea, and without replying excess, show that although he struck the first blow the defendant was guilty of excess. Dean v. Taylor, 11 Ex. 68. But see contra, Rimmer v. Rimmer, 16 L. T. 238.

Damages—Assault—Forcible Expulsion from House.]—Pending a negotiation for an assignment of a lease, A. was let into possession of the premises as tenant of some kind. The negotiation going off, B. (the landlord) demanded the key, and wrote to A., telling him that he never intended to let him into possession, and A. refusing to go out, B. entered, and forcibly expelled him and his family, in the doing of which the plaintiff and his wife were assaulted:—Held, that although the plaintiff was entitled to recover damages for the assaults, he was not entitled to damages for the expulsion; his tenancy being at the most a tenancy at will, and that having been properly determined. Pollen v. Brewer, 7 C. B. (N.S.) 371; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 509; 1 L. T. 9.

Evidence in Mitigation of Damages.]—In an action for an assault, though the defendant has not pleaded a justification, he may extract evidence in mitigation of damages in the cross-examination of the plaintiff's witnesses. Moore v. Adam, 2 Chit. 198.

A. having written a novel, B. published a libel on A. in the form of a critique on the novel, for which A. beat him; B. brought an action for the assault, and A. a cross action for the libel:—Held, that, in the action for the assault, the libel might be given in evidence in mitigation of damages, although it was the subject of another action; but that being so, the defendant ought not to derive much advantage from it in diminishing the damages. Fraser v. Berkeley, 7 Car. & P. 621; 2 M. & Rob. 3.

2. When Indictable.

The judge is bound to try the issues on the record, and ought not to nonsuit if it appears on the evidence that there has been a felony in relation to the subject-matter of the dispute and the offender has not been prosecuted to conviction. Wells v. Abraham, 41 L. J., Q. B. 306; L. R. 7 Q. B. 554; 26 L. T. 326; 20 W. R. 659.

In an action by a woman for assault, on her stating that the assault for which she sued was immediately followed by a rape the judge nonsuited her:—Held, rightly. Wellock v. Constantine, 2 H. & C. 146; 32 L. J., Ex. 285; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 232; 7 L. T. 751. At nisi prius, 2 F. & F. 791. And see, further, Criminal Law (Felony).

Where there has been criminal intercourse in a case of seduction of a servant, accompanied, in the first instance, with some degree of violence, an action is maintainable for an assault. Desborough v. Holmes, 1 F. & F. 6.

The objection that there has been no prosecution cannot be taken by plea. Osborn v. Gillett, 42 L. J., Ex. 53; L. R. 8 Ex. 88.

In order to constitute an assault and battery punishable by the criminal law, the act complained of must be done with a hostile intention. Coward v. Baddeley, 4 H. & N. 478; 28 L. J., Ex. 260; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 414; 7 W. R. 466.

3. In Self-defence.

Posture of Defence.]—If A. comes up to attack B., and B. puts himself into a fighting attitude to defend himself, this is not an assault by B., and will not, in action by B. against A. for assault, support a plea by A. of son assault demesne. Moriarty v. Brooks, 6 Car. & P. 684.

Excess.]—Upon issue taken on a plea of son assault demesne, it is necessary to prove an assault commensurate with the trespass sought to be justified. Reece v. Taylor, 4 N. & M. 470; 1 H. & W. 15; 4 L. J., K. B. 74.

A. seized the bridle of the horse on which B. was riding:—Held, that B., after a request to desist, was justified in striking A. with his riding whip, using no more force than was necessary to obtain his release. Rowe v. Hawkins, 1 F. & F. 91.

A declaration stated, that the defendant assaulted the plaintiff, and wrenched a stick from his hand, and with the stick and with his fists gave the plaintiff many violent blows. Plea, as to the assaulting the plaintiff with the stick and his fists, son assault demesne:—Held, after verdict, that the plea sufficiently justified the battery with the stick as well as the assault with it. Blunt v. Beaumont, 2 C., M. & R. 412; 4 D. P. C. 219; 5 Tyr. 1100.

4. Defence of Possession of House or Land.

Extent of Justification.] — Molliter manus imposuit is an answer to the battery. Titley v. Foxall, 2 Ld. Ken. 308.

An assault by a man in defence of his property is justifiable. Alderson v. Waistell, 1 Car. & K. 358.

So also is an assault to prevent the plaintiff endeavouring forcibly to break and enter the defendant's close. Weaver v. Bush, 8 Term Rep. 78.

But it is not justifiable, in order to turn the plaintiff out of the defendant's house, where she continued against his will, to strike her repeated blows, and with great force and violence several times knock her down. Gregory v. Hill, 8 Term Rep. 299. And see Johnson v. Northwood, 1 Moore, 420 ; 7 Taunt. 689.

Nor in such a case is it justifiable to strike and wound the trespasser with a truncheon. Oakes v. Wood, 2 M. & W. 791 ; M. & H. 237 ; 6 L. J., Ex. 200.

Ejecting — Request to Leave.] — Before a person can be assaulted and turned out of church he should be requested to retire. Ballard v. Bond, 1 Jur. 7.

If a person enters a house with force and violence, the person whose house is entered may justify turning him out (using no more force than is necessary), without making a previous request to him to depart ; but if the person enters quietly such a request is necessary before he can be turned out. Tullay v. Reed, 1 Car. & P. 6. See also Scott v. Brown, 51 L. T. 746.

Request to Desist.]—A declaration alleged that the defendant assaulted the plaintiff, and seized, shook, and dragged him about, and struck him many blows, by means of which he was hurt and wounded, and so continued for a long time, to wit, one week. Plea, that the plaintiff, with force and arms, and with a strong hand, and against the will of the defendant, did unlawfully break open the gate to the defendant's close, and in breach of the peace did thereby attempt forcibly to enter and unlawfully trespass upon the close, whereupon the defendant, being in his close during the attempt, defended his possession, and resisted such attempt ; and, because he could not successfully resist without, in a slight degree, committing the trespasses, he did a little unavoidably commit the trespasses, using no unnecessary force :—Held, that the trespass on the part of the plaintiff being alleged by the plea to be forcibly made, the justification was sufficient, though it was not alleged that the plaintiff had been requested to desist. Polkinhorn v. Wright, 8 Q. B. 197 ; 15 L. J., Q. B. 70 ; 10 Jur. 11.

After Trespass to Land.]—A person on whose land another has committed a trespass, merely by coming upon it, and is going away, has no right to seize and detain him in order to compel him to give his address. Ball v. Axten, 4 F. & F. 1019.

Calling in Police.]—If a person comes into a house, or is in it, and makes a noise and disturbs the peace of the family, although no assault has been committed, the master of the house may turn him out, or call a policeman to do so. Shaw v. Chairitie, 3 Car. & K. 21.

A. went to the house of B. to demand a debt, which B. said he could not pay ; angry words passed, and B. told A. to leave his house ; this A. refused to do unless he was paid. Upon this B. sent for a police officer, and had A. locked up in the watch-house :—Held, that if A. was making a disturbance, B. would have been justified in turning him out of his house, but that he was not justified in imprisoning him. Green v. Bartram, 4 Car. & P. 308.

To a declaration for assaulting and seizing the plaintiff, and forcing him to go as a prisoner from and out of a public-house to a police-station, it is a good justification that the plaintiff came into the plaintiff's tavern and made a disturbance, and assaulted the defendant and others there, whereupon the defendant gave the plaintiff in charge to a constable, and required him to remove and deal with the plaintiff according to law. Webster v. Watts, 11 Q. B. 311 ; 17 L. J., Q. B. 73 ; 12 Jur. 243.

And see MALICIOUS PROCEDURE.

In Defence of Easement.]—To an action for throwing water over the plaintiff's apartment and herself, it is no plea that the plaintiff was engaged in obstructing an ancient window of the defendant's house, and that the defendant threw water over her to prevent it. Simpson v. Morris, 4 Taunt. 821.

Evidence—Possession.]—Assault by a master on his servant. Justification of molliter manus to remove him from a house of which the master was possessed :—Held, that evidence of another servant of the defendant's having the key to let himself in to work, nobody living in the house, is sufficient evidence of the defendant's possession, as against the plaintiff, to support the plea. Hall v. Davis, 2 Car. & P. 33.

In an action for assault and battery, the defendant justified on the ground that he was possessed of a dwelling-house, into which the plaintiff unlawfully entered, and was making a noise and disturbance therein :—Held, that this plea was not supported by proof that the defendant held two rooms in the house in question, and that the plaintiff, who was landlord of the house, and kept the key of the outer door, had unlawfully come into them, and made the disturbance complained of. Monks v. Dykes, 4 M. & W. 567 ; 1 H. & H. 418 ; 8 L. J., Ex. 73.

—— Shire Hall.]—By a private act a shire hall was vested in the justices of the peace for the county, in trust to allow courts of justice to sit there, and to permit and suffer it to be used for such other public purposes as a major part of the justices in sessions should direct. The hall had always been used for the holding of the county musical festivals ; but there was no evidence that the justices had under the act so directed it to be used :—Held, that the stewards of one of those musical festivals had such a possession of the hall that they might justify the turning out an intruder. Thomas v. Marsh, 5 Car. & P. 596.

—— Cricket Ground.]—To an action for an assault, the defendant pleaded that the defendant and twenty-one other persons were possessed of a close, and were there playing a lawful game of cricket ; that the plaintiff was unlawfully on the close, and unlawfully interrupted the twenty-two, whereupon the defendant, for himself and by authority of the twenty-one others, requested him to depart from the close, and desist from interrupting their game, and, upon his refusal so to do, removed him. The facts were, that the defendant and ten others of the club, who had possession of the field under an agreement, and eleven of a strange club, were playing on the field, and the plaintiff interrupted them by remaining on the ground when requested to leave :—Held, that the plea was not proved, as it was founded on the right of possession of the twenty-two in the close.

Holmes v. Bagge, 1 El. & Bl. 782; 22 L. J., Q. B. 301: 17 Jur. 1095.

By an agreement between A., the owner of a field, and a committee of a cricket club, A. agreed to let, and the committee to hire, a close, to be used as a cricket ground by the club, and for that purpose only; the tenancy to be determinable by notice in writing at the end of any season. Declaration for an assault. Plea, justification in right of the possession. Replication, that the plaintiff and the defendant were jointly possessed:—Held, that proof on the part of the plaintiff of the agreement, and that the plaintiff and the defendant were both members of the committee, proved the issue. Ib.

—— Attempt to Eject.]—If the defendant pleads that the plaintiff was making a disturbance in the defendant's public-house, and that, the plaintiff refusing to depart, the defendant laid hands on him and turned him out, this plea is proved, if it is shown, that, in consequence of the plaintiff refusing to go, the defendant assaulted him, with a view of turning him out of the house, though in fact the defendant could not succeed in actually turning the plaintiff out. Moriarty v. Brooks, 6 Car. & P. 684.

5. Defence of Possession of Goods.

What Justifiable.]—An owner of goods (or his servants acting by his command) which are wrongfully in possession of another, may justify an assault, in order to repossess himself of them, no unnecessary violence being used. Blades v. Higgs, 10 C. B. (N.S.) 713; 30 L. J., C. P. 347; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1289; 4 L. T. 551. S. P., Rex v. Milton, 1 M. & M. 107.

To an action for an assault and battery, the defendant pleaded that the plaintiff seized the defendant's horse and gig, and was driving them away, and dispossessing the defendant of them, and would, in breach of the peace, have dispossessed him of them; wherefore the defendant defended his possession, and resisted the plaintiff's endeavour, and in so doing committed the assault:—Held, that evidence which showed that the plaintiff seized the defendant's horse for the purpose merely of obtaining his name and address, did not support the plea. Gaylard v. Morris, 3 Ex. 695; 18 L. J., Ex. 297.

6. Other Justifications.

Order of Parliament.]—To a claim for damages for an assault committed on plaintiff, a member of parliament, whilst attempting to enter the house of commons for the purpose of taking his seat, the defendant pleaded in justification thereof that the house had previously resolved and ordered that the defendant (one of its officers) should "remove the plaintiff from the house until he should engage not further to disturb the proceedings of the house," and that, acting in pursuance of such order, the defendant resisted and removed the plaintiff:—Held, on demurrer, that the plea was good. Bradlaugh v. Erskine, 47 L. T. 618; 31 W. R. 365.

Correcting Pupil.]—A music-master of a cathedral is not justified in even moderately beating a chorister for singing at a catch club; though such singing might be injurious to his performing in the cathedral. Newman v. Bennett, 2 Chit. 195. See Winterburn v. Brooks, 2 Car. & K. 16.

As Master of Ship.]—Action for assaulting the plaintiff and putting him in irons, and imprisoning him. Plea, that the defendant was commander of a ship of war on the high seas, and that the plaintiff was steward of the ship, and, as such steward, the servant of the defendant, and had access to the defendant's cabin, and the charge of the defendant's goods there; that moneys of the defendant had been feloniously stolen out of a desk in the cabin upon two occasions; and that the defendant, having good and probable cause of suspicion, and suspecting the plaintiff to be guilty of or concerned in the stealing of the moneys, did, as commander, put him in irons, and so detain him (the same being a reasonable mode of detainer) until he could examine into and investigate the circumstances of suspicion against the plaintiff according to law:—Held, that the plea showed a sufficient justification. Broughton v. Jackson, 18 Q. B. 378; 21 L. J., Q. B. 265; 16 Jur. 886.

Held, also, that the putting in irons must be taken to be a reasonable mode of detainer; and that if there was excess in the mode of detainer the plaintiff should have new assigned. Ib.

As Marshal Keeping Order.]—One of the marshals of the city of London, whose duty it was, on the day of a public meeting in the Guildhall, to see that a passage was kept for the transit to the carriages of the members of the corporation and others, directed a person in the front of the crowd at the entrance to stand back, and, on being told by him that he could not for those behind him, struck him immediately on the face, saying that he would make him:—Held, that in so doing the marshal exceeded his authority, and that he should have confined himself to the use of pressure, and should have waited a short time to afford an opportunity for removing the party in a more peaceable way. Imason v. Cope, 5 Car. & P. 193.

B. To Lands.

1. Right to Eject Trespasser.

Use of Force in Ejecting.]—Where a person has gained possession of property, but has no title to it, being in fact a trespasser, the rightful owner is entitled to use force in ejecting him, so long as he does him no personal injury. Scott v. Brown, 51 L. T. 746.

2. Action for, Generally.

Balloon passing over Land.]—Quære, whether it is a trespass to pass over land in a balloon. Kenyon v. Hart, 6 B. & S. 249; 34 L. J., M. C. 87; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 602; 11 L. T. 733; 13 W. R. 406.

Trespasser ab initio.]—The act by which a person is to be deemed a trespasser ab initio must of itself be a trespass. No abuse of an authority originally lawful will render him liable to an action of trespass unless a substantive trespass be committed in the course of that abuse. Shorland or Shortland v. Govett, 5 B. & C. 485; 8 D. & R. 257; 4 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 212; 29 R. R. 294.

Right to Vertical Column of Air.]—The owner of two contiguous houses in the city of London conveyed one of them to B. by a deed which correctly marked out on a plan the ground site of the house conveyed. Over this site there projected on the first floor a room of the owner's house, which was supported by the other house:—Held, that the right to the vertical column of air over the projection was determined by the ground site, and hence belonged not to the owner, but to B. Corbett v. Hill, 39 L. J., Ch. 547; L. R. 9 Eq. 671; 22 L. T. 263.

Cutting Trees or Taking Minerals in Copyholds.]—In an ordinary estate of copyhold the property in the trees and minerals is in the lord, the possession in the copyholder. If a stranger or the lord cuts trees or takes minerals, the copyholder can maintain trespass. Eardley v. Granville, 45 L. J., Ch. 669; 3 Ch. D. 826; 34 L. T. 609; 24 W. R. 528.

Removing or Defacing Tombstone.]—Trespass is maintainable for removing or defacing a tombstone, at the suit of the person who erected it or by his heir or representative. Spooner v. Brewster, 3 Bing. 136; 10 Moore, 494; 3 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 203; 28 R. R. 613.

Detention of Distress Damage feasant.]—Distress damage feasant may be taken for injury done to chattels upon the land, as well as to the land itself. An action of trespass is not maintainable so long as the distress is detained. Roscoe v. Boden, or Boden v. Roscoe, 63 L. J., Q. B. 767; [1894] 1 Q. B. 608; 10 R. 173; 70 L. T. 450; 42 W. R. 445; 58 J. P. 368.

Percolation of Water from Soil placed against Wall.]—A statement of claim alleged that the defendants deposited on their land and against a wall of the defendants, adjoining the house of the plaintiff, a large quantity of soil, clay, &c., thereby raising the surface of the defendants' land above that of the land on which the plaintiff's house was built; and that the plaintiff's house was consequently injured by the percolation of water through the defendant's wall:—Held, that the statement showed a good cause of action. Hurdman v. N. E. Ry., 47 L. J., C. P. 368; 3 C. P. D. 168; 38 L. T. 339; 26 W. R. 489—C. A.

Entry to Repair Defences of Port.]—To an action for entering the plaintiff's close, called the manor of S., the defendant pleaded, that from time immemorial there has been, and still is, a public port, partly within the manor, and also in a river, which has been a public and common navigable river from time immemorial; and that there is in that part of the port which is within the manor, an ancient work or erection, belonging to the port, necessary for the preservation of the same, and for the safety and convenience of the ships resorting thereto; that the work being damaged and in decay, it became necessary that the work should be repaired, but that the plaintiff did not nor would repair the same, but wholly neglected so to do; wherefore the defendant entered and repaired it; and a verdict having been found for the defendant:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to judgment, notwithstanding the finding, inasmuch as it did not state that immediate repairs were necessary, or that any persons bound to do so had neglected to repair after notice had been given them for that purpose, or that a reasonable time for repairing the same had elapsed, or that the defendant had occasion to use that port; and it was doubtful whether the plea would have been good, even had it contained those allegations. Lonsdale (Earl) v. Nelson, 3 D. & R. 556; 2 B. & C. 302; 2 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 28; 26 R. R. 363.

Landlord Entering on Premises to Repair.]—A lessor who, in the absence of express power in the lease, enters upon the demised premises to repair them on breach of the lessee's covenant to repair, even though under a superior lease the lessor is liable to forfeiture for non-repair, and, though he enters by leave of weekly sub-tenants, commits a trespass which will be restrained by injunction. Stocker v. Planet Building Society, 27 W. R. 877—C. A.

Landlord removing Roof of Tenant's House on Refusal of Tenant to give up Possession.]—The plaintiff, who was tenant to the defendant of a cottage, wrongfully refused to give up possession on the expiration of his tenancy. The defendant, who was desirous of rebuilding the cottage, obtained a justices' order under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 74, requiring possession to be given up within twenty-one days. On the same day that this order was obtained the defendant sent some workmen to remove the roof, and in the course of such removal, which was effected without any personal violence, certain portions of the roof unavoidably fell on to the plaintiff's furniture in the room below, and damaged same. In an action for trespass and injury to the furniture:—Held, that the above facts disclosed no cause of action. Jones v. Foley, 60 L. J., Q. B. 464; [1891] 1 Q. B. 730; 64 L. T. 538; 39 W. R. 510; 55 J. P. 521.

Distress—Agreement with Tenant as to its Disposal—Default—Entry by Landlord.]—A landlord who had taken some unthreshed corn as a distress for rent, agreed that the tenant should thresh it out and dispose of it in a particular way. The tenant threshed a small quantity, and then left off:—Held, that after a reasonable time had elapsed, it was not a trespass for the landlord to enter the barn and thresh out the corn. Huddlestone v. Pearson, 3 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 43.

—— Remaining on Premises after Distress has ceased to be Lawful.]—Trespass was the proper form of action for continuing on the plaintiff's premises to keep possession of goods distrained after the distress had ceased to be lawful. Ladd v. Thomas, 12 A. & E. 117; 4 P. & D. 9; 9 L. J., Q. B. 345.

Trespass to Sub-Lessee's Boxes and Stalls.]—The lessee of a theatre held it under a lease in which he covenanted not to convert it to any other use than for acting or performing operas or theatrical entertainments. He demised certain boxes and stalls to a sub-lessee, reserving power of access for the purpose of repairing; the sub-lessee covenanted only to use the same for the purpose of viewing and hearing the operas and other entertainments. The underleases contained covenants for quiet enjoyment. The lessee demised the theatre for a term of three months for the purpose of holding religious meetings

To enable these meetings to be held, the stalls were covered with a flooring, the division between the boxes removed, and other temporary structural alterations made: — Held, that a trespass had been committed by the lessee and persons claiming under him in thus entering upon the sub-lessee's boxes and stalls without his licence, and the conversion of the theatre for other than theatrical purposes was a derogation from the grant and a breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment. Leader v. Moody, 44 L. J., Ch. 711; L. R. 20 Eq. 145; 32 L. T. 422; 23 W. R. 606.

Highway—Right of Public.]—If a person uses the soil of the highway for any purpose other than that in respect of which the dedication was made, and the easement acquired, he is a trespasser. Harrison v. Rutland (Duke), 62 L. J., Q. B. 117; [1893] 1 Q. B. 142; 4 R. 155; 68 L. T. 35; 41 W. R. 322; 57 J. P. 278—C. A.

The easement acquired by the public is a right to pass and repass at their pleasure for the purpose of legitimate travel, and the use of the soil for any other purpose, whether lawful or unlawful, is an infringement of the right of the owner of the soil, who has, subject to this easement, precisely the same estate in the soil as he had previously to any easement being acquired by the public. Ib.

In cases where a person trespasses on another's land, having done so frequently in the past, and having expressed an intention to do so in the future, the court has power under Ord. XXV. r. 5, to make a declaration that such person is a trespasser. Ib.

Fishery—Arm of the Sea.]—Where in an action for trespass to a several fishery the defendant pleaded that the locus in quo was an arm of the sea, and the plaintiff joined issue:—Held, that the defendant was entitled to succeed if it appeared that the locus in quo was in fact an arm of the sea; and that if the plaintiff, admitting that it was an arm of the sea, still claimed a several fishery, he was bound to set up his claim in a reply. Crichton v. Collery, 19 W. R. 107.

—— Special Custom.]—The plaintiff, while fishing for pilchards, had nearly encompassed the fish with a net, but the defendant, by rowing his boat to the opening, disturbed the fish and prevented the capture. The plaintiff brought trespass, and issues being joined on the plaintiff's possession of the fish, and on the fish being his:—Held, that he was not entitled to recover, no special custom of the fishery being proved. Young v. Hichens, D. & M. 592; 6 Q. B. 606.

—— In Inland Waters.]—In trespass to a several fishery in an inland lake at a place called Fenmore, the issue was whether the fishery was the several fishery of the plaintiff. The plaintiff gave evidence by documents of his title to a several fishery in the whole lake and parol evidence of acts of ownership in portions of the lake, but not at Fenmore. The judge directed a verdict for the plaintiff:—Held, that it ought to have been submitted to the jury to say whether the plaintiff had a several fishery at Fenmore. Bristow v. Cormican, 3 App. Cas. 641—H. L. (Ir.)

Foxhunting.]—A person is not justified in entering the land of another against his will for the purpose of foxhunting. Gundry v. Feltham (1 Term Rep. 334) discussed. Paul v. Summerhayes, 48 L. J., M. C. 33; 4 Q. B. D. 9; 39 L. T. 574; 27 W. R. 215; 14 Cox, C. C. 202. See also Baker v. Berkeley, 3 Car. & P. 32.

By Animal.]—The defendants' horse having injured the plaintiff's mare by biting and kicking her through the fence separating the plaintiff's land from the defendants':—Held, that there was a trespass by the act of the defendants' horse, for which the defendants were liable, apart from any question of negligence on their part:—Held, secondly, that the damage to the plaintiff's mare was not too remote. Ellis v. Loftus Iron Co., 44 L. J., C. P. 24; L. R. 10 C. P. 10; 31 L. T. 483; 23 W. R. 246.

An ox belonging to the defendant, and while being driven by his servants through the streets of a country town, entered the plaintiff's shop, which adjoined the street, through the open doorway and damaged his goods. No negligence on the part of the persons in charge of the ox was proved:—Held, that the defendant was not liable. Tillett v. Ward, 52 L. J., Q. B. 61; 10 Q. B. D. 17; 47 L. T. 546; 31 W. R. 197; 47 J. P. 438.

Injury caused to Animal by Poisonous Tree on Boundary Fence — Liability of Adjoining Occupiers of Land.]—A person having a dangerous thing upon his land, and being under no obligation to fence against his neighbour's cattle, is not liable for damages caused by the dangerous thing to his neighbour's cattle when trespassing on his land. Rylands v. Fletcher (L. R. 3 H. L. 330) discussed and distinguished. Ponting v. Noakes, 63 L. J., Q. B. 549; [1894] 2 Q. B. 281; 10 R. 265; 70 L. T. 842; 42 W. R. 506; 58 J. P. 559.

Overhanging Branches of Trees.] — Where branches of a tree growing upon the land of one owner overhang that of another, the owner of the land encroached upon may, without notice to his neighbour, cut so much of the branches as overhang his land, provided he can do so without going on his neighbour's land. Per Lord Macnaghten: Whether the law would be the same in the case of young trees or shrubs which might be transplanted, quære. The owner of a tree cannot acquire the right for it to overhang his neighbour's land either by prescription or the statute of limitations. Lemmon v. Webb, 64 L. J., Ch. 205; [1895] A. C. 1; 11 R. 116; 71 L. T. 647; 59 J. P. 564—H. L. (E.)

Forcible Entry.]—An attempt to eject by force a person having a legal title to land brings the person who makes it within the provisions of the statute against forcible entry, though the possession of the person having such legal title has only just commenced, though he may himself have obtained it by forcing open a lock, though his ejection has not been made by a "multitude" of men, nor attended with any great use of violence, and though the person who attempts to eject him may even set up a claim to the possession of the land. Lows v. Telford, 45 L. J., Ex. 613; 1 App. Cas. 414; 35 L. T. 69; 13 Cox, C. C. 226—H. L. (E.)

But damages cannot be recovered for such forcible entry, which is an indictable offence.

Beddall v. Maitland, 50 L. J., Ch. 401 ; 17 Ch. D. 174 ; 44 L. T. 248 ; 29 W. R. 484.

And see Edridge v. Hawker, or Edwick v. Hawkes, 50 L. J., Ch. 577 ; 18 Ch. D. 199 ; 45 L. T. 168 ; 29 W. R. 913 ; and Jones v. Foley, ante, col. 236.

In an action for breaking and entering a house, the allegation vi et armis does not imply a forcible entry. Harvey v. Bridges, 3 D. & L. 55 ; 14 M. & W. 437 ; 14 L. J., Ex. 272. S. P., Wright v. Burroughes, 3 C. B. 685 ; 4 D. & L. 438 ; 16 L. J., C. P. 6.

Entry on Land under Arrangement with Receiver — Refusal of Equitable Owner to sanction Arrangement—Right of such Owner to maintain Trespass.]—The defendant was let into possession of certain premises under an arrangement with the receiver of an estate for a tenancy for a term of years. The plaintiff, who had an equitable interest in the estate, declined to sanction any other than a yearly letting, whereupon the defendant intimated that as he could not get a lease he would leave, and he did leave before he had been six months in possession :—Held, that he was not liable to the plaintiff either in trespass or use and occupation, and semble, that he was not liable at all. Sloper v. Saunders, 29 L. J., Ex. 275.

Mortgage—Default in Payment—Seizure by Agent.]—The respondent mortgaged a sheep run to the appellant. The deed fixed no time for the repayment of the money, but only stipulated that if the mortgagor should make default in payment of the amount on demand, the mortgagee should be at liberty to enter. It appeared from the covenants in the deed that it was the intention of the parties that the mortgagor should remain in possession until default was made ; but there was no express stipulation to that effect. During the absence of the respondent the appellant sent an agent to the station with a demand in writing for repayment, which was served on the respondent's wife, and in default of payment the appellant's agent immediately took possession of the run and the sheep on it :—Held, that as the respondent had no opportunity of inquiring into the truth of the agent's statement, there was no default which justified the appellant in entering into possession and seizing the property, and that the respondent was entitled to substantial damages. Moore v. Shelley, 52 L. J., P. C. 35 ; 8 App. Cas. 285 ; 48 L. T. 918—P. C.

Erecting Hoarding.]—The plaintiff was the owner in fee of a cottage, the defendant owned some land immediately adjoining. The plaintiff alleged that the defendant had erected on the plaintiff's land a hoarding on poles in order to block out the access of light to a window in the cottage, and had in so doing committed a trespass. The plaintiff also alleged that the poles and hoarding produced a rattling and creaking noise which was an intolerable nuisance to the plaintiff and his tenants. The plaintiff claimed an injunction to restrain the trespass and the nuisance. At the trial it was proved that the cottage was in the occupation of a weekly tenant of the plaintiff, who was not a party to the action. There was no evidence that the acts of the defendant had caused any diminution of value of, or other injury to, the reversion :—Held, that the poles and hoarding not being of such a character as to injure the reversion, the plaintiff could not maintain an action for trespass nor obtain an injunction. Cooper v. Crabtree, 51 L. J., Ch. 544 ; 20 Ch. D. 589 ; 46 L. T. 573 ; 30 W. R. 579—C. A.

—— Other Obstacles.]—Trespass is the proper remedy for nailing a board so as to overhang the plaintiff's close. Pickering v. Rudd, 4 Camp. 219 ; 1 Stark. 56 ; 16 R. R. 777.

So, for the continuance of an act (as driving hold-fasts) for which trespass lies, and in which form of action the plaintiff has before recovered. Lawrence v. Obee, 1 Stark. 22.

Pulling down Inhabited House.]—Where a house has been unlawfully erected on a common, a commoner whose enjoyment of the common is interrupted by it may pull it down. Perry v. Fitzhowe, 8 Q. B. 757 ; 15 L. J., Q. B. 239 ; 10 Jur. 799.

But he is not justified in pulling it down if there are persons in it at the time. Ib.

If a mere stranger erects a building upon land belonging to another, the owner of the land is justified in pulling down the building for the purpose of ejecting the intruder, and the fact of the latter being at the time in the building will not be any ground for maintaining an action of trespass against the real owner. Burling v. Reed, 11 Q. B. 904 ; 19 L. J., Q. B. 291 ; 14 Jur. 395.

A commoner may pull down a building wrongfully erected upon the common, and which prevents his exercising his right as fully as he otherwise might, provided he does no unnecessary damage. Davies v. Williams, 16 Q. B. 546 ; 20 L. J., Q. B. 330 ; 15 Jur. 752.

A declaration alleged that the defendant entered a dwelling-house and land, which dwelling-house was actually inhabited by the plaintiff and his family, and in which he was ; and whilst the plaintiff was therein, pulled down and destroyed the dwelling-house and the fixtures therein, and assaulted the plaintiff therein, and ejected and expelled him and his family therefrom ; and seized, converted, and destroyed the materials of the house. The defendant pleaded, as to the entering, pulling down, and destroying the house and fixtures therein, and seizing the materials, that he was entitled to common of pasture over the land ; and because the house was wrongfully erected on the land, so that without pulling it down he could not use or enjoy the common of pasture in so ample and beneficial manner as he otherwise would and ought to have done, he necessarily and unavoidably committed the trespasses, doing no unnecessary damage :—Held, that the plea was bad, since the defendant was not justified in pulling down the house when the plaintiff and his family were in it. Jones v. Jones, 1 H. & C. 1 ; 31 L. J., Ex. 506. See also Jones v. Foley, ante, col. 236.

Regaining Possession of Property.]—A man is not justified in entering the close of another to take away his own goods and chattels which are in that close owing to some negligent or wrongful act of his own. Anthony v. Haney, 8 Bing. 186 ; 1 M. & Scott, 300 ; 1 L. J., C. P. 81.

But if a party takes the goods of another, and places them upon his own land, the owner may enter that land for the purpose of retaking them, without making himself liable in trespass. Patrick v. Colerick, 3 M. & W. 483 ; 7 L. J., Ex. 135.

If A. wrongfully places goods in B.'s building, B. may lawfully go upon A.'s close adjoining the building for the purpose of removing and depositing the goods there for A.'s use, and trespass quare clausum fregit will not lie. Rea v. Sheward or Shuard, 2 M. & W. 424 ; 6 L. J., Ex. 125.

To an action for breaking and entering a yard, the court allowed the defendant to plead that he went there for the purpose of viewing a mare belonging to him, which had been recently stolen, and was then in a stable within the yard. Webb v. Beavan, 7 Scott (N.R.) 936 ; 6 Man. & G. 1055.

To prevent Murder.]—A private person may justify breaking and entering the plaintiff's house, and imprisoning his person, so that he may prevent him from committing murder on his wife. Handcock v. Baker, 2 Bos. & P. 260 ; 5 R. R. 587.

Police Officer—Open House.]—A police officer, hearing a noise in a public-house at one o'clock in the night, entered the house, the door being open :—Held, that this was not a trespass. Rex v. Smith, 6 Car. & P. 136.

Authority of Agent to Commit.]—A local board employed B. to manage its sewage farm. He had general powers of management, and was not interfered with by the board. Thinking to do good to the farm under his management, and to the neighbourhood, by widening and straightening a stream, he cut away the plaintiff's land on the bank :—Held, that the board was not liable for the trespass so committed, inasmuch as the authority given to B. was confined to the farm, and he was acting entirely beyond the scope of such authority when he went off the farm and damaged the land. Bolingbroke (Lord) v. Swindon New Town Local Board, 43 L. J., C. P. 287 ; L. R. 9 C. P. 575 ; 30 L. T. 723 ; 23 W. R. 47.

Committed Abroad.]—An action for damages for trespass to land situated in a foreign country, founded on a disputed claim of title to such land, cannot be tried in the courts of this country. British South Africa Co. v. Companhia de Moçambique, 63 L. J., Q. B. 70 ; [1893] A. C. 602 ; 6 R. 1 ; 69 L. T. 604—H. L. (E.) S. P., Doulson v. Matthews, 4 Term Rep. 503 ; 2 R. R. 448. See also The M. Moxham, 46 L. J., P. 17 ; 1 P. D. 107 ; 34 L. T. 559 ; 24 W. R. 650.

In Pursuit of Game.]—See GAME.

Joint Trespassers.]—In a joint action the plaintiff should go for one trespass done at the same time, in which all were implicated ; and if he goes for a trespass done at a time when they were not present, he will not afterwards be allowed to go for one at a time when they were. Sedley v. Sutherland, 3 Esp. 202.

But where plaintiff proved a trespass on a given day by three of four, but failing to implicate the fourth in that act of trespass, abandoned it, and proceeded to prove a joint trespass by the four on a subsequent day :—Held, that he was at liberty so to do. Roper v. Harper, 5 Scott, 250 ; 4 Bing. (N.C.) 20.

In trespass against several, if any one suffers judgment by default, the plaintiff need only give evidence to affect the rest ; and it is matter for the jury, whether the trespass proved is the same as that confessed ; but the plaintiff cannot be non-suited. Harris v. Butterly, Cowp. 483.

Description of Premises.]—The word "close" includes as well the subsoil as the soil. Cox v. Glue, 5 C. B. 533 ; 17 L. J., C. P. 162 ; 12 Jur. 185.

A declaration stated that the defendant broke and entered "lands of the plaintiff, covered with water, being the bed and channel of the river T., and under the same, in the several parishes of L. and L., in the county of G." :—Held, before the Reg. Gen. T. T. 1853, that the declaration sufficiently described the locus in quo by name. Beaufort (Duke) v. Vivian, 7 Ex. 580 ; 21 L. J., Ex. 204.

The locus in quo should be designated by abuttals or other description, as it was at the time of the trespass, and not at the time of the declaration. Humfrey v. L. & N. W. Ry., 7 Ex. 325 ; 22 L. J., Ex. 149.

A plea justifying a trespass, as committed in exercise of a right of way, is sufficiently certain as to the premises in respect of which the way is claimed, if it describes them as "a close in the parish," &c., "and county," &c., "called B., with lands thereunto adjoining ; and another close called M., and divers, to wit, two other closes next adjoining thereunto ;" claiming a way from B. to M. and back, for the better use, occupation, &c., of B. and the lands adjoining thereto, and of M. and the adjoining closes respectively. Holt v. Daw, 16 Q. B. 990 ; 20 L. J., Q. B. 365.

A description of a close by two abuttals only is a sufficient description of the premises. North v. Ingamells, 9 M. & W. 249 ; 1 D. (N.S.) 151 ; 11 L. J., Ex. 15.

The plaintiff's close was described by abuttals ; plea, seisin in fee in the defendant, and issue thereon. The plaintiff is entitled to recover for a trespass done in a close in his lawful possession, answering to the description in the declaration, although the defendant also has a close answering to the same description. Lempriere v. Humphrey, 4 N. & M. 638 ; 3 A. & E. 181 ; 1 H. & W. 170.

The owner of a close called Hall Close, removed an old fence, and added to his close a small slip of land adjoining a public road. In an action for an alleged trespass committed upon this slip of land a year after the inclosure, the plaintiff, in his declaration, described the locus in quo as Hall Close :—Held, that it was well described. Brownlow v. Tomlinson or Walker, 1 Scott (N.R.) 426 ; 1 Man. & G. 484 ; 8 D. P. C. 827.

Bankruptcy of Plaintiff.]—A declaration stated a breaking, entering, damaging the doors, hinges and locks, spoiling the grass and fruit trees, and exposing the plaintiff's goods to sale on his premises, by means of which he was not only disturbed in the possession of his house, but prevented from carrying on his business, and deprived of the enjoyment of his goods. The defendant pleaded, that, before action brought, the plaintiff became a bankrupt :—Held, on general demurrer, that, as there were some causes of action included in the declaration which would not pass to the assignees, the plea, which embraced the whole, and was not addressed to any particular part of the declaration, was substantially bad. Rogers v. Spence, 12 Cl. & F. 700.

Several Issues.]—In trespass quare clausum fregit, where there are several issues, and amongst them one on the plaintiff's possession of the close, the plaintiff has a right to a trial of all the other issues, though it appears on the opening of the evidence that he was not in possession of the close. Fry v. Monckton, 2 M. & Rob. 303.

Justification—Separate Trespasses.]—Breaking the doors and locks being not aggravation merely, but a substantive trespass, distinct from the breaking and entering of a house, must be separately justified. Curlewis v. Laurie, 12 Q. B. 640.

To a declaration for breaking and entering the plaintiff's house, and taking and carrying away his goods, and converting them to the defendant's use, the defendant pleaded a justification of the entry, that the house was the freehold of A., and that he entered as his servant, and, because the goods were incumbering the close, he removed them off to a convenient distance :—Held, that the allegation of the conversion of the goods was mere matter of aggravation, and that the plea therefore was not bad for omitting to justify it. Pratt v. Pratt, 6 D. & L. 20 ; 2 Ex. 413 ; 17 L. J., Ex. 299.

In an action for breaking and entering the plaintiff's house, and expelling him therefrom, the breaking and entering are the gist of the action, and the expulsion is merely aggravation : therefore, a justification as to the breaking and entering will cover the whole declaration. Taylor v. Cole, 3 Term Rep. 292 ; 1 H. Bl. 555 ; 1 R. R. 706.

The plaintiff declared for breaking his close, and set out the close by abuttals. The defendant justified, alleging that the close was part of an allotment of six acres made by commissioners duly authorised for certain purposes in execution of which he entered. The plaintiff denied that the close was part of the six acres in the plea supposed to have been allotted ; and thereupon issue was joined. The close, set out by abuttals, was not all within the allotment, but that part in which the actual trespass occurred was within it :—Held, that the justification was made out. Bassett v. Mitchell, 2 B. & Ad. 99 ; 9 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 140.

—— Under Process.]—In an action for breaking and entering the plaintiff's close and taking his goods, the defendant may justify under a sufficient legal process if he had it in fact at the time, although he declared then that he entered for another cause. Crowther v. Ramsbottom, 7 Term Rep. 654 ; 4 R. R. 540.

—— Several Defendants.]—Where several join in one justification, it is either good or bad for all. Anon., Lofft, 364.

Declaration against three ; plea by all, not guilty ; separate pleas of justification by two ; replication to these pleas that those two were guilty of excess ; rejoinder by all three, that they were not all three guilty of excess ; the rejoinders held ill, and judgment for the plaintiff. Morrow v. Belcher, 7 D. & R. 187 ; 4 B. & C. 704 ; 4 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 42.

—— Identity of Trespass.]—Where a plea justifies a trespass, it need not expressly aver the identity of the trespass justified with that declared for, provided the identity be manifest from the whole subject matter. Carridge v. Lautour, 7 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 33.

Liberum tenementum.]—In trespass quare clausum fregit, the defendant is entitled to plead liberum tenementum, with a plea denying the close to be the plaintiff's. Slocombe v. Lyall, 6 Ex. 119 ; 2 L., M. & P. 33 ; 20 L. J., Ex. 95.

It is pleadable to an action for breaking and entering the plaintiff's house, where the name of the premises is particularly set forth in the declaration. Harvey v. Brydges, 3 D. & L. 55 ; 14 M. & W. 437 ; 14 L. J., Ex. 272 ; 9 Jur. 759. Affirmed, 1 Ex. 261—Ex. Ch.

A declaration alleged that the defendant, with force and arms, broke and entered a house and land of the plaintiff, then in his actual possession and occupation, and with force and arms ejected the plaintiff and his family from the occupation of the same ; to which the defendant pleaded liberum tenementum :—Held, good. Ib.

But liberum tenementum, to a declaration charging an assault upon the plaintiff, is a bad plea. Roberts v. Taylor, 1 C. B. 117 ; 3 D. & L. 1 ; 14 L. J., C. P. 87 ; 9 Jur. 330.

Upon a plea of liberum tenementum the defendant has the choice to what parcels he will apply his plea ; and if the plaintiff insists on a trespass in other parcels, he must newly assign. Hawke v. Bacon, 2 Taunt. 156 ; 11 R. R. 545.

The plea of liberum tenementum gives implied colour, for it admits a possession sufficient as against a wrongdoer ; but it denies his rightful possession, and asserts a right to immediate possession in the defendant. Doe v. Wright, 2 P. & D. 672 ; 10 A. & E. 763.

It renders it incumbent on the defendant to prove title, either by deed or by showing twenty years' actual possession. Brest or Grice v. Lever, 7 M. & W. 593 ; 9 D. P. C. 246 ; 10 L. J., Ex. 337.

On a plea of liberum tenementum to an action for a trespass to a close named in the declaration, the defendant is entitled to a verdict, if he establishes a title to that part of the close on which the trespass was committed, and is not bound to prove a title to the whole close. Smith v. Royston, 8 M. & W. 381 ; 1 D. (N.S.) 124 ; 10 L. J., Ex. 437.

A declaration stated, that the defendant, with force and arms, and with a strong hand, and against the form of the statute, broke and entered a house, being in the actual occupation and possession of the plaintiff, and in a forcible manner broke open the doors and windows, and also with force and arms assaulted the plaintiff, and with a strong hand put out and expelled the plaintiff therefrom. Plea, as to the breaking and entering, and breaking the doors, liberum tenementum :—Held, that the plea was good, inasmuch as it justified the breaking and entering, which was the gist of the action, the breaking and entering with a strong hand and against the form of the statute being aggravation. Davison v. Wilson, 11 Q. B. 890 ; 17 L. J., Q. B. 196 ; 12 Jur. 647.

The plea admits such a possession in the plaintiff as would maintain the action against a wrongdoer, but asserts in answer that the defendant is the freeholder, with a right to the immediate possession. Ryan v. Clarke, 7 D. & L. 8 ; 18 L. J., Q. B. 267 ; 13 Jur. 1000.

To an action for breaking and entering the plaintiff's dwelling-house, ejecting and expelling the plaintiff and his family therefrom, and seizing his goods, the defendant pleaded, as to the trespasses in and to the dwelling-house, and seizing and taking the goods, liberum tenemen-

tum. The plaintiff traversed the liberum tenementum, and new-assigned the expulsion:—Held, that the new assignment was bad, the plea justifying the expulsion, as well as the breaking and entering of the dwelling-house, and the seizure of the goods. Meriton v. Coombes, 1 L., M. & P. 510; 9 C. B. 787; 19 L. J., C. P. 336.

Replications.]—A replication of an outstanding term in a stranger confesses the freehold, and presumptive right of immediate possession, but avoids the presumption, which is a consequence of the right of freehold, and by so doing makes the defendant a wrongdoer, notwithstanding he is the freeholder, and falls back upon the possession of the plaintiff, which was asserted in the declaration, and admitted in the plea, and is sufficient against a wrongdoer. Ryan v. Clarke, 7 D. & L. 8; 18 L. J., Q. B. 267; 13 Jur. 1000.

Where a defendant justifies a trespass for preventing a tortious act of the plaintiff, who relies on a licence which rendered his act lawful, he ought to reply the licence. Taylor v. Smith, 7 Taunt. 156.

A freehold of customary tenements within a manor, though such tenements are not held at the will of the lord, and are transferable by lease and release and admittance, is in the lord; and, therefore, where, in an action by the customary tenant against the lord, the latter pleads liberum tenementum, the derivative and subordinate interest of the tenant ought to be replied. Thompson v. Hardinge, 1 C. B. 940; 14 L. J., C. P. 268; 9 Jur. 927.

A replication, by way of estoppel, may be replied to a plea of liberum tenementum, and if the plaintiff does not avail himself of that liberty, but merely joins issue on the plea, the matter, which might have been so replied, is not conclusive evidence in his favour, but is merely evidence to go to the jury. Faversham (Lord) v. Emerson, 11 Ex. 385; 3 C. L. R. 1379; 24 L. J., Ex. 254.

In an action for breaking and entering the plaintiff's land, and building thereon a wall and a cornice, a verdict was found for the defendant on the plea of liberum tenementum. In a subsequent action by the devisees of the former defendant against the former plaintiff and his wife, for injury to the reversion by the wife breaking and entering the land and pulling down the cornice, the defendants were held to be estopped, by the record in the former action, from giving evidence to show that the land under the cornice had not been in dispute. Whittaker v. Jackson, 2 H. & C. 926; 33 L. J., Ex. 181; 11 L. T. 155.

—— Involuntary Trespass—Sufficiency of Tender of Amends.]—Where the defendant pleads under 21 Jac. I, c. 16, s. 5, that the trespass was involuntary, and that before action he tendered a certain sum (naming it) being sufficient amends, the plaintiff may reply either that that sum was not tendered or that it was not sufficient amends, but not generally that the defendant did not tender sufficient amends. Williams v. Price, 1 L. J., K. B. 258.

—— Continuing Trespass.]—A declaration alleged that the defendants wrongfully raised an embankment near the plaintiff's house, and wrongfully continued the same, by reason whereof large quantities of water flowed against and into the house. Plea, that the embankment was raised and continued by the defendants under certain acts of parliament. Replication, that although the embankment was raised and continued under the acts of parliament, the flowing of the water against and into the house was occasioned by the wrongful construction and negligent and improper raising of the embankment, and the want of proper and sufficient drains to the same, and the continuing the embankment so wrongfully constructed and insufficiently drained:—Held, that the replication was not a departure from the declaration. Brine v. G. W. Ry., 2 B. & S. 402; 31 L. J., Q. B. 101; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 410; 6 L. T. 50; 10 W. R. 341.

Traverse of Command.]—If the defendant pleads soil and freehold in another, by whose command he justifies the trespass, such command may be traversed by the plaintiff. Chambers v. Donaldson, 11 East, 65; 10 R. R. 435. And see Cary v. Holt, 11 East, 70, n.

The only ground upon which the authority of a servant is traversable in an action of trespass is, the protection of the person or property of a party from the officious and wanton interference of a stranger, where the principal might have been willing to waive the right. Dobree v. Napier, 3 Scott, 201; 2 Bing. (N.C.) 781; 5 L. J., C. P. 273.

A defendant pleaded that the locus in quo was the soil and freehold of T., and justified under him as his servant and by his command. The replication traversed the command. T. was a minor, and a ward in chancery, and the defendant the receiver and agent for the estate:—Held, that from this the jury might infer a general authority to do the act, and if they so inferred, ought to find for the defendant; and that upon this issue the plaintiff was not entitled to show that he held under a lease, and to insist that the act was therefore such as an infant could not authorise. Ecer v. Jones, 9 Q. B. 623; 16 L. J., Q. B. 42; 10 Jur. 965.

New Assignment.]—There cannot be a new assignment except where there is a special plea. Smith v. Milles, 1 Term Rep. 475.

Where the plaintiff in his declaration avers a single act of trespass, which the defendant justifies, there can be no new assignment. Taylor v. Smith, 7 Taunt. 156.

Where a justification is pleaded, to which the plaintiff new assigns that the action is brought for another and different trespass than that mentioned in the plea, and not guilty is pleaded to the new assignment; if the plaintiff gives in evidence only one trespass, it is incumbent on him to show that the trespass is clearly a different one from that mentioned in the plea: if the circumstances are alike, the jury ought to consider it to be the same. Darby v. Smith, 2 M. & Rob. 184.

To an action for breaking the plaintiff's close and laying a railroad thereon, the defendant justified under the reservation contained in certain deeds. The plaintiff new assigned to the plea that the trespasses were committed on other and different occasions, and to a greater extent than was necessary, and for other and different purposes, and on other parts of the close; to which there was judgment by default:—Held, that the plaintiff could not dispute that some species of railroad was within the reservation, but that the question was, whether the railroad was constructed in a direction or in a manner unauthorised by the reservation. Dand v. Kingscote, 6 M. & W. 174; 2 Railw. Cas. 27; 9 L. J., Ex. 279.

The locus in quo was described as "abutting on the south and east on a close in the occupation and possession of the defendants." The defendants (a railway company) pleaded that they took possession of a part of the close abutting on the south on the fence of their railway, under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, ss. 32, 33, which was the trespass complained of. It appeared at the trial, that at the time the trespass was committed, the close abutted on the fence of the railway, but afterwards the company took possession of and purchased a small part of it adjoining the railway, so that the plaintiff's description was correct at the time of the declaration, but not at the time of the trespass:—Held, that the plaintiff, not having new assigned, was not entitled to recover. Humfrey v. L. & N. W. Ry., 7 Ex. 325; 22 L. J., Ex. 149.

Where the defendant pleaded liberum tenementum, as occupier for thirty years, having a right to dig sand and marl; and that the defendant having occasion to exercise the right, and for the purpose of the right, and in the exercise of the right, as occupier of the land, and in order to the cultivation thereof, committed the trespass complained of; to which the plaintiff replied by traversing the plea in the form given by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, s. 77; the plaintiff having proved a trespass, and no evidence being adduced in support of the right claimed:—Held, that the defendant was entitled to a verdict, as the plaintiff ought to have new assigned. Glover v. Dixon, 9 Ex. 158; 2 C. L. R. 309; 23 L. J., Ex. 12; 17 Jur. 1012.

Where the general issue is on record, and the defendant means to suffer judgment by default on a new assignment, so much of the general issue as applies to the trespasses newly assigned should be withdrawn. Cross v. Johnson, 4 M. & Ry. 290; 9 B. & C. 613. See Price v. Seaward, Car. & M. 23.

Evidence—Right to Possession — Onus.]—A party who insists upon remaining on the land of another against his will, and therefore primâ facie against right, ought to show all the circumstances which make such possession lawful, and abridge the general rights of property. Hayling v. Okey, 8 Ex. 531; 22 L. J., Ex. 139; 17 Jur. 325; 1 W. R. 182—Ex. Ch.

—— Distinct Trespasses—One Trespass Alleged.]—A declaration alleged that the defendant, on the 6th of March, broke and entered the plaintiff's house, and continued therein for eight days. Plea, payment into court, as to the first three days, and not guilty as to the residue. It was proved that the defendant, having quitted the house on the third day, returned on the fifth and continued therein for three more days:—Held, that evidence of the latter trespass was rightly received under the declaration, though it only alleged one trespass with a continuando. Percival v. Stamp, 9 Ex. 167; 2 C. L. R. 282.

Admissions and Conduct of Defendant.]—In an action for breaking and entering the plaintiff's mine and taking coals, evidence of working by the plaintiff in another part of the same mine, within eighty yards of the place of the trespass, coupled with a statement by the defendant, that he had got the coal, and was willing to pay such amount as should be settled by arbitration, is evidence of the plaintiff's being in possession of the place where the trespass was committed. Wild v. Holt, 9 M. & W. 672; 1 D. (N.S.) 876; 11 L. J., Ex. 285.

In an action against five persons for breaking into the plaintiff's house, in which they have paid money into court, the plaintiff cannot go into proof (as evidence of malice), that, nine months after the trespass, one of them indicted him for perjury. Newton v. Holford, 1 Car. & K. 537.

Evidence of the conduct of the parties before the trespass complained of, if it has reference to it, may be receivable; but not evidence of the act of one defendant done by him long after the trespass. Ib.

Refusing Entrance to Plaintiff.]—In an action for breaking and entering the plaintiff's apartment, it appeared that the plaintiff had taken furnished lodgings in the defendant's house for a term, and that the only entrance to them was through the defendant's street door and lobby; and the evidence to show the breaking and entering by the defendant was, that, before the term had expired, the defendant prevented the plaintiff from entering the house, telling him he should no longer have the apartments:—Held, sufficient evidence for the jury to infer a breaking and entering of the apartments by the defendant. Lane v. Dixon, 3 C. B. 776; 16 L. J., C. P. 129; 11 Jur. 89.

Nature of Right.]—Issue being taken on pleas justifying a trespass, in exercise of a right, evidence is admissible to show that the entry was not at a proper time, and that the plaintiff resisted the entry on that ground. Lynn v. Comer, 2 F. & F. 244.

Recalling Witnesses.]—The plaintiff's counsel, after he has closed his case, may recall a witness to prove that the locus in quo was in the possession of the plaintiff, which he had omitted to do on his previous examination. Brown v. Giles, 1 Car. & P. 118; 28 R. R. 769.

Entering Verdict — Several Defendants.]—The application to a judge, in the course of a cause, to direct a verdict for one or more of several defendants in trespass, is strictly in his discretion; and that discretion is to be regulated not merely by the fact, that, at the close of the plaintiff's case, no evidence appears to affect them, but by the probabilities, whether any such will arise before the whole evidence in the cause closes. Sowell v. Champion, 2 N. & P. 627; 6 A. & E. 407; 7 L. J., Q. B. 197.

In trespass against several, there cannot be a verdict for any of them until the case for the plaintiff is finally closed by the complete examination of all his witnesses, nor so long as the cross-examination of any of them is reserved. Souch v. Champion, 1 F. & F. 495.

Where a verdict was found against one only of several defendants, the evidence applying to all, but no leave was given at the trial for leave to enter a verdict against the others:—Held, that a verdict could not be entered against them. Stirling v. Cozens, 3 D. P. C. 790.

If two defendants suffer judgment by default, and the plaintiff executes writs of inquiry against them separately, and takes several damages against them, it is irregular; and if the plaintiff enters up final judgment with those several damages against the defendants, it is erroneous; but the court will permit the plaintiff to set aside his own proceedings before final judgment on payment of costs. Mitchell v. Milbank, 6 Term Rep. 199.

3. Who may Maintain.

a. In General.

Occupancy.]—Mere prior occupancy of land, however recent, gives a good title to the occupier, whereupon he may recover against all the world, except such as can prove an older and a better title in themselves. Catteris v. Cowper, 4 Taunt. 547; 13 R. R. 682.

Semble, that the daughter, or even a female servant of the occupier of a house, has such a possession of her bedroom as will enable her to maintain trespass against a person who wrongfully forces himself into it while she is in bed. Lewis v. Ponsford, 8 Car. & P. 687.

Proof that the plaintiff was in separate possession of two rooms of a house, is sufficient to satisfy an allegation that he was in possession of the messuage. Fenn v. Grafton, 2 Bing. (N.C.) 617; 3 Scott. 56; 2 Hodges, 58. See Monks v. Dykes, 4 M. & W. 567; 8 L. J., Ex. 73.

The actual possession of crown lands, under a parol licence from the crown, entitles the party in possession to maintain trespass against a wrongdoer. Harper v. Charlesworth, 6 D. & R. 572; 4 B. & C. 574; 4 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 22; 28 R. R. 405.

Trespass lies in respect of possession only, independent of this right, where it is clear and unequivocal; but the damages are in such a case to be given in respect of the possession only. Peachey v. Wing, 5 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 55.

—— For Limited Purpose.]—Where contractors for making a navigable canal erected a dam composed of piles and earth, with the consent of the owner of the soil, for the purpose of completing their work:—Held, that they might maintain trespass against the defendants as wrongdoers, for breaking and destroying the same. Dyson v. Collick, 1 D. & R. 225; 5 B. & Ald. 600.

The proprietor of land agreed to grant leases to the defendant of certain houses which he had undertaken to build on the land; the defendant to hold the land and premises for eighty years, yielding therefor 400*l.* a year rent, and to build a wall all along the west side of the land; the landlord to have a right of way over the streets between the houses. The defendant entered, paid rent, built houses, and obtained leases of the houses as fast as they were built:—Held, that he was, under these circumstances, in possession of the soil between the houses, and that the landlord could not maintain an action against him for erecting a wall on the west side of the land, across the end of one of the streets. Alexander v. Bonnin, 4 Bing. (N.C.) 799; 6 Scott, 611; 1 Arn. 337; 8 L. J., C. P. 53.

Where A. was seised in fee of a close upon which the burgesses of a borough had a right, during a portion of the year, to depasture their cattle, and had, during that period, exclusive possession of the close:—Held, that A. might maintain an action against a party who, during that period, committed a trespass in the subsoil by digging holes, but not against any one who, during that period, merely rode over the close. Cox v. Glue, 5 C. B. 533; 17 L. J., C. P. 162; 12 Jur. 185.

Nature of Title.]—D. and H. agreed between themselves, in writing, to purchase lands then in the market. By this agreement D. was to have the surface at three-fourths, and H. the minerals at one-fourth of the whole purchase-money. H. afterwards entered into a contract with the owner of the lands to purchase them from him. The lands were duly conveyed to D. by the owner, H. being a party to the purchase deed, and executing a release of all his interest in the lands to D. Afterwards, by an indenture of the 12th July, 1834, D. granted, bargained and sold to H., his executors, administrators, and assigns, all the minerals lying under the lands, upon terms substantially the same as those contained in the previous agreement between D. and H. The indenture of the 12th July, 1834, was not inrolled as a bargain and sale, and there was no livery of seisin to make it operate as a feoffment. There were seven seams of coal and minerals lying under the lands, and soon after the execution of the deed, H. began to work and get the coal under the lands, and continued so to do between 1835 and 1844. He did not, however, go below the two first seams of coal, and, on his ceasing to work in 1844, H. left tramways, implements, &c., in the tunnels and levels he had made. In 1855, H. by deed, conveyed the minerals (except the two first or upper seams), with power to dig for and get the coal, to the plaintiffs, who shortly afterwards entered, and bored down below the two first seams, in order to try for, but they did not work, the coal. D. died in 1848, and in 1857 his devisee and heir-at-law, by deed, granted the lands (except the coal thereunder theretofore sold and conveyed to H.) to S., subject as to the beds of coal under the same to the indenture of the 12th July, 1834. In 1872 S. granted a lease of the coal under the lands to the defendants, and they entered and worked, and got coal under the lease in 1872. On the first of January, 1873, the surviving trustee for sale of D. granted and confirmed unto S. and his heirs, all the seams and beds of coal lying under the lands, subject to such right or interest as legally passed to H., his executors, administrators or assigns, under the indenture of the 12th July, 1834. H. died in 1861:—Held, that the plaintiffs, through H., had sufficient possession of all the seams of coal to entitle them to maintain trespass against the defendants, who were mere wrongdoers, for intruding upon the plaintiff's mines. Low Moor Co. v. Stanley Coal Co., 34 L. T. 186—C. A.

Possessory Right.]—A possessory right, sufficient to maintain trespass, may be resorted to, even after it has appeared that the plaintiff has in fact no legal title, and when the locus in quo is the soil of a street, and the actual possession he sets up is by his recent commencement of a building upon the locus in quo, the pulling down of the incomplete walls of which was the trespass complained of, and which was pulled down on the suggestion that they constituted a nuisance to a highway. Every v. Smith, 26 L. J., Ex. 344.

Mortgagee out of Possession.]—Trespass will not lie against the occupier of land at the suit of a mortgagee, who has never been in actual possession, or been seised of the land, and has not obtained a judgment in ejectment either by default or by verdict, and therefore he cannot in such case waive the tort and maintain an action for use and occupation. Turner v. Cameron's

Coalbrook Steam Coal Co., 5 Ex. 932; 20 L. J., Ex. 71.

Lessees.]—The tenant of a mortgagor, whose tenancy was created after the mortgage, and has never been recognised by the mortgagee, cannot maintain trespass against the mortgagee for entering and distraining on the land under the powers of the mortgage. Gibbs v. Cruikshank, 42 L. J., C. P. 273; L. R. 8 C. P. 454; 28 L. T. 735; 21 W. R. 734.

An entry is not necessary to the vesting of a term of years in the lessee, but for the purpose of maintaining an action of trespass the lessee must enter, since that action is founded on the actual possession. Harrison v. Blackburn, 17 C. B. (N.S.) 678; 34 L. J., C. P. 109; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1131; 11 L. T. 454; 13 W. R. 135.

Lessors.]—A person legally entitled to land, having entered without making any formal declaration of his entry, may maintain trespass against a person wrongfully in possession at the time of entry, and continuing in such possession afterwards. Butcher v. Butcher, 7 B. & C. 399; 1 M. & Ry. 220; 6 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 51; 31 R. R. 237.

A lessor having entered at the expiration of the term, may sue in trespass persons claiming under the late tenant as well as the late tenant himself. Hey v. Moorehouse, 8 Scott, 156; 6 Bing. (N.C.) 52; 9 L. J., C. P. 113.

Executor.]—An executor can maintain trespass for injury to a chattel real of his testator done in the testator's lifetime. Hone v. Hamilton, Ir. R. 9 C. L. 15.

Heir.]—After entry by an heir at law, his right of possession relates back to the time his legal right to enter accrued, so as to enable him to support an action against a wrongdoer for a trespass committed at a time antecedent to the entry. Barnett v. Guildford (Earl), 11 Ex. 19; 24 L. J., Ex. 281; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1142; 3 W. R. 406.

It makes no difference in this respect that the wrongdoer is an abator, and the cases in which a contrary doctrine is laid down are not law. Ib.

Tenant for Life.]—Where the interest of A., a tenant, ceases before the expiration of the term of letting, by the death of his landlord, the tenant for life, A. will not be presumed to have continued in possession after such death, and, in the absence of any subsequent entry, or other act done by him, he has not a sufficient possession of the land, either actual or constructive, to entitle him to maintain trespass. Brown v. Notley, 3 Ex. 219; 18 L. J., Ex. 39.

Where it is necessary to a plea of justification under a lease from a tenant for life, that he should be still living, the defendant must aver the continuance of the life, otherwise the plea is bad on general demurrer. Dayrell v. Hoare, 4 P. & D. 114; 12 A. & E. 356; 9 L. J., Q. B. 299.

Servant after Notice.]—The plaintiff was employed by the Highgate Archway Company to collect toll for them, and lived in the toll-house, one shilling per week being deducted from his wages by way of rent. The company having ceased to collect toll at the particular spot, he was dismissed from their employ, and received a notice to leave the house, which he promised to do:—Held, that these circumstances did not constitute him a tenant of the company; and, therefore, that he could not maintain trespass against their agent for pulling down the toll-house. Hunt v. Colson, 3 M. & Scott, 790.

The committee of a society having dismissed their manager, entered on and expelled him from a house they had put him into possession of and allowed him to occupy as such manager, and in which he had also been allowed to carry on his own business as a bookseller, and took possession of, but offered to return his stock, which, however, he never had applied for:—Held, that he could not sue them, either in trespass or trover. White v. Bailey, 2 F. & F. 385. A rule for a new trial was afterwards refused. 10 C. B. (N.S.) 227; 30 L. J., C. P. 253; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 948.

The plaintiff was master of a school which was under the control of trustees, and, as such, was allowed to occupy a schoolhouse. The trustees had drawn up certain rules, one of which provided for the master's dismissal, in case of misconduct. In pursuance of this rule, the trustees, on the 28th June, dismissed the plaintiff, who acquiesced in the dismissal, and the school was then peaceably taken possession of by the trustees and locked up. On the following day the plaintiff re-entered by force. On the 11th July he was ejected by the trustees. To an action against them for such eviction, the trustees pleaded that the plaintiff was not possessed:—Held, that he had not, by his re-entry, a prima facie right of possession against the trustees as wrongdoers. Browne v. Dawson, 12 A. & E. 624; 4 P. & D. 355; 10 L. J., Q. B. 7.

Date of Entry.]—Trespass is not maintainable by a person who comes into possession after the commission of the trespass. Pilgrim v. Southampton and Dorchester Ry., 8 C. B. 25; 18 L. J., C. P. 330. But see Barnett v. Guildford (Earl), col. 251.

b. Tenants in Common against Each Other.

When actual Ouster.]—One tenant in common cannot maintain trespass or trover against his co-tenant for cutting and carrying away the grass off their land unless there has been an ouster, or unless it is shown that the grass has been destroyed. Jacobs v. Seward, 41 L. J., C. P. 221; L. R. 5 H. L. 464; 27 L. T. 185—H. L. (E.) Affirming 18 W. R. 953—Ex. Ch.

A. and B. being tenants in common of land, B. entered the land, cut the grass, put a lock upon the gate, and carried away the grass. There was no evidence that he kept the gate locked, but there was evidence that he opened the gate for A.'s son to take away the hay of a former year:—Held, that these facts did not amount to an ouster, so as to enable A. to maintain an action of trespass against B., nor to a destruction of the common property, so as to entitle him to maintain an action of trover. Ib.

Held, also, that the court was right in refusing to allow an amendment of the declaration by converting the action into an action for an account under 4 Anne, c. 16, s. 27. Ib.

Trespass quare clausum fregit lies by one of several tenants in common against his co-tenant where there has been an actual expulsion. Murray v. Hall, 7 C. B. 441; 18 L. J., C. P. 161; 13 Jur. 262.

So it lies by one tenant in common against his co-tenant (or the licensee of the latter), for digging up and carrying away the soil of the close of which they are tenants in common, for such an act is an ouster. Wilkinson v. Haygarth, 12 Q. B. 837 ; 16 L. J., Q. B. 103 ; 11 Jur. 104.

To such an action, a plea that the close is not the close of the plaintiff is not supported by proof that he is tenant in common of it with others who authorised the trespass. Ib.

The plaintiff and defendant being tenants in common of a wall, the defendant removed the coping stones and increased the height of it, so as to form the back of a building which he erected against it, and carried up a chimney upon it :—Held, evidence of an ouster, for which an action was maintainable. Stedman v. Smith, 8 El. & Bl. 1 ; 26 L. J., Q. B. 314 ; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1248.

Where a tenant in common of a garden wall in the course of building operations pulled down the wall and in rebuilding same encroached on the ground of the other tenant in common, who was a reversioner, the court ordered that the wall should be divided longitudinally between the co-tenants, and refused a mandatory injunction to remove the encroachment, but granted damages to the reversioner in respect thereof, as it was of a permanent character. Mayfair Property Co. v. Johnston, 63 L. J., Ch. 399 ; [1894] 1 Ch. 508 ; 8 R. 781 ; 70 L. T. 485.

Paying into Court.]—Where one tenant in common brings an action against his co-tenant, and the declaration takes no notice of his limited interest, but alleges an expulsion or a total destruction, the defendant may pay money into court in respect of the damage to the plaintiff's share, and as to the residue plead liberum tenementum, or traverse the plaintiff's property. Cresswell v. Hedges, 1 H. & C. 421 ; 31 L. J., Ex. 497 ; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 767 ; 7 L. T. 70 ; 10 W. R. 777.

4. Leave and Licence.

Must be specially Pleaded.]——A licence to enter the plaintiff's house, if pleaded, is a bar to an action for breaking and entering his house, and debauching his daughter, but it cannot be given in evidence under the general issue. Bennett v. Alcott, 2 Term Rep. 166.

A plea of leave and licence means leave and licence in fact, and a licence in law must be specially pleaded. Moxon v. Savage, 2 F. & F. 182.

Exceeding Licence.]—A tenant from year to year being desirous of letting his house for a quarter, quitted and left it locked, with authority to his landlord to let it during his absence, if an opportunity offered, and for that purpose left the key with a neighbour ; an opportunity occurred of letting the house, but the person who had the key having absconded, the landlord entered by placing a ladder against the house and raising the first-floor window, and after showing the inside of the house, left it in the same state as before ; the house was afterwards entered by persons unknown, and some of the tenant's furniture and wearing apparel were stolen ; and the tenant having brought an action against the landlord for breaking and entering the house, and leaving it insecure, in consequence of which his furniture and wearing apparel were stolen :—Held, that a plea of leave and licence was no answer to the action. Ancaster v. Milling, 2 D. & R. 714. S. C., sub. nom. Acaster v. Binney, 1 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 168.

Presence at Creditors' Meeting.]—A person who, as the duly appointed proxy of a creditor, attends a meeting of creditors convened to be held in a particular room by the occupier of same, has, after the acceptance of his proxy by such occupier of the premises, a right to be in the room, and he cannot be treated as a trespasser if, before the termination of the meeting, he is requested to leave the room and refuses to do so. Vaughan v. Hampson, 33 L. T. 15.

At Race-course.]—E. was the steward of the Doncaster races. Tickets of admission to the grand stand were issued, with his sanction, and sold for a guinea each, entitling the holders to come into the stand and the inclosure round it, during the races. The plaintiff bought one of the tickets, and was in the inclosure during the races, when the defendant, by order of E. desired him to leave it, and on his refusing to do so, after a reasonable time had elapsed for his quitting it, put him out, using no unnecessary violence, but not returning the guinea :—Held, that, on this evidence, the jury was properly directed to find the issue for the defendant. Wood v. Ledbitter, 13 M. & W. 838 ; 14 L. J., Ex. 161.

Sub-lessee—Clause against Sub-letting.]—Sub-letting premises to a person gives him a licence to occupy same, even where the sub-lessor is prohibited from sub-letting and where such person is in possession he is entitled to remain there until the licence has been revoked by a competent authority. Authority to commit a trespass on such premises derived from the administrator of the sub-lessor, who obtained administration after the committing of the trespass, does not relate back so as to justify it. Littleton v. McNamara, Ir. R. 9 C. L. 417.

Licence to Eject.]—A licence by a tenant to his landlord to eject him on a specified day without any process of law is void, as authorising the commission of an act which is made illegal by the act 5 Ric. 2, st. 1, c. 8. Edwick v. Hawkes or Edridge v. Hawker, 50 L. J., Ch. 577 ; 18 Ch. D. 199 ; 45 L. T. 168 ; 29 W. R. 913.

If a person, who has a legal right of entry upon land which is in the possession of a wrongdoer, is allowed to enter peaceably through the outer door, it is still illegal for him to turn out the wrongdoer with violence. Ib.

The plaintiff being distrained on for rent, gave the defendant, her landlord, the following undertaking : "In consideration of Mr. C. giving me the furniture distrained for rent, I undertake to give him possession of the premises on or before one week from the date hereof." The plaintiff acted on this instrument, by selling some of the furniture for her own use, and at the end of a week the defendant took possession. The plaintiff having sued him in trespass, and the defendant having pleaded leave and licence :—Held, that the above instrument established the plea. Feltham v. Cartwright, 5 Bing. (N.C.) 569 ; 7 Scott, 695 ; 9 L. J., C. P. 67.

A. let premises to B., by an agreement, which contained clauses for payment of rent and for repairing the premises ; and a clause, that, in case of non-payment of the rent, or non-performance of the conditions, it should be lawful for A., without demand, to enter upon and take possession of the premises, and expel B. therefrom, without legal process: and that, in case of such entry, and of an action being brought for the same, the defendant might plead the leave and licence of B. to A. for the entry or trespasses complained of. In an action by B. against C., for breaking and entering the premises, and assaulting the plaintiff, C. pleaded leave and licence. Rent being in arrear from B. to A., C., under a written order from A., entered and forcibly expelled B. The agreement was given in evidence:—Held, that the plea was sustained by the evidence. Kavanagh v. Gudge, 7 Man. & G. 316; 7 Scott (N.R.) 1025; 1 D. & L. 928; 13 L. J., C. P. 99; 8 Jur. 362.

To seize and sell Goods—Demand.]—A licence by deed to enter a dwelling-house at any time or times, and seize certain chattels and sell the same, will not justify a breaking and entering unless a demand of the goods has been first made, together with an intimation of the authority under which such demand is made. Aikins v. Brunton, 14 W. R. 636.

To fetch Goods Sold.]—A licence is not implied by law to the purchaser of goods (though sold under an execution or a distress) to enter upon the premises of the former owner and take them away, although they have remained there with his assent. Williams v. Morris, 8 M. & W. 488; 11 L. J., Ex. 126.

To support a plea of leave and licence to an action for taking away goods under such circumstances, there must be proof of an express agreement that the purchaser should enter on the premises and take the goods. Ib.

To build.]—A plea of leave and licence to erect and maintain a wall upon a given spot is not supported by proof of a licence to erect only. Alexander v. Bonnin, 6 Scott, 611; 4 Bing. (N.C.) 709; 1 Arn. 337; 8 L. J., C. P. 53.

Pending definite Agreement.]—The plaintiff and the defendant having agreed, on a dispute existing between them as to a right of way, that the defendant should use the way ad interim, without prejudice, until it should be determined how the question should be settled:—Held, the plaintiff having locked the gate, and the defendant having broken the lock, that the equitable position of the parties was not such as to bar an action of trespass. Hyde v. Graham, 1 H. & C. 593; 32 L. J., Ex. 27; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1229; 7 L. T. 563; 11 W. R. 119.

Revocation.]—In trespass quare clausum fregit on several days; plea, leave and licence to the whole. If some of the trespasses were committed after the licence was revoked, the plaintiff need not new assign, as the defendant, by his plea, undertakes to prove a licence sufficient to cover all the acts of trespass. Haward v. Grant, 1 Car. & P. 448.

Where no Authority.]—If A. gives B. leave to go on a field, in which A. has no right, and B. goes there, this will not make A. liable as a co-trespasser with B.; but if A. orders and authorises B. to go on the field, and he does so, A. is a joint trespasser with B.; the latter being an authority, the former a leave and licence only. Robinson v. Vaughton, 8 Car. & P. 252.

5. Notice not to Trespass.

Waiver.]—Trustees for sale of premises gave notice, dated May 18, 1824, to A., the rightful occupier of a cottage thereon, not to trespass on any part thereof, and afterwards brought an action against him for trespassing on an orchard. The same parties gave another notice to A. on the 18th March, 1825, and before the trial, to quit the possession of all the ground which he rented or held under them:—Held, that the second notice acknowledged A. as a tenant, and operated as a waiver of the first, which had treated him as a trespasser, and consequently that the action did not lie. Barton v. Cordy, M'Clel. & Y. 278; 1 Car. & P. 664.

6. Practice.

a. Declaration and Injunction.

Declaration that Person a Trespasser.]—In cases where a person trespasses on another's land, having done so frequently in the past, and having expressed an intention to do so in the future, the court has power under Ord. XXV. r. 5, to make a declaration that such person is a trespasser. Harrison v. Rutland (Duke), 62 L. J., Q. B. 117; [1893] 1 Q. B. 142; 4 R. 155; 68 L. T. 35; 41 W. R. 322; 57 J. P. 278—C. A.

Waste.]—The court has no jurisdiction to restrain a trespass which does not amount to waste. Turner v. Ringwood Highway Board, L. R. 9 Eq. 418; 21 L. T. 745; 18 W. R. 424.

Injunction against a mere trespasser committing waste refused. Mogg v. Mogg, Dick. 670.

The tendency of the authorities upon the subject of injury to real property is to break down the old distinction that existed between waste and trespass. Lowndes v. Bettle, 4 N. R. 609; 33 L. J., Ch. 451; 12 W. R. 399.

Exceeding Right.] — Injunction granted against trespass where trespasser exceeded a limited right to enter lands and take stone from a quarry. Thomas v. Oakley, 18 Ves. 184; 11 R. R. 181.

Trespass causing Irreparable Damage.]—The court will, by mandatory injunction, restrain a trespass the continuance of which will inflict irreparable damage upon persons in possession. Damage which it is impossible to measure will be deemed irreparable. L. & N. W. Ry. v. Lancashire & Yorkshire Ry., 36 L. J., Ch. 479; L. R. 4 Eq. 174; 17 L. T. 43; 15 W. R. 810. S. P., Cowper (Earl) v. Baker, 17 Ves. 128. See also Haigh v. Jaggar, 2 Colly. 231; and Ardley v. St. Pancras Union, post, col. 258.

A. demised certain lands to B., and for some years allowed B. and his under-tenants to cut turf out of a bog adjoining the lands demised; some acres of the bog having been reclaimed, B. set them, alleging that they formed part of the lands demised by A. In 1836 A. by notice demanded possession of the land reclaimed, and withdrew the permission to cut turf from the bog. An ejectment being brought for the recovery of the reclaimed lands, and B. still continuing to cut turf as before, pending the ejectment, A. filed a bill for an injunction to restrain him. The injunction was refused, as the case was not one of a sudden and irreparable injury, and therefore the court would not interfere in a case of trespass. Sandys v. Murray, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 29.

The court will not grant an injunction to restrain a person from committing a trespass, where it is temporary only; otherwise, where it has continued so long as to become a nuisance. Coulson v. White, 3 Atk. 21.

Title Inconclusive.]—After a railway company had purchased a piece of land from A., who was mentioned in the book of reference to be the owner of it, B., a neighbouring landowner, part of whose land the company had also taken, claimed to be owner of the piece of land, and filed a bill for an injunction to restrain the company from continuing in possession of it, and from committing waste on it. But, the affidavits as to title on both sides being inconclusive, the court refused the injunction. Webster v. S. E. Ry., 1 Sim. (N.S.) 272; 6 Railw. Cas. 698; 20 L. J., Ch. 194; 15 Jur. 73.

On bill stating intent of defendant to encroach on plaintiff's land, &c., by building, defendant, by answer, claiming title to land himself, motion for injunction was refused, not being sufficient to try title on. Bateman v. Johnson, Fitzg. 106.

Title Disputed.] — Injunction in trespass granted where the title was disputed. Kinder v. Jones, 17 Ves. 110.

Title not Disputed.]—When the plaintiff's title is not disputed the court will grant an injunction to restrain acts of trespass without requiring him first to bring an action. Goodson v. Richardson, 43 L. J., Ch. 790; L. R. 9 Ch. 221; 30 L. T. 142; 22 W. R. 337.

When water pipes had, without the consent of the owner of the soil, been laid in the soil of a highway, an injunction to restrain the continuance of the pipes was granted; the owner of the soil not being left to his remedy at law, and not being required to establish his right at law. Ib.

The facts that the soil under the highway was of no value to the owner, and that his motive for applying to the court was not connected with the enjoyment of his land, were held not to be reasons against the granting of the injunction. Ib.

Where Damages no Adequate Remedy — Pauper Defendant.]—Where a bill was filed praying for an injunction to restrain various acts of trespass committed against the plaintiff, and of annoyance to his tenants, by a pauper defendant, the court, on demurrer, granted the injunction, as recovering damages at law against a pauper did not constitute an adequate remedy. Hodgson v. Duce, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1014; 4 W. R. 576.

Cutting Timber—Collusion with Tenant.]—Injunction granted against trespasser cutting timber by collusion with tenant, without prejudice to the case of a mere trespasser. Courthope v. Mapplesden, 10 Ves. 290.

—— Trespasser in Possession under Articles to Purchase.]—Injunction granted against the cutting of timber by a trespasser, viz. by a person who had got possession under articles to purchase. Crockford v. Alexander, 15 Ves. 138; 10 R. R. 44.

—— Threat to continue Trespass.]—In 1859 H. brought ejectment against S. to recover a piece of woodland. S. set up adverse possession for more than twenty years, and the action was discontinued. H. shortly afterwards took up his residence in a house close to the wood, and frequently walked in the wood, turned cattle into it, and cut the brambles there. In 1873 he cut down a tree in the wood, and threatened to cut more, upon which S. filed his bill for an injunction:—Held, that after H. had, by bringing ejectment, admitted S. to be in possession of the wood, the acts done by H. must be looked upon only as acts of trespass not putting him into possession, and that S., being in possession, was entitled to an interlocutory injunction to restrain him from cutting timber. Stanford v. Hurlstone, L. R. 9 Ch. 116; 30 L. T. 140; 22 W. R. 422.

Paupers going to Relieving Office.]—The guardians of the poor, wrongfully claiming a right of way to their relieving office over the plaintiffs' lands, invited paupers to come that way for relief; the trespass by the paupers causing serious injury to the plaintiffs, an injunction was granted to restrain the guardians, their servants, workmen, and agents, from trespassing. Ardley v. St. Pancras Union, 39 L. J., Ch. 871.

In considering the injury, the possible as well as the actual use of the injured premises will be regarded. Ib.

Fishery—Enclosing Bed of River.]—Where parties have established a right to a several fishery in part of a tidal river the court will grant an injunction to restrain a party from enclosing the bed of the river (the effect of which would be to destroy the fishery) without necessarily deciding or entering upon the question of the ownership of the soil. Bridges v. Highton, 11 L. T. 653.

Bill of Sale—Man in Possession—Claim of Landlord.]—Where, after the expiration of a tenancy for years, the holder of a bill of sale of the furniture of the late tenant put and continued a man in possession of the furniture upon the premises under a power in his security:—Held, that the landlord was entitled to treat the bill of sale holder as a mere trespasser; and in an action against him by the landlord to restrain him from selling the goods on the premises or continuing in possession, an interlocutory injunction was granted in those terms. Smith v. Brown, 48 L. J., Ch. 694.

Landlord and Tenant—Mesne Landlord Entering on Premises—No Express Power in Lease.]—A mesne landlord entering on demised premises in the absence of express power in the lease, though himself liable to forfeiture for non-repair, will be restrained by injunction. Stocker v. Planet Building Society, 27 W. R. 877—C. A.

Party Wall—Tenants in Common.]—Where a tenant in common of a garden wall in the course of building operations pulled down the wall and rebuilt the same on a concrete foundation which encroached upon the land of the other tenant in common who was a reversioner, the court ordered that the wall should be divided longitudinally between the co-tenants, and refused a mandatory injunction to compel the wrongdoer to remove the encroaching foundation, but granted damages to the reversioner in respect of the trespass on the ground that it was of a permanent nature. Mayfair Property Co. v. Johnston, 63 L. J., Ch. 399; [1894] 1 Ch. 508; 8 R. 781; 70 L. T. 485.

Practice — Requiring Defendant to Admit Facts.]—On a bill to restrain the continuance of a trespass alleged to have been actually committed, the court, in putting the plaintiff to his motion, will not require the defendant to admit any fact that enters into the question of trespass, at least unless such fact be clearly and unqualifiedly admitted in the answer. Beaufort (Duke) v. Morris, 2 Ph. 683; 12 Jur. 614.

b. Damages.

Encroachment—Party Wall—Trespass of a Permanent Nature.]—Where a tenant in common of a wall in the rebuilding of same encroached on the land of the other tenant in common who was a reversioner, the court ordered that the wall should be divided longitudinally between the co-tenants, and refused a mandatory injunction to compel the removal of the encroachment, but granted damages to the reversioner in respect of the trespass on the ground that it was of a permanent nature. Mayfair Property Co. v. Johnston, 63 L. J., Ch. 399; [1894] 1 Ch. 508; 8 R. 781; 70 L. T. 485.

Against Rightful Owner—Forcible Entry.]—Damages cannot be recovered against a rightful owner of land for a forcible entry on land; but for any independent wrong connected with such entry damages may be recovered even by a person whose possession was wrongful. Beddall v. Maitland, 50 L. J., Ch. 401; 17 Ch. D. 174; 44 L. T. 248; 29 W. R. 484.

Exemplary Damages.]—The jury in an action for damages for breaking and entering certain premises, may give exemplary, as distinguished from compensating, damages, if they believe, on the evidence, that the defendant entered the premises in a mode which he at the time knew was illegal. Reeves v. Penrose, 26 L. R., Ir. 141.

Aggravation.]—Trespass for breaking and entering the plaintiff's dwelling house may be well laid to have been done under a false charge and assertion, that the plaintiff had stolen property in her house, per quod she was injured in her credit, for that is laid only as matter of aggravation; and the jury may give damages for the trespass, as it is aggravated by such false charge. Bracegirdle v. Orford, 2 M. & S. 77.

Mining beyond Boundary.]—A. was the owner of a small feu of about an acre and a half in extent. The surface of the ground was occupied by miners' cottages, and underneath was coal. When A. purchased the feu he was under the impression that all the minerals under the feu, as under all the ground surrounding it, had been reserved to the superior; but that was a mistake, for in the deed granting the feu there was no reservation of coal. The superior granted the whole property in the coals in all the surrounding land to R. and C. They, under the impression that they had the whole of the coal, including the coal under the acre and a half, worked out and disposed of the coal under A.'s acre and a half; and in doing so damaged the surface. A. could not have worked the coal at a profit himself; there was no person to whom he could dispose of it but to R. and C.; and the element of wilful trespass, and the element of special and exceptional need of support to the surface, were absent. In a claim by A. for (1) the value of the coal; (2) a sum for "way-leave" and the advantage obtained by working through instead of round the feu; and (3) for damages done to the houses on the surface:—Held, affirming the decision of the court below, that the value of the coal taken must be the value of the coal to the person from whom it is taken, at the time it is taken, and that the best evidence in the peculiar circumstances of this case of that value was the royalty paid by R. and C. for the surrounding coalfield; therefore A. was entitled to the lordship on the coal excavated, calculated at that rate; together with the payment of a sum for damage done to the houses on the surface. Livingstone v. Rawyards Coal Co., 5 App. Cas. 25; 42 L. T. 334; 28 W. R. 357; 44 J. P. 392—H. L. (Sc.)

In an action for getting and taking coal from a coal mine, the proper measure of damages is the value of the coal as soon as it is severed from the freehold, which may be ascertained by deducting from the saleable value of the coal at the pit's mouth the expense of carrying it there from the mine. Morgan v. Powell, 3 Q. B. 278; 2 G. & D. 721; 11 L. J., Q. B. 263; 6 Jur. 1109.

In an action for taking coals from the plaintiff's mine, where the defendant is a mere wrongdoer, the measure of damages is the value of the coals at the time when they first existed as chattels; and the defendant is not entitled to any deduction for the expense of getting them, or for a rent payable to the mineowner on coals got from the mine. Wild v. Holt, 9 M. & W. 672; 1 D. (N.S.) 376; 11 L. J., Ex. 285.

Taking Soil.]—T. demised land to the plaintiff at an annual rent for twenty-one years, with liberty to dig half an acre of brick earth annually; the lessee covenanted that he would not dig more, or, if he did, that he would pay an increased rent of 37*l.* per half acre, being after the same rate that the whole brick earth was sold for. A stranger dug and took away brick earth; the lessee recovered against him the full value of it:—Held, that he was entitled to retain the whole damages. Attersoll v. Stevens, 1 Taunt. 183; 9 R. R. 731.

In an action for cutting into the plaintiff's close, and carrying away the soil, the proper measure of damages is the value to the plaintiff of the land removed, not the expense of restoring it to its original condition. Jones v. Gooday, 8 M. & W. 146; 1 D. (N.S.) 50; 10 L. J., Ex. 275.

Land—Continuous User—Compensation—Tipping Mining Spoil.]—In assessing damages for trespass by tipping mining spoil for eight years on another's land, the value of the land to the wrongdoer for the purposes for which it was used by him must be taken into consideration. The principle of the wayleave cases, Jegon v. Vivian (40 L. J., Ch. 389 ; L. R. 6 Ch. 742) and Phillips v. Homfray (L. R., 6 Ch. 770), that a trespasser shall not be allowed to use another person's land without paying for it, applied on the ground that the trespasser, besides injuring the land, had also had the use of it. Whitwham v. Westminster Brymbo Coal and Coke Co., 65 L. J., Ch. 741 ; [1896] 2 Ch. 538 ; 74 L. T. 804 ; 44 W. R. 698—C. A.

Conversion of Produce.]—In an action for the recovery of land, and for damages for conversion of its produce :—Held, that the measure of damages was the value of the produce which the lands were capable of yielding at the time they were taken possession of, after deducting the expenses of management. However wilful and long-continued the trespass may have been, there is no law which authorises the disallowance of such expenses or the infliction of a penalty on the defendants beyond the loss sustained by the plaintiff. McArthur v. Cornwall, 61 L. J., P. C. 1 ; [1892] A. C. 75 ; 65 L. T. 718—P. C.

Interest.]—Where a plaintiff proves by parol that he occupies the premises under a written agreement from W., and the defendant produces a lease from W., made and taking effect about the time of the acts complained of as trespasses ; in order to entitle him to more than nominal damages, the plaintiff must show the duration of his interest, which he can only do by the production of the written instrument. Twyman v. Knowles, 13 C. B. 222 ; 22 L. J., C. P. 143 ; 17 Jur. 238.

Action for breaking and entering the dwelling house of the plaintiff, and taking away goods therein, not alleging them to be his goods :—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to damages for the value of the goods, as they were not alleged to be his property. Pritchard v. Long, 9 M. & W. 666 ; 1 D. (N.S.) 883 ; 11 L. J., Ex. 306.

Costs.]—In an action for breaking and entering a house, and taking and selling goods, the plaintiff is not entitled to recover the costs of setting aside a warrant of attorney and all subsequent proceedings under which the trespass was committed. Holloway v. Turner, 6 Q. B. 928 ; 14 L. J., Q. B. 143 ; 9 Jur. 160.

Where trespass continuing.]—Trespass is the proper remedy for wrongfully continuing a building on the plaintiff's land, for the erection of which the plaintiff has already recovered compensation ; and a recovery, with satisfaction for erecting it, does not operate as a purchase of the right to continue such erection. Holmes v. Wilson, 10 A. & E. 503. See Thompson v. Gibson, 7 M. & W. 456 ; 9 D. P. C. 717 ; 10 L. J., Ex. 330.

Therefore, where the trustees of a turnpike road built buttresses to support it on the land of A., and A. thereupon sued them and their workmen for such erection, and accepted money paid into court in full satisfaction of the trespass for such erection :—Held, that, after notice to the trustees to remove the buttresses, and a refusal to do so, A. might bring another action against them for keeping and continuing the buttresses on the land, to which the former recovery was no bar. Ib.

Recovery in Replevin no Bar.]—A recovery in replevin is a bar to any action for the same taking of the same goods, as all damages may be then recovered, but not to an action for trespass to land committed at the time of such taking. Gibbs v. Cruikshank, 42 L. J., C. P. 273 ; L. R. 8 C. P. 454 ; 28 L. T. 735 ; 21 W. R. 734.

A person let into possession of mortgaged property by the mortgagor, he being left in possession only by the sufferance of the mortgagee, has no title against the mortgagor, except after his assent to the assignment or tenancy. Ib.

C. TO GOODS.

1. Right of Possession.

Mere Possession.]—The plaintiff, at the time of the trespass, must either have the actual possession or a constructive possession in the property which is the subject of the trespass. Smith v. Milles, 1 Term Rep. 480.

A. commissioned her brother to buy a cow for her, and a fortnight afterwards he bought a cow ; but, before the cow had either come to A.'s hands or she had assented to the purchase, the cow was taken by B. :—Held, that A. had such a property in the cow as would enable her to maintain trespass against B. for taking the cow. Thomas v. Phillips, 7 Car. & P. 573.

If an owner of a chattel gratuitously permits another person to use it, the owner may maintain trespass for an injury done to it while it is so used. Lotan v. Cross, 2 Camp. 464.

A shopkeeper, who has the possession of goods sent to him on sale or return, may maintain trespass for their injury in his own name. Colwill v. Reeves, 2 Camp. 575.

As Servant.]—A master of a flyboat, who is hired by a canal company at weekly wages, may maintain trespass for cutting a rope fastened to the vessel, whereby it was towed along an inland navigation, although the vessel and the rope were the property of the company. Moore v. Robinson, 2 B. & Ad. 817 ; 1 L. J., K. B. 4.

A. hired a steamboat for an excursion, the owner's captain navigating her:—Held, that the hirer had not such a possession as to justify him in forcibly turning out a stranger whom the captain had allowed to come on board. Dean v. Hogg, 10 Bing. 345 ; 4 M. & Scott, 188 ; 6 Car. & P. 54 ; 3 L. J., C. P. 113.

Assignee.]—Where goods are assigned as security for an advance of money, upon trust to permit the assignor to remain in possession of them until default in payment at the time stipulated, and upon further trust to sell them upon such default being made, the assignee has a sufficient possession to enable him to maintain trespass against a wrongdoer. White v. Morris, 11 C. B. 1015 ; 21 L. J., C. P. 185 ; 16 Jur. 500.

Auctioneer.]—An auctioneer put into possession of fixtures attached to the freehold for the purpose of selling them, the purchaser being bound to detach and remove them, has not such a possession as will support trespass de bonis asportatis for their wrongful removal. Davis v. Danks, 3 Ex. 435 ; 18 L. J., Ex. 213.

Qualified Right.]—A., being indebted to B., it was agreed that B. should keep A.'s cow till the debt was paid; that A. might drive her away every morning and night to be milked; and if he did not return her, that B. might retake her whenever and wherever he found her. A. drove her away, and kept her three weeks, whereupon B. retook her. In an action by A. against B. for so doing:—Held, that these facts supported a plea denying A.'s property in the cow. Richards v. Symons, 8 Q. B. 90; 15 L. J., Q. B. 35; 10 Jur. 6.

Incomplete Possession.]—The plaintiff and the defendant were owners of boats employed in a fishery. The plaintiff's boat cast a fishing sean round a shoal of mackerel, with the exception of a comparatively small opening, which the sean did not quite fill up, but through which, in the opinion of the witnesses, the fish could not escape. The defendant's boat then came through the opening and took the mackerel:—Held, that the plaintiff could not maintain trespass for taking his fish, his possession not having been complete. Young v. Hichens, D. & M. 592; 6 Q. B. 606.

Possession of Trespasser.]—Title to property created merely by the act of reducing a thing into possession necessarily implies a reduction into possession effected by an act which is not in any way of a wrongful nature. Such an act, therefore, effected by one who is at the moment a trespasser, cannot create a title to property. Blades v. Higgs, 11 H. L. Cas. 621; 20 C. B. (N.S.) 214; 34 L. J., C. P. 286; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 701; 12 L. T. 615; 13 W. R. 927.

Setting up Jus tertii as an Answer.]—A., being in possession of a piano, which he had previously mortgaged with other goods by a bill of sale to B., sold it to the plaintiff, who took possession of it, and removed it from premises which A. held as tenant to the defendant. The sale to the plaintiff was a bonâ fide transaction. The defendant, to whom a year's rent was due by A., and being unaware of B.'s mortgage, or of the sale to the plaintiff, caused the chattel to be taken out of the plaintiff's possession and replaced in the premises held by A. Thereupon B. claimed it as his property, but the defendant, after B.'s claim had been made, distrained and sold the piano, together with other goods, for the rent due, when it was purchased amongst other property by B., who paid the defendant the rent due, and the costs and expenses of the distress, retaining the balance of the purchase money. In an action for trespass in taking away the piano, and for its conversion:—Held, that the defendant could not defeat the action by showing that the title to the chattel was in B. under the bill of sale, and that the plaintiff was entitled to a verdict. Haggan v. Pasley, 2 L. R. Ir. 573.

In an action for seizing goods in the possession and apparent ownership of the plaintiff, the defendant cannot set up the title of a third person to defeat the action. Nelson v. Cherrill, 1 M. & Scott, 452; 7 Bing. 663; 9 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 227. S. P., Carter v. Johnson, 2 M. & Rob. 263.

2. Action for.

a. In General.

Where Contract Imperfect.]—Where a party purchased, by a verbal contract, a crop of growing grass, with liberty to go on the close where it grew, for the purpose of cutting and carrying it away:—Held, that he could not maintain trespass against the seller for taking away his horse and cart from the close, which he had brought there for the purpose of carrying away the grass; for this was in substance an action charging the defendant on a contract, within the 4th section of the statute of frauds. Carrington v. Roots, 2 M. & W. 248; 6 L. J., Ex. 95.

—— Sending back Infected Horse to Vendor.]—The purchaser of a horse sent it back to the seller on the ground of non-compliance with a warranty. The horse did comply with the warranty, and, whilst in the purchaser's stables, contracted a contagious disease. Of this the purchaser was unaware when he sent back the horse. On arriving back at the seller's stables other horses of the seller's contracted the disease from it, and died:—Held, that the seller could not recover damages from the purchaser for the loss of those other horses. Wright v. Hetton Downs Co-operative Society, 1 Cab. & E. 200.

Locking up Goods.]—The wife of G.'s brother was present in his house at G.'s death, and put away jewellery belonging to him in a cupboard, with the bonâ fide object of protecting it. The jewellery disappeared:—Held, that her act amounted to a trespass, and the executor of G. was entitled to nominal damages. Kirk v. Gregory, 45 L. J., Ex. 186; 1 Ex. D. 55; 34 L. T. 488; 24 W. R. 614.

Semble, that if the articles had reasonably required protection, and the act of the wife had been a reasonable precaution for that purpose, the trespass would have been justified. Ib.

The defendant claiming rent in arrear from the plaintiff, his lodger, locked the door of the room in which the plaintiff's goods were deposited, and refused to allow the plaintiff to enter and remove them, saying that he should not have them until he had paid his rent:—Held, that the acts of the defendant did not amount to a taking, and that the trespass was not maintainable. Hartley v. Moxham or Moxon, 3 G. & D. 1; Car. & M. 504; 3 Q. B. 701; 12 L. J., Q. B. 41; 6 Jur. 946.

If in an action for taking goods the defendants plead that L. was possessed of a room, and that they, as his servants, removed the goods, which were encumbering the room, to a convenient distance; this plea is disproved, if it is shown that the defendants locked up the goods in the room, and took away the key. Jones v. Lewis, 7 Car. & P. 343.

By Custom House Officer.]—Where a custom house officer took by force, from under the arm of a passenger landing from a vessel, a portfolio containing school drawings, without making any previous demand:—Held, that, as drawings which had not paid duty were liable to forfeiture under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 56, the officer was not liable in trepass de bonis asportatis. De Gondouin v. Lewis, 2 P. & D. 283; 10 A. & E. 117; 9 L. J., Q. B. 148.

Where goods, liable to payment of duty, have been landed and warehoused, and examined by custom house officers in the regular execution of their duty, no action can be maintained against such officers for the detention of the goods, under a belief that they are liable to forfeiture, though it ultimately appears they were not so liable. Jacobsohn v. Blake, 7 Scott (N.R.) 772; 6 M. & G. 919; 13 L. J., C. P. 89; 8 Jur. 272.

By Landlord.]—A landlord who has accepted the rent in arrear, and the expenses of the distress, after the impounding, cannot be treated as a trespasser merely because he retains possession of the goods distrained, although his refusal to deliver them up to the tenant may amount to a conversion, so as to render him liable in trover. West v. Nibbs, 4 C. B. 172 ; 17 L. J., C. P. 150.

If a landlord puts in a distress and declares that he distrains and does really intend to distrain certain goods on the premises which are not by law distrainable ; for this alone neither trespass nor trover will lie. Beck v. Denbigh, 29 L. J., C. P., 273 ; 6 Jur., (N.S.) 998 ; 2 L. T. 154 ; 8 W. R. 392.

By Constable under Warrant.]—A constable having a warrant authorising the seizure of certain specified goods alleged to have been stolen, seized those goods and others not specified in the warrant ; the latter goods were not likely to furnish evidence of the identity of the former :—Held, that he was liable to an action of trespass, though a copy of the warrant had not been demanded. Crozier v. Cundy, 9 D. & R. 224 ; 6 B. & C. 232 ; 5 L. J. (O.S.) M. C. 50 ; 30 R. R. 311.

Trespass by Relation.]—The rule, that a party cannot be made a trespasser by relation, is only applicable where the act complained of was lawful at the time. Tharpe v. Stallwood, 5 Man. & G. 760 ; 6 Scott (N.R.) 715 ; 12 L. J., C. P. 241.

Trespass lies against a person who takes a beast as an estray, although lawfully at first, and afterwards abuses it by riding and labouring it. Oxley v. Watts, 1 Term Rep. 12 ; 1 R. R. 133.

Where cattle escape through defect of the defendant's fences, trespass will lie if he drives them into the highway and there leaves them. Carruthers v. Holles, 8 A. & E. 113 ; 3 N. & P. 246 ; 1 W. W. & H. 264.

Mixing Goods.]—If A., for a fraudulent purpose, mixes his goods with B.'s, still, if they can be distinguished, he may maintain trespass against a person who, having a right to take B.'s goods, ignorantly takes those of A. Colwill v. Reeves, 2 Camp. 575.

How differing from Conversion.]—In trespass a party is liable if he takes the property only for an instant ; but in trover he is not liable unless he also proceeds to a conversion. Price v. Helyar, 4 Bing. 597, 604 ; 1 M. & P. 541 ; 6 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 132.

Practice.—Allegation that goods are Plaintiff's.]—In an action for taking goods out of a dwelling house, it must be alleged that they are the goods of the plaintiff. Pritchard v. Long, 9 M. & W. 666 ; 1 D. (N.S.) 883 ; 11 L. J., Ex. 306.

—— Justification—To what it must go.]—In an action for taking the plaintiff's hog, and converting the same to the defendant's use, the conversion is only matter of aggravation, and need not be justified or answered, for the conversion is not a trespass vi et armis. Dye v. Leatherdall, 3 Wils. K. B. 20.

A declaration charged the defendant with taking and carrying away the goods of the plaintiff, and also with converting them to his own use :—Held, that such conversion was merely matter of aggravation ; and a plea justifying the taking the goods and carrying them away, but omitting to justify their conversion was sufficient. Pratt v. Pratt, 6 D. & L. 20 ; 2 Ex. 413 ; 17 L. J., Ex. 299.

A defence to an action of trespass for destroying a machine, that it was on the defendant's ground without his license, and that it was injured in removing it, must be specially pleaded. Page v. Ratcliff, 1 L. J., C. P., 57.

Evidence of Possession.]—In an action for taking goods and chattels, the defendant pleaded that the goods were not the goods of the plaintiff. The plaintiff proved that he had purchased them of the sheriff, under an execution issued against B. The defendant proved that he had subsequently taken them in execution as the goods of B. they being at the time in B.'s possession :—Held, that this evidence was admissible, and that it was competent for the judge to put it to the jury to say whether the previous sale to the plaintiff was bonâ fide or fraudulent. Ashley v. Minnett, 3 N. & P. 231 ; 8 A. & E. 121 ; 1 W. W. & H. 155 ; 7 L. J., Q. B. 133.

A. brought an action against B. for taking two tables and a chair. He pleaded not guilty. It was proved that B. took two chairs and a table in the house of D. ; but none of the witnesses knew A., and there was no evidence of any kind to connect A. with the goods taken in D.'s house :—Held, that, to entitle A. to recover, there must be some evidence to connect him with the goods taken. Forman v. Dawes, Car. & M. 127.

b. Principal and Agent.

Liability of Principal.]—Whether a seizure of particular goods under a fi. fa. was directed by the execution creditor, so as to make him liable for the act of the sheriff, is a question of fact. It is not within the scope of the implied authority of the solicitor of a judgment creditor issuing a fi. fa. to direct the sheriff to seize particular goods. Jarmain v. Hooper, infra, distinguished. Smith v. Keal, 9 Q. B. D. 340 ; 47 L. T. 142 ; 31 W. R. 76—C. A. Affirming 51 L. J., Q. B. 487 ; 46 J. P. 615.

A direction by the attorney to the sheriff to seize under a writ of execution is an act done by an agent within the scope of his authority, and binds the principal. The client, therefore, is liable in trespass for the act of the attorney, in directing the sheriff to take the goods of the wrong party. Jarmain v. Hooper, 1 D. & L. 769 ; 6 Man. & G. 827 ; 13 L. J., C. P. 63 ; 8 Jur. 127. S. P., Morris v. Salberg, 58 L. J., Q. B. 275 ; 22 Q. B. D. 614 ; 61 L. T. 283 ; 37 W. R. 469 ; 53 J. P. 772—C. A.

Where goods of a party are seized under a process which has issued in a suit in which such party is a defendant, but the seizure takes place without the knowledge or authority, or in the name of the plaintiff in such suit, the circumstances that the goods afterwards came to his hands, and that he, knowing the circumstances of the seizure, refuses to give them up, do not make him a trespasser. Wilson v. Tumman, 6 Scott (N.R.) 894 ; 1 D. & L. 513 ; 12 L. J., C. P. 306.

A mere ratification of a previous trespass does not make the party ratifying a trespasser. Ib.

A principal is not liable for the wrongful acts of his agent, though he receives a benefit from them, unless, at the time of the receipt, he has notice of the illegality. Freeman v. Rosher, 13 Q. B. 780; 18 L. J., Q. B. 340.

Where a broker, under a warrant from the landlord, authorising him to distrain the goods and chattels of the tenant, seized a fixture, which was afterwards sold, and the proceeds paid to the landlord:—Held, that the receipt of the proceeds did not make the landlord a trespasser, it not being shown that he was aware of the illegal seizure. Ib.

A. authorised B., a broker, to distrain for rent due to him from C. B. having entered for the purpose of executing the warrant, took away books and papers (which were assumed not to be distrainable), and omitted to insert them in the inventory:—Held, that A. was liable, jointly with B., in trespass. Gauntlett v. King, 3 C. B. (N.S.) 59.

Solicitor, when Personally Liable.]—Action for wrongful seizure of goods against an execution creditor, and her attorney, jointly. The attorney, who had given the sheriff a fi. fa. against C., sent a man with the sheriff, to point out his goods. He pointed out goods which the sheriff seized, and which, on an interpleader issue, where found to be the goods of D.:—Held, that the attorney, by the direction which he had given the sheriff, had made himself personally liable in trespass. Power v. Fleming, Ir. R. 4 C. L. 404.

Held, also, that, the attorney having directed the sheriff to seize the goods which the man sent should point out, the consequence was just the same as if he had himself pointed out the wrong goods, and directed the sheriff to seize them. Ib.

Licence by Agent.]—A man, who takes possession of a ship by consent of the plaintiff's agent, is not liable to an action of trespass. Mills v. Dawson, Peake's Add. Cas. 59.

c. Companies.

Liability of.]—Trespass will lie against a corporation for seizing and converting goods to their own use. Maund v. Monmouthshire Canal Co., 2 D. (N.S.) 113; Car. & M. 606; 4 Man. & G. 452; 5 Scott (N.R.) 457; 3 Railw. Cas. 159; 11 L. J., C. P. 317; 6 Jur. 932.

Trespass will not lie against a railway company for the act of their servant, who, whilst in the performance of his duty in driving a locomotive engine, runs over the plaintiff's sheep upon the railway. If the plaintiff had a right to have his sheep there, or if they were not wrongfully there and the injury was occasioned by the want of skill or care on the part of the company's servant, or in consequence of their order to drive at a certain speed, an action on the case, and not trespass, is the proper remedy. Sharrod v. L. & N. W. Ry., 7 D. & L. 213; 6 Railw. Cas. 239; 4 Ex. 580; 11 Jur. 23.

d. Joint Trespass.

What Constitutes.]—A person who knowingly receives from another a chattel which the latter has wrongfully seized, and afterwards, on demand, refuses to give it back to the owner, does not thereby become a joint trespasser, unless the chattel was seized for his use or benefit. Wilson v. Barker, 1 N. & M. 409; 4 B. & Ad. 614.

An attorney who delivers a precept to a sheriff's bailiff, who thereupon acts under it, is not therefore a co-trespasser with the bailiff. Sowell v. Champion, 6 A. & E. 407; 2 N. & P. 627; W., W. & D. 667; 7 L. J., Q. B. 197.

3. Damages.

Costs and Expenses.]—In an action for taking the plaintiff's goods in execution under a warrant of attorney and judgment, which were afterwards set aside as illegal, the plaintiff cannot claim as part of the damage his costs incurred in vacating the warrant of attorney and judgment. Holloway v. Turner, 6 Q. B. 928; 14 L. J., Q. B. 143; 9 Jur. 160. S. P., Loton v. Devereux, 3 B. & Ad. 343; 1 L. J., K. B. 103.

Where a defendant had wrongfully seized the plaintiff's goods, but had not removed them from the house in which the plaintiff resided, and another wrongdoer, against the will of the defendant, seized the goods while thus in the defendant's possession, the plaintiff was held entitled in trespass to recover as damages from the defendant the amount she had been forced to pay to the second wrongdoer, to redeem the goods from him. Keene v. Dilke, 4 Ex. 388; 18 L. J., Ex. 440.

D. obtained, as special damage, in an action against an execution creditor and her attorney, a verdict for the costs of the interpleader proceedings, which he had taxed against the execution creditor, and for the payment of which by her he had an order of the court, but which he was unable to recover:—Held, that, as his action was brought against both the execution creditor and her attorney, the same damages must be recovered against both; that, as D. had an order which was equivalent to a judgment of the court against her, he could not recover the amount of them as damages against her, and, therefore, the verdict should be reduced by the amount. Power v. Fleming, Ir. R. 4 C. L. 404.

For Forcible Entry.]—Damages cannot be recovered against the rightful owner for a forcible entry on land, for the stat. 5 Ric. 2. st. 1, c. 8, only makes a forcible entry an indictable offence, and does not create any civil remedy for it. But for any independent wrong (such as an assault or an injury to furniture) committed in the course of the forcible entry, damages can be recovered, even by a person whose possession was wrongful, for the statute makes a possession obtained by force unlawful, even when it is so obtained by the rightful owner. Beddall v. Maitland, 50 L. J., Ch. 401; 17 Ch. D. 174; 44 L. T. 248; 29 W. R. 484.

Extent of Injury.]—A.'s carriage was driven against the wheel of B.'s chaise; the collision threw a person, who was in the chaise, upon the dashing board, the dashing board fell on the back of the horse and caused him to kick, and thereby the chaise was injured:—Held, that B. was entitled to recover against A. damages commensurate with the whole of the injury sustained. Gilbertson v. Richardson, 5 C. B. 502; 17 L. J., C. P. 112; 12 Jur. 292.

In an action of damages for taking goods under irregular legal process where special damage is alleged and claimed but not proved, the plaintiff is nevertheless entitled at least to nominal damages, or to such substantial damages as the jury thinks adequate. Doss v. Doss, 14 L. T. 646; 14 W. R. 590—P. C.

A person who has moved the goods of another without a lawful right to do so, even to put them out of the way, is liable only for the natural consequences of the removal. Walker v. Sheerman, 3 F. & F. 259.

On a declaration for taking the plaintiff's goods, chattels and effects, he may recover the value of fixtures. Pitt v. Shew, 4 B. & Ald. 206.

To Person and Goods—Same Wrongful Act—Estoppel.]—Damage to goods, and injury to the person, although they have been occasioned by one and the same wrongful act, are infringements of different rights and give rise to distinct causes of action; and, therefore, recovery of damages for one of these causes of action is no bar to recovery of damages for the other. Brunsden v. Humphrey, 53 L. J., Q. B. 476; 14 Q. B. D. 141; 51 L. T. 529; 32 W. R. 944; 49 J. P. 4—C. A.

Mitigation of.]—In an action for taking the plaintiff's goods, the defendant having pleaded not guilty, cannot, in mitigation of damages, give in evidence a repayment by him, after action brought, of money produced by the sale of the goods. Rundle v. Little, 6 Q. B. 174; 13 L. J., Q. B. 311; 8 Jur. 668.

Reducing Damages.] — A person having obtained several very valuable articles without paying for them, the tradesmen on hearing that he was reputed to be a swindler, went to his house, gained admittance, broke open an inner door, and took away part of the goods. He brought an action for trespass and obtained a verdict. The court refused to reduce the damages by allowing the tradesmen to set off against it the amount of the debts due to them. Hawkins v. Baynes, 1 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 167.

4. Restoration of Goods.

Under certain circumstances the court will stay the proceedings in an action for seizing goods, on the defendant's restoring the goods, or paying the full value of them, with the costs of the action. Pickering v. Truste, 7 Term Rep. 53. And see Earle v. Holderness, 4 Bing. 462; 1 M. & P. 254; 6 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 68.

But the court refused to stay proceedings in an action for seizing goods, on the defendant's restoring them or their value, with costs, where it would not have ended the suit, and the value was disputed. Knot v. Barker, 3 Anst. 896.

1. Parties.

By whom Maintainable—Joint Owners.]—Four joint owners of goods delivered them to a pawnee, to be redelivered in a certain event. After the happening of the event the assignee of three of the joint owners demanded the return of the goods, which was wrongfully refused. The fourth joint owner was abroad, and did not assent to the demand:—Held, that the assignee could not maintain trover against the pawnee. Harper v. Godsell, 39 L. J., Q. B. 185; L. R. 5 Q. B. 422; 18 W. R. 954.

If an article is deposited by one, with the authority of another, and received by the bailee to keep on the joint account of the two, one alone cannot lawfully demand it without the authority of the other, so as to maintain trover upon the bailee's refusal to deliver it. May v. Harvey, 13 East, 197; 12 R. R. 322.

Where the question was, whether goods were the property of the plaintiff alone or jointly with S.:—Held, that, as the plaintiff and S. had made joint orders for the disposition of the goods, the plaintiff alone could not recover. Nathan v. Buckland, 2 Moore, 153.

A declaration stated that the plaintiff was possessed as of his own property of four horses, which the defendant converted and disposed of to his own use. Pleas, first, that they were not the property of the plaintiff, and, secondly, that a judgment was recovered against F., and that the defendant (a sheriff's officer) seized them under an execution against F., the same being the goods and chattels of F., and liable to be seized and taken as aforesaid, and not being the property of the plaintiff. To which the plaintiff replied, that they were his cattle and property. At the trial, it was found by the jury that they were the property of the plaintiff and F. jointly:—Held, that the issue raised by the defendant was, whether the cattle were the sole property of F., and the jury having found that they were the joint property of the plaintiff and F., that the plaintiff was entitled to recover. Furrar v. Beswick, 1 M. & W. 682; 1 Tyr. & G. 1053; 5 L. J., Ex. 225.

Two persons jointly interested in a chattel having made a joint demand for it, may, notwithstanding, maintain separate actions in respect of it, against a person who unjustly detains it. Bleaden v. Hancock, 4 Car. & P. 152; M. & M. 465.

—— Member of Society.]—A member of an amicable society, entrusted with a box containing the fund, and bound by bond to keep it safely, cannot maintain trover against another member and a third person who took it from him. Halliday v. Camsell, 1 Term Rep. 658; 1 R. R. 346.

—— Copyholds — Trover by Lord for Trees severed by Tenant.]—The right to trees severed by the tenant of a copyhold or a customary freehold is primâ facie in the lord, and in general he may maintain trover for them when so severed. Fleming v. Simpson, 2 Man. & Ry. 169; 6 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 207. S. P. Eardley v. Granville, 45 L. J., Ch. 669; 3 Ch. D. 826; 34 L. T. 609; 24 W. R. 528.

—— Trustees.]—Trustees having a title to chattels with an immediate right of possession can sue in trover for the chattels although they may never have taken actual possession, but have allowed the goods to remain in the occupation of their cestui que trust; and although the title may be liable to be defeated by the claim of some third party, yet the wrongdoer cannot set up the title of that third party as a defence to an action against himself for the recovery of the goods. Barker v. Furlong, 60 L. J., Ch. 368; [1891] 2 Ch. 172; 64 L. T. 411; 39 W. R. 621.

—— Tenants in Common against each other.]—One tenant in common cannot maintain trespass or trover against his co-tenant for cutting and carrying away the grass off their land unless there has been an ouster, or unless it is shown that the grass has been destroyed. Jacobs v. Seaward, 41 L. J., C. P. 221; L. R. 5 H. L. 464; 27 L. T. 185—H. L. Affirming 18 W. R. 953—Ex. Ch.

One tenant in common of a chattel cannot maintain trover for it against his companion, unless the latter has so disposed of it as to render it impossible that the plaintiff should ever take and use it. Fennings v. Grenville (Lord), 1 Taunt. 241; 9 R. R. 760.

The conversion of a chattel by a tenant in common from its general and profitable application, though it changes the form of the substance is not such a destruction of the subject matter as to prevent the plaintiff from taking and using it in its altered state; therefore it creates no right of action. Ib.

One of two tenants in common of a chattel is not liable in trover at the suit of his co-tenant for the mere sale of the chattel, though he is for such a disposition as amounts to a destruction of it. Mayhew v. Herrick, 7 C. B. 229; 18 L. J., C. P. 179; 13 Jur. 1078.

There need not be an actual destruction; any disposal of the property in such a manner as to prevent a co-tenant from obtaining his share is a conversion. Ib.

When one tenant in common forcibly took a ship out of the other's possession, and secreted it from him so that he did not know where it was carried, and changed the name of it, and it afterwards got into a third person's hands, who sent it on a foreign voyage where it was lost:—Held, that it was proper to be left to the jury, whether the destruction was not by the means of that tenant in common. Barnardiston v. Chapman, 4 East, 121.

The secret removal of entire chattels by one tenant in common, without the consent or knowledge of the other, and for the purpose of selling them and applying the proceeds to his own use, does not amount to a conversion, nor is it an unlawful act for which the tenant can maintain an action, even although the removal has created a lien on the chattels by a third party. Jones v. Brown, 25 L. J., Ex. 345; 4 W. R. 680.

Observation on the rule that one tenant in common cannot maintain trover against another. Wickham v. Wickham, 2 Kay & J. 496.

—— On Bankruptcy.]—One of two tenants in common of goods committed an act of bankruptcy; after which the defendant, by direction of the other tenant in common, sold the goods:—Held, that the assignees of the bankrupt could not recover from the defendant the proceeds of the sale in an action for money had and received, nor maintain detinue. Morgan v. Marquis, 9 Ex. 145; 2 C. L. R. 276; 23 L. J., Ex. 21.

Assignees of two bankrupt partners declared in trover for property which had belonged to the bankrupts, alleging a possession in themselves as assignees, and a conversion since the bankruptcy. It appeared that a separate fiat had first issued against one partner, under which the goods were seized by the sheriff, and sold; subsequently to which a joint fiat was issued against both, and the plaintiffs were appointed assignees:—Held, that they could not recover against the sheriff for an undivided moiety as the property of the partner against whom the separate fiat had issued. Edwards v. Hooper, 11 M. & W. 363; 12 L. J., Ex. 304; 7 Jur. 378.

—— Mortgagee — Tenant's Fixtures.]—The mortgagee of tenant's fixtures has a right or interest in the land which the tenant who has mortgaged cannot defeat by a subsequent surrender of his lease to his landlord. If he does so surrender, the mortgagee has a right to enter and sever such fixtures, and may maintain an action against an incoming tenant who has prevented him from exercising that right, in which action he may recover the value of the fixtures as severed. London & Westminster Loan & Discount Co. v. Drake, 6 C. B. (N.S.) 798; 28 L. J., C. P. 297; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1407; 7 W. R. 611.

—— Assignee under Voidable Bill of Sale.]—The plaintiff having seized the goods of S., under a fi. fa. issued upon a judgment founded on a warrant of attorney previously given to him by

S., took an assignment of the goods from the sheriff by bill of sale. The defendants, who were landlords to S., distrained for rent, and seized the goods under such distress whilst the plaintiff was in possession of them. Three days afterwards, S. filed a petition in bankruptcy, on which he was declared a bankrupt, and assignees were appointed. The assignees did not interfere with or demand the goods of the plaintiff, but they commenced an action against the plaintiff for the conversion of the goods. In an action for an excessive distress, brought by the plaintiff against the defendants, the jury found that the warrant of attorney was given as a fraudulent preference of the plaintiff over the other creditors, in contemplation of bankruptcy:—Held, that the property in the goods vested in the plaintiff by the bill of sale, subject to be divested by the assignees; and that, as the assignees had not interfered, the plaintiff was the owner of the goods, and the defendants, being wrong-doers could not set up the title of the assignees to defeat the plaintiff's action. Newnham v. Stevenson, 13 C. B. 285; 20 L. J., C. P. 111; 15 Jur. 360.

Several Defendants.]—In trover against several all cannot be found guilty on the same count, without proof of a joint conversion by all. Nicoll v. Glennie, 1 M. & S. 588.

A written notice of demand to deliver up deeds was served on three persons at different times and places:—Held, that it was for the jury to say, from the whole of the evidence, whether they had not previously agreed to act in such a manner with reference to the deeds as to render their refusal, although separately given, evidence of a joint conversion. Atkin v. Slater, 1 Car. & K. 356.

Corporations.]—Trover, as well as trespass, lies against a corporation aggregate. Maund v. Monmouthshire Canal Co., 3 Railw. Cas. 159; 4 Man. & G. 452; 2 D. (N.S.) 113; 5 Scott (N.R.) 457; Car. & M. 606; 11 L. J., C. P. 317; 6 Jur. 932.

A contractor, having engaged with a railway company to construct a portion of their line, employed a sub-contractor to fence the line, who, for that purpose, placed timber near it. This timber having been sold to the plaintiff, was afterwards taken away by the workmen employed on the railway; a claim to the timber having been made on behalf of the plaintiff on a director of the company, the claimant was recommended by him to attend a meeting of the company, which he did, and was informed, by the same director, that there was a prospect of an amicable arrangement, and that, in all probability, his claim would be met:—Held, in trover against the company, that there was not sufficient evidence to make the company liable. Glover v. L. & N. W. Ry., 5 Ex. 66; 19 L. J., Ex. 172.

Husband and Wife.]—Where, in trover against husband and wife, the declaration stated a conversion by both:—Held, sufficient, after verdict. Keyworth v. Hill, 3 B. & Ald. 685.

The plaintiff's goods had been taken in execution under process against B.'s goods, and placed upon the premises of the defendant, who was an innkeeper; upon a demand of them by the plaintiff, in the absence of the defendant, the wife of the defendant said that she would consult the attorney who had issued the execution, and after having done so refused, saying she was not to deliver them up, and that he would save her harmless:—Held, sufficient evidence of a conversion. Catterall v. Kenyon, 2 G. & D. 545; 3 Q. B. 310; 11 L. J., Q. B. 260; 6 Jur. 507.

The goods of a woman with whom a man had contracted a bigamous marriage were seized and sold under an execution against the man. Afterwards, the woman ascertaining that the man had committed bigamy, brought trover against the sheriff for the value of her goods:—Held, that she was entitled to succeed. Glasspoole v. Young, 7 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 305.

Conversion by Servant.]—A servant may be charged in trover, although the act of conversion is done by him for the benefit of his master. Stephens v. Elwall, 4 M. & S. 259.

Whether he has any authority or not from his master for so doing. Perkins v. Smith, 1 Wils. K. B. 328.

In trover to recover the value of a quantity of bricks, evidence that men fetched them away, saying, that they were ordered by the defendant so to do, and that his name was painted on the cart in which they were taken, is not evidence to connect the defendant with the taking them away. Everest v. Wood, 1 Car. & P. 75.

A servant, acting under the orders of his master, in detaining another's goods, is guilty of a conversion as well as his master, but a packer, having, in the exercise of his business, shipped goods which had been pledged by a factor to several persons, under the orders of a third person who employed him for that purpose, is not guilty of a conversion. Greenway v. Fisher, 1 Car. & P. 190.

Where goods, which had been saved from fire, were carried to a warehouse by the servants of an insurance company, of which the defendant, as one of such servants, kept the key, and on his being applied to by the owner to deliver them up to him, refused to do so without an order from the company:—Held, that this was not such a refusal as amounted to a conversion. Alexander v. Southey, 5 B. & Ald. 247; 24 R. R. 348.

By Agent.]—If a principal ratifies the unauthorised purchase by his agent of a chattel which the vendor had no right to sell, he is guilty of a conversion, although he had no knowledge of the circumstances which made the sale unlawful. Hilbery v. Hatton, 2 H. & C. 822; 33 L. J., Ex. 190; 10 L. T. 39. And see Pothonier v. Dawson, Holt, 383; 17 R. R. 647.

2. What Amounts to Conversion.

a. In General.

Nature of Dealing with Property.]—In trover the party is supposed to have obtained possession of the goods lawfully, but to have unlawfully converted them to his own use. Golightly v. Ryn, Lofft, 88.

It is not every wrongful act depriving a party of the possession of his goods that amounts to a conversion. Thorogood v. Robinson, 6 Q. B. 769; 14 L. J., Q. B. 87; 9 Jur. 274.

Where the plaintiff's goods and servants were on land which the defendant recovered in ejectment, and the defendant, on entering, under the writ of possession, turned the plaintiff's servants off the land, and would not let them remain for the purpose of removing the goods, there having been no subsequent demand or refusal:—Held, that the jury might find that there was no conversion. Ib.

To constitute a conversion of goods for which trover will lie, there must be some repudiation by the defendant of the owner's right, or some exercise of dominion over them by him inconsistent with such right. Heald v. Carey, 11 C. B. 977; 21 L. J., C. P. 97; 16 Jur. 197.

A mere refusal by the defendant to deliver to the plaintiff a chattel of his which is on the defendant's premises is not evidence of a conversion, but a denial by the defendant of the plaintiff's right to it, or a refusal by which the defendant exercises a dominion over the chattel, is. Wilde v. Waters, 16 C. B. 637; 24 L. J., C. P. 193; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1021; 3 W. R. 570.

The forcible taking possession of a house and fixtures by the assignee of a term of the house is not a conversion of such fixtures. Longstaff v. Meagoe, 4 N. & M. 211; 2 A. & E. 167; 4 L. J., K. B. 28. See Beddall v. Maitland, 50 L. J., Ch. 401; 17 Ch. D. 174; 44 L. T. 248; 29 W. R. 484.

Cashing Forged Bill.]—Cashing a bill according to the tenor of a forged indorsement is a conversion apart from any question of negligence. Kleinwort v. Comptoir Nationale d'Escompte de Paris, 63 L. J., Q. B. 674; [1894] 2 Q. B. 157; 10 R. 259.

Cutting Seals off Deed.]—Cutting off the seals of a deed is a conversion. Standring v. Grundy, 6 L. J., Ex. 181.

Intention to Appropriate Goods.]—When one by an authorised act deprives another of his goods, though without any intention to appropriate them to his own use, it is a conversion of the goods. Hiort v. Bott, 43 L. J., Ex. 81; L. R. 9 Ex. 86; 30 L. T. 25; 22 W. R. 414.

The defendant having through an error of the consignor of goods received what purported to be an invoice of goods sold by the consignor to the defendant through a named broker, and an order which required a railway company to deliver the goods to the order of the consignor or consignee, indorsed the order to the broker, who thereby obtained from the company, and made away with the goods:—Held, that, though the defendant indorsed the order with the intention of correcting what he believed to be an error and of returning the goods to the consignor, yet since the circumstances did not require him to indorse the order or interfere with the goods in any way, he was liable in trover to the consignor. Ib.

A mere wrongful asportation of a chattel does not amount to a conversion, unless the taking or detention of the chattel is with intent to convert it to the taker's own use, or that of some third person, or unless the act done has the effect either of destroying or changing the quality of the chattel. Foulds or Foulds v. Willoughby, 8 M. & W. 540; 1 D. (N.S.) 86; 10 L. J., Ex. 364; 5 Jur. 534.

Repudiation of Illegal Purpose.]—When goods are delivered for an illegal purpose, the person delivering the goods may repudiate the illegal purpose at any time before it has been carried out, and recover back his goods. Taylor v. Bowers, 46 L. J., Q. B. 39; 1 Q. B. D. 291; 34 L. T. 938; 24 W. R. 499—C. A.

Duress—Notice.]—The plaintiff being lawfully possessed of bills of exchange given him by a trader, the defendant, acting on behalf of the creditors of the trader, who had taken proceedings to make him bankrupt, came to the plaintiff when ill in bed, and demanded the bills, and, on the plaintiff's refusal to give them up, told him, that if he did not, the expense of the bankruptcy would fall on him, and the commissioner would be very severe with him. The plaintiff was much agitated, and delivered up the bills. The plaintiff's agent afterwards, while the bills were in the defendant's possession, informed him of the circumstances under which they had been given to the plaintiff, and told him that he (the defendant) and his employers had no right to them; but the defendant notwithstanding handed them over to his employers:—Held, first, that the original taking was not a conversion, inasmuch as there was no such duress as would have avoided a contract, or have enabled the plaintiff to maintain trespass de bonis asportatis. Held, secondly, that the defendant was guilty of a conversion by delivering the bills to his employers after notice of the facts. Powell v. Hoyland, 6 Ex. 67; 20 L. J., Ex. 82.

Accidental Flood — Goods Unlawfully Deposited.]—Where timber was placed on the defendant's land without his leave by the plaintiff, and the defendant, while digging a pit, cut and destroyed a part of the timber, and a part of it was accidentally washed away, it was held that there was no conversion of the timber. Simmons v. Lillystone, 8 Ex. 431; 22 L. J., Ex. 217; 1 W. R. 198.

Agreement to Sell and Account.]—A. intrusted B. with goods to sell in India, agreeing to take back from B. what he should not be able to sell, and allowing him what he should obtain beyond a certain price, with liberty to sell them for what he could get, if he could not obtain that price. B. not being able to sell the goods in India himself, left them with an agent, to be disposed of by him, directing the agent to remit the money to himself in England:—Held, that A. could not maintain trover against B. for the goods. Bromley v. Coxwell, 2 Bos. & P. 438; 5 R. R. 648.

Intention to Benefit.]—Where an injury has been done to a chattel belonging to another, in endeavouring to do a service to such person out of charity, or to prevent mischief from the act of other persons, trover will not lie for it. Drake v. Shorter, 4 Esp. 165.

A pipe of wine belonging to A. was deposited in B.'s cellar, and was bottled at a time during which there were conflicting claims to it by A. and the assignees of the party to whom it was sent, and who resided in B.'s house. By whom, or by whose orders the wine was bottled did not appear, though there was some evidence that it was likely to be injured from not being bottled:—Held, that it was a question for the jury whether the act of bottling operated as a conversion. Philpott v. Kelley, 4 N. & M. 611; 3 A. & E. 106; 1 H. & W. 134; 4 L. J., K. B. 139.

Held, also, that it was a question for the jury whether the drinking of a part of the wine, taken in connection with the bottling, amounted to a conversion; and they having found that it did not, the court refused to disturb the verdict. Ib.

Evidence.]—A person, when served with notice of demand for certain deeds, merely said, "that he would consult his attorney":—Held, that this expression, coupled with his subsequent conduct in not giving up the deeds, amounted to evidence of a conversion. Atkin v. Slater, 1 Car. & K. 356.

But where the defendant, in answer to a demand for property, bonâ fide referred the plaintiff to his solicitor, and no application was made to the solicitor, it was held there was no conversion. Jones v. Yates, 9 B. & C. 532; 4 Man. & Ry. 615; 7 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 217.

In an action for conversion of a bill of exchange, it being proved that the defendant had said, in answer to a demand for it, that he could not give it up because it had been burnt, and he not being called as a witness:—Held, that the case was rightly left to the jury, and, that their verdict for the plaintiff was justified by the evidence. M'Kewen v. Cotching, 27 L. J., Ex. 41; 6 W. R. 16.

If a person who has possession of the goods of another, on being desired by the owner to send them to a particular place, not only refuses to send them to that place, but says generally that he will not deliver them up unless payment of a debt due from the owner to him is guaranteed, such general refusal is evidence of a conversion, although he might not be bound to send the goods to any particular place. Sharp v. Pratt, 3 Car. & P. 34.

A demand and a qualified refusal to deliver on the ground that the defendant had received notice of demand from a third party is evidence of a conversion. Atkinson v. Marshall, 12 L. J., Ex. 117.

b. Detention after Demand.

Nature of.]—Detention against a lawful demand is primâ facie evidence of a conversion. Golightly v. Ryn, Lofft, 88.

The defendant had in his possession a boiler belonging to the plaintiff, the plaintiff demanded it, and the defendant at first refused to restore it, but before the issuing of the writ tendered it:—Held, no conversion. Hayward v. Seaward, 1 M. & Sc. 459.

The demand and refusal necessary to afford evidence of a conversion must be absolute and unqualified. Philpott v. Kelley, 4 N. & M. 611; 3 A. & E. 106; 1 H. & W. 134; 4 L. J., K. B. 139. See also Atkinson v. Marshall, supra.

A. lent goods to B., who died, and on his death the goods came into the possession of C., who, when the goods were demanded of him, said that he should do nothing but what the law required. C. did not afterwards deliver up the goods:—Held, to be a sufficient conversion by C. Davies v. Nicholas, 7 Car. & P. 339.

The owner of a gun delivered it to B. to be sold for him, and B. delivered it to C. on trial, who kept it for some time, during which the gun was burst; the owner afterwards demanded the gun in the following terms: "I give you notice that the gun is my property, and I demand the same of you, and require you to deliver it up in the same plight in which it was when delivered to you." C. answered that he would pay ten times the value rather than repair it:—Held, that such demand and refusal were not evidence of a conversion. Rushworth v. Taylor, 3 Q. B. 699; 3 G. & D. 3; 12 L. J., Q. B. 80; 6 Jur. 945.

Taking the property of another, by assignment from one who has no authority to dispose of it; as taking an assignment of tobacco in the king's warehouse, by way of pledge from a broker who had purchased it there, in his own name, for his principal; and refusing to deliver it to the principal, after notice, and demand by him; none other than the person in whose name it was warehoused being able to take it out—is a conversion. M'Combie v. Davies, 6 East, 538; 2 Smith, 557; 8 R. R. 534.

A widow who was administratrix of an insolvent, being applied to by his assignees for some papers that had been in his possession at the time of his decease, answered that they were in the hands of her attorney:—Held, not sufficient evidence of a conversion. Canot v. Hughes, 2 Bing. (N.C.) 448; 2 Scott, 663; 1 Hodges, 410; 5 L. J., C. P. 177.

A., who was paying his addresses to a lady, lost her letters and two memorandum-books, containing remarks of his own; B. found them and kept them, on the ground that the books contained matter injurious to him, and also showed them to others; A. sent a person to demand them of B., who, at first, refused to give them up at all; but before the person left, said he would not give them to him, but would to C. or D. C. went, and B. offered to give him the letters and one book, which C., after consulting with A., accepted, saying, that he made a sacrifice to obtain the letters:—Held, that there was a conversion of the whole. Clendon v. Dinneford, 5 Car. & P. 18.

A refusal to deliver goods by a person ignorant of the real owner is not evidence of a conversion. Green v. Dunn, 3 Camp. 215, n.

Setting up Attachment.]—On a demand of goods by the real owner, the defendant refused to deliver them, stating as his reason for the refusal, that they had been attached in his hands by a foreign attachment in a suit against a third party, from whom he had received them as his own, which was the fact:—Held, no evidence of a conversion. Verrall v. Robinson, 2 C., M. & R. 495; 4 D. P. C. 242; 1 Gale, 244; 5 Tyrw. 1069.

Wine, the property of a plaintiff, being in the warehouse of the defendant, a wharfinger, notice from the mayor's court was served on the defendant, attaching in his hands all the goods of H., from whom the plaintiff had purchased the wine, and at the same time the defendant was informed that the attachment had reference to the wine. The plaintiff demanded the wine from the defendant's clerk, producing the delivery warrant which had been issued by the defendant to B., a former owner, and indorsed by him to H., and by H. to the plaintiff. The defendant's clerk said that there was a difficulty in consequence of the attachment, and referred the plaintiff to the defendant, whom he could not find. The plaintiff's attorney thereupon wrote, demanding the wine before eleven o'clock the next morning. The defendant's attorney replied, asking for time for inquiry, but a writ was issued before that answer was received:—Held, that there was some evidence of a conversion; that the conduct and position of the defendant was evidence from which the jury might infer whether or not he had been guilty of a conversion of the wine, and that, before arriving at a conclusion, it was proper for the jury to consider whether the defendant had a bonâ fide doubt as to the plaintiff's title to the wine, and whether a reasonable time for clearing up that doubt had elapsed before the action was commenced. Pillot v. Wilkinson, 3 H. & C. 345; 34 L. J., Ex. 22; 12 W. R. 1084—Ex. Ch.

Demanding Receipt.]—For the refusal to deliver up documents unless a receipt is given for same, trover will lie. Cobbett v. Clutton, 2 Car. & P. 471.

Refusal of Agent.]—In trover against a defendant for not delivering some wine deposited with her by way of security for an advance of money:—Held, that it was not sufficient evidence of a conversion to show that her son, who acted as her general agent, refused to give it up; and that it was necessary to prove that such agent acted under a special direction in order to make the defendant liable. Pothonier v. Dawson, Holt, 383; 17 R. R. 647. And see Cases ante, col. 274.

Sufficiency of Demand.]—A demand in writing left at the defendant's house is sufficient. Logan v. Houlditch, 1 Esp. 22.

If a verbal demand and a demand in writing are made at the same time for the purpose of bringing an action, and the one has no reference to the other, evidence of the verbal demand is sufficient, without the production of the writing. Smith v. Young, 1 Camp. 439.

The plaintiff being entitled to the five best beasts as heriots, marked seven beasts, claiming all as heriots, and left them in the possession of the defendant, who was the owner up to the time of marking. The plaintiff afterwards applied to the defendant, who still had possession of the seven, for the beasts generally, but the defendant refused to give them up, without qualifying his refusal:—Held, no conversion of any of the beasts, the demand having reference to a seizure of seven, and it not being ascertained that any five were legally chosen. Abington v. Lipscombe, 1 Q. B. 776; 1 G. & D. 230; 10 L. J., Q. B. 330; 6 Jur. 257.

Evidence.]—It is not necessary to give notice to produce a written demand of the article for which the action is brought. Hammond v. Plank, Peake, 166, n.

Authority of Party Demanding.]—A. brought an action against B. for taking away a filly; B. justified the taking as the servant of C.; the jury found a verdict for A. with damages, subject to a reference to D., to ascertain to whom she belonged, which was to depend on whether a scar should appear on a certain part of her body; and in case it should, the verdict for A. was to stand; if not, it was to be entered for B. The filly was delivered to D. by the consent of all parties, and he made his award, and found her to belong to A., and accordingly ordered the verdict found for him to stand; C., ten days after the award, demanded the filly of D., who refused to deliver her, and a month afterwards C. brought an action for her recovery:—Held, that the detention of the filly by D. did not amount to a conversion. Gunton v. Nurse, 5 Moore, 259; 2 Br. & B. 447.

Where a demand of the goods is not made by the party himself, a refusal, on the ground that the party applying is unknown, or not properly authorised, is not sufficient to support the action. Solomans v. Dawes, 1 Esp. 83.

Where A. refused to give up the chattels when demanded by the owner, on the ground that he had purchased them from B., who was the owner's servant, and it appeared that B. had no authority to sell:—Held, evidence of a conversion by A., although he had made the purchase bonâ fide, and in the belief that B. had such authority. Metcalfe v. Lumsden, 1 Car. & K. 309.

Necessity of Demand.]—Where property has been wrongfully and fraudulently taken, a demand and refusal are not necessary to enable the plaintiff to maintain trover. Granger v. Hill, 5 Scott, 561; 1 Arn. 42; 4 Bing. (N.C.) 212; 7 L. J., C. P. 85.

Where goods are delivered under a contract to do something with them, and to deliver them according to the party's undertaking, an omission of the party doing what he so undertook to do will not sustain trover unless there has been an actual refusal to redeliver. Severin v. Keppell, 4 Esp. 156.

The defendant came to the plaintiff's house, which was left in the care of a servant, and said, that, having authority from the lord chancellor, he was come to take charge of the goods in the house; he put a man in possession, and took an inventory of the goods; and subsequently the servant was by him refused admittance into the house. The judge nonsuited the plaintiff, on the ground that, without a demand, there was no evidence of a conversion:—Held, that there was some evidence which ought to have been submitted to the jury. Needham v. Rawbone, 6 Q. B. 771, n.; 9 Jur. 274.

Statute of Limitations.]—To support a plea of the statute of limitations, by showing a conversion more than six years before action brought, the defendant must either prove an actual conversion in fact, or give evidence of a positive and an absolute demand and refusal before that period. Philpott v. Kelley, 4 N. & M. 611; 3 A. & E. 106; 1 H. & W. 134; 4 L. J., K. B. 139.

The statute of limitations is no bar to an action if brought within six years after the demand and refusal, although more than six years have elapsed since the person intrusted with the article has wrongfully parted with the possession of it. Wilkinson v. Verity, 40 L. J., C. P. 141; L. R. 6 C. P. 206; 24 L. T. 32; 19 W. R. 604.

c. Claim of Right or Interest.

Nature of, in General.]—To maintain trover there must be some exercise of ownership over the chattel taken inconsistent with the owner's right of dominion over it. Foulkes v. Willoughby, 8 M. & W. 540; 1 D. (N.S.) 86; 10 L. J., Ex. 364.

If a person detains goods under any claim of interest in himself, so as to deprive the person entitled to the possession of them of his dominion over them, it is a conversion. Burroughes v. Bayne, 5 H. & N. 296; 29 L. J., Ex. 185; 2 L. T. 16.

Claim of Lien.]—If one having a lien upon the goods, when they are demanded of him, claims to retain them upon a different ground, making no mention of the lien, trover may be maintained against him without any tender having been made of the amount of his lien. Boardman v. Sill, 1 Camp. 410, n.

A refusal grounded on a claim of right, to deliver up goods on demand, is evidence of a conversion, though the defendant may have a lien on them. Cannee v. Spanton, 8 Scott (N.R.) 714; 7 Man. & G. 903; 14 L. J., C. P. 23; 8 Jur. 1008.

—— On Goods Shipped.]—The captain of a ship who had taken goods on freight, and claimed to have a lien upon them, delivered them to a bailee. The real owner demanded them of the latter, and he refused to deliver them without the directions of the bailor:—Held, that the bailor not having any lien upon the goods, the refusal was a sufficient conversion. Wilson v. Anderton, 1 B. & Ad. 450; 9 L. J. (O.S) K. B. 48.

A vendor shipped, by order of a vendee, goods, which by the bill of lading were consigned to a third person at a foreign port. Before the vessel sailed, the vendee stopped payment, and the vendor thereupon demanded the goods of the captain, without tendering freight or expenses of unshipping. The captain refused to deliver, solely on the ground that he had signed a bill of lading for the consignee:—Held, sufficient evidence of a conversion to maintain trover at the suit of the vendor. Thompson v. Trail, 9 D. & R. 31; 6 B. & C. 36; 2 Car. & P. 334; 5 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 34.

Goods delivered to a person claiming them wrongfully, who pays freight and other charges, cannot be detained for those expenses against the rightful owner. Lempriere v. Pasley, 2 Term Rep. 485.

A tender of freight and charges is not necessary previously to bringing trover for goods, of which a party has wrongfully obtained the possession. Ib.

Solicitor's Lien.]—The evidence of the conversion of a deed was, that when the deed was demanded from the defendant, he said he would deliver it up; but that it was then in the hands of his attorney, who had a lien upon it:—This was held insufficient. Smith v. Young, 1 Camp. 439.

In an action against A. and B. for a lease, the evidence of conversion was as follows:—A demand having been made upon A., he declined to give up the lease until rent due to B. was paid; but he added, that it was more B.'s business than his own, and as he was not in, he (A.) would either send the lease in the course of the day or would write the plaintiff a letter declining to return it. The plaintiff receiving neither lease nor letter, issued a writ on the following morning:—Held, that this amounted to an absolute refusal, notwithstanding A. and B. had at the time (though it was not mentioned) a lien upon the lease for a small sum due to them for business done by them as attorneys for the plaintiff. Weeks v. Goode, 6 C. B. (N.S.) 367.

On Taking out of Pledge.]—A., having goods at a pawnbroker's, delivered the duplicate to B. to take them out of pledge; B. took them out accordingly, and paid the amount due on them. On A. sending to B. for the goods, B. said he had not got them, and refused to tell who had them:—Held, that B. had no right to insist on a tender of the money he had advanced to get them out of pledge. Jones v. Cliff, 1 C. & M. 541; 3 Tyr. 576; 2 L. J., Ex. 189.

d. Sale.

In Breach of Bailments.]—The hirer of a piano who sends it to an auctioneer to be sold is guilty of a conversion, as well as the auctioneer, who refuses to deliver it up unless the expenses incurred are first paid. Loeschman v. Machin, 2 Stark. 311; 20 R. R. 687.

A bailee of goods for hire, by selling them determines the bailment, and the bailor may maintain trover against the purchaser, though the purchase was bonâ fide. Cooper v. Willomatt, 1 C. B. 672; 14 L. J., C. P. 219; 9 Jur. 598.

Under an agreement between the plaintiff and the defendant that C. should be employed by them, for a certain time, and the plaintiff should be employed for a certain time also, and that the parties should be allowed to have the use of certain goods for a certain period, and at the expiration of the agreement the goods should be given up to the plaintiff; the goods having been, during the term, applied by the defendant to a purpose in contravention of the agreement, and not having been delivered by him at the end of the term:—Held, that the bailment had been determined, and that the plaintiff might maintain trover. Bryant v. Wardell, 2 Ex. 479.

By Assignees.]—A., by deed, dated the 28th of September, 1845, conveyed goods to B. subject to a proviso, that if he should pay B. the sum thereby secured on the 22nd of March, 1850, or at such earlier day or time as B. should appoint by giving A. fourteen days' notice, and should pay interest in the meantime half-yearly, the deed should be void, and it was agreed between the parties that until default should be made in payment of the principal at the time specified, or the interest after fourteen days' notice, it should be lawful for A., his executors or administrators, to hold and enjoy the goods. A. continued in possession of the goods according to the agreement, until the 13th of December, 1849, when he became bankrupt, and his assignees, on the 19th of February, 1850, sold the whole of the goods absolutely, and not merely the bankrupt's interest in them. No demand had been made on A. by B. (or by the assignees of B.) for the principal money or interest in the meantime:—Held, first, that the deed did not give a mere possession and use of the goods to A. as bailee or tenant at will, but the right of possession and use for the term ending the 22nd of March, 1850, defeasible by non-payment of the principal or of the interest according to the terms of the deed; but, secondly, that the sale by the assignees of A. the bankrupt, destroyed the bailment; and, thirdly, that the sale by the assignees was equivalent to a sale by the bailee himself, and consequently that trover would lie by the assignees of the mortgagee against the assignees in bankruptcy of the mortgagor for the conversion by the sale of the goods during the term. Fenn v. Bittleston, 7 Ex. 152; 21 L. J., Ex. 41.

Of Property Pledged to be Redeemed.]—A. deposited a dock warrant for brandies with B., as a security for a loan, which was to be repaid on the 29th of January, or, in default, the brandies were to be forfeited. On the 28th, B. agreed for the sale of the brandies to C., and on the 29th delivered to him the dock warrant, and C. took actual possession of the brandies on the 30th:—Held, that the sale on the 28th, and the delivery of the dock warrant to the vendee on the 29th, A. having the whole of that day to redeem it, amounted to a conversion. Johnson v. Stear, 15 C. B. (N.S.) 330; 33 L. J., C. P. 130; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 99; 9 L. T. 538; 12 W. R. 347.

A. deposited goods with B. as security for the repayment of a loan in one month. At the end of the month B. entered into an agreement for an indefinite extension of the credit, A. agreeing to pay interest monthly. At the end of the second month, neither the principal nor interest being paid, B. wrote to A. demanding the payment of an amount in excess of what was actually due, and informing him that if it was not paid he should sell the goods. The money not being paid, B. sold the goods:—Held, in trover by A. against B., that B. had no right to sell till he had properly determined the extension of the credit, and that sending a letter demanding an excessive amount had not that effect, and therefore A. was entitled to recover the value of the goods. Pigot v. Cubley, 15 C. B. (N.S.) 701; 33 L. J., C. P. 134; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 318; 9 L. T. 804; 12 W. R. 467.

Scrip certificates for shares were pledged to secure an advance, for the repayment of which no particular date was fixed. The pledgor became bankrupt and the pledgee sold a portion of the certificates to satisfy his debt without making demand for payment or giving any notice of his intention of selling. The assignee in bankruptcy of the pledgor's estate, without making any tender of the amount of the debt, brought trover for the certificates against the pledgee:—Held, that the action was not maintainable. Halliday v. Holgate, 37 L. J., Ex. 174; L. R. 3 Ex. 299; 18 L. T. 656; 17 W. R. 13—Ex. Ch.

Custom to take Damaged Goods.]—Where, by the custom of the trade, a calico-printer is bound to take goods damaged in the printing, the mere circumstance of their being damaged confers no such property in them on him as to authorise him to sell them, unless the owner has elected that he should take them. Laclouch v. Towle, 3 Esp. 114.

Sale by Auctioneer of Goods comprised in Bill of Sale.]—By a memorandum of agreement the plaintiff let on hire certain cabs to P. Subsequently the plaintiff made an advance of a sum of money to P., taking as security a bill of sale on all his goods. Neither the agreement to hire nor the bill of sale were registered under the bills of sale act. P. took the goods (all of which were included either in the agreement to hire or the bill of sale) to the defendant and instructed him to sell. The defendant, being without notice of the plaintiff's claim, advanced money to P. upon the goods, sold them by auction, and, after deducting expenses and commission, paid over the balance to P. In an action brought to recover the value of the goods, on the ground of their alleged conversion by the defendant:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover, since the dealing with the property and sale by the defendant amounted to a conversion of the goods. Cochrane v. Rymill, 40 L. T. 744; 27 W. R. 776.

—— "In the Course of his Business as Auctioneer."]—An auctioneer who in the ordinary course of his business sells by public auction for A. goods ostensibly belonging to A., but really belonging to B., and without notice pays over the proceeds of sale to A., is not guilty of a conversion. Turner v. Hockey, 56 L. J., Q. B. 301. S. P., National Mercantile Bank v. Rymill, 44 L. T. 767—C. A.

The liability of auctioneers and of agents generally in respect of the wrongful conversion of goods depends upon whether they deal with the goods with the view of passing the property in them, or whether they merely settle the price or otherwise act as mere intermediaries between the owner and the purchaser; in the former case they are liable, in the latter case they are not. Turner v. Hockey (supra) commented on. Barker v. Furlong, 60 L. J., Ch. 368; [1891] 2 Ch. 172; 64 L. T. 411; 39 W. R. 621.

—— Auction on Private Premises.]—The owner of certain household furniture assigned it by bill of sale to the plaintiffs. Subsequently to the assignment, the assignor employed the defendants, a firm of auctioneers, to sell it by auction on her behalf at her private residence. The defendants, who had no notice of the bill of sale, accordingly sold the furniture at the assignor's residence, and in the ordinary course delivered it there to the purchasers. The plaintiffs brought trover:—Held, that the defendants were liable. Consolidated Co. v. Curtis, 61 L. J., Q. B. 325; [1892] 1 Q. B. 495; 40 W. R. 426; 56 J. P. 565.

An undischarged bankrupt, to whom his creditors had given, by a resolution duly passed, a certain quantity of his furniture, assigned that furniture by bill of sale to the plaintiff, and afterwards sent it to the defendant, an auctioneer, who sold it and paid the money received to the bankrupt. In an action for conversion:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to the furniture, for that the bankrupt could, under the resolution of his creditors, dispose of it to the plaintiff, and that there was no jus tertii which the defendant could set up. Brown v. Hickinbotham, 50 L. J., Q. B. 426.

—— Stolen Goods in Market Overt.]—The defendants were public sale masters, and carried on business in a legally established cattle market, where a market overt for the sale of cattle and sheep was held once a week. A number of sheep, which had been stolen from the plaintiff, were brought on a market day to the stand of the defendants by the thief, who employed the defendants to sell the sheep for him. The defendants, in ignorance of the theft, placed the sheep in their stand, and sold and delivered them to a purchaser by whom they were removed:—Held, that the defendants were liable in an action of trover for the value of the sheep. Delaney v. Wallis, 14 L. R., Ir. 31; 15 Cox, C. C. 525—C. A. S. P., Ganly v. Ledwidge, Ir. R. 10 C. L. 33.

e. Waiver of Conversion.

Effect of.]—The defendant sold the goods of D. under a bill of sale. D. became bankrupt, and his trustee petitioned the court of bankruptcy to set aside the sale as fraudulent or void, and order payment of the proceeds (the amount of which he knew) to him. The court so ordered, and the money was paid. The trustee afterwards being dissatisfied with the amount realised, and desiring to obtain the difference between the value of the goods and proceeds of the sale, brought trover against the defendant:—Held, that he could not do so, as by his acts he had waived the tort. Smith v. Baker, 42 L. J., C. P. 155; L. R. 8 C. P. 350; 28 L. T. 637.

The assignees of a bankrupt are not entitled to waive a sale of the goods as a conversion, and rely on a subsequent demand and refusal. Ed- wards v. Hooper, 11 M. & W. 363 ; 12 L. J., Ex. 304 ; 7 Jur. 378.

A servant of a bankrupt, without authority, sold the bankrupt's goods to the defendant, who had notice of the act of bankruptcy. His assignees delivered to the defendant a bill of parcels as for goods sold and delivered by the bankrupt, and made two several demands for payment, which the defendant refused, and he also refused to deliver up the goods when they were subsequently demanded :—Held, that the demand for payment amounted only to a qualified offer by the assignees to adopt the sale, and that they were not thereby precluded from suing in trover. Valpy v. Sanders, 5 C. B. 887 ; 17 L. J., C. P. 249 ; 12 Jur. 483.

A person having once affirmed the acts of another, who wrongfully sold his property, cannot afterwards treat him as a wrongdoer, and maintain trover. Brewer v. Sparrow, 7 B. & C. 310 ; 1 Man. & Ry. 2 ; 6 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 1.

If an owner of goods, after a tortious sale of them, waives the conversion and claims the proceeds of the sale, part of which is paid to him, he cannot afterwards treat the seller as a wrongdoer and maintain trover against him. Lythgoe v. Vernon, 2 H. & N. 180 ; 29 L. J., Ex. 164.

Owner Standing by.]—The owner of goods, who stands by and voluntarily allows another to treat them as his own, whereby a third person is induced to buy them bonâ fide, cannot recover them from the vendee. Gregg v. Wells, 10 A. & E. 90 ; 2 P. & D. 296 ; 8 L. J., Q. B. 193.

3. Right of Action.

a. Property and Possession.

Nature of Right.]—Trover must be founded on the right of property in the plaintiff. Pyne v. Dor, 1 Term Rep. 55.

And the plaintiff must have the right of possession as well as the right of property at the time. Gordon v. Harper, 7 Term Rep. 9 ; 2 Esp. 465 ; 4 R. R. 369. S. P., Owen v. Knight, 4 Bing. (N.C.) 54 ; 6 D. P. C. 245 ; 5 Scott, 307 ; 7 L. J., C. P. 27 ; and Bloxam v. Saunders, 4 B. & C. 951 ; 7 D. & R. 407.

While the right of property in a chattel is admitted to be in one person, the right of possession of that chattel cannot be absolutely and adversely in another. Clerk v. Adam, 1 Cl. & F. 242.

Joint Owners—Right to Possession in one Co-owner—Conversion by Other.]—The plaintiff, who was owner of a personal chattel, parted with a half-share in it to another person on an agreement that the plaintiff was to have possession of the chattel until it should be sold. The plaintiff entrusted the chattel to his co-owner for the purpose of its being taken to an auctioneer for sale. The co-owner lodged the chattel with the defendant as security for a debt due from him to the defendant. In an action by the plaintiff to recover the chattel from the defendant :—Held, that, under the agreement, the plaintiff had a special property in the entire chattel which entitled him to the possession of it and to recover it from the defendant. Nyburg v. Handelaar, 61 L. J., Q. B. 709 ; [1892] 2 Q. B. 202 ; 67 L. T. 361 ; 40 W. R. 545 ; 56 J. P. 694—C. A.

Property of Servant.]—A servant, being engaged for a year, at thirty guineas and a suit of clothes, was provided with a livery suit on his entering the service. He was wrongfully turned away within the year :—Held, that he could not maintain trover for the clothes, for he had no property in the clothes till he had served the year. Crocker v. Molyneux, 3 Car. & P. 470.

A calico-printer is entitled, after having discharged his head colourman, to the book in which that servant has entered the process for mixing colour during his service, although many of the processes were the invention of the head colourman himself. Makepeace v. Jackson, 4 Taunt. 770 ; 14 R. R. 664.

Present Possession.]—In order to maintain trover the plaintiff must have a right to the present possession of the goods. Bradley v. Copley, 1 C. B. 685 ; 14 L. J., C. P. 222 ; 9 Jur. 599.

Trover may be maintained by a gratuitous bailor of cattle against a wrongdoer who takes them out of the possession of the bailee. Nicolls v. Bastard, 1 Tyr. & G. 156 ; 2 C., M. & R. 659 ; 1 Gale. 295 ; 5 L. J., Ex. 7.

A person who is entitled to the temporary possession of a chattel, and delivers it back to the owner for an especial purpose, may, after that purpose is satisfied, and during his temporary right, maintain trover for it against the owner. Roberts v. Wyatt, 2 Taunt. 268 ; 11 R. R. 566.

Mere possession of goods is sufficient to maintain trover against a wrongdoer. Jeffries v. G. W. Ry., 5 El. & Bl. 802 ; 25 L. J., Q. B. 107 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 250 ; 4 W. R. 201.

A. has sufficient property in goods shipped by B. for the specific purpose of placing funds in the hands of A. to meet a bill drawn by B. upon A., to entitle A. to maintain trover, although no bill of lading is executed, and A. holds merely a receipt signed by the mate of the vessel, acknowledging the shipment of the goods to be delivered to A. Evans v. Nicholl, 3 Man. & G. 614 ; 4 Scott (N.R.) 43 ; 11 L. J., C. P. 6.

Profit à prendre.]—The plaintiff, under a licence of the owner of the soil to search for tin ore, had, in searching for that mineral, made excavations in the soil. The defendant carted away some of the soil which the plaintiff had so thrown out, the plaintiff not having abandoned his right to search the soil thrown out for ore. In trover for the removal of the soil :—Held, that the plaintiff had, as against the defendant, a mere wrongdoer, a sufficient possessory title to the mass thrown out to enable him to maintain the action. Northam v. Bowden, 11 Ex. 70 ; 24 L. J., Ex. 237.

A plaintiff who claims a right to cut rushes on a common, and cuts five or six loads, which the defendant carries away, may maintain trover for them. Rackham v. Jesup, 3 Wils. K. B. 332, 338.

On Loss of Lien.]—If a person having a lien on goods wrongfully parts with them, the owner's right to the possession revives, and he may maintain trover for them. Scott v. Newington, 1 M. & Rob. 252.

The plaintiff, in May, 1868, sent twenty bedsteads to the defendants to be repaired. The work was done, but notwithstanding repeated requests by the defendants for their removal, the plaintiff did not send for them, and they remained with them unpaid until January, 1871, when the defendants shipped them to Melbourne for sale, to which place the plaintiff had expressed an intention of exporting them. In an action of trover brought to recover damages a verdict was found for the plaintiff. The defendants moved for a new trial on the ground that there was no evidence of conversion, as the defendants had a lien on the goods, besides which, the goods were not sold, being still in the hands of the defendants' agents :—Held, that there was no ground shown for disturbing the verdict. Allen v. Peyton, 21 W. R. 108.

Setting up Jus tertii.]—A., being in possession of a piano, which he had previously mortgaged with other goods by a bill of sale to B., sold it to the plaintiff, who took possession of it, and removed it from premises which A. held as tenant to the defendant. The sale to the plaintiff was a bonâ fide transaction. The defendant, to whom a year's rent was due by A., and being unaware of B.'s mortgage, or of the sale to the plaintiff, caused the chattel to be taken out of the plaintiff's possession, and replaced in the premises held by A. Thereupon B. claimed it as his property ; but the defendant, after B.'s claim had been made, distrained and sold the piano, together with other goods, for the rent due, when it was purchased amongst other property by B., who paid the defendant the rent due, and the costs and expenses of the distress, retaining the balance of the purchase-money. In an action for trespass in taking away the piano, and for its conversion :—Held, that the defendant could not defeat the action by showing that the title to the chattel was in B. under the bill of sale, and that the plaintiff was entitled to a verdict. Haggan v. Pasley, 2 L. R., Ir. 573.

A wrongdoer cannot set up jus tertii in answer to an action of trover. Jeffries v. G. W. Ry., supra.

Evidence of Property.]—If a plaintiff offers written evidence to establish property, which he fails in doing, he will not be allowed to recur to and rely on a mere possessory title. Sheriff v. Cadell, 2 Esp. 617.

In trover for a ship "with apparel and appurtenances thereto belonging," the plaintiff having failed as to the ship cannot set up a distinct title to a new boat and cordage. Shannon v. Owen, 1 M. & Ry. 392 ; 6 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 61.

Plea, "not Possessed."]—The plea that the plaintiff was not possessed puts in issue the right of the plaintiff to the possession of the goods, as against the defendant, at the time of the conversion. Isaac v. Belcher, 7 D. P. C. 516 ; 5 M. & W. 139 ; 8 Car. & P. 714. S. P., Owen v. Knight, 4 Bing. (N.C.) 54 ; 6 D. P. C. 245 ; 5 Scott, 307 ; 7 L. J., C. P. 27 ; and Nicolls v. Bastard, 1 Tyr. & G. 156 ; 2 C., M. & R. 659 ; 1 Gale, 295 ; 5 L. J., Ex. 7.

b. For what it Lies.

i. In General.

Part of Chattels.]—It lies for an undivided part of a chattel. Watson v. King, 4 Camp. 272 ; 1 Stark. 121 ; 16 R. R. 790.

Dog.]—It lies for a dog that was lost, and which the defendant refused to deliver, unless paid for his keeping. Binstead v. Buck, 2 W. Bl. 1117.

Agreement.]—Trover lies for an unstamped agreement, if it can, upon payment of a penalty and stamp duty, be stamped and rendered available. Scott v. Jones, 4 Taunt. 865 ; 14 R. R. 686.

Deeds.]—In trover against an attorney, for a deed which had been prepared by him, it appeared at the trial that the defendant had delivered to the plaintiff a bill, containing a charge for preparing the deed upon the plaintiff's retainer :—Held, that the deed was the property of the plaintiff ; and that the defendant could not set up, as a defence, that the deed was a voluntary conveyance by the plaintiff's father to the plaintiff, to give him a colourable right to kill game ; and that the defendant retained it as the attorney of the plaintiff's father, as alien for his professional charges. Lord v. Wardle, 4 Scott, 402 ; 3 Bing. (N.C.) 680.

A. having agreed to purchase of B. the remainder of a term, the latter delivered to him the lease in order that he might get an assignment made out ; A. then obtained an enlargement of the term from the original landlord, and refused to accept an assignment or pay the full price agreed on, because B.'s under-tenant had removed some fixtures :—Held, that B. might insist on A. accepting the assignment, and, after demand and refusal of the lease, might maintain trover for it. Parry v. Frame, 2 Bos. & P. 451 ; 5 R. R. 651.

Upon a contract for the sale of an estate, the title and abstract to be made at the vendor's expense, the purchaser is entitled to the custody of the abstract until either the purchase is finally rescinded by consent, or declared impracticable by a court of equity ; and when the contract is determined, the abstract becomes the property of the vendor ; if the sale proceeds, the abstract is the property of the vendee ; but an opinion written thereon on the seller's paper by his own consent continues to be his property. Roberts v. Wyatt, 2 Taunt. 268 ; 11 R. R. 566.

A. sold an estate to B., who paid part of the purchase money, and the title deeds were deposited with C. to be delivered up to B. when he paid the residue ; A. got possession of them again, and pledged them to D. for a valuable consideration :—Held, that B., on tendering the remainder of the purchase money, was entitled to recover the deeds from D. Hooper v. Ramsbottom, 1 Marsh. 414 ; 6 Taunt. 12.

Where a purchaser of a small part of an estate takes a covenant from the vendor to produce the title deeds whenever it shall be necessary, and the deeds, afterwards come into the vendee's possession on his taking a mortgage of the other part of the estate, and he then assigns the mortgage to a third person, not mentioning the deeds, such third person cannot maintain trover against him for the deeds. Yea v. Field, 2 Term Rep. 708 ; 1 R. R. 603.

A. having contracted to purchase an estate of B., procured the deeds of conveyance to be prepared at his own expense, and sent them to the latter for execution ; when executed, they were delivered to a servant to be returned, but the servant delivered them to C., an attorney, to whom B. was indebted for business done. In consequence of the refusal of other necessary parties to join in the conveyance, A. threw up the contract and demanded the deeds from C., who refused to deliver them up until his demand against B. was satisfied :—Held, that trover would lie by A. against C. for the deeds in a cancelled, if not in an uncancelled, state

Esdaile v. Oxenham, 5 D. & R. 49; 3 B. & C. 225; 27 R. R. 331.

Interfering with Testator's Effects.]—Trover lies against a party for wrongfully interfering with a testator's effects. Bear v. Soper, 2 Ken. 441.

Fixtures.]—An action lies for wrongfully preventing a mortgagee from exercising his right to remove tenants' fixtures included in his mortgage. London and Westminster Loan and Discount Co. v. Drake, 6 C. B. (N.S.) 798; 28 L. J., C. P. 297; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1407; 7 W. R. 611.

Fixtures left in a freehold house which was sold by public auction without any stipulation regarding them and into which the purchaser entered under a conveyance, are not the subject of trover by the vendor. Colegrave v. Dias Santos, 3 D. & R. 255; 2 B. & C. 76; 1 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 239.

Trover will not lie for fixtures which a tenant has left annexed to the freehold, after he has quitted possession with the leave of his landlord, for the purpose of enabling him to make terms as to their purchase by the incoming tenant. Ruffey v. Henderson, 17 Q. B. 575; 21 L. J., Q. B. 49; 16 Jur. 84.

Certain parts of a machine put up by a tenant during his term, and capable of being removed without injuring the other parts of the machine or the building, and had been usually valued between the outgoing and incoming tenant, were held the goods of the outgoing tenant, for which he might maintain trover. Davis v. Jones, 2 B. & Ald. 165; 20 R. R. 396.

A ladder fixed to the ground and to a beam above and which was the only means of access to a room above; a crane nailed at top and bottom to keep it in its place, but not let into the wall; and a bench nailed to the wall, held not to be goods and chattels for which trover would lie after the expiration of the term. Wilde v. Waters, 16 C. B. 637; 24 L. J., C. P. 193; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1021; 3 W. R. 570.

ii. Negotiable Instruments.

Bills of Exchange.]—If A. indorses a bill, drawn in his favour and accepted, to B., in order that he may raise money for A. by negotiating it, and B. gives it to C., who puts it into the hands of D., without consideration, two years after the bill is due, A. may recover back the bill from D. in trover. Goggerley v. Cuthbert, 2 Bos. & P. (N. R.) 170; 9 R. R. 632.

R. being employed to procure a bill of exchange to be discounted for the plaintiff, instead of doing so, indorsed it, and placed it in the hands of the defendant, who was the clerk to a creditor of R. The defendant carried the bill to R.'s account with his creditor, and though afterwards apprised of the circumstances under which R. held the bill, refused to restore it:—Held, that the defendant was liable to the plaintiff in trover. Cranch v. White, 1 Bing. (N.C.) 414; 6 Car. & P. 767; 4 L. J., C. P. 113.

The plaintiff delivered to the defendant a bill, which the latter was to get discounted for his own benefit. The defendant remitted the bill to his agents, with directions to place it to his credit, which they did, less the discount. It was left to the jury to say, whether or not the defendant had been guilty of a wrongful conversion:—Held, that this was a proper direction upon an issue on the plea of not possessed. Wilkinson v. Whalley, 5 Man. & G. 590; 6 Scott (N.R.) 631; 1 D. & L. 9; 12 L. J., C. P. 270; 7 Jur. 468.

——Payment—Forged Indorsement—Liability of Banker.]—Cashing a bill according to the tenor of a forged indorsement, is a conversion apart from any question of negligence. An action is therefore maintainable by the true payee in respect thereof. Kleinwort v. Comptoir Nationale d'Escompte de Paris, 63 L. J., Q. B. 674; [1894] 2 Q. B. 157; 10 R. 259.

——Misapplication of Part of Proceeds.]—If a party, authorised by the holder of a bill of exchange to get it discounted, and to apply the proceeds in a particular way, does get it discounted but misapplies any part of the proceeds, he cannot be sued in trover for the bill, but must be sued for money had and received. Palmer v. Jarmain, 2 M. & W. 282.

If a party receiving a bill payable to order, for the purpose of getting it indorsed for another person, procures the indorsement and pays in the bill to his own account at his banker's, with intent to appropriate the proceeds, and before the bill is due draws upon such account (though not specifically upon the credit of the bill), and his draft is honoured, an action of trover may be commenced against him before the bill is due, but not an action for money had and received. Atkins v. Owen, 4 A. & E. 819; 2 H. & W. 59; 6 N. & M. 309; 6 L. J., K. B. 267.

—— Necessity of Demand.]—A banker, after notice, discounted a bill drawn on a customer and by the acceptance made payable at his bank, after it had been lost by the holder, and afterwards debited his customer with the amount of the bill, wrote a discharge on it and delivered it up to the customer as the banker's voucher of his account:—Held, that the banker was thereby guilty of a conversion, and that the loser of the bill might recover in trover without a previous demand of the bill. Lovell v. Martin, 4 Taunt. 799; 14 R. R. 668.

—— Direction to Retain.]—A., resident abroad, remitted a bill to B., his agent in England, drawn by A., and specially indorsed by him to C., with whom his children were at school, in payment of C.'s account for their board and education. B. got the bill accepted by the drawees, and sent a letter by post to C., stating that he had received a commission from A. to pay her some money on account of his children, and desired to be informed when and how it should be delivered. While the bill remained in B.'s hands, he received directions from A. to keep it, and the proceeds, in his hands, and to have a fair investigation into C.'s accounts, and after such investigation, to pay her what might be due to her. No such investigation took place, and B. detained the bill:—Held, that C. could not recover it in trover. Brind v. Hampshire, 1 M. & W. 365; 1 Tyr. & G. 790; 5 L. J., Ex. 197.

—— Plaintiffs not Party to Special Agreement.]—L. & Co., a London firm, agreed with C. & Co., also a London firm, to make advances on a cargo per S., consigned to M. & Co., at Moulmein on the terms that L. & Co. should have a lien on the cargo and its proceeds; and that M. & Co. should remit the proceeds as soon as realised through L. & Co. L. & Co. accordingly advanced to C. & Co. 6,000*l*. M. & Co. were informed of the arrangement, and agreed to it. Afterwards, L. & Co. requested C. & Co. to pay off their advances. C. & Co. informed M. & Co. of this, and requested them to draw on them in favour of L. & Co. in anticipation. L. & Co. were not aware of this application. M. & Co. wrote to C. & Co., expressing dislike to the style of draft, but assenting to do as requested, and adding, in a letter of the same date, "we trust you will take care we are protected in this matter." Inclosed was a letter, addressed to L. & Co., unsealed, advising them of a draft. The draft was on C. & Co., payable six months after sight to L. & Co. C. & Co. accepted the draft, handed it and the letter to L. & Co., and afterwards duly honoured the draft. Afterwards a similar draft was sent in a similar letter, stating the draft to be "in anticipation of the arrival of the S., addressed to L. & Co., but open, and in a letter to C. & Co." When it arrived, C. & Co. were in such circumstances as to be aware that they could not honour it. They therefore suppressed both letter and draft; M. & Co. approved of their conduct. Subsequently C. & Co. became bankrupts; and the unaccepted draft came into the hands of their assignees. L. & Co., whose advances had not been paid off, demanded the draft from them, and, on its being refused, brought trover:—Held, that L. & Co. had no property in the draft, which had not been drawn under the agreement to which they were a party, but under a separate arrangement between C. & Co. and M. & Co.; and that, under the arrangement between C. & Co. and M. & Co., the former would have done wrong if they had handed over the draft to L. & Co., when aware that they could not protect it. De Lizardi v. Pennell, 6 El. & Bl. 742; 25 L. J., Q. B. 387; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1227.

—— Custom on Delivery out—Negligence.]—It is the regular and usual course of business in commercial transactions to deliver out a bill of exchange, left for acceptance, to any person who mentions the amount, and describes any private mark upon it; and if the clerk of the party leaving it by his conduct enables a stranger to discover the mark or number, in consequence of which the bill is delivered out to him, the party leaving it cannot maintain trover for the bill against the party who so delivered it out. Morrison v. Buchanan, 6 Car. & P. 18.

—— Evidence of bona fides.]—In trover for a bill of exchange, it appeared that the defendants were bankers, and had discounted bills for A. B., who sent the bill by his clerk, to inquire whether they would discount it, and to inform them of an agreement between him and C. D., with respect to the title. The defendants subsequently placed this bill to the credit of A. B. At the trial, neither side having called the clerk to prove that he had delivered the message:—Held, that as the presumption was, that the defendants were bonâ fide holders of the bill for value, and also that they had acted honestly, it could not be presumed that the clerk had delivered the message, and therefore that the defendants were entitled to the bill. Middleton v. Barned, 4 Ex. 241.

Scrip of Foreign Government.]—The scrip of a foreign government, issued by it on negotiating a loan (which scrip promises to give to the bearer, after all instalments have been duly paid, a bond for the amount paid, with interest), is by the custom of all the stock markets of Europe a negotiable instrument, and passes by mere delivery to a bonâ fide holder for value. English law follows this custom; and any person taking it in good faith obtains a title to it independently of the title of the person from whom he took it. Goodwin v. Robarts, 45 L. J., Ex. 748; 1 App. Cas. 476; 35 L. T. 179; 24 W. R. 987—H. L. (E.)

The scrip promised to give the bearer a bond for the amount paid. A person who took this scrip as being negotiable, could not, after he had negligently allowed another person the means of transferring (even fraudulently) the possession of it to a bonâ fide holder, be heard to deny that the instrument was a negotiable instrument transferable to bearer by delivery. Ib.

Where the holder of Prussian bonds, issued by the sovereign of that country to secure the payment of a national loan, deposited them with an agent for a special purpose, and the agent pledged them to a third person without fraud on the part of the latter:—Held, that, as the bonds were made payable to the bearer, they could not be recovered in trover by the real owner. Georgier v. Mieville, 4 D. & R. 641; 3 B. & C. 45.

Share Certificates.]—A. deposited with B. certain share certificates in a company as security for a loan, and afterwards assigned all his personal estate to trustees for the benefit of his creditors. The assignees gave notice of the assignment to the company, but B. omitted to give notice of his equitable lien:—Held, that, notwithstanding the omission of such notice, the trustees could not maintain trover against B. for the certificates. Broadbent v. Varley, 12 C. B. (N.S.) 214.

Exchequer Bills.]—An exchequer bill (the blank in which was not filled up) having been placed for sale in the hands of S., he, instead of selling, deposited it at his bankers, who made him advances to the amount of its value:—Held, that the owner thereof could not maintain trover against the bankers, as the property in such bill passed by delivery, as in the case of bank-notes and bills of exchange. Wookey v. Pole, 4 B. & Ald. 1; 22 R. R. 594.

c. On Sale of Goods.

Goods subject to Vendor's Lien.]—The purchaser of goods which remain in the possession of the vendor, subject to the vendor's lien for unpaid purchase-money, cannot maintain an action of trover against a wrongdoer. Lord v. Price, 43 L. J., Ex. 49; L. R., 9 Ex. 54; 30 L. T. 271; 22 W. R. 318.

Where Goods not Paid for.]—The purchaser of goods cannot maintain trover for them, without paying the price; for though he acquires the right of property by the purchase, he can only acquire the right of possession by the payment or tender of the price; and in order to maintain trover, he must have both the right of property and the right of possession. Bloxam v. Saunders, 7 D. & R. 396; 4 B. & C. 941; 28 R. R. 519.

But on the contract for the sale of a specific chattel on credit, time, without express stipulation, is not of the essence of the contract; and the vendee, on tender of the price, though after the expiration of the period of credit, may maintain trover against the vendor to recover such chattel. The vendor cannot rescind the contract on nonpayment at the day. Martindale v. Smith, 1 G. & D. 1; 1 Q. B. 389; 10 L. J., Q. B. 155; 5 Jur. 932.

If a tradesman sells goods to be paid for on delivery, and his servant by mistake delivers them without receiving the money, he may, after demand and refusal to deliver or to pay, bring trover for his goods against the purchaser. Bishop v. Shillito, 2 B. & Ald. 329, n; 20 R. R. 457 n.

Appropriation of Goods.]—Trover will not lie by the purchaser of goods, which form part of a larger quantity belonging to the seller, unless there has been a separation of the specific part sold from the rest. Austen v. Craven, 4 Taunt. 644; 1 Marsh. 4, n.; 13 R. R. 714.

The plaintiff, by bought and sold notes, contracted to sell to the defendant oil at a certain price, "to be free delivered and paid for in fourteen days by cash, less 2*l.* 10*s.* per cent. discount." Having at the time oil at a wharf, he gave an order to the wharfinger to transfer some of that to the defendant. The wharfinger transferred it in his books to the defendant's name, and signed a notice of the transfer directed to the defendant, which the plaintiff's clerk on the same day took to the defendant, and demanded a cheque in payment. The defendant refused to give the cheque, but retained the notice and got possession of the oil against the will of the plaintiff, who, as the jury found, never intended to part with the notice or the oil, except on condition that a cheque was given:—Held, that as the sale was of no specific oil, and as the defendant refused to comply with the condition, no property passed to him by the transfer in the wharfinger's books, and that the plaintiff could maintain trover. Godts v. Rose, 17 C. B. 229; 25 L. J., C. P. 61; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1173; 4 W. R. 129.

An appropriation of goods, under a contract of sale, may mean a mere election by the vendor, where he has the right himself to choose what articles he will supply in performance of his contract, in which case the property does not pass; or it may mean that both parties to the contract have agreed that particular goods shall be the articles to be supplied, and yet the appropriation may not operate so as to pass the property. Wait v. Baker, 2 Ex. 1; 17 L. J., Ex. 307.

But where both parties have agreed that particular goods shall be the articles contracted for, and shall become the property of the vendee, and nothing further remains to be done in order to transfer the goods, that is an appropriation which operates in law so as to vest the property in the vendee. Ib.

Under a contract for the sale of goods, to be selected by the vendor, a selection and a delivery to a common carrier for the vendee is a delivery to the vendee, whose agent the carrier becomes: and if there is a binding contract, and the article agrees with it, such delivery is such an appropriation as leaves nothing more to be done in order to transfer the goods, and therefore the property passes. Ib.

But in the case of a delivery on board a ship, under a bill of lading, the captain is in possession of the goods, and carries for and on behalf of the vendor, and the delivery does not operate as in the case of a common carrier, though the ship is expressly hired for the vendee; it is an appropriation only in the sense of an election, and does not vest the goods in the vendee. Ib.

Right of Owner to follow Proceeds of Sale.]—Where a person wrongfully obtained goods and sold them, and the proceeds of sale were paid into a colonial bank for the purpose of transmission to its London branch, he receiving bills of exchange to the amount of the proceeds drawn by the colonial bank on its London branch:—Held, that the owners of the goods were entitled to follow the proceeds in the hands of the bank, and to be paid the amount of the bills, as bills, as they became possessed of them. Comité des Assureurs Maritimes v. Standard Bank of South Africa, 1 Cab. & E. 87.

Delivery.]—M., being indebted to B., entered into an agreement as follows: "I, M., agree to allow B. to have my horse, van, cart and two sets of harness for what I owe B., and that B. to maintain the horse and keep possession of it and cart and harness, and to have his name on the van and cart, until I repay to B. 39*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* B. has received into possession the horse, van, cart and the two sets of harness, this 24th day of December, 1860." B. not having room on his premises for all the goods, left part with M., and having eventually been declared insolvent, M. took back the goods which B. had on his premises, which were then seized by the broker of the provisional assignee, upon which M. brought an action and obtained a verdict; leave being reserved to set it aside on the ground that the property sought to be recovered passed to B. under the agreement:—Held, that there had been a complete delivery of all the goods, and that the property had passed, and therefore that an action for conversion could not be maintained. Martin v. Reid, 11 C. B. (N.S.) 730; 31 L. J., C. P. 126; 5 L. T. 727.

—— Resale.]—A. contracted to sell to N. & K. 100 tons of oil to be delivered alongside a vessel in the Thames, and paid for in cash in exchange for mate's receipt. N. & K. entered into a contract with the defendants, who were shipowners, whereby the defendants agreed to give room in their ships for the export of 400 tons of oil during the season. There was a stipulation between N. & K. and the defendants, that no goods should be received on board unless a clean receipt could be given for them. A. in pursuance of his contract with N. & K. brought alongside one of defendants' vessels fifty barrels of oil, which were taken on board, but the defendants failed to give a clean receipt. A. demanded re-delivery of the oil, and, on this being refused, brought an action of trover against the defendants. The oil was subsequently sold by N. & K., who then paid A. the contract price:—Held, that A. was precluded from saying that the goods were his when he demanded re-delivery; and that he was not entitled to recover from the defendants the loss of interest on the price caused by the delay in payment. Armstrong v. Allen, 4 E. 107; 67 L. T. 738; 7 Asp. M. C. 293—C. A.

Contract for Performance of Work.]—The buyer of a chattel, ordered to be made for him, acquires no property in the chattel till it is finished and delivered to him; and therefore, before then, cannot maintain trover for it, though he has paid the price beforehand. Mucklow v. Mangles, 1 Taunt. 318; 9 R. R. 784. S. P., Woods v. Russell, 1 D. & R. 58 ; 5 B. & Ald. 942 ; 24 R. R. 621.

An unfinished gig, which has been previously selected and paid for by the plaintiff, was taken in execution under a fi. fa., and left in care of the judgment creditor, who, when it was finished, assisted in giving it up to the plaintiff. The sheriff afterwards retook it. Trover was brought, and the execution found fraudulent :—Held, that, whether the property in the gig passed or not to the plaintiff before the seizure, trover was maintainable, and the sheriff could not retake it, even to secure his poundage. Goode v. Langley, 7 B. & C. 26 ; 9 D. & R. 791; 5 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 353.

B., a builder, undertook to build an hotel for a company, of which the defendants were the trustees, and to do all the work, except the plumbing and ironmongery, which were to be done by the defendants' workmen. It was agreed, that if B. became bankrupt, it should be lawful for the defendants to take possession of the work already done, and put an end to the agreement, and that they should pay to B. so much money only as should be adjudged to be the value of the work already done and fixed by him. The defendants employed a clerk of the works, whose duty it was to inspect the materials supplied by the bankrupt, and none were used upon the building but such as had been approved by him. Before the hotel was completed B. became a bankrupt. Shortly before the bankruptcy, some deal sash-frames were lying at the bankrupt's premises ; to these the ironmongers of the defendants had supplied pulleys, and in this state they had been seen and approved by the clerk of the works. After the bankruptcy, the sash-frames were brought to the defendants' premises ; the assignees then made a demand of the sash-frames, and upon the defendants' refusal to deliver them, brought trover: —Held, first, that this was a contract for the performance of certain work, and not for the sale of goods, and that the sash-frames did not become the property of the defendants until they were fixed to the building. Tripp v. Armitage, 4 M. & W. 687 ; 1 H. & H. 442 ; 8 L. J., Ex. 107 ; 3 Jur. 249.

Held, also, that although the defendants might be entitled to keep the sash-frames, for the purpose of severing the pulleys, yet a demand of the sash-frames generally, and a general refusal, were evidence of a conversion. Ib.

d. After Theft of Goods.

See Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 24, sub-s. 1, re-enacting in part s. 100 of the Larceny Act, 1861.

Prosecution of Offender.]—In an action for trover and trespass for a brooch, the pleas being not guilty and not possessed, the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff. A rule for a new trial having been obtained, on the ground that it appeared from the evidence that the brooch was taken by the defendant under such circumstances as to prove a charge of felony, and that the judge ought, therefore, to have nonsuited the plaintiff :—Held, that the judge was bound to try the issues on the record, and that he was right in not having nonsuited the plaintiff. Wells v. Abraham, 41 L. J., Q. B. 306 ; L. R. 7 Q. B. 554 ; 26 L. T. 326 ; 20 W. R. 659.

The objection cannot be taken by plea. Osborne v. Gillett, L. R. 8 Ex. 88.

The owner of goods stolen prosecuting the felon to conviction, cannot recover their value from the person who purchased them in market overt, and sold them again before conviction, notwithstanding the owner gave him notice of the robbery while they were in his possession. Horwood v. Smith, 2 Term Rep. 750 ; 2 Leach, C. C. 586, n. ; 1 R. R. 613.

But the owner of chattels stolen, who prosecutes the thief to conviction, may recover their value from a person who purchased them from the thief by a bonâ fide sale, but not in market overt, before the conviction, notice of the felony having been given whilst they were in his possession. Peer v. Humphrey, 2 A. & E. 495 ; 4 N. & M. 430 ; 1 H. & W. 28 ; 4 L. J., K. B. 100.

Trover is maintainable to recover the value of goods which have been stolen from the plaintiff, and which the defendant has innocently purchased, although no steps have been taken to bring the thief to justice ; for the obligation which the law imposes on a person to prosecute the party who has stolen his goods does not apply where the action is against a third party innocent of the felony. White v. Spettigue, 13 M. & W. 603 ; 1 Car. & K. 673 ; 14 L. J., Ex. 99 ; 9 Jur. 70.

It is not necessary for the owner of stolen goods to prosecute the thief to conviction before he can recover them in an action against an innocent third person. Lee v. Bayes or Robinson, 18 C. B. 599 ; 25 L. J., C. P. 249 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1093.

Against Salesmaster.]—A salesmaster, who in market overt publicly sells and afterwards delivers a stolen beast, although he does so innocently and in the ordinary course of his business, is responsible, in trover, to the true owner for the value of the beast. Gauly v. Ledwidge, Ir. R. 10 C. L. 33. S. P., Delaney v. Wallis, 14 L. R. Ir. 31 ; 15 Cox, C. C. 525—C. A.

Effect of Order of Restitution.]—Goods which have been stolen may be recovered in trover from the purchaser of them in market overt upon a conversion by him subsequent to the conviction of the felon, without any order for restitution having been made. Scattergood v. Sylvester, 15 Q. B. 506 ; 19 L. J., Q. B. 447 ; 14 Jur. 977.

Section 100 of the Larceny Act, 1861, gives the owner of a stolen New Zealand bond no right to recover it from the holder. Chichester v. Hill, 52 L. J., Q. B. 160 ; 48 L. T. 364 ; 31 W. R. 245 ; 15 Cox, C. C. 258 ; 47 J. P. 324.

Bills and Notes Stolen.]—Trover will lie for the produce of a stolen bank-note in the hands of a third person, after conviction of the theft. Golightly v. Ryn, Lofft, 88.

A promissory note delivered by the defendant to the plaintiff, payable to the plaintiff's order, was stolen from the plaintiff by his clerk, who, after forging the plaintiff's indorsement, obtained payment from the defendant's banker ; the banker handed the note to the defendant :—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the amount at the hands of the defendant in an action of trover, notwithstanding six weeks had elapsed before the plaintiff discovered and gave the defendant notice of the loss of the note. Johnson v. Windle, 3 Bing. (N.C.) 225 ; 3 Scott, 608 ; 2 Hodges, 202 ; 6 L. J., C. P. 5.

If a party possess himself of a stolen bill or note improperly, a demand and refusal are not necessary previously to an action brought for its recovery by the loser. Beckwith v. Corrall, 3 Bing. 444; 11 Moore, 335; 2 Car. & P. 261; 4 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 139.

Property in Hands of Police.]—The plaintiff was tried and acquitted on a charge of stealing a diamond ring and pin found on his person. The defendant, a superintendent of police, into whose hands the articles had come in the ordinary course of proceedings, did not deliver them to the plaintiff, but within a reasonable time applied to a metropolitan police magistrate under 2 & 3 Vict. c. 71, s. 29, for an order as to how he was to dispose of them. The magistrate, after hearing evidence, including that of the plaintiff, adjourned the hearing to a day not yet expired. In an action for the detention and conversion of the articles:—Held, that the defendant, having within a reasonable time proceeded in accordance with the provisions of the act, to place the matter in the hands of the magistrate, was not liable. Bullock v. Dunlap, 46 L. J., Ex. 150; 2 Ex. D. 43; 35 L. T. 633; 25 W. R. 98; 13 Cox, C. C. 367. Affirmed, 36 L. T. 194; 25 W. R. 293; 13 Cox, C. C. 581—C. A.

If a person is stopped with a horse under suspicious circumstances, and the horse is placed at an inn by the police, and the innkeeper directs an auctioneer to sell the horse for its keep, the latter is liable to be sued in trover by the owner. Binns v. Pigott, 9 Car. & P. 208.

The police have power under a warrant for the arrest of a person charged with stealing goods, to take possession of the goods for the purposes of a prosecution. A person is, therefore, justified in refusing to hand over goods to one claiming to be the owner, if such person has been entrusted with them by the police who have taken possession of them under such circumstances. Tyler v. L. & S. W. Ry., 1 Cab. & E. 285.

Purchase from Police.]—Various quantities of tallow, the property of different persons, were deposited in warehouses on a bank of the Thames. A fire took place, in consequence of which the tallow melted and flowed down into the sewers, and thence into the river, from which several portions of it were unwarrantably taken by different persons. A., one of these persons, sold some of it to B., which was taken from him by the police, and he was charged before a magistrate with the possession of tallow supposed to have been stolen or unlawfully obtained. The magistrate dismissed the charge, but ordered the tallow to be detained, under 2 & 3 Vict. c. 71, s. 29, and it was sold by direction of the commissioner of police before the twelve months limited by s. 30 had expired. C. having purchased the tallow from the police:—Held, that A. had no property in the tallow entitling him to maintain an action against C. for its conversion. Buckley v. Gross, 3 B. & S. 566; 32 L. J., Q. B. 129; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 986; 7 L. T. 743; 11 W. R. 465.

e. When Goods obtained by False Pretences or Fraud.

See Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 24, sub.-s. 2.

Conviction.]—W. purchased and obtained delivery of certain sheep from the defendant by false pretences. The plaintiff purchased the sheep from W. and paid W. for them without knowledge of the fraud, the defendant having done nothing in the meantime to avoid the contract between himself and W. The defendant finding that the sheep were on the plaintiff's premises retook possession of them; W. having been convicted of obtaining the sheep by false pretences on the prosecution of the defendant:—Held, that the effect of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 100, was not to revest the property in the sheep in the defendant as against the plaintiff, who had acquired a good title to them before the conviction, and consequently that the defendant was liable in an action by the plaintiff for the value of the sheep. Moyce v. Newington, 48 L. J., Q. B. 125; 4 Q. B. D. 32; 39 L. T. 535; 27 W. R. 319; 14 Cox, C. C. 182. Cf. Bentley v. Vilmont, 57 L. J., Q. B. 18; 12 App. Cas. 471; 57 L. T. 854; 36 W. R. 481; 52 J. P. 68—H. L. (E.); and Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 24, sub.-s. (2).

Effect on Property.]—The obtaining goods upon false pretences, under colour of purchasing them, does not change the property. Noble v. Adams, 7 Taunt. 59; 2 Marsh. 366; Holt, 248; 17 R. R. 445. See also Nickling v. Heaps, 21 L. T. 754.

Mistake as to Vendee.]—The plaintiffs, who were linen manufacturers at Belfast, received an order for goods signed "A. Blenkarn & Co.," 37, Wood-street, London, the word "Blenkarn" being so written as to resemble "Blenkiron." The goods were afterwards forwarded and addressed to "A. Blenkiron & Co.," 37, Wood-street, the plaintiffs being under the belief that they were in correspondence with the well-known firm of "Blenkiron & Sons," who carried on business at 123, Wood-street. The goods were ordered and received by Alfred Blenkarn who had an office at 37, Wood-street, and the plaintiffs were induced by his fraud to send the goods to him. The plaintiffs, on discovering the fraud, prosecuted Blenkarn for obtaining goods by false pretences, and he was found guilty. Before his conviction he had sold part of the goods to the defendants who had no knowledge of the fraud and they had re-sold them to other persons:—Held, that there was no valid contract for the sale of the goods by the plaintiffs, and that they were entitled to recover them from the defendants in an action of trover. Cundy v. Lindsay, 47 L. J., Q. B. 481; 3 App. Cas. 459; 38 L. T. 573; 26 W. R. 406; 14 Cox, C. C. 93—H. L.

The plaintiffs, owners of a large quantity of acid in barrels, employed brokers to sell it. The brokers contracted with B. for the purchase of part, and gave him an order on the plaintiffs that they should deliver to him, or his order, a certain number of tons of acid. B. sold his interest in this contract to E. who sold it to L. A. bought the same of L., falsely representing himself as agent for V., and thereby, on pretence of inspecting the acid, obtained from L. the brokers' orders on the plaintiffs for the quantity. These orders had been indorsed over and passed from one purchaser to another, and when delivered by L. to A. were indorsed by L., specially deliverable to himself. A. presented the brokers' orders to the plaintiffs, and, stating that he had purchased the acid of L. on his own account, though nominally for V., induced the plaintiffs to give him a transfer, or delivery order, on the wharfinger in whose warehouse the acid was lying, authorizing the transfer into A.'s name of certain specific casks of acid, amounting to the quantity in the brokers' orders mentioned. The wharfinger thereupon transferred the specific casks of acid into A.'s name. A. immediately borrowed money of the defendant and pledged the casks of acid with him, as a security for the repayment, handing over to the defendant the warrants which he had made out by means of which the defendant obtained possession of the acid :—Held, that, as A. obtained the delivery order from the plaintiffs by false and fraudulent representation that he had purchased acid by a subsale from a purchaser from the plaintiffs, there was no privity of contract between the plaintiffs and A., consequently, that the latter could not convey a good title in the casks of acid to the defendant, though a bonâ fide pawnee for value, but that the plaintiffs might recover the acid back from him in trover. Kingsford v. Merry, 1 H. & N. 503 ; 26 L. J., Ex. 83 ; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 68 ; 5 W. R. 151—Ex. Ch.

The plaintiff having been imposed upon by a swindler, consigned a box at Birmingham by the defendants, as common carriers, to J. W., in London. The defendants found that no such person resided there, but upon receiving a letter signed J. W., requesting that the box might be forwarded to a house at St. Albans, they delivered it there to a person calling himself J. W., who showed that he had a knowledge of the contents of the box ; that person having disappeared :—Held, in an action of trover against the defendants, that they were liable. Stephenson v. Hart, 4 Bing. 476 ; 1 M. & P. 357 ; 6 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 97 ; 29 R. R. 602.

Where Transaction Void or Voidable.]—Where a debtor voluntarily gave B., one of his creditors, a warrant of attorney on which B. entered up judgment and issued execution, and the sheriff seized and sold the goods, and A. within three months presented his petition, and an assignee was appointed :—Held, that the assignee could not treat the transaction as void from the beginning, and maintain an action against B. on an alleged wrongful conversion at the time of the seizure. Young v. Billiter, 8 H. L. Cas. 682 ; 30 L. J., Q. B. 153 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 269 ; 3 L. T. 196—H. L. Reversing 6 El. & Bl. 1 ; 4 W. R. 369.

Innocent Possession of Goods Fraudulently Obtained.]—A person who, however innocently, obtains the possession of the goods of a person who has been fraudulently deprived of them, and disposes of them, whether for his own benefit or for that of any other person, is guilty of a conversion, unless the possession was obtained by him as finder or as bailee, or by purchase in market overt or from an agent, so as to be protected by the Factors' Acts. Hollins v. Fowler, 44 L. J., Q. B. 169 ; L. R. 7 H. L. 757 ; 33 L. T. 73—H. L. Affirming 20 W. R. 868—Ex. Ch.

Though a fraudulent vendee may be sued in trover by the vendor, yet the right of action does not exist against every person into whose hands the property may have passed subsequently. Sheppard v. Shoolbred, Car. & M. 61.

—— Evidence.]—The plaintiffs sued for goods, of which they alleged they had been deprived by fraud in the defendant's agent :—Held, that they might prove the contract made by the agent, without calling him as a witness, although the defendant was not privy to the fraud. Irving v Motly, 7 Bing. 543 ; 5 M. & P. 380 ; 9 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 161.

f. Property Lost or Found.

Title of Finder.]—The place in which a lost article is found does not constitute any exception to the general rule of law, that the finder is entitled to it as against all persons except the owner. Bridges v. Hawkesworth, 21 L. J., Q. B. 75 ; 15 Jur. 1079.

A person entering a shop found on the floor a bundle of bank notes which had been accidentally dropped there by a stranger. The party who lost them could not be found :—Held, that as against every one but the true owner, the property in the notes belonged to the finder and not to the owner of the shop, notwithstanding that the finder had immediately on picking up the bundle handed it over to the latter, with a view to its being restored to the true owner if he should return, and the owner of the shop had advertised the finding in the newspapers, the finder not having intended to waive his title, and having before he demanded the notes back offered to repay the expense of the advertisements, and to indemnify the shopkeeper against any claim. Ib.

Where an owner of land has the right to exercise a control over it, and to prevent unauthorised interference, and some article (abandoned by its true owner) is found by a stranger, either upon or beneath the surface of the land, the presumption is that the right to possession of the article found is in the owner of the land, and not in the finder. South Staffordshire Waterworks v. Sharman, 65 L. J., Q. B. 460 ; [1896] 2 Q. B. 44 ; 74 L. T. 761 ; 44 W. R. 653.

Trover lies for a lost bank note, which the defendant has tortiously converted to his own use, though part of the proceeds has been paid by him to the plaintiff. Burn v. Morris, 4 Tyr. 485 ; 2 C. & M. 579 ; 3 L. J., Ex. 193.

The acceptance of part does not affirm the taking, so as to waive the tort, but the amount received will go in reduction of damages. Ib.

A deputy vice-admiral who received an anchor and hawser, alleged to have been left at sea, from the finder, refused on application by the real owner to deliver them up, until the salvage was paid, or security given for the payment of it :—Held, that this was a conversion, but that if he had merely refused to deliver them up until it was ascertained whether salvage was due or not, it would not have amounted to a conversion. Clark v. Chamberlain, 2 M. & W. 78 ; 2 Gale, 217.

—— Person obtaining Possession of Land.]—One who comes into possession of land, on which he finds a block of stone belonging to another, is not justified in removing it to a distance. Such removal supersedes the necessity of proving formal demand in an action of trover. Forsdick v. Collins, 1 Stark. 173 ; 18 R. R. 757.

g. Property Given or Exchanged.

Gift—Policy on Life.]—R. insured his life and handed the policy to his mother, telling her she might keep it ; but there was no assignment of the policy. On R.'s death his administratrix brought an action for the recovery of the policy :—Held, that though the gift passed no right to the mother to recover the money secured by the policy, the administratrix could not maintain detinue or trover against her for the document. Rummens v. Hare, 46 L. J., Ex. 30; 1 Ex. D. 169; 34 L. T. 407; 24 W. R. 385—C. A.

—— Intention of Intestate.]—Declarations by an intestate, that he meant that a person with whom he resided should have his furniture and effects for what he owed her, are insufficient to entitle such person to take and retain possession of the property. Royston v. Hankey, 3 M. & Scott, 381.

—— Effect of Delivery.]—A verbal gift of a chattel, without actual delivery, does not give the property to the donee. Irons v. Smallpiece, 2 B. & Ald. 551; 21 R. R. 395.

And a mere verbal gift of a chattel to a person in whose possession it is, does not pass any property to the intended donee. Sharr v. Pilch, 4 Ex. 478; 19 L. J., Ex. 113.

A father gave his son a watch, some printed books, and several articles of wearing apparel:—Held, that, although the son was under age (viz. sixteen years old), the father could not maintain trover against a person who detained the property, because the right of possession was not in him, but in his son. Hunter v. Westbrook, 2 Car. & P. 578.

A barge, while in the possession of the donee, and worked by him as servant to the owner, was given to him by the owner; afterwards the donee worked it, and paid the wages of the crew on his own account until the donor's death:—Held, that the property thereby became vested in the donee. Winter v. Winter, 4 L. T. 639; 9 W. R. 747.

On Exchange of Property.]—The plaintiff exchanged a watch with the defendant for a pair of candlesticks, which the latter warranted to be silver:—Held, that the plaintiff could not maintain trover for the watch, on proof that the candlesticks were of base metal. Emanuel v. Dane, 3 Camp. 299.

A person, having three bills of exchange, applied to a county banker, with whom he had had no previous dealings, to give for them a bill on London of the same amount, and the bill given by the banker was afterwards dishonoured:—Held, that this was a complete exchange of securities, and that trover would not lie for the three bills of exchange. Hornblower v. Proud, 2 B. & Ald. 327; 20 R. R. 456.

h. Goods Seized or Taken in Execution.

Liability of Purchaser.]—Where a sheriff, under a fi. fa. against A., sells the goods of B., the purchaser is liable to the latter in trover, although he purchased such goods at a public sale directed by the sheriff. Farrant v. Anon., 3 Stark. 130; 23 R. R. 761.

—— Of Officer of Court.]—An officer of an inferior court of record, seized, under a fi. fa. against A., partnership property of A. and B., and sold it to various purchasers, who carried it away:—Held, that the seizure and sale, under the circumstances, did not amount to a conversion. Mayhew v. Herrick, 7 C. B. 229; 18 L. J., C. P. 179; 13 Jur. 1078.

—— Of Auctioneer.]—The plaintiff lent a pianoforte to W., in whose hands it was seized under a distress for rent. While the landlord's bailiff remained in possession, by W.'s consent, a fi. fa. against W., at the suit of another creditor, was put into the premises, and the officer seized the pianoforte, and removed it to the premises of an auctioneer for sale:—Held, that the plaintiff (after a demand and refusal to deliver it) was entitled to recover it from the auctioneer. Turner v. Ford, 15 M. & W. 212; 15 L. J., Ex. 215.

Sale when Sheriff in Possession.]—Possession of goods by a sheriff under a fi. fa. does not prevent the debtor from making an effectual sale of the goods by delivery to a purchaser while the sheriff is in possession. Union Bank of London v. Lenanton, 47 L. J., C. P. 409; 3 C. P. D. 243; 38 L. T. 698.

i. Between Landlord and Tenant.

Trees and Minerals in Copyhold Lands.]—In an ordinary estate of copyhold the property in the trees and minerals is in the lord, the possession in the copyholder. If a stranger or the copyholder cuts trees or takes minerals, the lord can bring trover. Eardley v. Granville, 45 L. J., Ch. 669; 3 Ch. D. 826; 34 L. T. 609; 24 W. R. 528. S. P., Fleming v. Simpson, 2 M. & Ry. 169; 6 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 207.

Crops.]—Trover will lie for corn cut by an outgoing tenant after the expiration of his term, though sown by him before that time, under an idea that he was entitled to an away going crop. Davis v. Connop, 1 Price, 53; 15 R. R. 693.

Trover does not lie by an in-coming tenant to recover the value of the away going crops taken by the off-going tenant, who continued to hold the land as tenant from year to year after the expiration of an old lease, which reserved to him the right, after the end of the term at Lady Day, "to fence in and preserve all such hard corn as should be sown on the premises the winter seedness preceding, so as the same exceeded not twenty-nine acres, and was summer fallowed and well manured, and at harvest to reap and carry away the same." Boraston v. Green, 16 East, 71; 14 R. R. 297.

Wrongful Execution.]—Where goods leased as furniture with a house have been wrongfully taken in execution by a sheriff, the landlord cannot maintain trover against the sheriff pending the lease. Gordon v. Harper, 7 Term Rep. 9; 2 Esp. 465; 4 R. R. 369.

Fixtures.]—If a landlord under a distress for rent in arrear severs fixtures from the freehold and disposes of them, he is liable in trover. Dalton v. Whittem, 3 Q. B. 961; 3 G. & D. 260; 12 L. J., Q. B. 55; 6 Jur. 1063.

A lessee cannot, even during his term, maintain trover for fixtures attached to the freehold. Mackintosh v. Trotter, 3 M. & W. 184; 7 L. J. Ex. 65.

Where a tenant of a mill without the permission of his landlord severed certain machinery from the mill, and it was afterwards seized under a fi. fa. by the sheriff and sold by him:—Held, that no property passed to the vendee and that the landlord was entitled to maintain trover for same even during the continuance of the term.

Farrant v. Thompson, 5 B. & Ald. 826; 2 D. & R. 1.

Wrongful Distress.]—A lodger may maintain an action if his goods are taken on an excessive distress by the landlord of the party under whom he occupies. Fisher v. Algar, 2 Car. & P. 374.

If a party pays money in order to redeem his goods from a wrongful distress for rent, he may maintain trover against the wrongdoer. Shipwick v. Blanchard, 6 Term Rep. 298; 3 R. R. 175.

A., a tenant, owed rent to B., his landlord; B. distrained for more rent than was due, and removed the goods to the auction rooms of C.; A. gave C. notice not to sell, and C. delivered the goods back to the person from whom he received them:—Held, that, as some rent was due from A. to B., C. was not liable to A. in trover. Whitworth v. Smith, 5 Car. & P. 250; 1 M. & Rob. 193.

—— Goods of Mortgagor distrained by Mortgagee—Tenancy—Notice of.]—A mortgage deed by which a messuage and premises were conveyed to the trustees of a building society to secure payment by the mortgagor of the sums payable by him under the rules of the society contained a provision that in case of default in such payment, then immediately or at any time after such default should have been made, the mortgagor should and would hold the premises, expressed to be thereby conveyed, as yearly tenant to the trustees from the day of the date of the deed at a certain yearly rent, and that the trustees should have the same remedies for recovering the rent as if the same had been reserved by a common lease. Default was made by the mortgagor under the deed, and in the following year the trustees distrained, for a year's rent, the goods of the plaintiff which were upon the premises. No notice was ever given to the mortgagor by the trustees of the society that they intended to treat him as a tenant. The plaintiff brought trover for the goods so distrained against the trustees:—Held, that the trustees were not entitled to treat the mortgagor as a tenant until they had given him notice of their intention to alter the relation in which he stood to them, from that of mortgagor and mortgagee to that of tenant and landlord; that consequently the distress could not be justified, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover. Clowes v. Hughes, 39 L. J., Ex. 62; L. R. 5 Ex. 160; 22 L. T. 103; 18 W. R. 459.

Bill of Sale—Landlord Refusing Removal.]—The plaintiff was the holder of a bill of sale over the goods of M. Default having been made in payment of the sum secured, he put a man in possession, and afterwards went to M.'s house to remove them. Upon his arrival at the house he was met by the defendant, M.'s landlord, who told him that rent was in arrear, and that until it was paid the goods should not be removed; and measures were taken by the defendant to use force, if necessary, to prevent their removal. It was then after sunset, and therefore too late in the day to distrain, and the defendant intended to prevent the plaintiff from removing the goods, with a view of distraining on the day following. The plaintiff continued in possession of the goods, but made no attempt actually to remove them; and, except by intimating his intention to prevent their being removed, the defendant did not take possession of, or assume dominion over them. In an action of trover:—Held, that there was no evidence of conversion; and by Bramwell, B., that an actual prevention by force of the removal of the goods would not have amounted to a conversion. England v. Cowley, 42 L. J., Ex. 80; L. R. 8 Ex. 126; 28 L. T. 67; 21 W. R. 337.

Right to Lease.]—After the expiration of a lease (containing covenants of the lessor under seal), the lessor is not entitled to the possession of the indenture as against the lessee, and therefore trover does not lie by the former against the latter for the lease. Hall v. Ball, 3 Man. & G. 242; 3 Scott (N.R.) 577; 10 L. J., C. P. 285.

k. Against Carriers, Warehousemen and Wharfingers.

Warehousemen—Pledge by Consignee—Delivery Order.]—When goods are shipped under a bill of lading drawn in parts, to be delivered to the consignee "or his assigns, the one of which bills being accomplished, the others to stand void," the master, or the warehouseman who has the custody of the goods under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1862, ss. 66—78, is justified in delivering them to the consignee on production of one part, although there has been a prior indorsement for value to the holder of another part; provided the delivery be bonâ fide and without notice or knowledge of such prior indorsement. Goods having been shipped for London, consigned to C. & Co., the shipmaster signed a set of three bills of lading marked "First," "Second" and "Third," respectively, making the goods deliverable to C. & Co., or their assigns, freight payable in London, the one of the bills, being accomplished, the others to stand void. During the voyage C. & Co. indorsed the bill of lading marked "First" to a bank in consideration of a loan. Upon the arrival of the ship at London the goods were landed and placed in the custody of a dock company in their warehouses; the master lodging with them notice under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1862, s. 68, &c., to detain the cargo until the freight should be paid. C. & Co. then produced to the dock company the bill of lading marked "Second" unindorsed, and the dock company entered C. & Co. in their books as proprietors of the goods. The stop for freight being afterwards removed, the dock company bonâ fide and without notice or knowledge of the bank's claim, delivered the goods to other persons upon delivery orders signed by C. & Co.:—Held, that the dock company had not been guilty of a conversion, and that the bank could not maintain any action against them. Fearon v. Bowers (1 H. Bl. 364) reflected on. Glyn, Mills & Co. v. East and West India Dock Co., 52 L. J., Q. B. 146; 7 App. Cas. 591; 47 L. T. 309; 31 W. R. 201; 4 Asp. M. C. 580—H. L. (E.)

Where A., being indebted to B., gave him for security a delivery order for goods in the hands of a wharfinger, which the wharfinger accepted; and afterwards A., being indebted to C., gave him another delivery order for the same goods, which was taken to the wharfinger, who said he could not transfer the goods, as he held them for B.; but if C. could get B.'s order, he would transfer them, and promised that he would not give up the goods without first letting C. know; and afterwards B., his debt remaining unsatisfied, gave a delivery order for the same goods to A.,

who gave notice of it to the wharfinger:—Held, that C. had no property upon which trover could be maintained against the wharfinger. Melling v. Kelshaw, 1 C. & J. 184; 1 Tyr. 109; 9 L. J. (o.s.) Ex. 45.

—— Place of Deposit.]—The defendant contracted to warehouse certain goods for the plaintiff at a particular place, but he warehoused a part of them at another place, where, without any negligence on his part, they were destroyed. In an action to recover as damages the value of the goods:—Held, that the damage was not too remote, and that the defendant, by his breach of contract, had rendered himself liable for the loss of the goods. Lilley v. Dubleday, 51 L. J., Q. B. 310; 7 Q. B. D. 510; 44 L. T. 814; 46 J. P. 708.

If the owner of property gives another person authority to deal with it in a particular way, and such person chooses to deal with it in another way, he must take the risk of the consequences, and is liable for its loss or injury, unless such loss or injury would have occurred in whichever way the property had been dealt with. Ib.

Goods sent out from Paris to London viâ Dunkirk, for G. N., Custom House, London-bridge. They were forwarded from Dunkirk, with a bill of lading, which made them deliverable to the defendant, who was the London agent to the Steam Shipping Company, "to hold at the disposal of G. N., Custom House, London-bridge." Upon the arrival of the goods the defendant paid the duty on them, and placed them in a warehouse, the owner of which afterwards removed them to another of his warehouses, where they were accidentally destroyed by fire. The defendant gave no notice to the owner of the goods of their arrival, and the jury found that the defendant was not authorised by the owner to warehouse the goods, and that he had not acted as a prudent man would have acted, for the best interest of the owner:—Held, that the defendant had not, under the circumstances, been guilty of a conversion. Heald v. Carey, 11 C. B. 977; 21 L. J., C. P. 97; 16 Jur. 197.

Where the owner of goods on board a vessel directed the captain not to land them on the wharf against which the vessel was moored, which he promised not to do, but afterwards delivered them to the wharfinger, for the owner's use, under the idea of the owner having a lien thereon for the wharfage fees, because the vessel was unloaded against the wharf; the owner upon demand and denial could maintain trover against the captain, unless the latter could maintain the wharfinger's right. Syeds v. Hay, 4 Term Rep. 260; 2 R. R. 377.

Carriers.]—Trover will lie against a carrier by the consignor of goods, who has been defrauded of them by some person unknown, when the goods have been delivered to a person who knew what the parcel contained, but at a different place to that to which they were directed, as the property never passed out of the consignor. Stephenson v. Hart, 4 Bing. 476; 1 M. & P. 357; 6 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 97; 29 R. R. 602.

If a carrier has goods to carry, and by mistake delivers them to a wrong person, this is such a tortious conversion as will support trover at the suit of the right owner. Youl v. Harbottle, Peake, 49.

If a carrier receives goods to be carried, he cannot retain the goods, and put the consignor of the goods upon proof of his title to them. Anon., 3 Esp. 115.

Upon a contract to carry and deliver goods, the possession of the goods still remaining with the defendant, trover lies. Dewell v. Moxon, 1 Taunt. 391.

—— Animal Accidentally Killed in Transit—Sale of Carcass.]—One of the defendant's cattle sent by the plaintiffs' line through from Dublin to England having been accidentally killed in the sea transit, without any default of the plaintiffs, and the carcass not being claimed by the defendant's agent, who was present at the arrival of the steamer, the plaintiffs sold the carcass to the best advantage:—Held, that this did not amount to a conversion. L. & N. W. Ry. v. Hughes, 26 L. R. Ir. 165.

—— Evidence.]—If A. sends goods by B., a carrier, to be delivered to C., proof that B. asserted he had delivered the goods to C., whereas in truth C. had never received them, is not sufficient evidence of conversion to support trover against B. Attersol v. Briant, 1 Camp. 409.

—— Of Quantity.]—In an action for converting goods received, but not produced, by the defendant, slight evidence of the kind and quantity of such goods may properly be given effect to. G. W. Ry. v. Gurton, 1 F. & F. 359.

4. Practice.

a. Restoration of Goods and Chattels.

See Ord. XLVIII. r. 1, R. S. C. 1883.

Power of County Court to order Return of Chattel.]—A county court judge has jurisdiction to make an order for the delivery by the defendant of the specific chattel wrongfully detained, without giving him the option of paying its assessed value as an alternative. Winfield v. Boothroyd, 54 L. T. 574; 34 W. R. 501.

Discretion of Judge as to.]—The discretion of a judge to make an order for the delivery up of chattels detained, is subject to review by the court. Chilton v. Carrington, 15 C. B. 730; 3 C. L. R. 392; 24 L. J., C. P. 78; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 477; 3 W. R. 248.

Such an order cannot properly be made in a case where, by agreement of the parties, the jury is discharged from finding the value of the chattel. Ib.

Option of Parties.]—The goods may be brought into court, upon an affidavit that they are in the same plight and condition as when taken, except they are of a perishable nature, or cumbrous. Watts v. Phipps, Bull. N. P. 49. S. P., Fisher v. Prince, 3 Burr. 1363.

If the value of the thing is uncertain, or the plaintiff insists upon going for special damages, the court will not stay proceedings on delivery of the thing sued for, and costs. Whitten v. Fuller, 2 W. Bl. 902.

Where the value of the goods converted was not ascertained, the court refused to stay proceedings upon delivery of the goods to the plaintiff on payment of the value thereof. Tucker v. Wright, 3 Bing. 601; 11 Moore, 500; 4 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 190.

In an action brought by the assignees of a bankrupt against the sheriff, to recover the value of furniture and fixtures sold under an execution, the court will not stay the proceedings on payment of costs, except where the defendant has restored the chattel alleged to be converted, and the plaintiff claims no special damage, or where, if the chattel is sold, there is no dispute as to the price; but the court will not interfere if the plaintiffs do not agree as to the amount. Gibson v. Humphrey, 1 C. & M. 544; 2 Tyr. 588; 2 L. J., Ex. 234.

In an action for a packet of letters, the defendant was allowed to stay the proceedings as to one of the letters, upon delivering it up and paying costs. Earle v. Holderness, 4 Bing. 462; 1 M. & P. 254; 6 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 68.

b. Damages.

Value of Goods.]—Under a count for conversion of fixtures by severing and removing them, the value of the fixtures in their severed state can only be recovered, and not the value of them when annexed to the freehold. McGregor v. High, 21 L. T. 803.

A wine merchant having obtained from a wine broker samples of wine then lying at a wharf of wharfingers, and which the broker had agreed to sell to the wine merchant at 14*s.* per dozen, sold the wine to the captain of a ship about to sail, at 24*s.* per dozen, to be delivered on board next day. The wine merchant obtained the delivery warrant from the broker, and claimed the wine from the wharfingers, who refused to deliver it. No other wine of the same brand and quality was to be had in the market, and the wine merchant was unable to carry out his contract with the captain of the ship, who sailed without the wine:—Held, that although the wharfingers had no notice of the bargain with the captain, yet the wine merchant was entitled to recover in an action of trover the actual value of the wine to him, which at the time of the conversion was 24*s.* per dozen, he having bonâ fide sold to the captain at that price. France v. Gaudet, 40 L. J., Q. B. 121; L. R. 6 Q. B. 199; 19 W. R. 622.

In trover for goods by assignees of a bankrupt, which had been purchased by him under an agreement, by which the purchase money was to be paid by instalments, and an assignment of the property was to be executed by the vendor, when the whole purchase money had been paid, with power for the vendor to re-enter in case of default in payment of the instalments, they are entitled to recover the full value of such goods against a mere wrongdoer, notwithstanding default had been made in payment of some of the instalments, and the vendor had to that extent an interest in the goods. Turner v. Hardcastle, 11 C. B. (N.S.) 683; 31 L. J., C. P. 193; 5 L. T. 748.

Where the plaintiff had been endeavouring to baffle his creditors by a merely ostensible transfer of goods to another, and the goods were seized upon premises in which the plaintiff's tenancy had expired:—Held, that the measure of damages was the value of the plaintiff's real and bonâ fide interest in the goods, and not the full value. Cameron v. Wynch, 2 Car. & K. 264. See Brierly v. Kendall, 17 Q. B. 937.

A. having bought some sheep on credit, left them in the custody of the vendor. Without any default on the part of A., the vendor resold the sheep:—Held, that the measure of damage was not the value of the sheep, but the loss A. sustained by not having the sheep delivered to him at the price agreed on. Chinery v. Viall, 5 H. & N. 288; 29 L. J., Ex. 180; 8 W. R. 629.

In an action for taking goods under process, upon a regular judgment, but in a place to which the process did not run, the plaintiff may recover the whole value of the goods, and not merely the amount of the damage which he has sustained by their being taken in a wrong place. Sowell v. Champion, 6 A. & E. 407; 2 N. & P. 627; W. W. & D. 667.

The plaintiff having purchased goods of the defendant, secretly absconded with the goods before he paid for them; the defendant followed him, and forcibly retook the goods:—Held, that in an action for taking them, the measure of damages was the value of the goods, and the defendant could not consider the debt due from the plaintiff to the defendant, or treat it as reduced by the taking. Gillard v. Brittan, 1 D. (N.S.) 424; 8 M. & W. 575; 11 L. J., Ex. 133.

Goods returned in Damaged Condition.]—In detinue, if the defendant pleads the return and acceptance of the goods after action brought, evidence on the part of the plaintiff to show their damaged state after the commencement of the action is admissible. M'Grath v. Bourne, Ir. R. 10 C. L. 160.

Nominal.]—A. deposited a dock warrant for brandies with B., as a security for a loan, which was to be repaid on the 29th of January, or, in default, the brandies were to be forfeited. On the 28th, B. agreed for the sale of the brandies to C., and on the 29th delivered to him the dock warrant, and C. took actual possession of the brandies on the 30th:—Held, that the proper measure of damages was the actual damage A. had sustained by the wrongful conversion, which, as there was no intention on his part to redeem the pledge, was merely nominal. Johnson v. Stear, 15 C. B. (N.S.) 330; 33 L. J., C. P. 130; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 99; 9 L. T. 538; 12 W. R. 347.

A sheriff, who held goods taken in execution, delivered them to the assignees of a bankrupt, after an action of trover had been commenced by them: the assignees accepted the goods without condition:—Held, that they could not recover more than nominal damages; at all events, not without alleging special damage in the declaration. Moon v. Raphael, 2 Scott, 489; 2 Bing. (N.C.) 310; 1 Hodges, 289; 5 L. J., C. P. 46.

Misdelivery.]—Trover will lie for the misdelivery of goods by a warehouseman, although such misdelivery has occurred by mistake only. Devereux v. Barclay, 3 B. & Ald. 702; 21 R. R. 45.

The defendants were in possession of plaintiffs' goods as bailees, under orders not to part with them except upon delivery orders signed by plaintiffs. The defendants parted with the goods upon the order of one G., who was plaintiffs' agent for the sale but not for the delivery of the goods. Shortly afterwards plaintiffs sent a delivery order for the same goods to T., who indorsed it to G., who lodged it with defendants to cover the previous delivery. Afterwards plaintiffs, being unable to obtain the price of the goods from T., sued defendants for the conversion of the goods, and claimed the full value:—Held, by Bramwell L.J., and Thesiger, L.J., that there had been a conversion in respect of which plaintiffs were entitled to recover; but that what had occurred with respect to the delivery order was equivalent to a return of the goods by defendants to plaintiffs, and, therefore, under the circumstances of this case, the damages could only be nominal. By Baggallay, L.J., that plaintiffs were not entitled to even nominal damages. Hiort v. L. & N. W. Ry., 48 L. J., Ex. 545; 4 Ex. D. 188; 40 L. T. 674; 27 W. R. 778—C. A.

The plaintiffs, being under contract to sell waggons, employed L. to make them according to sample at a certain price. L. then employed a waggon company to make them according to sample at a lower price. The company afterwards proposed to receive payment direct from the plaintiffs, who consented, and were authorised by L. to pay them. Some waggons were delivered by the waggon company to a railway company to the order of the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs sent a complaint to the waggon company that the waggons were unequal to sample, but did not reject them; and they informed L., and also the waggon company, that they would dispose of the waggons at the best price obtainable, and hold L. responsible for loss. L. rejected the waggons. The plaintiffs gave notice to the railway company not to deliver the waggons without their order, but the railway company nevertheless delivered them to the waggon company, who refused to give them up. In an action against both companies for conversion:—Held, that the arrangement for the advantage of the waggon company, that they should receive direct payment from the plaintiffs, had not created any relationship between them which would prevent the application of the ordinary rule as to the measure of damages in trover against mere strangers; and that the plaintiffs were, therefore, entitled to recover the full value of the goods at the time of the conversion, without deduction of the price. Johnson v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Ry., 3 C. P. D. 499; 39 L. T. 448; 27 W. R. 459.

At what time.]—The measure of damages in an action for conversion of goods is not restricted to their value at the date of the conversion, even where no special damage is laid. Johnson v. Hook, 1 Cab. & E. 89; 31 W. R. 812.

The jury is not limited to find as damages the mere value of the property at the time of the conversion, but they may find as damages the value at a subsequent time, in their discretion. Greening v. Wilkinson, 1 Car. & P. 625; 28 R. R. 790.

In an action for the conversion of goods, of which the plaintiff has the immediate right of possession, the true measure of damages is the full value of the goods at the time of the conversion. Edmondson v. Nuttall, 17 C. B. (N.S.) 280; 34 L. J., C. P. 102; 13 W. R. 53.

The plaintiffs contracted with A. to build a vessel for them, and made advances from time to time in respect of her, and A. gave them as a security for the advances a bill of sale of the vessel. The defendant having converted the vessel before she was finished, and having finished her, the plaintiffs were held entitled to recover, as damages, the value of the vessel at the time of her conversion, but not her value at a subsequent time, nor, as special damage, the value of freight which the plaintiffs might have earned with her if A. had completed her and delivered her to them. Read v. Fairbanks, 13 C. B. 692; 1 C. L. R. 787; 22 L. J., C. P. 206; 17 Jur. 918.

Tools.]—The proper measure of damages is the value of the articles which the plaintiff proves the defendant has taken and kept; but if, for stonemasons' tools, the plaintiff proves that the defendant took and used some of the tools and returned them, this is a conversion, but one for which the jury ought to give small damages, and not the value of the tools so used. Cook v. Hartle, 8 Car. & P. 568.

Damages may be given in respect of special damage, besides the value of the goods converted, if special damage is laid in the declaration; as where, for carpenter's tools, special damage was laid in respect of the owner being hindered from working for the want of the use of his tools. Bodley v. Reynolds, 8 Q. B. 779; 15 L. J., Q. B. 219; 10 Jur. 310.

Bill of Exchange.]—In trover for a bill of exchange, the damages are to be calculated according to the amount of the principal and interest due upon the bill at the time of the conversion. Mercer v. Jones, 3 Camp. 477.

Fixtures.]—In an action of trover for goods, chattels, and fixtures where damages were assessed generally:—Held, that it must be intended after verdict that the jury had not awarded damages in respect of fixtures attached to the freehold. Sheen v. Rickie, 5 M. & W. 175; 7 D. P. C. 335; 8 L. J., Ex. 217; 3 Jur. 607.

Under a count in trover to recover damages for wrongfully removing fixtures under a distress the plaintiff is entitled to recover the value of fixtures removed from the premises and sold as chattels merely. Clarke v. Holford, 2 Car. & K. 540.

Unstamped Agreement.]—In trover for an unstamped memorandum, whereby the defendant agreed to guarantee to the plaintiff to pay for "half the amount of certain fixtures, say about 100*l.*" (which memorandum the defendant withheld from the plaintiff, having obliterated his own signature), the jury gave an unqualified verdict for 100*l.* A motion for a new trial, on the ground that the memorandum, being unstamped, was worthless, and therefore the damages excessive, and that the judge ought to have directed the jury to find a verdict in the alternative—to be reduced to nominal damages on the memorandum being given up, was refused. M'Leod v. M'Ghie, 2 Scott (N.R.) 604; 2 Man. & G. 326.

Insurance Policy.]—A. effected an insurance on the life of B., and, after an act of bankruptcy, assigned the policy to C., who was aware of A.'s circumstances at the time. On the death of B. it was discovered that his life was not insurable. On a memorial presented by A. to the company, they ordered half the sum for which

B.'s life was insured to be paid as a gratuity, which C. received, and the policy was then cancelled, and remained in the hands of their officer. In an action by the assignee of A. against C., to recover the value of the policy :—Held, that he was only entitled to the parchment on which the policy was written, and not to the sum paid by the company to C., as it was a mere gratuitous and voluntary payment. Wills v. Wells, 2 Moore, 247; 8 Taunt. 264.

c. Costs.

Partial Success.]—Where a declaration proceeds for a number of chattels, if the plaintiff succeeds in proving his right to a part only, the defendant is entitled to have the issue as to the residue found in his favour; but he is not entitled to any costs, unless he has been put to expense as to the residue so claimed in the declaration. Nicholls v. Bastard, 1 Tyr. & G. 156; 2 C. M. & R. 659; 1 Gale, 295; 5 L. J., Ex. 7.

Where a plaintiff succeeds as to part of his claim only, the defendant is entitled to have the issue entered distributively. Williams v. G. W. Ry., 1 D. (N.S.) 16; 8 M. & W. 856; 10 L. J., Ex. 472.

Jurisdiction.]—In an action claiming the return of a picture or its value and damages for its detention, the plaintiff recovered a verdict of 10*l.*, being its value as assessed by the jury, and 1*s.* damages for its detention :—Held, that the action was founded on tort, within the County Courts Act, 1867, s. 5, and the plaintiff was entitled to his costs. Bryant v. Herbert, 47 L. J., C. P. 670; 3 C. P. D. 389; 39 L. T. 17; 26 W. R. 898—C. A.

d. Effect of Judgment.

As Satisfaction.]—A recovery in trover vests the property in the chattel in the defendant as against the plaintiff. Cooper v. Shepherd, 3 C. B. 266; 4 D. & L. 214; 15 L. J., C. P. 237; 10 Jur. 758.

Semble, that judgment recovered for the conversion of goods, vests the property in the goods in the defendant, by relation from the time of conversion. Buckland v. Johnson, 15 C. B. 145; 2 C. L. R. 784; 23 L. J., C. P. 204; 18 Jur. 775.

The property in goods, in respect of which judgment has been recovered in an action of detinue, remains in the creditor until execution is issued on the judgment. Therefore, in the liquidation of the affairs of the defendant before execution has issued, the plaintiff cannot prove for the value of the goods. Scarth v. Scarth, 44 L. J., Bk. 29; L. R. 10 Ch. 234; 31 L. T. 737; 23 W. R. 153.

Where a plaintiff in an action of detinue has recovered judgment, the property in the goods obtained by the wrongdoer remains, until the judgment is satisfied, in the plaintiff, and the bankruptcy of the defendant will not vest it in the trustee. Drake, Ex parte, Ware, In re, 46 L. J., Bk. 105; 5 Ch. D. 866; 36 L. T. 677; 25 W. R. 641—C. A.

Judgment against one or two or more joint wrongdoers is a bar to an action against the other for the same cause of action, although such judgment is unsatisfied, so that a judgment against a defendant in trover without satisfaction does not vest the property in the goods in him. Brinsmead v. Harrison, 41 L. J., C. P. 190; L. R. 7 C. P. 547; 27 L. T. 99; 20 W. R. 784—Ex. Ch.

Although, if the plaintiff obtains satisfaction, he cannot afterwards bring trover in respect of the same chattel against a party to whom the defendant has transferred it; yet, if he has not obtained satisfaction, he may do so. Marston v. Phillips, 9 L. T. 289; 12 W. R. 8.

Effect of Prior Hearing.]—To a declaration for the recovery of some harness, the defendant pleaded that the plaintiff had previously applied to a police magistrate within the metropolitan district under 2 & 3 Vict. c. 71, s. 40, to order the delivery up to him by the defendant of the harness alleged to be unlawfully detained, that the magistrate, after due inquiry made into the title to such harness, refused to make such order, and that thereupon the plaintiff brought the action to recover the harness :—Held, that the proceedings before the magistrate did not estop the plaintiff from bringing the action, and that the plea was bad. Dover v. Child, 45 L. J., Ex. 462; 1 Ex. D. 172; 34 L. T. 737; 24 W. R. 537.

1. CREATION OF TRUSTS (STATUTE OF FRAUDS).

a. In General.

Effect of Statute on Use.]—The statute of frauds has only imposed a form in declaring the use; the control of the use remains as it was before the statute, the absolute will and declared intent of the owner. Wright v. Cadogan (Lord), 2 Eden, 257.

Proof of Trust by Writing.]—Distinction between s. 4 of the statute of frauds, requiring the agreement to be in writing and signed by the party to be charged, and s. 7, requiring that the trust shall be manifested, not that it shall be constituted by writing. Randall v. Morgan, 12 Ves. 74; 8 R. R. 289.

All declarations of trust under the statute of frauds must be in writing. Willis v. Willis, 2 Atk. 71. S. P., Davies v. Otty, infra, col. 322.

When the court is called upon to establish or act upon a trust of lands, it must not only be manifested and proved by writing that there is a trust, signed by the person by law enabled to declare the trust, but it must also be manifested and proved by writing, signed as above, what the trust is. Smith v. Matthews, 3 De G. F. & J. 139; 30 L. J., Ch. 445; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 378; 4 L. T. 266; 9 W. R. 644. And see Morton v. Tewart, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 67; and Dale v. Hamilton, 5 Hare, 369; 2 Ph. 266; 16 L. J., Ch. 397; 11 Jur. 574.

A., being in possession of the office of clerk of the crown, &c., in the king's bench, in which

B. had also an estate for life, procured B. to surrender, and solicited a patent for himself and C., and took a note from C., promising to declare a trust for A. The patent afterwards was obtained; A. died in debt, and without calling for a declaration of this trust; this note was held to be a sufficient declaration of trust. Bellamy v. Burrow, Cas. t. Talbot, 97; 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 745, 4.

A lease for years to A., but by parol agreed to be in trust for A. and B. jointly; B. pays a moiety of the rent. If this is within the statute of frauds, &c., quære. Riddle v. Emerson, 1 Vern. 108.

A declaration of uses by the founder of a charity, presumed from an entry in an ancient book, purporting to be such declaration, but without signature or date, the book being kept by the trustees for entering their proceedings, and containing an order by the trustees dated six years after creation of the trust, that the declaration of the founder be then entered as a discretion to the trustees. Att.-Gen. v. Boultbee, 2 Ves. 379; 2 R. R. 265.

The statute of frauds requires, not that a trust shall be created by writing, but that it shall be proved by writing; which may be subsequent to its commencement. Trust raised by implication from letters, and a paper referred to by them, and in the handwriting of the party though not signed or dated; and by operation of law from advances of money. When letters are to raise a trust, there must be demonstration, that they relate to the subject. The Master of the Rolls said, the court had gone too far in taking cases out of the statute of frauds on the ground of part performance of an agreement, and the relief ought to have been confined to compensation. On appeal, Lord Chancellor affirmed the decree at the rolls, and held further that the case was not within the statute of frauds: the question being, whether a partnership subsisted in the trade of a colliery: a question of fact to be tried by evidence, as upon an issue; the interest in the lease passing as an incident to the trade by operation of law; the evidence from books and papers was admitted; and an issue refused. Forster v. Hale, 3 Ves. 696; 5 Ves. 308; 4 R. R. 128.

Agreement before Marriage—Not signed by Party.]—Shortly before marriage M., the intended husband, signed and delivered to C., the intended wife, an agreement for the separate use by the latter of certain tenements held by her in fee. The agreement, however, was not signed by C. After the marriage she made a will devising the said property to the defendants, who upon her decease took possession of the same. In an action by the plaintiff, C.'s heir-at-law, to establish his title to and recover possession of the property:—Held, that the agreement not having been signed by C., it was by reason of s. 7 of the statute of frauds, void as a declaration of trust for separate use of the fee simple, M. having only an estate for the joint lives of himself and C., with a possible estate by curtesy, and that the plaintiff was, therefore, entitled to recover; the mere renunciation by M. of his marital rights in C.'s real property not being sufficient to clothe her with a testamentary power, or to constitute a valid declaration of trust of the fee. Dye v. Dye, 53 L. J., Q. B. 442; 13 Q. B. D. 147; 51 L. T. 145; 33 W. R. 2—C. A.

Will—Writing subscribed by Testator.]—Testator by his will in 1738, devised lands to defendants and their heirs, without declaring any trust on the face of the will; but he subscribed a writing, wherein he recommended defendants to see his will performed according to the humble request and the wonted and well disposed charitable disposition of (defendant) C., towards all men, and to bring the whole affair to its desired issue. Testator died, and his heir-at-law brought a bill to set aside his devise, as void by 9 Geo. II. c. 36. The Lord Chancellor said that the declaration of trust must be executed according to the statute of frauds, to bring it within the statute of mortmain, and held that the paper writing was not a sufficient declaration of trust within the statute, though in the case of a feoffment it might have been a good declaration of a use. Adlington v. Cann, 3 Atk. 141.

Foreign Land—Defence of Statute of Frauds.]—Sect. 7 of the statute of frauds may be relied on as a defence by a defendant against whom it is sought to prove and enforce in this country a trust of lands situate abroad. Rochefoucauld v. Boustead, 66 L. J., Ch. 74; [1897] 1 Ch. 196; 75 L. T. 502; 45 W. R. 272—C. A.

Parol Evidence to Avoid Fraud—Fraudulent Denial of Trust.]—It is fraud on the part of a person to whom land is conveyed as a trustee, and who knows it to have been so conveyed, to deny the trust and claim the land. Consequently, notwithstanding the statute of frauds, it is competent for a person claiming land conveyed to another to prove by parol evidence that it was so conveyed on trust, and that the grantee, knowing the facts, is denying the trust. Bartlett v. Pickersgill (1 Cox. 15; 1 Eden, 515) is inconsistent with the modern decisions on the subject, and must be treated as overruled. Ib.

Though there can be no parol declaration of a trust since 29 Car. 2, yet parol evidence is proper in avoidance of fraud. Hutchins v. Lee, 1 Atk. 448.

Leaseholds—Absolute Assignment—Object—Mortgage by Assignee—Verbal Agreement to Reassign.]—Where a leasehold house had been absolutely assigned by the Duchess of M. to the late Duke of M., and he had mortgaged it, the equity of redemption being reserved to him, parol evidence was admitted in the administration of the late duke's estate to show that the house was transferred to him simply for the purpose of enabling him to borrow money upon it, and that, subject to the mortgage created by him, it was intended that the house should continue to belong to the duchess, and that it should be reassigned to her. Inasmuch as the statute of frauds could not be used to cover a fraud, the duke could not have set up the statute so as to exclude such parol evidence if he had been called upon by the duchess to reassign the house, and his creditors were in no better position, and consequently the equity of redemption in the house belonged to the duchess. Irnham (Lord) v. Child (1 Bro. C. C. 92; 2 Dick. 554) distinguished. Haigh v. Kaye (infra) followed in preference to Leman v. Whitley (infra). Marlborough (Duke), In re, Davis v. Whitehead, 63 L. J., Ch. 471; [1894] 2 Ch. 133; 8 R. 242; 70 L. T. 314; 42 W. R. 456.

Conveyance in Fear of Adverse Decision.]—The statute of frauds is not available as a defence to a suit to establish a trust where it would be fraud to deny the trust. Haigh v. Kaye, 41 L. J., Ch. 567; L. R. 7 Ch. 469; 26 L. T. 675; 20 W. R. 597.

The defence that the transaction under which the plaintiff claims was illegal, must be pleaded in distinct terms. Ib.

The plaintiff conveyed an estate to the defendant by a deed which purported to be executed on a sale. No money was in reality paid. The defendant, in a suit to obtain a reconveyance, stated in his answer that the conveyance was executed by the plaintiff in fear of an adverse decision in litigation then pending against him:—Held, that this was not, as pleaded, any defence. Ib.

The defendant admitted that the conveyance was upon a verbal understanding that the estate should be reconveyed when called for, unless in the meantime arrangements for a purchase by him should be completed. He alleged that such arrangement had been completed, and claimed to retain the estate, and he claimed the benefit of the Statute of Frauds as a defence to the case of trust set up by the plaintiff. The evidence did not support the allegation as to the arrangement for a sale being complete:—Held, that the Statute of Frauds afforded no defence. Ib. And see Lincoln v. Wright, 4 De G. & J. 16; 28 L. J., Ch. 705; 7 W. R. 350.

Conveyance to give Qualification as Bailiff.]—A., owner of estates in the Bedford Level, wishing to give his son a qualification as bailiff, for which, according to the Bedford Level Act, it is necessary to "have" 400 acres in the Level, wrote to the registrar of the Level, stating his wish, and asking him to find a qualification. The registrar selected out of A.'s land the smallest lot that exceeded 400 acres, and sent him a deed, by which he purported to convey it to the son in fee, in consideration of natural love and affection. This deed was executed by A., and registered. The son died soon after, without having ever heard of the transaction. It appeared that neither A. nor the registrar intended or considered the transaction to have the effect of making the son beneficial owner, nor intended any fraud or illegality. On a bill being filed by A. to establish his title to the land:—Held, that the letter written by A. to the registrar excluded any defence grounded on the Statute of Frauds. Childers v. Childers, 1 De G. & J. 482; 26 L. J., Ch. 743; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1277; 5 W. R. 793.

Held, also, on the construction of the act, that a mere legal estate was a sufficient qualification, and that, therefore, there was nothing illegal in A.'s design, no intention to represent the son as beneficial owner appearing. Ib.

Held, that on the ground of trust, or of mistake, or on both grounds, the plaintiff was entitled to the relief sought. Ib.

Held, that this conclusion was not affected by the circumstance, that the legal estate was outstanding under a mortgage in fee not known to the registrar. Ib.

Semble, that even apart from the plaintiff's letter the Statute of Frauds would not have been a good defence. Ib.

Conveyance by Son to Father to Raise Money.]—A son conveys an estate to his father nominally as purchaser, but really as a trustee, and in order that the father, who was in better credit than the son, might raise money upon it by way of mortgage for the use of the son. The father died shortly afterwards, and before any money was raised, having, by a will subsequent to the conveyance, made a general devise of all his real estate. The case is within the Statute of Frauds, and parol evidence is not admissible to prove the trust, but the son has a lien on the estate as vendor for the apparent consideration, no part of which was paid. Leman v. Whitley, 4 Russ. 423; 6 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 152.

Fraud in Heir.]—A., by will, gave lands to S., and, having afterwards purchased other lands, he on his deathbed desired B., his heir-at-law, not to hinder S. from enjoying the newly purchased lands, though he had not by any writing declared the trust for S. B. suffered S. to enjoy the lands eleven years, and then pretended he thought the after-purchased lands had passed by the will; declared, that this was out of the Statute of Frauds, and that B. letting S. enjoy it so long was an execution of the trust, and, though no express fraud was proved against B. (as in Lester v. Foxcroft, Colles, P. C. 108), yet the possession of eleven years was a strong presumption that he suffered it in execution of the testator's declaration. Harris v. Horwell, Gilb. Eq. R. 11.

Conveyance in Apprehension of Indictment for Bigamy.]—The plaintiff, apprehensive of being indicted for bigamy (which it turned out he was not liable to be), conveyed real property to the defendant, on a parol agreement to retransfer when the difficulty had passed. On a bill for a retransfer, the defendant denied the agreement, and insisted on the Statute of Frauds, the trust not being in writing:—Held, that this was a case of fraud, and the statute did not apply. Davies v. Otty, 35 Beav. 208; 5 N. R. 391; 34 L. J., Ch. 252; 12 L. T. 789; 13 W. R. 484. And see the same case on demurrer, 2 De G. J. & S. 238; 4 N. R. 256; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 506; 10 L. T. 632; 12 W. R. 896.

Assignment of Agreement for Lease.]—A plaint in the county court stated that the plaintiff assigned to the defendant the agreement for a lease of certain premises, but it was alleged that there was a parol agreement that part of the premises was to be held by the defendant in trust for the plaintiff. Evidence was given on both sides, but the judge, being of opinion that actual fraud had not been proved against the defendant, and there being no resulting trust in the assignment, decided that the Statute of Frauds was applicable, and dismissed the plaint, without coming to any distinct decision upon the evidence:—Held, that the judge ought to have decided that the Statute of Frauds had no application; and the court, upon a consideration of the evidence, decided that the plaintiff was entitled to relief, and reversed the decree. Booth v. Turle, L. R. 16 Eq. 182.

Part Performance—Evidence of real Consideration admissible.]—F., a mortgagee with power of sale, agreed with K., who was entitled to a reversionary interest in the lands comprised in the mortgage, not to sell without his consent; and afterwards proposed to make a lease for a term to W. at a fine; K. refused to consent, unless the lands were settled on his wife (who was the daughter of W.) and her children after the death of W.; and this being acceded to, K. gave his written consent, and the lease was executed by W., upon which occasion the following document was signed by W. and K.: "It is agreed by W. and K. that the lease and lands of Largan, after death of W., shall be and become, through his love for her, the property of Mrs. K. in trust for her child or children by K. (if blessed with such), if not, to be for her sole use and benefit":—Held, first, that this was a declaration of trust by W. in favour of Mrs. K. and her children, and that, after W.'s death, his personal representative became a trustee for them. Kelly v. Walsh, 1 L. R., Ir. 275.

Held, secondly, that if it was not a valid declaration of trust, it was an agreement which should be specially performed, upon the ground that, although the consideration expressed was not valuable, yet the consent by K. was a part performance which took the case out of the Statute of Frauds, and that evidence of the real consideration was admissible. Ib.

b. Person Entitled to Declare Trust.

Beneficial Owner.]—Where lands are held in trust, the declaration of trust required by s. 7 of the Statute of Frauds to be signed "by the party who is by law enabled to declare such trust," must be signed by the beneficial owner, and not by the trustee who has the legal estate. Tierney v. Wood, 19 Beav. 330; 23 L. J., Ch. 895; 2 W. R. 577.

The legal fee in lands was vested in A. in trust for B. B. signed a document addressed to A., directing the lands and other property should, after his death, be held for the benefit of certain persons. The document was not attested:—Held, that this was an effectual declaration of trust, within s. 7 of the Statute of Frauds, by the beneficial owner, and not a testamentary instrument. Ib.

When the legal estate in land is vested in a trustee for an absolute beneficial owner, "the party who is by law enabled to declare a trust" of the land, within the meaning of s. 7 of the Statute of Frauds, is the beneficial owner only. Kronheim v. Johnson, 47 L. J., Ch. 132; 7 Ch. D. 60; 37 L. T. 751; 26 W. R. 142.

In pursuance of an arrangement by which a settlement should be made on an infant by his grandmother, K., a lease was taken by J. in his own name. Part of the arrangement was that the real transaction should be kept secret, and that the settlement should appear to be made by J. Accordingly a settlement was executed by J., by which the property was settled on the infant, but which, the solicitors not having been instructed as to the real nature of the transaction, contained an ultimate trust in favour of J. In an action by K. to have the property assigned to her:—Held, that the declaration of trust not being made by the beneficial owner was not valid within s. 7 of the Statute of Frauds. Ib.

Form of Declaration.]—K. had written a letter, signed with her initials, and in the same envelope was inclosed a postscript headed "supplement," written in the same hand, but on a separate paper and unsigned. The postscript began with the words, "I had quite omitted to tell you and Martin," and was alleged to contain a declaration of trust in favour of the infant:—Held, that the signature did not govern the postscript so as to make it valid as a declaration of trust within s. 7 of the Statute of Frauds. Ib.

c. Secret Trusts in Fraud of the Statute.

Devise—Paper writing signed by Testator.]—Testator by his will, in 1738, devised to defendants and their heirs, without declaring any trusts of the will, and soon afterwards died, and a paper writing signed by him was found, in which he recommended defendants to see his will performed according to the humble request, and the wonted and well-known charitable disposition of defendant C. towards all men, and to bring the whole affair to its desired issue:—Held, that this was not a sufficiently specific trust for charity to bring it within the Mortmain Act, 9 Geo. 2, c. 36; also, to bring it within that statute, the trust must be declared according to the Statute of Frauds, and that this was not a sufficient declaration of trust within the Statute of Frauds. Adlington v. Cann, 3 Atk. 141.

The Statute of Mortmain has not abrogated the Statute of Frauds, which, being made for the public good, ought normam imponere futuris. Ib. And see Stickland v. Aldridge, 9 Ves. 516; 7 R. R. 292.

The Statute of Frauds, though it does not govern the particular provisions of the Statute of Mortmain, yet it governs the construction of that act, as being a subsequent one. Ib.

See also CHARITY—WILL.

d. Resulting Trusts and Trusts by Operation of Law.

Copyholds.]—Resulting trusts of copyholds as well as of freeholds, are within the Statute of Frauds and Perjuries. Withers v. Withers, Amb. 152.

C. lent money upon mortgage of copyhold, but being infirm, &c., surrender was taken in name of D., who executed declaration of trust. C. after purchased equity of redemption, and second surrender was made in name of D. also, but without a declaration of trust:—Held, sufficient trust within the Statute of Frauds, without a second declaration of trust. Acherley v. Acherley, 7 Bro. P. C. 273.

Lease.]—A. agreed for beneficial lease of forty-one years; B. advanced money towards the fine, &c., and lease was taken in B.'s name without a declaration of trust:—Held, that B. was a trustee for A., and upon being repaid his advance with interest, should assign the lease to A., and account with him for the profits, and pay costs:—Held, also, that the trust being proved by letters of B.'s own handwriting, took the case out of Statute of Frauds. O'Hara v. O'Neill, 7 Bro. P. C. 227.

Mortgage.]—Mortgage in fee 700*l.* paid by A., but half of the money was B.'s, yet for want of a declaration in writing, B. was not admitted to read to the proof of it, so as to create a trust for him, being against the Statute of Frauds. Newton v. Preston, Pre. Ch. 103.

In Opposition to Will.]—Where a resulting trust is insisted on in opposition to the legal operation of a will, parol evidence may be admitted to rebut the equity. Lake v. Lake, Amb. 127.

By Operation of Law.]—Nothing is a resulting trust under the Statute of Frauds and Perjuries but what are called trusts by operation of law. Lloyd v. Spillet, 2 Atk. 150.

——New Lease.]—In 1865 A., by a post-nuptial settlement, in consideration of natural love and affection, assigned a lease for a term expiring in 1905 to trustees in trust for the benefit of his wife. In 1870, without disclosing the settlement, A. obtained a lease of the same premises for forty years in consideration of a premium of 9*l.* and the surrender of the old lease. The old lease, cancelled, and the new lease, were delivered by A. to his wife:—Held, that although there was no written declaration of trust of the new lease, such lease was "by operation of law" subject to the trusts of the settlement declared in respect of the old lease. Lulham, In re, Brinton v. Lulham, 53 L. T. 9; 33 W. R. 788—C. A. Affirming 53 L. J., Ch. 928.

Rebuttal as to part of Estate.]—Where land is purchased with the money of A., in the name of B., the resulting trust to A. may be rebutted as to part of the land, or part of the interest in the land. Where A. took a mortgage in the name of B., declaring that the principal sum should be for the benefit of B., and received the interest during his life, this being personal estate is not within the clause in the Statute of Frauds relating to resulting trusts, or the doctrine of resulting trusts under that statute, but the property after the death of A. will belong to B. by force of the parol declaration. Benbow v. Townsend, 1 Myl. & K. 506; 2 L. J., Ch. 215.

A son conveys an estate to his father nominally as purchaser, but really as a trustee, and in order that the father, who was in better credit than the son, might raise money upon it by way of mortgage for the use of the son. The father died shortly afterwards, and before any money was raised, having, by a will subsequent to the conveyance, made a general devise of all his real estate. The case is within the Statute of Frauds, and parol evidence is not admissible to prove the trust, but the son has a lien on the estate as vendor for the apparent consideration, no part of which was paid. Leman v. Whitley, 4 Russ. 423; 6 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 152.

Conveyance for Object not Illegal.]—A plaintiff, believing that he was liable to be convicted for bigamy, conveyed his land to the defendant in consideration of 20*l.* It was proved by parol evidence that the deed was executed on the understanding that the defendant should hold the land at the plaintiff's disposal. The consideration was never paid, and the plaintiff remained in possession of the land, and partly paid off a mortgage upon it:—Held, that the transaction was not illegal, and that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for a reconveyance of the land, the Statute of Frauds being excluded, both on the ground of fraud and of a resulting trust within s. 8. Davies v. Otty, 35 Beav. 208; 5 N. R. 391; 34 L. J., Ch. 252; 12 L. T. 789; 13 W. R. 484.

In 1857 R., being seised of freeholds, and being also a holder of shares in companies, which he then feared would involve him in heavy liabilities, conveyed the property to H. by deeds in the form of purchase deeds; but no money really passed. R. received the rents till his death intestate. H. then executed a deed of trust, declaring that the property had been conveyed to him in trust for R.'s wife. The wife received the rents till her death, and purported to dispose of the property by will in favour of her daughters:—Held, that the Statute of Frauds was not satisfied, and that, as no declaration of trust had been executed in the lifetime of R., there was a resulting trust in favour of R. at the time, and consequently that the heir-at-law was beneficially entitled to the property, and to have a reconveyance from H., and an account of rents and profits. Rudkin v. Dolman, 35 L. T. 791.

e. Assignment of Trusts.

By Cestui que trust.]—Sect. 9 of the Statute of Frauds refers to assignments by the cestui que trust. Jerdein v. Bright, 2 J. & H. 325; 30 L. J., Ch. 336; 4 L. T. 12; 9 W. R. 267.

The same solemnities are required by the statute to dispose of a trust or equitable interest in freehold lands, as of a legal estate in such lands, nor can a testator revoke a trust any more than he can devise it without these solemnities. Adlington v. Cann, 3 Atk. 141.

2. Declaration of Trusts.

a. General Principles.

Uses.]—Though a use or trust must arise out of the original feoffment to uses, yet they need not be specifically created at the time of execution of the deed. Wright v. Cadogan (Lord), 2 Eden, 256.

The Statute of Uses (27 Hen. 8, c. 10) was made to execute and bring the estate to the use; and after the statute, the cestui que use was seised of the estate at law as before he was of the use in equity: but the necessities of mankind, and reasonable occasions in families, obliged the judges to give way to uses notwithstanding. Contingent uses, springing uses, executory devises, and powers over uses, were foreign to the notions of the common law, and could not be let in upon the common law fees, but were let in by construction (by the judges themselves), upon uses after they became legal estates; yet the judges still adhered to the doctrine, that there could be no such thing as a use upon a use; but when the first use was declared, there it was executed, and must rest for that estate. Hopkins v. Hopkins, 1 Atk. 591.

Uses in equity and mere trusts stand on different foundations, and will not be governed by the same reasoning. Id.

Upon a trust in equity, no estate can be gained by disseisin, abatement, or intrusion, while the trustee continues in possession of the land, neither will equity suffer a merger of the trust estate; for uses and mere trusts stand on very different foundations, and are not governed by the same reasoning. All trusts are executory, and the court must follow the intent of the parties, as far as the rules of law will admit, howsoever improperly a will may be penned. Id.

Natural love and affection is very sufficient to create a use, and will amount to a covenant to stand seised, though no other consideration appear. Lloyd v. Spillet, 2 Atk. 149.

Uses were introduced during the contests between the houses of York and Lancaster, to avoid forfeitures, and were exactly what trusts are now. Ib.

Where there was an agreement to suffer a recovery, and uses were declared by it, though it was suffered at a different time, yet if there was no subsequent declaration of uses it enured to those so declared. Stapilton v. Stapilton, 1 Atk. 7.

A., tenant for life, and R., his son and first tenant in tail, suffered a recovery and declared the uses to N., his heirs and assigns, until the payment of 4,000*l*., with interest, and then to the uses of a settlement of 1737, viz., to A. for life, remainder to his first and other sons in tail: —Held, that the declaration to the uses of the deed of 1737, though void as a limitation of the legal estate, was a good declaration of the trust estate. Stoney v. Saunders, Hay. & J. 519.

On a marriage settlement, lands were conveyed to and to the use of trustees and their heirs, to the use of the husband for life, remainder to the use of the wife for life, remainder to the first, &c., sons of the marriage: these limitations to the husband for life, &c., are trusts only, and not uses; and when the husband and wife levied a fine to a mortgagee to raise money, though the fine would have been a forfeiture of the wife's estate for her life had she had the legal estate, against which equity will not relieve, yet decreed that a trust estate was not forfeited by a fine. Whetstone (Lady) v. Bury, 2 P. Wms. 146; Pre. Ch. 591.

And see Att.-Gen. v. Scott, Cas. t. Talb. 138.

Where an estate was limited to A., to the use of A. in trust for B.:—Held, that A. took the legal estate, and that, although he took it by the common law, and not by force of the Statute of Uses, yet the second use could not be executed by the statute. Doe d. Lloyd v. Passingham, 6 B. & C. 305; 9 D. & R. 416; 5 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 146; 30 R. R. 327.

Semble, by analogy to a use before the Statute of Uses, there cannot be an occupant of a trust. Penny v. Allen, 7 De G. M. & G. 409; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 273; 5 W. R. 303.

No case of a springing use ever introduced in the middle of a limitation, but it always comes in afterwards, and determines the first gift in fee; and whenever it happens to arise, it displaces the first gift, and changes the uses in favour of other persons. Carwardine v. Carwardine, 1 Eden, 34.

No instance where equity has considered an estate as not executed, at the same time that law would have considered it as executed. Ib.

Executory devise is in its nature equitable, and becomes legal estate only by application of the Statute of Uses, which executes every species of interest that a court of equity would before; and that has been extended to cases not in contemplation of the statute. Perry v. Phelips, 1 Ves. 255.

The Statute of Uses has executed the legal estate, and joined it to the use; the legal estate, therefore, must want to be executed by a conveyance to make it a trust in equity. Bagshaw v. Spencer, 2 Atk. 583.

If a purchaser for a valuable consideration has not the legal estate properly conveyed to him, though the consideration cannot create a use by way of covenant to stand seised, yet the vendor will be considered a trustee for the purchaser. Pollexfen v. Moor, 3 Atk. 273.

Where an act is to be done, as a conveyance made, the estate is a trust, not a use executed. Mott v. Buxton, 7 Ves. 201.

Where a trust is limited to a man and the heirs of his body, with remainder over, the court will not decree the trustees to convey to him an estate in fee, but an estate tail only. Saunders v. Neril, 2 Vern. 428.

Lands limited to A. in trust for a feme covert, and that A. should receive the rents and apply them as the feme whether sole or covert should direct. This is a trust, and not a use, executed by the statute. S. C., 1 Vern. 415.

Copyholds.]—The Statute of Uses not applying to copyholds, on a devise of freeholds and copyholds together, the legal estate in the copyholds attaches that in the freeholds, and makes it vest in the first devisee. Baker v. Parson, 42 L. J., Ch. 228.

Requisites of a Trust.]—There are three requisites to constitute a trust, viz., sufficient words, a definite subject, and a certain object. Cruwys v. Colman, 9 Ves. 323; 7 R. R. 210.

A trust is, where there is such a confidence between parties that no action will lie, but is a case merely for the consideration of equity. Sturt v. Mellish, 2 Atk. 612.

Trusts may be constituted, not merely by direct declaration of trusts, but also by the constructive operation of the consequences following from the acts of parties. Thus equity will enforce the execution of a trust, not only against the trustees themselves, but against all persons who obtain possession of the property affected by the trust, provided they had notice of it. Pooley v. Budd, 14 Beav. 34.

A declaration of trust has, in a court of equity, the same effect as a transfer of the legal estate, or as the vesting of a legal interest has in a court of law. Collinson v. Patrick, 2 Keen, 123; 7 L. J., Ch. 83.

An instrument may be effectual as a declaration of trust, or tantamount to a declaration of trust, though it does not contain the word "confidence" or "trust," or the word "trustee." Kekewich v. Manning, 1 De G. M. & G. 176; 21 L. J., Ch. 577; 16 Jur. 625.

This court will under particular circumstances convert an imperfect gift into a trust, although not supported by valuable consideration. Ib.

Whatever rule there may be against volunteers, it does not apply to the case of a cestui que trust claiming against his trustee, for that which is considered a trust may be created gratuitously, and the absence of consideration for its creation is in general immaterial. Ib.

Where an instrument is in form a complete and an immediate assignment, and of such a nature as to give the assignee a right as between him and the assignor to take or receive the property comprised in it presently, it will, although voluntary, be supported in equity, and considered as a perfect declaration of trust of such of the property as was not assignable at law. Richardson v. Richardson, 36 L. J., Ch. 653; L. R. 3 Eq. 686; 15 W. R. 690.

In order to render a voluntary settlement valid and effectual, the settlor must do everything which, according to the nature of the property comprised in the settlement, is necessary to transfer the property, and render the settlement binding upon him; as by actually transferring the property to the persons for whom he intends to provide, or to trustees for the purposes of the settlement, or by declaring that he himself holds the property in trust for those purposes; and if the property is personal the trust may be declared either by writing or by parol; but there is no equity to protect an imperfect gift. Milroy v. Lord, 4 De G. F. & J. 264; 31 L. J., Ch. 798; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 806; 7 L. T. 178.

If, however, the gift is intended to take effect by transfer, the court will not hold the intended transfer to operate as a declaration of trust. Ib.

Where an instrument set up as a declaration of trust, or of gift, shows that something more must be done, and is contemplated by the person said to have made the declaration of trust or gift to be done in order to perfect and complete it, the court will not give effect to the instrument as either a declaration of trust or a gift, but will regard it as merely a promise of a future bounty, having no direct or immediate operation. Scales v. Maude, 6 De G. M. & G. 43; 25 L. J., Ch. 433; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1147; 4 W. R. 109.

The court, in order to give effect to voluntary settlements, requires, where the settlor is the legal owner, everything to have been done which is requisite to transfer the legal ownership; and where he is the equitable owner, clear and distinct evidence of a declaration of trust in favour of the donee. Bentley v. Mackay, 15 Beav. 12.

Some consols belonging beneficially to A. for life, with remainder to B., stood in the names of two trustees, of the survivor of whom B. was the representative. B. voluntarily assigned the stock to A., but no transfer was made. The court refused either to declare B. a trustee of the stock for A., or to compel her to transfer it. Beech v. Keep, 18 Beav. 285; 23 L. J., Ch. 539; 18 Jur. 971; 2 W. R. 316.

The distinction between an assignment for the benefit of a volunteer, and a declaration of trust in his favour, though very thin, yet pervades the cases. Ib.

It is immaterial by what form of conveyancing, whether by assignment, declaration, &c., the equity of a fund be conveyed. Any of such modes, if everything be done that can be done, and if the intention be clear, will convey the equitable interest in the fund. But a covenant to convey the fund in a certain contingency will not, when that contingency arises, be held to amount to a conveyance of the equitable right. A covenant by a settlor to transfer, convey, and assure property (if any) which he might thereafter acquire, if of a certain value, does not amount either to an imperfect declaration of trust, or to an incomplete assignment of the property (if any) which afterwards came to be acquired, upon which a court of equity will operate. Wilkinson v. Wilkinson, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 47.

Trust to take effect, according to the whole intent or not at all. Mogg v. Hodges, 2 Ves. sen. 54.

It has long been settled that the trustees and cestuis que trust under a voluntary settlement cannot compel the settlor to perform any further act than he has already done, to render such a settlement operative. Dening v. Ware, 22 Beav. 184; 4 W. R. 523.

A manor having been conveyed upon trust for certain persons, their heirs and assigns, being tenants of certain messuages, &c., an assignee of one of those messuages was held not to have a right to the benefit of those trusts, because none of the assurances by which the property was conveyed to him expressly mentioned them. Hutchinson v. Morritt, 3 Y. & C. 547.

When a trust is declared of land for the person entitled thereto, no party can avail himself of this trust without establishing aliunde that he is entitled thereto. Walters v. Webb, 18 W. R. 86.

It is immaterial for the purpose of establishing a trust of personal property, whether declared orally or in writing; the only question is as to the evidence of its existence. The fact of a person having acted upon the faith of the verbal instructions given to him is immaterial, the real consideration being what the party creating the trust has himself done in the matter. Peckham v. Taylor, 31 Beav. 250; 6 L. T. 487.

Declaration of Trust—Mistake of Title.]—A declaration of trust as to a sum of stock, proceeding upon a clear mistake of title as recited in the deed:—Held, not to affect the rights of the party really interested, even though he had executed the deed, no intention appearing on his part to part with his interest in or to deal otherwise with the stock than to join in declaring the trust thereof according to the then presumed state of title. Ashurst v. Mill, 18 L. J., Ch. 129; 12 Jur. 1035. Affirming 7 Hare, 502.

Executor—Mistake—Residuary Account.]—Where an executor had passed his residuary account, stating that a legacy was "retained in trust" out of the residue:—Held, that he was not entitled to show that he had since discovered that the account had proceeded on a mistake, and that there were not in fact assets for the legacy. Brewster v. Prior, 55 L. T. 771; 35 W. R. 251.

Money received by Consignee of Goods for Sale not impressed with Trust.]—When a person has goods consigned to him to sell, and he is bound, if he sells, to pay a fixed price to his employer at a fixed time after sale, but he may sell to his customers at any price and upon any credit he pleases, though he may be called an agent, yet the legal relation of principal and agent does not exist between him and his employer; on the contrary, the relation between him and his employer is that of purchaser and vendor, and a separate relation of vendor and purchaser exists between him and the persons to whom he sells, and the moneys which come to his hands by means of the sales which he effects are his own moneys, and are not impressed with any trust for his employer. White, Ex parte, Nevill, In re, 40 L. J., Bk. 73; L. R. 6 Ch. 397; 24 L. T. 45; 19 W. R. 488. Affirmed nom. Towle v. White, 29 L. T. 78; 21 W. R. 465—H. L. (E.)

Trust or Contract between Directors and Shareholders in Company.]—A company had been formed for the purpose of receiving money from depositors and investing it upon security. The defendants were directors of the company. The plaintiff deposited with the company the sum of 1,000*l.* upon the terms that it should remain in their hands for five years, that they should meanwhile pay him interest at the rate of 6 per cent., that by way of security they should transfer to him a mortgage made to them, and that if the mortgage should become ineffective before the expiration of the five years they would replace it by another. The mortgage, upon which the 1,000*l.* belonging to the plaintiff was secured, was paid off before the expiration of the five years, but the company did not replace it by another, and dealt with the proceeds as part of the funds of the company. The company ultimately went into liquidation, and the plaintiff then sued the defendants to recover from them the sum of 1,000*l.* paid by him to the company, on the ground that it was lost to him by reason of the defendants' gross negligence. At the trial it was proposed to show that, at the time when the mortgage securing the plaintiff's 1,000*l.* was paid off, the company was insolvent; the judge rejected the evidence, directed the jury to find for the defendants, and entered judgment for them:—Held, per Bramwell and Brett, L.JJ. (Baggallay, L.J., dissenting), that the ruling of the judge at the trial was right, and that the judgment must be affirmed.—By Bramwell, L.J., that if a trust had been created between the plaintiff and the company, the defendants, as directors, could not be held personally responsible for a breach of it.—By Brett, L.J., that a contract, and not a trust, existed between the plaintiff and the company, and that the defendants could not be held liable as constructive trustees for aiding and abetting in the breach of a trust.—By Baggallay, L.J., that the relation of trustee and cestui que trust existed between the company and the plaintiff, that a breach of trust had been committed by the company, that the defendants were parties to the breach of trust, and that the evidence rejected at the trial ought to have been admitted, as it tended to show whether the defendants had derived any personal benefit from the breach of trust. Wilson v. Bury (Lord), 50 L. J., Q. B. 90; 5 Q. B. D. 518; 44 L. T. 454; 29 W. R. 269; 45 J. P. 420—C. A.

The directors of a limited company for several years presented to the general meetings of shareholders reports and balance-sheets in which various debts known by the directors to be bad were entered as assets, so that an apparent profit was shown though in fact there was none. The shareholders, relying on these documents, passed resolutions declaring dividends, which the directors accordingly paid. An order having been made to wind up the company, the liquidator applied, under s. 165 of the Companies Act, 1862, for an order on the directors to replace the amount of dividends thus paid out of capital:—Held, by Bacon, V.-C., and by the court of appeal, that, as regards each half-yearly dividend, the persons who were directors when it was paid were liable for the whole amount paid for the dividends of that half-year, and that National Funds Assurance Co., In re (48 L. J., Ch. 163; 10 Ch. D. 118), is in no way affected by Coventry and Dixon's case (14 Ch. D. 660). The order of Bacon, V.-C., declared them to be jointly liable, but this was varied on appeal by declaring them jointly and severally liable. Exchange Banking Co., In re, Flitcroft's case, 52 L. J., Ch. 217; 21 Ch. D. 519; 48 L. T. 86; 31 W. R. 174—C. A.

Held, also, that the claim was for a breach of trust, and that the Statute of Limitations could not be set up. Ib.

Charge or Trust.]—Every charge on an estate does not create a trust, although it imposes a burden; but it may create a trust, depending on the nature of the charge. If the gift is an express one, and if the person taking the estate is bound to give effect to the gift as a trustee, then it is an express trust. Where a testator gives an estate to one, subject to a charge, the person to pay the charge is the person who is liable to the burden, and this in the case of a charity impresses him with the character of trustee for the charity. Charitable Donations Commissioners v. Wybrants, 2 Jo. & Lat. 182; 7 Ir. Eq. R. 580.

Testator devised freeholds and copyholds to his son for life, and after his decease to his first and other sons, paying 10*l.* a year to M. C. for life:—Held, that the word "paying" created a charge and not a trust. Hodge v. Churchward, 16 Sim. 71.

Words indicative of Motive for Bequest.]—A testator devised lands to his son A. (if he should, within a limited time, in writing, accept the devise) charged with an annuity to the testator's son B., and he bequeathed to A., if he should accept the devise, a sum of money to assist him in paying off a mortgage charged on the lands devised. A. accepted the devise, and was paid the amount of the bequest:—Held, that B. had no equity to compel A. to apply the amount of the bequest in discharge of the mortgage. Adams v. Lopdell, 25 L. R. Ir. 311.

Condition or Trust.]—Testator gives to his son a public-house and stock in trade, on condition that he pay debts and a legacy. This is a condition and not a trust. If, therefore, the son accept the bequest, he is bound to pay the debts, although they amount to more than the value of the property. Messenger v. Andrews, 4 Russ. 479.

A testatrix, after giving several legacies, among others some for charitable purposes, proceeded as follows: "I give, devise, and bequeath to W. all my real estates, both freehold and copyhold, and all the residue of my personal estate and effects, to hold to him, W., his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, for ever, upon this express condition, that if my personal estate should be insufficient for the purpose, he or they do and shall, within twelve months after my decease, pay and discharge all and every the legacies hereinbefore bequeathed, and I feel confident that he will comply with my wish, it being my particular desire that all the legacies shall be paid. And I do hereby charge and make chargeable all my real and personal estate with the payment of the aforesaid legacies and bequests":—Held, that the words "upon express condition" did not create a condition for breach of which the heir might enter; but created a trust which W., taking the legal estate, would in equity be bound to perform. Wright v. Wilkin, 2 B. & S. 232; 31 L. J., Q. B. 196; 6 L. T. 221; 10 W. R. 403.

A testator left all his estate and property, real and personal, except such parts as were otherwise specifically devised, upon trust for the uses and purposes thereinafter mentioned. He gave his wife an annuity of 400*l.*, to be paid to her out of the profits of his trade, to be carried on by his sons L., J., and S. in trust for the benefit of his wife and children, as in his will directed, "as likewise out of all profits arising from all and every part of my property whatsoever." He left to L., J., and S., on their faithfully performing all matters therein directed, and carrying on his trade, the houses in which he carried it on, and all his stock-in-trade, which he ordered to be increased by the sale of certain lands. He left pecuniary legacies to his children, and house property and the chattel lands of S. to his wife for life, and after her death the houses to J. and S., and the lands of S. to L.; and he directed that all the bequests should "stand good to them, L., J., and S., only on condition of paying, &c., the several legacies, and discharging with fidelity the different trusts by this will committed to them;" and that a schedule of all his property should be taken, and copies given to his wife and all his trustees and executors, and that the property therein contained should go to L., J., and S., on paying and discharging the legacies and trusts in his will, provided that if L., J., and S., or any of them, should refuse to carry on his business, such of them as should so refuse should be paid 5,000*l.* and no more:—Held, that L., J., and S. took the property left to them upon an express trust. Foot v. Cuningham, Ir. R. 11 Eq. 306. Reversed in part, nom. Cunningham v. Foot, 3 App. Cas. 974; 38 L. T. 889; 26 W. R. 859—H. L. (Ir.)

Little stress can be laid on the use, in a will making a gift to a charity, of the word "condition;" it may mean the same as "intent and purpose," and may be employed to create a trust and nothing more. Att.-Gen. v. Wax Chandlers' Co., 42 L. J., Ch. 425; L. R. 6 H. L. 1; 28 L. T. 681; 21 W. R. 361. And see Merchant Taylors' Co. v. Att.-Gen., 40 L. J., Ch. 545; L. R. 6 Ch. 512; 25 L. T. 109; 19 W. R. 641.

Houses were devised to a city company for the intent and purpose and upon the condition "that the company yearly distribute 4*l.* among the poor of parish A., 2*l.* among the poor of parish B., 35*s.* among the poorest members of the company, and 5*s.* between the master and wardens of the same company." The rest of the profits of the houses the testator willed should "be bestowed upon the reparations of the houses and tenements." If the company should neglect to do the things directed by his will, the testator willed that his next-of-kin should enter on and hold the houses for ever, upon the condition that he and his heirs should do the things. It was proved, that eight years before the date of the will, the rents out of which these payments were directed exceeded the amount of the payments by only 13*s.*; sixteen years after that date it was found by inquisition that the annual value of the property was 16*l.*, or more than double the amount of the payments. The rents having increased to an amount considerably larger than was necessary to meet the payments mentioned in the will:—Held, that this was not a gift upon condition, but upon trust, and as part of the rents was given for charitable purposes, the residue being directed to be applied in maintaining the property, the whole of the rent must be taken to be specifically dedicated to charitable purposes, and not to the purposes of the company, and therefore the whole increased rents must be devoted to charitable purposes. Ib.

A piece of land intermingled with the devised property, and which the corporation bought and built over, so that the two sites could not be distinguished by external marks, and the whole had been for many years treated as one property, was held to be exempt from the charitable trust, it not being proved that it was purchased out of proceeds of the devised property. Ib.

Bequest—Condition in Nature of a Trust.]—A bequest of a capital sum was made to the Royal National Lifeboat Institution on condition of its constructing and keeping up two lifeboats, and coupled with a gift over in the event of non-compliance with the condition:—Held, that the bequest was in the nature of a trust. Richardson, In re, Shuldham v. Royal National Lifeboat Institution, 56 L. J., Ch. 784; 57 L. T. 17; 35 W. R. 710.

b. Declaration of Intention without Transfer of Property.

Memorandum—Voluntary Gift.]—A memorandum of a voluntary gift in this form, "I hereby give and make over to M. an Indian bond, value 1,000*l.*," was signed by S., and given by him to M. without handing over the bond. S. died, and the residuary legatees under his will claimed the bond:—Held, that the memorandum was a good declaration of trust in favour of M., and that he was entitled to the bond. Morgan v. Malleson, 39 L. J., Ch. 680; L. R. 10 Eq. 475; 23 L. T. 336; 18 W. R. 1125.

R. signed a memorandum containing these words: "I authorise my brother to claim as his own, after my death, 150*l.* out of the money lying in the bank at Carlisle, for the service rendered me during my lifetime." R. retained the possession of the document until his death:—Held, that the instrument was a valid declaration of trust, and that the fact of its remaining in R.'s possession up to the time of his death was immaterial. Armstrong v. Timperon, 24 L. T. 275; 19 W. R. 558.

F., a mortgagee with power of sale, agreed with K., who was entitled to a reversionary interest in the lands comprised in the mortgage, not to sell without his consent; and afterwards proposed to make a lease for a term to W. at a fine; K. refused to consent, unless the lands were settled on his wife (who was the daughter of W.) and her children after the death of W.; and this being acceded to, K. gave his written consent, and thereupon the lease was executed by W., and, upon the occasion of its execution, the following document was signed by W. and K.:—"It is agreed between W. and K. that the lease and lands of Largan, after death of W., shall be and become, through his love for her, the property of Mrs. K. in trust for her child or children by K. (if blessed with such), if not, to be for her sole use and benefit":—Held, first, that this was a declaration of trust by W. in favour of Mrs. K. and her children, and that, after W.'s death his personal representative became a trustee for them. Kelly v. Walsh, 1 L. R. Ir. 275.

Held, secondly, that if it was not a valid declaration of trust, it was an agreement which should be specifically performed, upon the ground that, although the consideration expressed was not valuable, yet the consent by K. was a part performance which took the case out of the Statute of Frauds, and that evidence of the real consideration was admissible. Ib.

D., who was possessed of leasehold business premises and stock in trade, shortly before his death purported to make a voluntary gift in favour of his grandson E., who was an infant and who assisted in the business, by the following memorandum, signed and indorsed on the lease:—"This deed and all thereto belonging I give to E. from this time forth, with all the stock-in-trade." The lease was then delivered to E.'s mother on his behalf:—Held, that there was no valid declaration of trust of the property in favour of E. Richards v. Delbridge, 43 L. J., Ch. 459 ; L. R. 18 Eq. 11 ; 22 W. R. 584.

Some time before his death a testator informed his daughter's companion F. P. that he intended to give her a debenture bond for 1,000*l.* in the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway Company. Shortly afterwards he signed the following memorandum :—"I wish to communicate to my executors that I have to-day given to Miss F. P. my 1,000*l.* debenture bond of the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway Company ; but, as I shall require the annual dividends to meet my necessary expenses, I retain the document in my own possession for my lifetime, requesting you, on my decease, to hand it over to Miss F. P., and communicate to the secretary of the railway company at the Manchester office, relative to the transfer of the said bond being entered in their books. Given under my hand this 9th day of February, 1882. As witness my hand.—G. S. P.S.—You will find the bond in my deed-box attached to this memorandum." After the testator's death a certificate of debenture stock for 1,000*l.* in the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway Company was found with the memorandum in the deed-box :—Held, that the memorandum was an ineffectual attempt to assign the debenture stock, and did not amount to a good declaration of trust, and that F. P. had no interest in the debenture stock. Shield, In re, Pethybridge v. Burrow, 53 L. T. 5—C. A.

Deed declaring Trust Signed by Trustee—Money not Paid to Trustee.]—A married woman executed a voluntary settlement containing a recital that she had paid 2,000*l.* to the trustee, and declaring trusts of that sum. In point of fact she had not paid and never did pay any money to the trustee. The trustee also executed the deed :—Held, that neither the settlor nor the trustee incurred any obligation whatever in respect of the 2,000*l.* Marler v. Tommas, 43 L. J., Ch. 73 ; L. R. 17 Eq. 8 ; 22 W. R. 25.

Execution and Delivery to Cestui que Trust of Deed of Trust of Stock.]—Where a person beneficially entitled to the absolute interest in stock standing in his name deliberately and advisedly executes a deed, declaring himself a trustee of the stock for certain purposes to take effect immediately, and communicates and delivers the deed to the cestui que trust, this court will not decline to enforce the trusts against their author because he executed the deed voluntarily or without consideration. Kekewich v. Manning, 1 De G. M. & G. 176 ; 21 L. J., Ch. 577 ; 16 Jur. 625.

An instrument may be effectual as a declaration of trust, or tantamount to a declaration of trust, although it does not contain the word "confidence," the word "trust," or the word "trustee." Ib.

This court will, under particular circumstances, convert an imperfect gift into a trust, although not supported by valuable consideration. Ib.

Statement in Letters as to Effect of Deed of Appointment.]—By a marriage settlement property was settled after the decease of husband and wife upon trust for the children of the marriage as the husband and wife should jointly appoint, and, in default of appointment, to the survivor of husband and wife. There was no issue of the marriage. By a deed-poll the husband and wife appointed the property to the three daughters of the wife's sister. The wife survived, and after the death of her husband appointed a new trustee of the trust funds ; and in letters to her sister spoke of the deed as standing, and gave a precise statement of its purport and intended effect :—Held, that the wife had executed a valid declaration of trust in favour of the three daughters of her sister. Bennett's Settlement Trusts, In re, 17 L. T. 438 ; 16 W. R. 331.

Indorsement on Envelope containing Bonds.]—An illiterate woman having wrongfully possessed herself of bonds belonging to the estate of a testator, whose executor the plaintiff was, was ordered to repay the proceeds of the sale of the bonds, although there was much doubt as to the equitable jurisdiction of the court in such a case. Inglis v. Pasco, 27 L. T. 818.

It was alleged by the defendant that the testator, by whom she had several illegitimate children, had shown her an envelope containing the bonds and bearing an indorsement to the effect that they were to be delivered to her as the property of her and her children. The envelope was lost, and the testator had always retained possession of the bonds :—Held, that there was some foundation of truth in the story of the plaintiff, though uncorroborated, and that such an indorsement would have created a trust for her and her children, which, though a slight equity, might give the court jurisdiction. Ib.

Papers of a Testamentary Character—Donor not having absolutely parted with his Interest in Property.]—In order to give validity to a declaration of trust of property, it is necessary that the donor or grantor should have absolutely parted with his interest in the property, and have effectually put such interest beyond his own reach. Warriner v. Rogers, 42 L. J., Ch. 581 ; L. R. 16 Eq. 340 ; 28 L. T. 863 ; 21 W. R. 766.

An unmarried lady, possessed of large property, being under obligations to her servant, called him one day into her room and showed him a box which, having opened it and put a note inside, she locked and handed to him, telling him to take it into his possession, that it would be of service to him some day, but that he must not open it till after her death. She herself kept the key. She afterwards made her will, whereby she gave the residue of her real and personal estate to a stranger in blood. After her death the box was opened, and found to contain a paper writing, dated and signed by the testatrix, and addressed to the servant, to the effect that the contents of the box were a deed of gift to him of certain real and personal estate therein specified and described. In the box were also found title deeds relating to an estate, M., not mentioned in the paper writing, and some other papers, but nothing answering the description of a deed of gift. After the testatrix's death there was found by the servant, in an outhouse, to which the testatrix and he alone had access, another paper writing, dated the day after the date of the former paper, and also signed by the testatrix, and addressed to the servant, to the effect that the title deeds of the real property mentioned in the former paper were to be found in a particular repository, to be handed over to him "free, and all expenses to be paid out of the bulk, and writings of M." :—Held, that these papers were of a testamentary character, and did not amount to a valid declaration of trust in favour of the servant. Ib. And see Towers v. Hogan, post, col. 342.

A testatrix, who had lent 300*l.* to S. on his promissory note, payable on demand, directed him, after her death, to pay the interest to her sister for her life, and afterwards to divide the principal among her sister's children, which S. agreed to do. She died without having demanded payment of the note, which was found, uncancelled, among her papers at her death:—Held, that as she had not parted with her legal title to the money, the direction did not create a trust. Caplen, In re, Bulbeck v. Silvester, 45 L. J., Ch. 280.

Expressions in Letter—To Solicitor.]—B., in 1842, transferred to three persons a debenture, without any declaration of trust other than an expression in a letter written by him to his solicitor shortly before the transfer, in which the three persons were named as trustees, and the trusts of a proposed settlement of the debenture were stated to be "for my niece C. M. and her children":—Held, that a valid trust was declared by the letter in favour of C. M. for life, and afterwards of her children as joint tenants. Bellasis' Trusts, In re, L. R. 12 Eq. 218; 24 L. T. 466; 19 W. R. 699.

The transferees of the debenture were already trustees of a will, which contained limitations for the benefit not only of C. M. and her children, but of the issue of deceased children, and from contemporaneous entries in a solicitor's book it appeared that, after the date of the letter, B. said he had made up his mind to transfer to the same three persons, "without stating any trust or condition;" also that B. was advised to take a letter from them that they held the debenture upon the same trusts as the will; but no trace of any such letter appeared. The trustees paid the income to C. M. during her life, and upon her death transferred the fund into court. There were issue of deceased children of C. M.:—Held, that a trust for the issue of the deceased children had not been sufficiently declared. Ib.

—— To Daughter.]—A father, who was the owner of a share in a colliery, on the 11th of February, 1865, wrote to his daughter as follows:—"I have another present to make shortly, one share of Ryhope colliery . . . and you may now consider that you have this yourself from 2nd January to receive dividends upon. I am also giving to Sarah one, the same." On the 17th he attended a meeting of shareholders in the colliery, and signed the following entry in the minute book:—"That Mr. N.'s" (his own) "proposition of transferring two of his shares to the parties undernamed be agreed to, viz." (the daughter and her sister). This signature was not sufficient, according to the regulations of the deed of partnership, to pass the property in the shares. On the 25th February he again wrote to his daughter:—"I have arranged and made all right with the shares for you and Sarah, and dividends will be sent from 2nd January." On the 4th of March the testator wrote to her:—"Next meeting (private) we will be enabled to make another dividend, when you and Sarah will be informed." On the 16th of March he sent her a cheque for the first dividend, with a letter thus:—"Herewith I enclose cheque for 37*l.* 10*s.*, which you can receive at the bank . . . . first dividend, made this day." On the 18th of March he again wrote to her as follows:—"I have yours in reply to the receipt of the dividend—long may you live to enjoy it;" and in the same letter, after referring to the meeting of the 17th of January, he further said:—"Well, when I got in, I openly at once asked the question in the presence of" (four persons whom he named), "I was about to give to my two daughters one share each, and which is the way to do it? They were all pleased. It was entered in the minutes of the book":—Held, that these expressions in letters, signature of minute, and gift of dividend, did not amount to a declaration by the testator, nor to proof of an intention and determination on his part, that he would hold the shares for his daughter, but that the testator, having the desire and intention that she should, from and after the 11th February, 1865, have the shares as her property, failed to fulfil that desire, and complete that intention. Heartley v. Nicholson, 44 L. J., Ch. 277; L. R. 19 Eq. 233; 31 L. T. 822; 23 W. R. 374.

Entry in Memorandum-book.]—A testator entered in a memorandum-book, and signed a memorandum, that he had decided to invest the future proceeds of an annuity which had been absolutely assigned to him by his second son F., and that he intended to leave the proceeds at his death to F.'s daughter. An account, also in the testator's handwriting, was found, of the investments of the annuity, "from the period that I determined thus to appropriate this money." On his deathbed he referred his eldest son to the account-book, and said that he wished the accumulations to be given to the daughter of F., and the annuity at his death to revert to F. The annuity and accumulations were undisposed of by the will:—Held, that there was no declaration of trust, and that the annuity and accumulations went to the next-of-kin. Glover, In re, 2 J. & H. 186.

Entry in Ledger.]—An entry made in a ledger in the following words:—"N.B.—As I gave R. J. Adams only, say, about 2,000*l.* when he commenced business in partnership with E. J. Bristowe (3,000*l.* being his own money, as received for sale of farm, &c.), I am due him, to make him equal to what I gave James Adams, the sum of 3,000*l.*, therefore I credit R. J. Adams interest on this at five per cent. annually, 150*l.*"—does not constitute a valid declaration of trust. Adams v. Lopdell, 25 L. R. Ir. 311.

Delivery of Promissory Note to Third Person on Condition.]—A testatrix made her will in 1873, and thereby bequeathed a legacy of 150*l.* to E. H., who was living with her as a domestic servant. In August, 1887, the testatrix handed to C., her solicitor (whom she had appointed one of her executors), a promissory note for 200*l.*, signed by herself and payable on demand to E. H., telling C. not to mention the note to any one but E. H., but to retain it till the death of the testatrix, and then to give it to E. H., if she should remain in the service of the testatrix until her death. E. H. was informed of the note soon after it had been handed to C. The testatrix had previously told E. H. that, if she should continue in her service until her death, she would leave in the care of C. a present for her, beyond what she might leave to her in her will. E. H. remained in the service of the testatrix until the death of the latter, and the promissory note continued in the possession of C. The testatrix died in 1881. She had never revoked the direction which she had given to C. about the note:—Held, that C. was constituted a trustee of the note, that he might after the death of the testatrix hand it over to E. H. if she had fulfilled the prescribed condition, and that, as the testatrix had never revoked the direction which she had given to C., E. H. was entitled to prove for the amount of the note in the administration of the estate of the testatrix. Richards, In re, Shenstone v. Brock, 56 L. J., Ch. 923; 36 Ch. D. 541; 57 L. T. 249; 36 W. R. 118.

Gift of Furniture and Articles to Wife by Letters—Subsequent Will of Husband.]—A husband, by three letters written and signed by him and handed to his wife, gave her furniture and other articles for her sole and absolute use. He afterwards made his will, bequeathing certain legacies and making other dispositions of his property, and giving the residue of it to trustees in trust for his wife for life, with remainder to six nieces absolutely. The furniture and other articles were at the time of the husband's death in the house which had been occupied by him and his wife, and the whole had been used by them in the ordinary way:—Held, that there was no declaration of trust, but that the furniture, &c., formed part of the husband's estate. Baddeley v. Baddeley, and Fox v. Hawks (post, col. 362) observed upon, and Milroy v. Lord (supra, col. 328) followed. Breton's Estate, In re, Breton v. Woolven, 50 L. J. Ch. 369; 17 Ch. D. 416; 44 L. T. 337; 29 W. R. 777.

Gift by Wife to Husband—Non-acceptance—Release.]—By the marriage settlement of A. and B. it was provided among other things that, out of Bank of Ireland stock belonging to B. (the wife), an amount equal to 10,000*l.* should be transferred into their joint names in trust for B. for her sole and separate use. A. and B. lived together during the marriage from 1874 to 1887 (when A., the husband, died), and the income of the 10,000*l.* was received by A. The capital was realised by A. in his lifetime and applied to his own use. The evidence showed that B. wished to give the 10,000*l.* to A., but he refused it, and always spoke of the sum as B.'s 10,000*l.* In 1888 B. made an affidavit verifying a schedule of his debts, and stated that he had no other debts. The schedule did not include the 10,000*l.* B. had no independent advice. By his will, made on November 3, 1884, A. gave a legacy of 10,000*l.* to B. together with the use during her life of all property of which he should be possessed at his death. Then he gave a series of legacies. B. took out a summons to determine certain points under the will, and claimed to prove as a creditor against the estate for 10,000*l.*, being moneys belonging to her for her separate use:—Held, that A. was trustee of the 10,000*l.* for B.'s separate use, and the mere transfer of the 10,000*l.* could not destroy the separate trust unless clear evidence was produced by A. that it was intended with B.'s assent to be destroyed.—Held, that B.'s affidavit as to A.'s debts only showed that she was not then aware that she could claim as creditor, but was no release.—Held, further, that there was no evidence of acceptance by A. of the gift from B., and that the evidence was not sufficiently cogent to destroy the trust; therefore B. was entitled to rank as creditor against A.'s estate for 10,000*l.* with interest at four per cent. since his death. Blake, In re, Blake v. Power, 60 L. T. 663; 37 W. R. 441.

Bank Debentures.]—A father who had been in pecuniary difficulties, and was indebted to his son, effected a policy on his own life, in the names of the son and another person, as trustees for the daughters of the father, and paid the premiums. The son accepted the trust, and on the father's death, some years afterwards, he, with the sanction of his co-trustee, received the policy moneys and purchased with them debentures of a banking company, of which he was a director, and to which he was indebted. The company was wound up, and the son became bankrupt. The same person was appointed official manager of the company, and assignee under the son's bankruptcy. On the daughters claiming to be creditors of the company to the amount of the debentures:—Held, first, that, notwithstanding the state of the accounts between the father and the son, the trust for the daughters ought to be assumed, for the purpose of the application, to have been well created. Boyd, Ex parte, Royal Bank of Australia, In re, 1 De G. & J. 223; 26 L. J., Ch. 737; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 897; 5 W. R. 634.

Held, secondly, that the trust was not determined by the receipt of the money, and the investment in the debentures. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the right of the daughters to the debentures was not affected by the state of the accounts between the bankrupt and the company. Ib.

Held, fourthly, that, there appearing no probability of this apparent state of things, on the existing evidence, being altered by further investigation, the official manager was not entitled to have an issue or further inquiry directed. Ib.

Incomplete Alienation of Stock.]—A defendant executing a voluntary assignment of a reversionary interest in a sum of stock, without making any transfer of the fund, will not be compelled either to transfer the fund, or to do any act to render the assignment available. Beech v. Keep, 18 Beav. 285; 23 L. J., Ch. 539; 18 Jur. 971; 2 W. R. 316.

Promissory Notes.]—A husband allowed his wife, who had a separate estate, to keep a separate banking account, and to draw cheques in her own name. He was in the habit of borrowing money of her, and, at the end of the year, of giving her a promissory note for the whole balance due to her. The husband died:—Held, that the promissory note might be construed as a valid declaration of trust. Murray v. Glasse, 1 Eq. R. 541; 23 L. J., Ch. 126; 17 Jur. 816.

A., having lent B. 1,000*l.*, without taking any security for it, states to C. and his family that the money had been held by him (A.) in trust for C. Afterwards B. becoming embarrassed in his circumstances, and unlikely to repay the money, A., at the urgent solicitations of C., gives the latter his promissory note for the amount. Subsequently B. dies insolvent, and without having repaid the money. Then A. dies. In a suit for the administration of A.'s assets (there being no evidence to rebut the trust):—Held, that C. may prove the note against A.'s estate as a valuable security. Burkitt v. Ransom, 2 Coll. C. C. 395; 15 L. J., Ch. 174; 10 Jur. 193.

Imperfect Gift—Voluntary Declaration of Trust.]—A parol declaration of trust in favour of a volunteer may be valid, and may be enforced in equity. The dictum in Scales v. Maude (infra), that a declaration of trust in favour of a volunteer is invalid, is not good law. Jones v. Lock, 35 L. J., Ch. 117; L. R. 1 Ch. 25; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 913; 13 L. T. 514; 14 W. R. 149.

—— Cheque.]—The father of a child, nine months old, put into its hands a cheque for 900*l.*, saying, in the presence of his wife and of the nurse, "I give this to baby; it is for himself, and I am going to put it away for him." He then took it back, saying again that he was going to put it away for him. About the same time he told his solicitor that he intended to add 100*l.* to the 900*l.*, and invest it for the benefit of his son. The father died suddenly a few days afterwards, without having made any provision for the child, and the cheque was found in his possession:—Held, that there was no complete gift of the cheque to the infant, and no valid declaration of trust in his favour. Ib.

Letters by Mortgagee Cancelling Mortgage at Death.]—Letters written by a mortgagee to the mortgagor and persons interested under him, containing the expressions, "I now give this gift, to become due at my death, unconnected with my will;" "I hereby request my executors to cancel the mortgage deed, etc.;" "I again direct and promise that my executors shall comply with my former request; that is, to cancel all deeds and papers I may have chargeable on the R. estate":—Held, not to operate either as a declaration of trust or as a valid gift. Scales v. Maude, 6 De G. M. & G. 43; 25 L. J., Ch. 433; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1147; 3 W. R. 527.

Semble, the letters were testamentary, and could have no effect until proved in the ecclesiastical court. Ib.

Expressions in Conversation.]—A mother entitled to a considerable property, under the will of a relation, in a conversation with the executor of that relation expressed an intention to make a settlement of part of that property, which was standing in his name, upon her daughter; and requested the executor to instruct her solicitor to prepare such a settlement. On the prepared settlement being brought to her for execution, she had changed her mind and refused to sign it:—Held, that her intention expressed in the conversation with the executor of her relation, did not amount to a declaration of trust, although the property was personal estate. Bayley v. Boulcott, 4 Russ. 345.

Indorsement on Wrapper of Bonds.]—T. was possessed of certain bonds, found in a box at his house after his death; there was an indorsement on the wrapper enclosing them that five of them were the property of H. D., and this was signed by T. The key of the box was kept by H. D., who had also the general custody of T.'s property, and she by her answer alleged that the bonds were placed in her custody to the intent that she might have the beneficial interest in them. Upon the question whether T. was a trustee of the bonds for H. D., and whether the custody of them was a delivery of them by virtue of the indorsement, and constituted a gift inter vivos:—Held, that he was not a trustee, and that there was no sufficient delivery, and no sufficient gift inter vivos. Trimmer v. Danby, 25 L. J., Ch. 424; 4 W. R. 399.

—— On Receipt.]—A. lent B. 100*l.* in October, 1843, on which occasion B. wrote and signed the following document: "Received of A. for the use of C. 100*l.*, to be paid to her at A.'s death, but the interest, at 4*l.* per cent., to be paid to A." Underneath was written, "I approve the above," which was signed by A. This document was given to C. The money was not paid to A. in her lifetime. In June 1845 A. died:—Held, that B. was a trustee for C. of 100*l.* at the death of A. Moore v. Darton, 4 De G. & Sm. 517; 20 L. J., Ch. 626.

Memoranda in Favour of Charity—Invalid Declaration of Trust—Abortive Instruments.]—A testator about eight years before his death, which occurred in 1889, called on H., a friend of his, and stated that he was about to dispose of his property in case of his death, and that after making provision for his relations, he should give certain bonds to H. and another friend C. to distribute amongst different charitable institutions, and asked H. to assist him in making out a list. The testator and H. and C. subsequently met together, and a memorandum was written by C. at the dictation of the testator, to the effect that the testator had handed over to H. and C. the securities named on the other side of the paper, to be given by them to the various charitable institutions specified. The testator signed this memorandum, and his signature was witnessed by an independent witness, and the securities, which were all payable to bearer, were handed over and placed by C. in a safe. The testator, however, received the interest on the securities, and also withdrew some of the securities, and at the various interviews with C. varied the names of the charitable institutions and the amounts payable to them, and the memorandum was accordingly altered or in part re-written in pencil. Some short time before the testator's death, C., at the testator's instance, wrote another memorandum as a final expression of the testator's wishes concerning the securities which were remaining, but did not ask the testator to sign such memorandum, being of opinion that it was highly probable that after so many changes the testator would withdraw the remaining securities, and the whole thing would end. Neither C. nor H. made any claim to the securities, but the charitable institutions contended that the memoranda operated as a declaration of trust:—Held, that there was no valid declaration of trust; that the memoranda were imperfect testamentary documents of an informal character, and therefore, that the property which the memoranda purported to affect passed to the executors as part of the property belonging to the testator at his death. Smith, In re, Champ v. Marshallsay, 64 L. T. 13.

"Last Will and Letter"—Testamentary Disposition.]—A paper writing in the form of a letter, and commencing "My dear C.—This is my will and letter to you," contained the expression, "I have invested this . . . . to save you the trouble and expense of taking out administration, and I leave my plate and the family plate to Mrs. Towers." The existence of the document was never communicated to the beneficiaries:—Held, that the language and the circumstances connected with it indicated an intention that it should operate as a testamentary disposition, and that it was not a declaration of trust. Towers v. Hogan, 23 L. R. Ir. 53.

Direction to Transfer Fund—Retaining Control.]—Expressions in letters under which a testator was held to have constituted himself a trustee of a fund for the benefit of his children then existing, reserving to himself at the same time the control quâ trustee over the fund, but no further control over it as owner. Vandenberg v. Palmer, 4 K. & J. 204.

A. V., a merchant in China, directed his correspondents in London to transfer 1,000*l.* from his tea account, and employ it in exchange transactions for the benefit of his children. In subsequent letters he wrote to the same correspondents that "he had declined giving any opinion as to the reinvestment of the fund, as he considered he had no further control over it, as it belonged to his children, and that he had appropriated it to them, and his correspondents were to consider it as theirs." The correspondents accordingly opened a separate account, headed, "A. V., Esq., exchange account on account of children," previously informing him of their intention so to do:—Held, that by the first letter a trust was well created in favour of the children, although the fund was still so far in the control of A. V. as to be liable to his drawing, and notwithstanding A. V., in one of the letters, had desired his correspondents to consider it as subject to the order of his executors in the event of his death. Ib.

Correspondence.]—A person, who occupied a large farm under a lease, and who had by the outlay of capital considerably increased its value, having fallen into difficulties, the lease was surrendered by the trustees, to whom he had assigned it and his effects, to his landlord. His wife's brother then applied to the landlord to become tenant for the remainder of the lease upon the same terms—"with the view," as he stated in the application, "to benefit his sister and her unfortunate family;" and with that view, as the landlord stated in the correspondence and also in his evidence, the lease was granted, and he was allowed for the same purpose, contrary to the usual practice of the same landlord, to have a co-lessee, who was the actual occupier, and also to sublet a part, by which means he derived a clear 100*l.* a year above the rent, which was paid by the co-lessee:—Held, in a suit against the executor of the brother, that by means of the letters (which were a sufficient writing within the Statute of Frauds) and the circumstances, there was a trust as to this 100*l.* a year for the wife of the original tenant and her children as joint tenants. Morton v. Tewart, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 67.

A. and B., partners, being indebted to C. and D., the plaintiffs, A. by letter proposed to assign a claim which A. and B. had upon the estate of P., then the subject of a suit in Chancery. Certain properties of P., having been sold under a decree, were purchased by A. in his own name, but, as he alleged in letters to C., in trust for C. and D. A., having shortly afterwards committed an act of bankruptcy, executed deeds declaring that he held his trust for C. and D. His assignee having obtained a judgment in ejectment against part of the premises, a bill was filed praying that he should be restrained from executing an habere; that he should be declared a trustee for the plaintiffs as to all the premises; and that he should be directed to convey to them:—Held, that the trust was clearly established, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to the conveyance sought. Johnson v. Perrin, Hayes, 322.

A letter written by the trustee to the solicitor of a party who had advanced money for the purposes of the trust, stating that he (the trustee) would exercise all or any of the powers reposed in him by the trust-deed, for the purpose of securing the sum so advanced, will not give such creditor a locus standi in equity to enforce those trusts for his own benefit. La Touche v. Lucan (Earl), 7 Cl. & F. 772; 2 Dr. & War. 432—H. L. (Ir.). S. C., nom. Lucan (Earl) v. La Touche, 2 Dr. & War. 271.

—— Husband and Wife—Separate Use.]—E., a partner in the firm of S., E., & Co., previously to April, 1854, advanced to the firm moneys, some of which were standing in the books to the credit of an account intituled "E.'s Trustee Account," and others to his private account. M. & C. had in that month sums belonging to them standing in the books of the firm to their credit. On the 4th April, 1854, E. transferred 2,700*l.* from his trustee account to M. & C.'s account, by entries in the books of the firm, and on the same day S., E., & Co. signed a promissory note for that amount, which bore interest at 5*l.* per cent., and gave it to E., who placed it in an envelope, upon which he wrote, "This note of hand stands to the credit of M. & F. in the books of S., E., & Co., and is to be the property of Mrs. E." E., in the presence of Mrs. E., told M. that he had a security from his firm for his wife's money; that the note of hand securing it was in the joint names of her and her sister C., and that they were to recollect that it was his wife's money, and not theirs. E., in September, 1854, without the knowledge or consent of Mrs. E., or of M. & C., transferred the sum from M. & C.'s account to his own "trustee account," and at the same time wrote across the above memorandum "The within amount of 2,700*l.* is transferred to E.'s trustee account, but it is to be considered the private property of Mrs. E." E., by will, dated in 1853, after bequeathing an annuity to his wife of 1,000*l.*, gave the residue of his estate to his niece. No reference was made to the 2,700*l.* E. died in 1856, and at his decease only the sum of 2,661*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.* was standing to the credit of his "trustee account" in the partnership books. On a bill filed by Mrs. E., the court declared that a valid trust had been created for her sole and separate use, and that she was entitled to the 2,700*l.*, with interest at 5*l.* per cent. from the death of her husband. Evans v. Jennings, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 551; 6 W. R. 616.

Declaration of Wife on Separate Examination.]—The consent of a married woman had been given before commissioners, for the transfer and payment to her husband of stock and cash standing in court to her separate account:—Held, that this did not amount to a declaration of trust, and that it was competent to her, at any time before the transfer had been completed, to retract her consent. Penfold v. Mould, 36 L. J., Ch. 981; L. R. 4 Eq. 562; 17 L. T. 59; 15 W. R. 1196.

Direction to Firm.]—A direction was given by C. to the firm of which he was the head, that an annual reserve of interest upon certain mortgaged estates should be placed to an account entitled "C., for himself, M., and S."—the same to be subject to his control alone, and in the absence of other instructions from him to be considered applicable towards liquidating the account in respect of the mortgaged estates, for which C., M., and S., as proprietors, were responsible. Upon a sale of the mortgaged estates after M.'s death more than sufficient was produced to pay the debt due from the three proprietors. Subsequently to the sale, C. and S. having received each one-third of the reserved interest fund, C. directed the remaining third to be remitted to his agents, "subject to my orders, my intention being to hand it over to the family of the late M. in such manner as I may think proper." C. died without taking any further steps as to this remaining third:—Held, that the fund had not been so permanently impressed with a trust in favour, as to one-third, of M. during his lifetime, that he, or his executors after his death, could have called for a transfer; and that the subsequent declaration by C. of an intention to hand it over to M.'s family did not constitute a complete and binding declaration of trust in their favour, to which the court would give effect. Forbes v. Forbes, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1206; 6 W. R. 92.

Direction to Bankers.]—A sum of 2,000*l.* was, by the direction of H. O., carried by her bankers to an account in the joint names of herself, as trustee for the plaintiffs, and the plaintiffs; the bankers gave a promissory note for the amount payable in fourteen days with interest at 2½ per cent. to H. O., trustee for the persons therein named. After the death of H. O., her executors received from the bankers the sum secured by the promissory note:—Held, that this amounted to a complete declaration of trust, and that the executor was a trustee for the plaintiffs, in whose favour the trust was declared. Wheatley v. Purr, 1 Keen, 551; 6 L. J., Ch. 195; 1 Jur. 133. See Hornby v. Hunter, 1 Russ. 89.

Admissions.]—Where the owner of an estate charged with an annuity in favour of the lunatic, had acknowledged that she had in hand certain arrears of the annuity, which she was ready to pay to any person on his behalf who could give a good receipt for it:—Held, that this was a declaration of trust, which entitled the curator to sue in equity for those arrears. Scott v. Bentley, 1 K. & J. 281; 24 L. J., Ch. 244; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 394; 3 Eq. R. 428; 3 W. R. 280.

A testator bequeathed 2,000*l.* on certain trusts, and he empowered his executor, who was also his residuary legatee, to retain the amount in his hands uninvested, he paying interest thereon. After his death, the executor being satisfied that the testator intended to bequeath 3,000*l.* and not 2,000*l.*, promised to make it up to 3,000*l.*; he made no investment, but continued to pay interest on the 3,000*l.* to his death:—Held, that there was a complete voluntary trust as to the additional 1,000*l.* which the court would enforce. Gee v. Liddell, 35 Beav. 621.

Undertaking by Purchaser of Chattel that Third Person's Interest should be preserved.]—B., by words of present gift, gave to the defendant, and the defendant accepted, one undivided fourth part of a horse. B., who remained in possession of the horse, being about to execute a bill of sale of certain property, including the horse, in favour of the plaintiff, mentioned the interest of the defendant in the horse; the plaintiff thereupon undertook that the defendant's interest should be "all right," and the bill of sale was executed:—Held, that the plaintiff was a trustee for the defendant of one fourth of the horse. Cochrane v. Moore, 59 L. J., Q. B. 377; 25 Q. B. D. 57; 63 L. T. 153; 38 W. R. 588; 54 J. P. 804—C. A.

Bombay Civil Fund—Express Trust.]—The Bombay civil fund was formed to provide retiring pensions for civil servants, and annuities and portions for their widows and children. The fund was constituted by the subscriptions of the members, and by a grant from the government. It was managed by a committee, the members of which resided in Bombay, and by the rules the property of the fund was vested in the committee of managers as trustees. In fact, however, the funds were always in the hands of the government as a floating debt due to the association. A suit having been instituted by the representatives of the widow of a member of the association, against the trustees of the fund and the secretary of state for India, claiming payment of an annuity which they alleged ought to have been paid to her in her lifetime:—Held, that they were not mere trustees for the association, but trustees properly so called, and that the members of the fund were the beneficiaries, so that the defence of the Statute of Limitations could not be set up against a claimant on the fund, merely on account of lapse of time. Edwards v. Warden, 45 L. J., Ch. 713; 1 App. Cas. 281; 35 L. T. 174—H. L. (E.)

Specific Appropriation—Equitable Assignment.]—A writing opening a credit for a particular sum cannot, of itself, constitute an equitable assignment or specific appropriation of that sum so as to create a trust. It is a mere statement that the person writing it will act as a paymaster to the person to whom it is written, up to a certain amount, on his performing the conditions set forth in it. Morgan v. Lariviere, 44 L. J., Ch. 457; L. R. 7 H. L. 423; 32 L. T. 41; 23 W. R. 537.

L. entered into a contract (dated the 30th of November, 1870) with the French minister of war, represented by J., his delegate at London, to supply 20,000,000 of ball cartridges of a certain quality, the whole to be supplied by the 10th of January, 1871. Time was to be considered of the essence of the contract. L. desired some arrangements to be made as to payment. M. & Co., who acted in London as financial agents for the French government, wrote to L. a letter dated the 1st of December, 1870, in these terms: "We are instructed by J. to advise you that a special credit for 40,000*l.* has been opened with us in your favour, and that it will be paid to you rateably as the goods are delivered, upon receipt of certificate of reception issued by the French ambassador or by J." The goods were not delivered according to the contract:—Held, that this letter did not constitute M. & Co. trustees for L. as to the sum named, nor constitute an equitable assignment as of a fund in their hands, and that consequently this was not a matter for the exercise of the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery. Ib.

Agreement by Vendor to Company to pay Interest.]—By an agreement for the sale of a colliery to a trustee for a company in formation, the vendor agreed to pay to the company during two years from the date of its incorporation, such a sum as, together with the net profits of the company, should be equal to interest at five per cent. per annum on the paid-up capital of the company. This agreement was stated and adopted in the articles of association. Dividends were payable twice a year. After the expiration of the second year, but before the deficiency of dividend for the fourth half-year had been paid, the company went into voluntary liquidation, and the vendor afterwards paid to the individual shareholders the amount necessary to make their fourth half-yearly dividend equal to five per cent. :—Held, that the agreement created a trust for the individual shareholders, and that the liquidator could not claim the amount so paid by the vendor as part of the assets of the company. South Llanharran Colliery Co., In re, Jegon, Ex parte, 12 Ch. D. 503; 41 L. T. 567; 28 W. R. 194—C. A.

c. Declaration of Intention with Transfer to Proposed Trustee.

General Rule.]—If property is vested in a trustee under a voluntary instrument, the court will operate on that property, and compel the trustee to execute the trust; but where property is not so vested, the court will not act against the author of the trust. Walrond v. Walrond, John. 18; 28 L. J., Ch. 97; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1099; 7 W. R. 33.

Grant of Booty by Royal Warrant to Secretary of State "in Trust."]—Her Majesty by royal warrant "granted" booty of war to the secretary of state for India in council "in trust" to distribute amongst the persons found entitled to share it by the decree of the judge of the Court of Admiralty, to whom the matter had been referred by the sovereign for that purpose, with a direction that doubts should finally be determined by the secretary of state unless her Majesty should otherwise order. An action having been brought against the secretary of state for India in council by K., on behalf of himself and all the other parties entitled, alleging that a portion only of the fund had been distributed, and claiming an account and the distribution of the residue :—Held, that the warrant did not operate as a transfer of property or create a trust; and that the defendant, being merely the agent of the sovereign to distribute the fund, was not liable to account to any of the parties found entitled. Kinloch v. Secretary of State for India, 51 L. J., Ch. 885; 7 App. Cas. 619; 47 L. T. 133; 30 W. R. 845—H. L. (E.)

Promissory Note.]—A person voluntarily gave his promissory note to trustees for his natural child, and deposited with them the title deeds for the purpose of carrying into effect his intention as to the promissory note :—Held, that a valid trust had been created. Arthur v. Clarkson, 35 Beav. 458; 14 W. R. 754.

On 13 November, 1857, C., being in his last illness, made payable to his brother G., whom he afterwards appointed one of his executors, a promissory note for 500*l.*, and at the same time stated that he was desirous of making some provision, otherwise than by will, for the plaintiff. C. on 16 November made his will, and directed his executors to convert the residue of his estate into money. G., after the death of C., mentioned that he had left 500*l.* for the benefit of the plaintiff, and he made several quarterly payments to her in respect thereof, and took her receipts, and then discontinued the payments, on the ground that he was not in law or equity bound to make them :—Held, that G. was a trustee of the note for the plaintiff, and that in the administration of the estate to C. the plaintiff might have liberty to prove for the amount. Lloyd v. Chune, 2 Giff. 441; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1365; 3 L. T. 366.

A., being about to leave this country, indorsed a promissory note due to B., and directed B. to recover the sum thereby secured and hold the same until A. should write for it; but in case A. should die before the amount was recovered, then to hold the amount in trust for M. It was subsequently arranged between A. and B. that B. should retain, out of the sum secured by the note, a debt due from A. to B. A. died before the note was paid to B. :—Held, that no irrevocable trust was created in favour of M. Maguire v. Dodd, 9 Ir. Ch. R. 452.

Held, also, that A.'s personal representative was entitled to recover at law, but not in equity, from B. the amount recovered by B., on foot of the note, subject to a deduction for the debt due by A. to B. Ib.

Money Given with Verbal Instructions.]—It is immaterial for the purpose of establishing a trust of personal property, whether declared orally or in writing; the only question is as to the evidence of its existence. The fact of a person having acted upon the faith of the verbal instructions given to him is immaterial, the real consideration being what the party creating the trust has himself done in the matter. Peckham v. Taylor, 6 L. T. 487.

A lady refused to make a will, but told D. that she wished to dispose of all her property in her lifetime in a manner, which she stated to him. She gave him some money to carry out her instructions, and executed a power of attorney for the sale by him of stock belonging to her. D. in her lifetime distributed a part of the money given to him; but she died intestate before the stock was sold. After her death other moneys came to the hands of D., and there was also money in the possession of P. belonging to the deceased. Upon a bill filed to obtain a declaration whether a valid trust had been created of the whole, or any, or what part of the intestate's property, or in the alternative for the administration of her estate, in accordance with the above principles :—Held, that there was a valid trust of so much of the property as she gave to D. in her lifetime; but not as to the rest. Ib.

A testatrix gave to A. and B., in trust for the benefit of C., her sister, a sum of 2,000*l.* 3*l.* per cent. consols. She afterwards expressed to B., whom she also appointed her executrix, an intention that C. should have a further sum of 2,000*l.* consols, but she did not alter her will. A. died in her lifetime; after her death B., the surviving trustee and executrix, sold 2,000*l.* consols, and invested the produce in her name in the 3*l.* per cent. reduced, and shortly afterwards she invested a further sum of 2,000*l.* 3*l.* per cent. reduced in her name; she was proved to have declared frequently her intention of carrying out the testatrix's intention :—Held, that the second sum of stock was duly impressed with a trust in favour of C. Gray v. Gray, 2 Sim. (N.S.) 273; 21 L. J., Ch. 745.

The reputed parent of an illegitimate child placed a sum of money in a bank, in the name of the uncle of the child, and stated at the time to a clerk at the bank that he intended the money for the child:—Held, on a claim by the child after the parent's decease, that the trust had been well declared by parol. Petty v. Petty, 22 L. J., Ch. 1065; 17 Jur. 646.

Advancement of Adopted Child.]—M. was adopted by C., her deceased mother's first cousin, and lived with her twelve years. C. then wrote to T., informing him of her intention to invest 1,800*l.* on mortgage in his name, saying, "It is, after six months of my decease, dear M.'s property." The next day she instructed her solicitors, by letter, to prepare the mortgage, inclosing a cheque for the amount, on the counterfoil of which she wrote, "In trust for M." Twelve days after, she had an interview with T., of which she entered this memorandum in her diary, "T. came, and agreed to take charge of 1,800*l.* for dear M.":—Held, that these several documents, in the handwriting of C., combined with the relationship and adoption of M., constituted a complete and final declaration of trust in favour of M., which could not admit of any parol variation by T.'s present recollections of what passed at the interview. Cane's Trusts, In re, 36 L. J., Ch. 744; 17 L. T. 112.

Money to pay Dividends in Hands of Agents for Foreign Government.]—A foreign government issued a public loan under a decree and an agreement providing for a mortgage to the defendants of certain estates on behalf of bondholders. The defendants received instructions to pay coupons for interest falling due on the 1st of June, less five per cent. tax, pursuant to a decree of the government which was to take effect subject to the promulgation of a decree modifying the law of liquidation. The defendants having received from the government a sum of money to meet the half-yearly interest less five per cent., advertised that they would make such payments. Subsequently the defendants received 10,000*l.*, being the amount of the five per cent., from the commissioners of the government who managed the mortgaged estates, but it did not appear that such commissioners were authorised to remit such sum. The defendants, however, issued a further advertisement that the coupons would be paid in full. Finally, they issued an advertisement that in accordance with directions of the government the coupons would be paid less five per cent., notwithstanding that the amount required to pay the same in full had been duly remitted to them by the commissioners. After such last advertisement the decree modifying the law of liquidation was passed. The plaintiff, a bondholder, brought this action claiming payment of his coupon in full by the agents pursuant to the second advertisement:—Held, that the 10,000*l.* was not remitted to the agents by persons who had authority to do so on behalf of the government, and that therefore it was not impressed with a trust in favour of the bondholders. Henderson v. Rothschild, 56 L. J., Ch. 471; 56 L. T. 98; 35 W. R. 485—C. A. Affirming 33 Ch. D. 459.

Account opened in Bank by Partner.]—A partner in a bank opened an account in one of the books of the firm, which was headed as follows: "Dr. Mrs. L. S. (the name of his wife), for the education of Bryan, Lavinia, Herman, and Robert S. (the names of his infant children), Cr.," and he caused an accountable receipt to be signed by his co-partner, on behalf of the firm, purporting to be for 800*l.*, received from his wife for the education of his children, and that sum to be placed to the credit of the account so opened, and his private account with the bank was debited with it:—Held, that the transaction was a complete and irrevocable declaration of trust in favour of the children. Stapleton v. Stapleton, 14 Sim. 186.

Assignment of Policy.]—A person, being at the time indebted, effects a policy of assurance on his own life. By deed he assigns the policy, and all benefit thereof, to a third party, by way of mortgage, and causes the mortgagee to write to him a letter, declaring that, after payment of the mortgage debt and interest, he held the surplus upon trust for M., a third party. The mortgagor then writes a letter to M., explaining this arrangement for her benefit, and inclosing the mortgagee's letter, declaring the trust of the surplus:—Held, that this would be primâ facie a good trust for M.; but, semble, it would be void against creditors of the insured party whose debts were due at the time of the declaration of trust. Form of order. Magawley's Trusts, In re, 5 De G. & Sm. 1; 15 Jur. 1005.

Transfer on Non-Fulfilment of Trust.]—A testator gave 12,000*l.* to trustees, with the whole or such part as they should think fit of that sum to purchase an advowson, and nominate to it such persons as they should think proper. Subject to this trust, the advowson was to be held in trust for A. until he should have a benefice worth a clear 1,000*l.* a year, or died. Until the advowson was purchased the fund was to accumulate, and at the end of twenty-one years, or on the death of A., or on his being presented to a benefice worth a clear 1,000*l.* a year, the fund, or so much of it as had not been employed in the purchase, was to belong to A. absolutely. The fund had been accumulating for about twelve years. No advowson had been purchased but the trustees were not desirous to be relieved of their trust:—Held, that under such circumstances A. was not entitled to have an immediate transfer to him of the fund. Gott v. Nairne, 3 Ch. D. 278; 35 L. T. 209.

Revocation of Trust.]—A. invests, in name of trustees, stock as security to B. against certain payments. Stock remains for a long time uncalled upon. A. cannot have it re-invested in himself, but dividends ordered in future to be paid to A. Linton v. Hyde, 2 Madd. 94.

Deposit with Trustees—To abide Law Suit.]—C. filed a bill against A. and B., alleging that a sum of money was deposited in a bank by C. in the names of A. and B., in pursuance of an agreement in writing, upon trust to pay the same according to the result of an action at law to be brought for its recovery by A. against C. and to be duly and diligently prosecuted; and also alleging that such action, although it had been commenced, had not been duly and diligently prosecuted; and praying for an order that the money deposited in the bank should be paid to him. A. demurred to the bill for want of equity, and submitted that until the result of the action was known, the plaintiff was not a cestui que trust; but the demurrer was overruled. Portugal (King) v. Russell, 3 Giff. 287; 31 L. J., Ch. 34; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1143; 5 L. T. 277; 10 W. R. 36.

—— To pay Creditors.]—Where money is placed in the hands of an agent with a direction or upon trust to pay debts, that is a voluntary act, and as such revocable; and if creditors filed a bill under such circumstances, a demurrer would lie. But if there is an agreement between the party directing the payment and the party directed to pay it is not revocable, but becomes a trust; and a demurrer to a bill filed by a creditor, alleging such agreement and trust, overruled. Lawrence v. Campbell, 7 W. R. 170.

—— For Bondholders—Concession Revoked.]—Where money has been subscribed by bondholders for a particular purpose (such as the construction of a railroad) and part of that money has been placed in the hands of trustees for the bondholders, the duty of such trustees being to pay portions of the money as portions of the intended railroad are constructed, if no such railroad nor any portion of it is constructed, and its construction becomes impracticable, the bondholders are entitled to demand from the trustees repayment of what remains in their hands. National Bolivian Navigation Co. v. Wilson, 5 App. Cas. 176; 43 L. T. 60—H. L. (E.)

Trust for Accumulation—Trust for benefit of Mortgagees.] — By a voluntary settlement certain freehold estates were settled, subject to the mortgages subsisting thereon, to the use of the settlor for life, with remainder to the use of trustees for 500 years, and subject thereto in strict settlement. And the trusts of the term were declared to be that the trustees should during the period of twenty-one years from the death of the settlor receive out of the rents of the estate the annual sum of 1,000*l.* and accumulate it at compound interest, and should at the expiration of that period, or from time to time during that period, as they might think fit, apply the accumulated fund in satisfaction of the mortgages then charged on the estate, and should pay the surplus of the rents to the person entitled to the immediate reversion of the estate. Seven years after the death of the settlor the first tenant in tail in possession barred the entail and acquired the fee simple subject to the mortgages; and he then claimed the right to stop the accumulations and to receive the accumulated fund and the whole future rents of the estate:—Held, that the mortgagees were cestuis que trust under the deed equally with the owner of the estate, and that he could not stop the accumulations or receive the accumulated fund without their consent. The doctrine of Garrard v. Lauderdale (2 Russ. & M. 451) does not apply to provisions for creditors which do not come into operation till after the death of the settlor. Fitzgerald's Settled Estates, In re, 57 L. J., Ch. 594; 37 Ch. D. 18; 57 L. T. 706; 36 W. R. 385—C. A. And see Priestley v. Ellis, 66 L. J., Ch. 240; [1897] 1 Ch. 489; 76 L. T. 187; 45 W. R. 442.

Agreement by one Creditor to Postpone his Debt to that of Another—Deed of Assignment by Debtor—Postponed Creditor a Trustee of his Dividend for the Other.]—In order to induce the plaintiffs, bankers, to allow to W., one of their customers, an overdraft not exceeding 800*l.*, the defendant, who was himself a creditor of W. for 1,000*l.* secured by promissory note, signed an agreement by which he undertook that "the amount due to me shall not be recoverable until the amount due to you on the overdraft shall have been paid." Plaintiffs thereupon allowed W. the said overdraft. W. executed a deed of assignment of all his property to trustees for the benefit of his creditors, and the plaintiffs and the defendant both sent in their claims, which were admitted to the full amount. The trustees having announced a first dividend of 3*s.* 4*d.* in the pound, plaintiffs claimed under the agreement to be paid the amount of dividend otherwise due to the defendant:—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to the money under the agreement, which had the effect of making the defendant a trustee for the plaintiffs of any money received by him out of W.'s estate, and that the plaintiffs had not lost their rights under the agreement by having come in under the deed of assignment. Berwick v. Matthews, 66 L. T. 564; 40 W. R. 527.

d. Orders Addressed by Creditor to his Debtor or Depositee of Fund.

Parol Communication to Debtor.]—Where, on a debt becoming payable, the creditor, by parol communication through a third person, desired the debtor, the defendant, to hold it in trust for the plaintiff, which he consented to do, and paid over a part, an injunction was granted to restrain the payment by the defendant to the administrator of the creditor in a suit for establishing the trust; sed quære, if sufficient to create a trust. M'Fadden v. Jenkins, 1 Hare, 458; 11 L. J., Ch. 281; 6 Jur. 501. Affirmed on appeal, and trust, though voluntary, held binding on creditor's estate. 1 Ph. 153; 12 L. J., Ch. 146; 7 Jur. 27. And see Wheatley v. Purr, supra, col. 344.

—— Retention of Title Deeds by Donor.]—A testator who had bequeathed two legacies of 50*l.* and 200*l.*, afterwards, in order to avoid legacy duty, revoked the legacies, and verbally instructed F., who owed him 300*l.* secured by a deposit of title deeds, to pay similar sums to the legatees, adding that one of the donees was to "hold the writings." F. accepted the trust, but the deeds remained in the custody of the donor:—Held, notwithstanding the retention of the deeds by the donor, that a valid trust was effectually created in favour of the donees. Parker v. Stones, 38 L. J., Ch. 46; 19 L. T. 259.

Direction by Holder of Promissory Note to Pay to Third Party.]—A testator, who had lent 300*l.* to S. on his promissory note, payable on demand, directed him, after her death, to pay the interest to her sister for life, and afterwards to divide the principal among her sister's children, which S. agreed to do. She died without having demanded payment of the note, which was found, uncancelled, among her papers at her death:—Held, that as she had not parted with her legal title to the money, the direction did not create a trust. Caplen, In re, Bulbeck v. Silvester, 45 L. J., Ch. 280.

A creditor directed his debtor to transfer the debt in the debtor's books to the joint account of himself, the creditor, and his wife, stating that he wished her to have it after his death, and he cancelled the debtor's promissory note which he held for the amount of the debt, and took a new one in the joint names of himself and his wife. The wife survived:—Held, that there had been a trust created in her favour, and that she was entitled as survivor to the note. Gosling v. Gosling, 3 Drew. 335.

Cheque with Verbal Directions.]—Where the testatrix, having by will given to the defendant a legacy of 100*l.*, afterwards gave a cheque on her bankers in favour of J. C. for 150*l.*, with verbal directions to apply so much of it as, with the legacy, would purchase a share in a railway company, which she wished to give instead of the legacy, but that she did not wish to alter her will; afterwards the amount of the cheque was credited to J. C., and the account of the testatrix was thereby overdrawn to that amount; in a suit for administration:—Held, that no trust was created by the transaction in favour of the legatee in the sum of 150*l.* Hughes v. Stubbs, 1 Hare, 476; 6 Jur. 831.

Memorandum signed by Creditor and directed to Debtor.]—A creditor by memorandum in writing, without power of revocation, directed her debtor to pay part of his debt by instalments to herself, and to invest part of the residue, by like instalments, for the benefit of certain volunteers, payable to them after her decease. By a second memorandum the creditor directed her debtor to continue the payment of the debt, by similar instalments to herself, and not to accumulate any portion of it for the cestuis que trust. Both memorandums were written by the debtor, and signed by the creditor, without notice to the cestuis que trust, and part of the residue settled by the first memorandum was paid to the creditor by the debtor according to the directions on the second memorandum:—Held, that the first memorandum constituted a complete declaration of trust in favour of the cestuis que trust, and was irrevocable by the settlor. Paterson v. Murphy, 11 Hare, 88; 22 L. J., Ch. 882; 17 Jur. 298.

Letter addressed to Banker.]—Where A., having certain funds standing to his credit at his bankers, by letter directed them to carry some parts of such funds to the account of certain persons as trustees for his wife, and, after her decease, for his son, and other parts thereof to the account of certain persons as trustees for his son; and such sums were accordingly carried over by the bankers to the account of such persons in their books, and the dividends were from time to time carried to the same accounts, but the testator never communicated the facts to the trustees, and there was some evidence that the testator had directed the transfer under an impression that he should be able by that means to evade the legacy duty, and that he had shown an intention to exercise some acts of ownership over the funds: the court held, that the appropriations were void, and that the testator might at any time have revoked them. Gaskell v. Gaskell, 2 Y. & J. 502.

Order on Depositee to Invest.]—A lady drew a cheque for 500*l.* upon her son-in-law (who was not a banker, but who had moneys of hers in his hands), in favour of her daughter Jane, his wife. Afterwards she told him to hold the money in trust for Jane during her life, and afterwards for the children of Jane. The lady died shortly afterwards, and the money was claimed on behalf of the wife and children:—Held, that the objects of the gifts were not sufficiently ascertained, and that the 500*l.* must be treated as assets of the deceased. Hughes v. Stubbs, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 913; 13 L. T. 492.

Where a son had in his possession moneys belonging to his mother, and she, in her last illness, drew an order upon the son in favour of his wife and retained it in her custody, but subsequently handed it to him and directed him to invest the amount for the benefit of his wife and children, and the son, after the mother's death, made the investment in the joint names of himself and his wife:—Held, that a valid trust was constituted by the mother in favour of the son's wife and children. Roberts v. Roberts, 12 Jur. (N.S.) 971; 15 L. T. 260; 15 W. R. 117.

Engagement by Mortgagee to Relinquish Mortgage at Death.]—Letters by a mortgagee to defendants beneficially interested in the equity of redemption, promising that her executors should cancel the mortgage, and containing words of gift:—Held, to be no defence to a suit of foreclosure by the executors of the mortgagee. Scales v. Maude, 6 De G. M. & G. 43; 25 L. J., Ch. 433; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1147; 3 W. R. 527.

A., being legatee of a residue in trust for his daughters, mixed up with it 1,100*l.* of his own, and, upon an account being rendered to his daughters, directed his solicitors in writing to include such 1,000*l.* as part of the trust fund:—Held, that a trust was created as to the 1,000*l.* Thorp v. Owen, 5 Beav. 224; 11 L. J., Ch. 129.

e. Voluntary Covenants or Promises to Transfer or Assign.

Bond to Settle Property.]—Mother gave bond to son conditioned to surrender copyhold to him, for which she was heiress:—Held, that she became trustee for son. Alison's case, 9 Mod. 62.

A bond voluntarily given after marriage, to settle a jointure, decreed in specie, because under hand and seal, though voluntary. Beard v. Nutthall, 1 Vern. 427.

A voluntary bond by the husband after marriage, to settle a jointure, which he settled accordingly; he died, and the jointress was evicted; the wife, as administratrix, retained as much as her dower fell short of the value of the jointure. Ib.

A wife in extremis, and having just been delivered of a child, appointed by will real property to her husband in fee. After her death the husband gave a bond to trustees conditioned for securing 3,000*l.* to the infant; which bond recited that he had, upon the execution of the will, given his wife an assurance that he would make provision for the child:—Held, that the 3,000*l.* was a lien on the estate. Atkins, Ex parte, London & Southampton Ry. Act, In re, 2 Y. & C. 536; 1 Jur. 332.

Covenant by Husband to Settle on Wife.]—By a post-nuptial settlement executed in 1814, after reciting that S., the husband, had before marriage agreed to settle 1,000*l.*, and had paid that sum to G., G. covenanted that he would stand possessed of the money upon trust, with the approbation of S., to invest it in the names of S. and G., and trusts were declared of the fund for the benefit of the husband and wife successively for life, with remainder to the children of the marriage. By the same deed S. covenanted with G. to pay to him a further sum of 1,000*l.* to be held upon the same trusts as the first-mentioned 1,000*l.* Neither of the two sums was, in fact, ever paid. S. survived his wife, and died in 1868. In a suit instituted for the administration of the estate of S. the children of the marriage claimed to rank as creditors for both sums:—Held, that, as to the first-mentioned sum, S. had constituted himself a trustee of the settlement, and that his estate was liable for the amount; but that the claim to the other sum rested upon a mere legal obligation which was barred by the statute of limitations. Stone v. Stone, 39 L. J., Ch. 196; L. R. 5 Ch. 74; 22 L. T. 182; 18 W. R 225.

Voluntary Contract in Favour of Mother and Children.]—A voluntary contract in favour of a mother and her children:—Held, to be executory only as related to the children, and executed as to the mother, and therefore enforced for the benefit of the mother absolutely. Burrows v. Greenwood, 4 Y. & C. 251.

By the contract for sale it was agreed that 600*l.*, part of the purchase-money, should be paid after the vendor's death to such uses as she should direct for the benefit of J. B. and her children. By the conveyance that sum was made payable to the executors, &c., of the vendor, or as she should appoint by her will; she appointed it to J. B. absolutely:—Held, that the settlement, being executory only as to the children, could not be enforced, and that J. B. took absolutely. Ib.

Covenant to Pay Annuity for Benefit of Widow of Deceased Partner.]—Articles of partnership between two solicitors provided that the partnership should be for the term of ten years from the 1st of May, 1875, if both the partners should so long live. The partnership was also made determinable by notice. There was a further provision that from the determination of the partnership the retiring partner, his executors or administrators, or the executors or administrators of the deceased partner, should be entitled to receive out of the net profits of the partnership business, during so much (if any) of the term of five years from the 1st of May, 1880, as should remain after the determination of the partnership, the yearly sum of 350*l.*, and during so much (if any) of the term of five years from the 1st of May, 1885, as either the retiring partner, or a widow of the retiring or deceased partner, should be living, the yearly sum of 250*l.*, any sum which might under this provision for the time being become payable to the executors or administrators of a deceased partner to be applied in such manner as such partner should by deed or will direct for the benefit of his widow and children, and in default of such direction to be paid to such widow, if living, for her own benefit. It was further provided that the annuity should, so far as legally might be, be constituted a charge on the net profits of the business. One of the partners died in 1883, leaving a widow, but without having given any direction as to the application of the annuity. By his will he appointed his widow his universal legatee and sole executrix. He died insolvent, and an action was brought by a creditor to administer his estate:—Held, that the annuity did not form part of the testator's estate, but that by the articles a trust of it was created in favour of the widow, and that she was entitled to it free from the claims of the testator's creditors. Flavell, In re, Murray v. Flavell, 53 L. J., Ch. 185; 25 Ch. D. 89; 49 L. T. 690; 32 W. R. 102—C. A.

Covenant to Transfer Money to Natural Daughters.]—A father, who had four natural daughters and a legitimate son, entered into an agreement with his son, evidenced by certain deeds, whereby the father covenanted to transfer the sum of 20,000*l.* to a trustee, for the benefit of his four natural daughters, and the son covenanted to pay the debts of the father. The son paid some of the father's debts, and died before the covenant on the part of the father was performed, having by his will given the whole of his property to his father, who became the son's personal representative. A demurrer to a bill filed by one of the natural daughters, and praying to have the agreement executed against the estates of the father and son, was allowed. Colyear v. Mulgrave (Countess), 2 Keen, 87; 5 L. J., Ch. 335.

Covenant to Surrender Copyholds.]—By a voluntary settlement the settlor assigned a mortgage, and purported to convey copyholds; he also covenanted for quiet enjoyment and for further assurance. He died without having surrendered the copyholds:—Held, that the court would not render its assistance to compel the voluntary settlement to be perfected. Dening v. Ware, 22 Beav. 184.

It has long been settled that the trustees and cestuis que trust under a voluntary settlement cannot compel the settlor to perform any further act than he has already done, to render such a settlement operative. Ib.

A father having, by a voluntary settlement, conveyed certain freehold, and covenanted to surrender certain copyhold estates to trustees, in trust for the benefit of his daughters, afterwards devised part of the same estates to his widow, who, after his death, was admitted to some of the copyholds. A suit having been instituted by the daughters to have the trusts of the settlement carried into effect and to compel the widow to surrender the copyholds to which she had been admitted, a decree was made for carrying into effect the trusts, as far as they related to the freeholds, the plaintiff's title to them being complete: but as to the copyholds, the bill was dismissed with costs. Jefferys v. Jefferys, Cr. & Ph. 138.

Agreement to Execute Settlement on Future Event.]—Where a father, being the heir of a lunatic, who might be induced to make a disposition of his estate injurious to him, was in embarrassed circumstances, and incapable of bearing the expenses of suing out a commission, agreed, in consideration of his son's prosecuting it, that in the event of the lunacy being established, and the estate descending unto him, he would execute a settlement in favour of his son and issue, regard being had to the ages and relative situation of the parties, and to the benefits secured by the issuing of the commission, there was some, and not very inadequate consideration. Persse v. Persse, 7 Cl. & F. 279; West, 110; 4 Jur. 358—H. L. (Ir.)

Agreement parol by a feme whilst sole, that if she died without issue, she would leave her heir-at-law the land or 500*l*. Agreement decreed to be executed. Goilmere v. Battison, 1 Vern. 48. And see Maynard v. Mosely, 1 Ch. Rep. 233, where such an agreement, after an estate tail, was decreed.

False Recital of Payment of Money to Trustee—Promise to Trustee to Pay.]—A trustee executed a settlement declaring trusts of 2,000*l*. belonging to the settlor (a married woman), which sum was thereby untruly recited to be in his hands, upon the faith of a promise by her to pay to him the sum out of her separate estate. The sum was never paid:—Held, that neither the trustee of the settlement, nor a volunteer under it, could enforce the promise. Marler v. Tommas, 43 L. J., Ch. 73; L. R. 17 Eq. 8.

Promise by Executor to Pay Legacy of Increased Amount.]—A testator bequeathed 2,000*l*. on certain trusts, and he empowered his executor, who was also his residuary legatee, to retain the amount in his hands uninvested, he paying interest thereon. After his death, the executor being satisfied that the testator intended to bequeath 3,000*l*. and not 2,000*l*., promised to make it up to 3,000*l*.; he made no investment, but continued to pay interest on the 3,000*l*. to his death:—Held, that there was a complete voluntary trust as to the additional 1,000*l*. which the court would enforce. Gee v. Liddell, 35 Beav. 621.

Covenant to Settle future Property if of a certain Value.]—A covenant by a settlor to transfer, convey, and assure property (if any) which he might thereafter acquire, if of a certain value, does not amount either to an imperfect declaration of trust, or to an incomplete assignment of the property (if any) which afterwards came to be acquired, upon which a court of equity will operate. Wilkinson v. Wilkinson, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 47.

A., by a post-nuptial settlement, in consideration of natural love and affection, and for divers other good causes and considerations, covenanted to transfer, and convey, and assure all property to which he might thereafter become entitled "at any time or times, by gift, descent, succession, or otherwise, from or through his mother," if of a certain amount in value at any one time, to trustees upon the trusts of the settlement. At the date of the settlement he was entitled to interests in remainder, subject to his mother's life interest. Afterwards he became entitled in reversion to another fund, subject to a life interest given to his mother; and, lastly, his mother died, leaving him property by will:—Held, that none of all these funds were in equity affected by the trusts of the settlement by virtue of the covenant. Ib.

It is immaterial by what form of conveyancing, whether by assignment, declaration, &c., the equity of a fund be conveyed. Any of such modes, if everything be done that can be done, and if the intention be clear, will convey the equitable interest in the fund. But a covenant to convey the fund in a certain contingency will not, whatever contingency arises, be held to amount to a conveyance of the equitable right. Ib.

Agreement to Execute a future Settlement.]—A. B. and C. D. were married at Malta. Shortly after their marriage a paper was sent out from England by the advisers of C. D., the wife, headed as "proposals for a settlement upon the intended marriage of A. B. and C. D.," and containing certain terms upon which C. D.'s fortune was to be settled; amongst others, that if no child of the marriage, the property to be disposed of by C. D. by will: if no disposition by her will, to go to her next-of-kin. This paper was signed by A. B. and C. D., but nothing further done by way of settlement. Soon after the marriage C. D. died intestate, without having had a child:—Held, that A. B., who had taken out administration to C. D., and possessed himself of her property, in which was included a reversionary interest, was entitled to it for his own benefit, no declaration of trust in favour of the next-of-kin having been created by this agreement to execute a future instrument. Pownall v. Anderson, 4 W. R. 407.

Promise to give and devise among Brothers and Sisters.]—A., having nine children, by his will gave all his property to one of them, who, at the funeral, said he would divide the property equally between his brothers and sisters and himself, and that the whole should be sold, that it might not be said he had taken any more than the others. He subsequently acted in respect of a portion of the property according to the intention thus expressed; and with the assent of the other children, and at a valuation approved by them, he became the purchaser of a house and premises, part of the estate:—Held, with regard to the property which remained undivided, that the expressions of the devisee were no more than a promise to give and devise it amongst the brothers and sisters, and that as to such promise it was nudum pactum, and did not amount to a declaration of trust in their favour. Dipple v. Corles, 11 Hare, 183.

Voluntary Conveyance—Subsequent Acts—Valuable Consideration.]—A. devised his real estate to trustees to the use of his wife for life, with remainder to his son for life, with remainders over. A. afterwards gave the H. estate to his son, and signed a memorandum as follows: "H., together with my other freehold estates, are left in my will to my wife; but it is her wish, and I hereby join in presenting the same to our son for the purpose of furnishing him with a dwelling-house." The son took possession of the H. estate, and with the approbation of his father expended money on the erection of a dwelling-house thereon. Upon his death:—Held, that the son was entitled to have a conveyance to himself of the fee simple of the H. estate. Dillwyn v. Llewellyn, 4 De G. F. & J. 517; 31 L. J., Ch. 658; 10 W. R. 742.

Verbal Promise to Leave Property by Will.]—An intestate induced a woman to serve him as his housekeeper without wages for many years, and to give up other prospects of establishment in life by a verbal promise to make a will leaving her a life estate in land, and afterwards signed a will, not duly attested, by which he left her the life estate:—Held, that there was no contract, and that even if there had been, and although the woman had wholly performed her part by serving till the intestate's death without wages, yet her service was not unequivocally and in its own nature referable to any contract, and was not such a part performance as to take the case out of the operation of the Statute of Frauds, s. 4; and that she could not maintain an action against the heir for a declaration that she was entitled to a life estate in the land. Loffus v. Maw (infra) disapproved. Maddison v. Alderson, 52 L. J., Q. B. 737; 8 App. Cas., 467; 49 L. T. 303; 31 W. R. 820—H. L. (E.)

Where a testator in advanced years and ill-health induced his niece to reside with him as his housekeeper on the verbal representation that he would leave her property by his will, which he accordingly caused to be prepared and executed, but subsequently by a codicil revoked, the court directed the trusts of the will to be performed. Loffus v. Maw, 3 Giff. 592; 32 L. J., Ch. 49; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 607; 6 L. T. 346; 10 W. R. 513.

A gift made by a revocable instrument in pursuance of a verbal representation, whereby the donee is influenced, and on the faith of which he confers a benefit on the donor, becomes irrevocable. Ib.

f. Assignment or Settlement by Legal Owner by Deed.

Voluntary Deed.]—Voluntary deeds good against representatives, if they amount to a complete conveyance or transfer. Att.-Gen. v. Whorwood, 1 Ves. Sen. 535.

The court, in order to give effect to voluntary settlements, requires, where the settlor is the legal owner, everything to have been done which is requisite to transfer the legal ownership; and where he is the equitable owner, clear and distinct evidence of a declaration of trust in favour of the donee. Bentley v. Mackay, 15 Beav. 12.

Voluntary Conveyance and Deposit of Shares to Replace Trust Funds—Revocable Mandate.]—A debtor, two days before his bankruptcy, with a view to shield and exonerate himself from liability in respect of certain breaches of trust, executed a conveyance of certain real estate of which he was sole owner in fee to a trustee upon trust to raise 4,200*l.* and apply the same in making good the breaches of trust of which he was guilty in respect of trust estates mentioned in the schedule to the deed. The conveyance, which contained a power to the trustee to appoint new trustees, and charged the premises with the 4,200*l.* directed to be raised, was made without any pressure being put upon the debtor either by his co-trustees or by the cestuis que trust, and without communication with either of them:—Held, that the conveyance was not a revocable appointment, but created the relation of trustee and cestui que trust between the trustee and the beneficiaries under the scheduled trust estates. New's Trustee v. Hunting, 66 L. J., Q. B. 554; [1897] 2 Q. B. 19; 76 L. T. 742; 45 W. R. 577; 4 Manson, 103—C. A.

Defective Limitation to Trustees.]—Where, in a voluntary deed containing a clear declaration of trust of real estate, and professing to operate by appointment to trustees in exercise of a power, the limitation and conveyance were to the trustees, their executors, administrators, and assigns, omitting the word "heirs":—Held, that the real estate was impressed with the trust, and the court declared the heir-at-law of the settlor a trustee for the cestui que trust. Dilrow v. Bone, 3 Giff. 533; 31 L. J., Ch. 417; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 276; 6 L. T. 71; 10 W. R. 437.

Scotch Disposition—Rents Accruing before Vesting.]—G., by trust deed, disponed his lands at his death to trustees, to convey to his first and other sons in succession, and the heirs male of their bodies respectively, and in default of such issue to the first son of either of his daughters, who should first attain the age of twenty-one years, and his heirs; but in case his daughters should both die, and have no such son of either of them, to convey to G. and R., his nephews. The residue of his real estate he gave to the same trustees to sell, for the use of his daughters; and he assigned and disponed to the same trustees, for the use of his heirs and substitutes, &c., in the order in the deed mentioned, the charters, &c., and rents, "for now and all time coming":—Held, that the rents accruing between the death of the disponer, and the event on which the lands were to vest in a son of the daughter, belonged not to the daughters as heirs portioners, nor as disponed to them under the residuary clause of the deed, but were to be held in trust for the parties who should become entitled under the dispositions of the deed. Graham v. Templer, 3 Bligh (N.S.) 381—H. L. (Sc.)

Promissory Notes not Endorsed.]—Where an instrument is in form a complete and an immediate assignment, and of such a nature as to give the assignee a right as between him and the assignor to take or receive the property comprised in it presently, it will, although voluntary, be supported in equity, and considered as a perfect declaration of trust of such of the property as was not assignable at law. Richardson v. Richardson, 36 L. J., Ch. 653; L. R. 3 Eq. 686; 15 W. R. 690.

E., by a voluntary deed, in 1858, assigned certain specific property, and "all other the personal estate, whatsoever and wheresoever, of her, E., to R. absolutely"; and appointed him, his executors, administrators, and assigns her attorney and attorneys in her name, but for the sole benefit of R., to sue for and recover the assigned premises, and to do and execute all such acts and deeds as should be necessary for deriving the full benefit of the assignment. At the date of the assignment, E. was possessed of certain promissory notes, given to her to secure the repayment of advances made by her. These were not specifically mentioned in the deed. Upon R.'s death, in 1864, these notes were found in his possession, but not indorsed to him. There was no evidence as to any delivery of the notes by E. to R.:—Held, that the property in the notes passed by the deed to R., on the principle that the deed of assignment operated as a complete declaration of trust by E. of all her property in favour of R. Ib.

Assignment with Power of Attorney to Trustees to receive Mortgage and other Debts.]—A voluntary deed, purporting to assign mortgage moneys, notes of hand, and household effects upon certain trusts, with a power of attorney to trustees:—Held, to be valid. Parnell v. Hingston, 3 Sm. & G. 337; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 854; 4 W. R. 794.

Aliter, in cases where there is no actual assignment by deed, and no sufficient declaration of trust. Ib.

—— To Transfer Bank Shares.]—M. executed a voluntary deed purporting to assign fifty of his shares in a bank to L., to be held by him upon certain trusts for the benefit of the plaintiffs. The shares were transferable only by an entry in the books of the bank; but no such transfer was ever made. L. held at the time a general power of attorney authorising him to transfer M.'s shares, and M., after the execution of the settlement, gave him a further power of attorney, authorising him to receive the dividends on his shares in the bank. M. lived three years after the execution of the deed, during which period the dividends on the shares were received by L., and remitted by him to the plaintiffs, sometimes directly, and sometimes through M.:—Held, that it was not the intention of the settlor to constitute himself a trustee of the shares, but to vest the trust in L.; there was no valid trust of the shares created in the settlor. Milroy v. Lord, 4 De G. F. & J. 264; 31 L. J., Ch. 798; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 806; 7 L. T. 178.

Held, also, that no valid trust of the shares was created in L.; for although he held a power of attorney under which he might have vested the shares in himself, he did not do so, and was not bound to do so without directions from the settlor, since he held the power only as agent for the settlor, and that, therefore, the disposition of the shares failed, as being an imperfect voluntary gift. Ib.

Agreement by Deed to set apart Profits to answer Annuity.]—A testator by his will gave his property in a certain newspaper in trust, out of the residue of the profits thereof to pay an annuity to his daughter for life. By a deed, to which the daughter was not a party, made upon the introduction of a new partner, it was agreed that a certain proportion of the profits should be annually set apart with a view to forming a capital fund of 1,000*l.* for the purpose of answering the said annuity, whereby the partnership property would be cleared of the same; and certain sums were so set apart accordingly:—Held, that the relationship of trustee and cestui que trust was created by the deed, and that the daughter was entitled to the 1,000*l.* Burton v. Jackson, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 224; 4 W. R. 271.

Declaration of Trust of Lease by Bankrupt.]—A lease was granted to W., who afterwards committed an act of bankruptcy, and then executed a deed, stating that his name had been used in the lease in trust for R., and declaring a trust accordingly; a bill was filed on behalf of the creditors of W. under the commission, claiming the lease as part of his estate; and the court directed an issue to try whether W.'s name was used in the lease as a trustee for R.:—Held, that the issue was properly directed. The jury having found a verdict in the affirmative:—Held, that the declaration of trust was valid, though executed after bankruptcy, and that the lease did not pass to W.'s assignees. Gardner v. Rowe, 5 Russ. 258; 7 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 2; see 29 R. R. 17. Affirming 2 Sim. & S. 346; 3 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 220.

Assignment on Apprehension of Conviction.]—A. being in prison on a charge of felony, in order o avoid a forfeiture of his property in the event of a conviction executed a voluntary deed, assigning his personal estate to B., his brother, absolutely. He was tried, found not guilty, on the ground of insanity, and ordered to be imprisoned as a lunatic during her majesty's pleasure:—Held, that the deed, being without consideration, and executed by an insane person, under a misapprehension, was inoperative, and that B.'s representatives took nothing under it. Manning v. Gill, 41 L. J., Ch. 736; L. R. 13 Eq. 485; 26 L. T. 14; 20 W. R. 357; 12 Cox C. C. 274.

Assignment of Policy by Husband to Wife.]—In an action by the assignee of a policy of life insurance to recover the amount insured, the statement of defence alleged that the plaintiff was, at the date of the assignment, the wife of the assignor, and it set out the assignment in terms, viz. a deed poll, whereby the assignor (the deceased upon whose life the policy had been effected) in consideration of love and affection, and in order to make a provision for his wife (the plaintiff) after his death, assigned the policy to the plaintiff, her executors, administrators and assigns. The personal representative of the deceased assignor was not made a party to the action:—Held, upon demurrer to the statement of defence, that the deed poll being inoperative as an assignment between husband and wife, and no trust in favour of the plaintiff having been created either by interposition of a trustee or by declaration of trust, the plaintiff was not entitled to maintain the action. Meek v. Kettlewell (1 Hare, 464), Milroy v. Lord (supra), and Richards v. Delbridge (L. R. 10 Eq. 11), followed and applied. Baddeley v. Baddeley (infra) distinguished. Hayes v. Alliance British and Foreign Life and Fire Assurance Company, 8 Ir. L. R. 149.

Grant of Freeholds to Wife.]—A., being seised in fee of a house, executed a deed poll, whereby he voluntarily granted it to his wife as her sole and absolute property for ever:—Held, that this was an imperfect voluntary gift, and that the relation of trustee and cestui que trust had not thereby been created, and that a court of equity would not interfere to assist either party. Price v. Price, 14 Beav. 598; 21 L. J., Ch. 53. Affirmed, 1 De G. M. & G. 308.

Assignment of Leaseholds by Husband to Wife "as her separate Estate."]—A husband, being about to leave England for a residence in India, executed an assignment by deed to his wife, who was to remain in England, of a leasehold dwelling-house, "to hold the same unto" the wife, "her executors, administrators and assigns, as her separate estate." No trustees were appointed; the husband and wife being the only parties to the deed. The title deeds were allowed to remain in the possession of the wife:—Held, that the deed of assignment operated as a valid declaration of trust in favour of the wife. Fox v. Hawks, 49 L. J., Ch. 579; 13 Ch. D. 822; 42 L. T. 622; 28 W. R. 656.

The wife, having parted with possession of the deeds (all but the assignment) to an agent, in order to raise a sum of 200*l.* upon them for the wife, and having asked for a return of the deeds without success, the agent, by forging the name of the husband to a mortgage deed and other instruments, raised a sum of 1,200*l.* which he appropriated to his own use:—Held, that there was no negligence on the part of the wife so as to bar her title to relief against the mortgagees. Ib.

B. by a deed poll, after reciting his intention to settle certain freehold and leasehold ground rents upon his wife, continued as follows:—"I do hereby settle, assign, transfer, and set over unto her, my said wife, as though she were a single woman," the said property:—Held, that though the deed purporting to be an assignment from husband to wife was invalid as an assignment, yet it contained a sufficient declaration of trust in favour of the wife; and she was declared entitled to the property absolutely. Baddeley v. Baddeley, 48 L. J., Ch. 36; 9 Ch. D. 113; 38 L. T. 906; 26 W. R. 850.

And see Breton's Estate, In re, Breton v. Woollren, 50 L. J., Ch. 369; 17 Ch. D. 416; 44 L. T. 337; 29 W. R. 777, ante, col. 339.

Appointment by Deeds of Receiver and Trustee.]—Sir G. B. granted to six persons annuities, payable out of his life interest in an estate. He then executed a deed, called a receivership deed, to which the six annuitants and B. and R. were parties, by which he appointed B. and R. receivers of the rents; and it was declared that they should hold the rents in trust to pay the annuities, and then to pay the surplus to Sir G. B. or his assigns. The receivers accepted the trust. By another deed Sir G. B. conveyed his life estate to a trustee on trusts for securing the six annuities, and subject thereto in trust for himself. He afterwards granted annuities to three other persons, and by a deed called a deed of direction, to which the three annuitants were parties, he directed the receivers and the trustee to pay the three annuitants out of the rents. Notice of this deed was immediately served on the receivers and the trustee:—Held, that the deed of direction made the receivers and the trustee express trustees for the three annuitants, subject to the rights of the six annuitants. Knight v. Bowyer, 2 De G. & J. 421; 27 L. J., Ch. 520; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 569; 6 W. R. 565.

Deed of Family Arrangement.]—A person died intestate in America, leaving real and personal estate in New York. At a meeting of the next of kin in Ireland, one of them, A., who was a naturalised American citizen, asserted that, as such, he was by the law of New York entitled to the whole of the produce of the real estate. This was disputed by the others; and an agreement was entered into by A., that if they would contribute to the expense of sending B. and C. to America to recover the property, he would relinquish his exclusive claim and allow it to be dividend equally. The others did contribute, and B. and C. went to America, where a suit was pending in relation to the property. B., who was himself one of the next of kin, wrote to A., saying that if he entertained his notion as to his exclusive claim, he, B., would have the case tried; but asking him if he still adhered to the original arrangement, to have a proper deed sent out to B. and C. Thereupon A. executed a deed reciting the pendency of the American suit, and his being a naturalised American, and declaring that, should the American court declare him entitled in consequence to all or a larger portion of the property, he would not insist on his full claim, but consented to accept an equal division with the other next of kin, and he thereby gave authority to B. and C. to give full effect to his declaration. B. and C., on receipt of this instrument, suffered the American court to make a decree in favour of A. A. subsequently revoked the instrument:—Held, that the instrument, irrespective of any question of consideration, operated as a completely constituted and valid declaration of trust in favour of all the next of kin, irrevocable by A. Miller v. Harrison, Ir. R. 5 Eq. 324.

Held, also, that if it was merely to be looked upon as a promise or unfulfilled intention, it was clothed with valuable consideration, and was binding. Ib.

Assignment of Stock and Cash.]—P., in April, 1837, bequeathed the residue of his estate to trustees, to sell and convert the same, and to stand possessed thereof in trust for his daughters C., J., and E., in equal shares, as tenants in common, for their sole and separate use. On the 31st July following P. executed an indenture, whereby he assigned to trustees all his estates, except such part as had been devised, stock standing in his name, and cash in the hands of bankers, upon trust, after his decease, to settle the same for the benefit of his daughters, C., J., and E., during their lives, in equal shares, for their separate use, and without power of anticipation; and after the decease of each, for the benefit of her children, but subject to trusts in the nature of cross remainders between C., J., and E., and their respective child or children, in case they or either of them should die without leaving any child who should attain a vested interest. P. died on the 12th August, 1837, at which time the consols were standing in his name, and the balance in the hands of the bankers amounted to more than the sum mentioned by him. On petition presented by E., praying that it might be declared that the consols and cash were not validly settled by the deed of 1837:—Held, that the trusts of the voluntary settlement were binding upon the sums in question. Airey v. Hall, 3 Sm. & G. 315; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 658; 4 W. R. 587.

Conveyance of Freeholds and Covenant to Surrender Copyholds.]—A father having, by a voluntary settlement, conveyed certain freehold, and covenanted to surrender certain copyhold, estates to trustees, in trust for the benefit of his daughters, afterwards devised part of the same estates to his widow, who, after his death, was admitted to some of the copyholds. A suit having been instituted by the daughters to have the trusts of the settlement carried into effect, and to compel the widow to surrender the copyholds to which she had been admitted, a decree was made for carrying into effect the trusts, as far as they related to the freeholds, the plaintiff's title to them being complete; but as to the copyholds, the bill was dismissed with costs. Jefferys v. Jefferys, Cr. & Ph. 138.

Settlement of Personalty.]—H. by a voluntary settlement of personalty, assigned to trustees certain particulars of property, described in the schedule to the deed, upon the trusts therein mentioned. He then covenanted to perfect all assignments and transfers, and do all necessary acts where they had not been done; and afterwards it was declared, that until such full and complete transfer and vesting could be effected, he should stand possessed thereof upon the trusts, &c., thereinbefore declared. The particulars of the schedule comprised: first, stock standing in the testator's own name, and which had not been transferred; secondly, a sum of 29,400*l.* standing in the name of other trustees, under an old settlement, to the beneficial interest in which the testator was solely entitled; thirdly, certain securities, principally foreign, which passed by delivery from hand to hand, without any written transfer; fourthly, railway shares and debentures, &c., requiring a particular transfer by deed; and, fifthly, mortgage securities, and the moneys secured thereon, and a beneficial lease of a mansion. The bonds, shares, title deeds, &c., representing the particulars under the third, fourth, and fifth of these heads had been, shortly before the execution of the settlement, delivered to one of the persons named trustees of the settlement. The settlor died before anything more was done:—Held, that all the particulars passed by the deed, and therefore none of them formed any part of his personal estate at the time of his decease. Donaldson v. Donaldson, Kay, 711; 23 L. J., Ch. 788; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 10; 2 W. R. 691.

A. B. voluntarily assigned to trustees bonds and promissory notes amounting to 600*l.*, in trust for himself and his wife and children, and he handed over the securities. The trustee gave no notice to the debtors. A. B. received 200*l.*, part of the 600*l.* (the securities for which had been returned to him), and the remainder was lost by the insolvency of the debtors. A. B. invested the 200*l.* with other moneys of his own on freeholds, and by writing acknowledged the 200*l.* to be trust property. He afterwards deposited the title deeds with the trustees as a security for the whole 600*l.*:—Held, that the equitable mortgage was valid to the extent of 200*l.*, but no further. James v. Bydder, 4 Beav. 600; 6 Jur. 1076.

Settlement of Interest in Mortgage.]—A. was entitled to 5,000*l.* charged on a freehold. It was secured by the legal estate vested in her, but no one was personally liable to pay it. A. executed a voluntary settlement, by which she assigned the money to trustees, and gave them a power of attorney to recover it; but she retained the legal estate:—Held, that as the money could only be recovered upon a reconveyance of the legal estate to the owner which the trustees were unable to procure, the voluntary settlement was incomplete, and could not be enforced against the settlor, or her estate. Woodford v. Charnley, 28 Beav. 96.

Family Settlement—Trust for Payment of Debts.]—A. and B., father and son, executed deeds for the settlement of some of their family estates, and for payment of the debts of A. Estates were conveyed to trustees, with a power to sell, on the consent in writing of A. and B., or the survivor, and to apply the produce in payment of debts therein specified. A. was indebted to D., as trustee for an infirmary, and A. and B. had given joint and separate warrants of attorney to secure the debt. Separate judgments had been entered up against A. and B. The amount of the sums thus due was stated in the deed. D. had some legal interest in the estates themselves; he was a party to the deed, and executed it:—Held, that the deed created a trust in favour of the infirmary of which D. was a trustee. Montefiore v. Browne, 7 H. L. Cas. 241.

—— Non-communication to Creditors—Death of Settlor—Charge on Estate—Revocation.]—By a deed of settlement of an estate, made as part of a family arrangement, a father and son appointed the estate, after a life interest therein to the father, to the use of trustees, upon trust, with the consent of the settlors, and after their deaths at the discretion of the trustees, to sell the same or any part, and apply the proceeds, and the rents and profits until sale, in payment of all the debts of the father; and upon further trust to convey the unsold part to the uses of a settlement of even date, under which the father was tenant for life with remainder to the son for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail. The creditors were not parties to the deed, nor was it communicated to them. After the father's death part of the estate was sold and the proceeds applied in payment of all the debts of the father except one due to his sister: and the unsold portion was subsequently reconveyed to the uses of the settlement of even date. After the death of the son the executors of the only unpaid creditor claimed payment of her debt as against the owner of the settled estate:—Held, that the case fell within the authority of Synnot v. Simpson (5 H. L. Cas. 121), and not Garrard v. Lauderdale (Lord) (3 Sim. 1; 2 Russ. & M. 451); and that as there was a trust created by the deed in favour of the creditors which became irrevocable on the death of the father, the estate was liable to satisfy the debt. Priestley v. Ellis, 66 L. J., Ch. 240; [1897] 1 Ch. 489; 76 L. T. 187; 45 W. R. 442.

g. Assignment or Settlement of Equitable Interest by Beneficial Owner.

General Principles.]—A trustee cannot prevent the cestui que trust from making an effectual gift of his interest in the trust property, or any part of it. Kekewich v. Manning, 1 De G. M. & G. 176; 21 L. J., Ch. 577; 16 Jur. 625.

Whatever rule there may be against volunteers, it does not apply to the case of a cestui que trust claiming against his trustee, for that which is considered a trust may be created gratuitously, and the absence of consideration for its creation is in general immaterial. Ib.

The court, in order to give effect to voluntary settlements, requires, where the settlor is the legal owner, everything to have been done which is requisite to transfer the legal ownership; and where he is the equitable owner, clear and distinct evidence of a declaration of trust in favour of the donee. Bentley v. Mackay, 15 Beav. 12.

A father being entitled, during the life of his son, to the dividends on funds standing in the names of himself and three other trustees, directed two of the trustees to pay over the dividends for the future to his son. They acted on the direction, and the testator afterwards recognised the gift:—Held, that there was a valid and effectual voluntary settlement, which this court would give effect to. Ib.

A person, who was entitled to certain stock standing in the names of two trustees, gave instructions to his attorney to prepare a settlement of it for the benefit of A., B. and C., and to procure from the trustees a transfer for the purposes of the settlement. The settlement was prepared, and a power of attorney for the transfer of the stock executed by both the trustees, but the intended settlor died without having seen the settlement, and before the stock was actually transferred:—Held, that no trust of the stock was constituted for A., B. and C. Coningham v. Plunkett, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 245.

Assignment of Land held under Building Agreement.]—A., by a voluntary settlement, assigned land, held by him under an agreement for a building lease, to trustees, upon trust for himself for life, with remainder for his children and grandchildren. Shortly afterwards A. obtained a lease of the land, but he did not assign the legal estate to the trustees. There was no evidence that A. could have obtained the lease at the time when he executed the settlement:—Held, that the settlement was complete, and that the cestuis que trust were entitled to have it enforced against a person in possession of the legal estate, who derived his title through A.'s will. Gilbert v. Overton, 4 N. R. 420; 2 H. & M. 110; 33 L. J., Ch. 683; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 721; 10 L. T. 900; 12 W. R. 1141.

Semble, where the cestuis que trust convey their beneficial interest in a portion of the property to a purchaser, the purchaser may file a bill against the trustee for a conveyance of the legal estate, without making the cestuis que trust, who sold to him, parties to the suit. Goodson v. Ellisson, 3 Russ. 583; 27 R. R. 127.

Voluntary Assignment with Notice to Trustees.]—If the beneficial owner of stock standing in the name of trustees assign it in favour of a volunteer, and notice is given to the trustees, who act upon it, equity will enforce the performance of the trust in favour of the volunteer. Bridge v. Bridge, 16 Beav. 315; 22 L. J., Ch. 189; 16 Jur. 1031; 1 W. R. 4.

Voluntary settlement of an equitable interest in real estate held ineffectual, the legal estate not having passed to the trustees thereof. Ib.

The plaintiff being entitled to shares in companies, foreign bonds, consols, cash, and real estate, which were vested in the trustees of his uncle's will, executed a voluntary deed, whereby he granted the realty to A. and B. to the use of himself and A. and B., upon trust to sell, and he directed that the produce and the bonds, &c., should thenceforth be considered vested in him and A. and B. on certain trusts for volunteers:—Held, that the deed was valid as to the shares and bonds, which had been transferred to the plaintiff and A. and B., but ineffectual as to foreign bonds, stock, and cash, of which there had been no transfer, and no acceptance of the trust by the trustees of the uncle's will, in whom they were vested, and ineffectual also as to the realty, the legal estate not having passed. Ib.

A. having a vested interest in a portion of a trust fund subject to the life of B. therein, executes a voluntary deed of assignment of her expectant interest in reversion to C., and gives notice to D., the trustee of the fund:—Held, that although the assignment of this reversionary interest was purely voluntary, the instrument operated as an actual assignment transferring the equitable right from A. to C., and not as a mere agreement or executory instrument. Voyle v. Hughes, 2 Sm. & G. 18; 23 L. J., Ch. 238; 18 Jur. 341; 2 Eq. Rep. 42; 2 W. R. 143.

—— Without Notice to Trustees.]—M., who, in the event of surviving her daughter, and of that daughter dying without issue, would, as next of kin, be entitled to a fund which was vested in trustees, executed a voluntary assignment of her interest in the fund to the husband of the daughter, and declared the trusts of the assignment as to part for the benefit of M. herself, and as to another part for the daughter's husband absolutely. No notice of the assignment was given to the trustees. The daughter afterwards died without issue, and the husband filed his bill against the trustees and M. to compel performance of the trust:—Held, that the voluntary assignment did not create a trust which a court of equity would enforce, and the bill was dismissed. Meek v. Kettlewell, 1 Hare, 464; 11 L. J., Ch. 293; 6 Jur. 550. Affirmed, 1 Ph. 342; 13 L. J., Ch. 28; 7 Jur. 1120.

A., by voluntary deed, two days before his death, transferred to trustees all his personal property not effectually vested in them, to be held upon certain trusts, with a declaration by A. that, in the meantime and until the trust premises should be duly transferred to, and vested in, the trustees, he would thenceforth stand possessed of and interested in such property upon the trusts already declared. Part of the property was vested in the trustees of A.'s marriage settlement, in trust for him absolutely. As to this portion no transfer was made previous to A.'s death, and no notice had been given to the trustees in whom it was vested:—Held, that the assignment was effectual to pass the property, there having been a complete declaration of trust, which the court would execute in favour of the donees. Donaldson v. Donaldson, Kay, 711; 23 L. J., Ch. 788; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 10; 2 W. R. 691.

—— Voluntary Assignment of Equitable Reversion.]—On a voluntary assignment of an equitable reversion, there being no power in the assignor to deal with the legal interest, notice to the trustees is not necessary to the validity of the assignment. An unmarried woman, the owner, subject to a settlement, of a reversionary equitable interest in a sum of stock, assigned it by deed to volunteers. No one except her solicitor, who was also the solicitor to the trustees of the settlement, was informed of the assignment. She kept the deed in her possession, and afterwards destroyed it, and subsequently dealt with the fund by will:—Held, that the assignees were entitled to the fund as against the beneficiaries under the will. Way's Trusts, In re, 2 De G. J. & S. 365; 5 N. R. 67; 34 L. J., Ch. 49; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1166; 11 L. T. 495; 13 W. R. 149.

Direction by Deed to Trustee to Pay.]—A direction given by deed by a cestui que trust to her trustee to pay a certain portion of the interest of the trust fund to A., with a covenant to indemnify the trustee for such payment:—Held, to constitute an irrevocable trust, which was not affected by the fund being brought into court. Rycroft v. Christy, 3 Beav. 238; 4 Jur. 599.

h. Evidence and Burden of Proof.

Parol Evidence.]—Parol evidence not admissible to raise an equity, that a pension granted by the crown to the defendant was in trust for the plaintiff, against the oath of the defendant in his answer. Fordyce v. Willis, 3 Bro. C. C. 577.

Parol evidence admissible of declaration of devisee, to prove her only a trustee. Strode v. Winchester, Dick. 397.

Where a person sets up a case of declaration of trust, the onus probandi is upon him, and the evidence must be clear and distinct: the court must determine according to the evidence on both sides, having special regard to the consideration on whom the burden of proof lies. Roberts v. Roberts, 12 Jur. (N.S.) 971; 15 L. T. 260; 15 W. R. 117.

And see Inglis v. Pascoe, 27 L. T. 818.

Sole Testimony of Plaintiffs—Lapse of Time.]—T. having certain gas shares, wished to give them to his sister, but was alleged to have abstained from making a will, because his father promised that she should have them. T. died, and the father, as his administrator, possessed the shares and died, having bequeathed them to his second wife, who refused to hand them over to the daughter and her husband. They filed a bill, nineteen years after she came of age, alleging a trust and constant recognition by the father of the daughter's right, but the allegation rested on their evidence alone, and the bill was dismissed with costs. Poole v. Foxwell, 11 L. T. 441; 13 W. R. 199.

Secondary Evidence.—The court refused to admit secondary evidence of a declaration of trust, there being strong circumstantial evidence to show that the original document was not stamped. Rose v. Clarke, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 534.

1. EXECUTED TRUSTS.

Distinction between Trusts Executory and Executed.]—In the latter the court of chancery follows the law. Jervoise v. Northumberland (Duke), 1 J. & W. 559; 21 R. R. 229.

Devise of copyhold estates, the legal estate being outstanding. "To my son R. W. G., to be entailed upon his male heirs, and failing such, to pass to his next brother, and so on from brother to brother, allowing 2,500*l.* to be raised upon the the estates for female children each." Whether a trust executed or executory, and if the latter, whether an estate tail in R. W. G. Quære. Ib.

And see Egerton v. Brownlow (Earl), 4 H. L. Cas. 1; 23 L. J., Ch. 348; 18 Jur. 71.

A bond debt being assigned to trustees on trust for such persons as A., a feme covert, should appoint, and, in default, for her separate use, she appointed it to a creditor of her husband, to secure an existing debt. No other consideration appeared on the face of the deed:—Held, that this was an "executed trust" in favour of the creditor, which the court would effectuate, notwithstanding the apparent want of consideration. Collinson v. Patrick, 2 Keen, 123; 7 L. J., Ch. 83.

2. EXECUTORY TRUSTS.

a. General Principles and Distinction between Executory Trusts in Marriage Articles and Wills.

Control of Court.]—A trust to be carried into execution by the court, must be of such a nature that it can be under the control of the court. Ommanney v. Butcher, Turn. & R. 270; 24 R. R. 42.

The court will not decree a partial performance of articles: but when some parts appear unreasonable they always dismiss the bill. Goring v. Nash, 3 Atk. 189.

Equity exercises a power to modify and control the ordinary sense of language used in marriage articles, so as to give effect to the real intention; but its interference has always been supported by a necessary implication, resulting from the context of the articles. If it were to assume a power to control the contract from presumptions dehors the instrument, it would be making, instead of expounding, the agreements of the parties. M'Guire v. Scully, Beat. 378.

S. C., in court below, nom. Maguire v. Scully, 2 Hog. 113.

Agreement for Partition.] — Conveyance to trustees, in trust to sell and purchase other estates to be settled. Those entitled under the limitations directed of the estates to be purchased, have equitable interests co-extensive until a sale; therefore, a specific performance was decreed of an agreement for partition against an objection to a title under a fine by a person who would have been tenant in tail of the estates to be purchased; the effect being an election to keep the estate, binding the trustees, though it may be questionable whether they could take upon themselves to convey in fee to a person entitled to an estate tail only. Pearson v. Lane, 17 Ves. 101.

Covenant in Articles of Freedom from Incumbrances.]—In articles there was to be a covenant in the conveyance that the lands were free from incumbrance. This is not a covenant that the lands are free; and if any incumbrance is discovered between the execution of the articles and of the conveyance, whereof the party had no notice, that shall be discharged before the sealing of the conveyance, as the concealment of it would be a fraud, though, against all incumbrances discovered afterwards, there is only the party's own covenant to protect a purchaser. Vane v. Bernard (Lord), Gilb. Eq. R. 6.

Intention of Testator.]—In executory trusts the court considers the intention of the testator, and acts according to it. In executed trusts the court follows the law. Jervoise v. Northumberland (Duke), 1 J. & W. 570; 21 R. R. 229. S. P., Lecky v. Knox, 1 Ball & B. 215.

No difference between marriage articles and executory trusts in wills, except that the former afford primâ facie evidence of intent which does not belong to the latter. Ib.

The general intent of a testator in creating an executory trust for a settlement of his property, not any strictly technical meaning attached to the words he has used, is to govern the preparation of the settlement. Sackville-West v. Holmesdale (Viscount), L. R. 4 H. L. 543; 39 L. J., Ch. 505.

The manner of executing an executory trust must be guided by the object of the author of the trust, provided such object is one which can be legally effectuated. Ib.

There is no difference between the construction to be put on an executory trust created by marriage articles and on an executory trust created by a will, except so far as the former, by its very nature, furnishes more emphatically the means of ascertaining the intention of those who created the trust. Ib.

The only difference between an executory trust raised by a voluntary settlement, or a will, and such a trust raised by an ante-nuptial settlement, is, that in the latter the object of the settlement supplies an intention to create a strict settlement, and that in the former such an intention must appear on the face of the instrument. Rochfort or Rochford v. Fitzmaurice, 2 Dr. & War. 1; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 375; 1 Con. & L. 158.

Articles not construed in same manner as formal dispositions. Taggart v. Taggart, 1 Sch. & Lef. 84; 9 R. R. 19.

——Distinction between Marriage Articles and Wills.]—Distinction between marriage articles and wills; all the parties to the former considered purchasers to effectuate their intention; none of the parties mentioned in the latter are so, as the testator's intention is alone to be considered. Stratford v. Powell, 1 Ball & B. 25.

No distinction between executory trusts by marriage articles and will, except the inference from the object of the former, to provide for the issue, that the father should not have the power to defeat it; therefore, estate for life, with remainder to the heirs of the body, a strict settlement in the one case, an estate tail in the other unless clearly not meant in their technical sense. Blackburn v. Stables, 2 V. & B. 367; 13 R. R. 120. But see 1 J. & W. 571.

Direction by Court of Conveyance of Gavelkind Lands.]—Where trust is executory, and to be carried into execution by the court of equity, it will direct a conveyance of lands, notwithstanding they are gavelkind, according to the rule of common law. Roberts v. Dixwell, 1 Atk. 608.

Practice on Reference to Master to approve Settlement.]—Where it is referred to the master to approve of a settlement in pursuance of an executory trust, the court does not usually insert in the order declarations as to the interests which the parties are thereafter to take, but merely directs the master to approve of a settlement in conformity with the will, articles, or other directions upon which it is to be founded. Williams v. Teale, 6 Hare, 254.

Direction to accumulate Money and Purchase Land—Costs of Investment.]—Under a direction by will to accumulate and lay out a certain sum of money in the purchase of land to be settled to uses thereby declared, the costs of the investment are to be paid out of the particular sum directed to be invested. Gwyther v. Allen, 1 Hare, 505.

Foreign Marriage Articles.]—The court will put a construction upon foreign marriage articles without requiring a settlement to be executed, even though such construction involves the removal of the entire fund from the settlement. Byam v. Byam, 19 Beav. 58; 24 L. J., Ch. 209; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 79; 3 W. R. 95.

b. What is an Executory Trust.

Definition.]—Definition of an executory trust as distinguished from a trust executed according to the sense of a court of equity. Per Lord St. Leonards. Egerton v. Brownlow, 4 H. L. Cas. 1; 23 L. J., Ch. 348; 18 Jur. 71.

Executory trust defined, and the principles laid down upon which courts of equity act in executory trusts. Boswell v. Dillon, Drew. 291; 6 Ir. Eq. R. 389.

A testator devised his property to trustees, and the will contained the following passages, amongst others: "The said sum I will shall be taken from my real, freehold, and personal property; the residue to be divided between them by my said trustees, share and share alike, at such time, and in such manner, as to my said trustees shall seem most expedient, subject to this limitation," &c.; shares of sons, in certain events, were to go to survivors, "subject, however, to such jointure as my said sons, or any of them, may settle on any wife," &c.; premises were devised to the son carrying on the testator's business, "at such reasonable rent as my trustees shall think proper." "I further will my trustees shall lend out at interest" certain sums bequeathed in the way prescribed; a small annuity was given to W. B., "to be paid to him by my said trustees out of the issues," &c. A codicil bequeathed other property, "to be divided equally among," &c., "agreeable to the real intention of my will":—Held, that the provisions of this will did not constitute executory trusts. Ib.

Devise of copyhold estates, the legal estates being outstanding, "to my son R. W. G., to be entailed upon his male heirs, and failing such to pass to his next brother, and so on from brother to brother, allowing 2,500*l.* to be raised upon the estates for female children each." Whether a trust executed or executory, and, if the latter, whether an estate tail in R. W. G., quære. The point too doubtful to compel a purchaser to take the title. Jervoise v. Northumberland (Duke), 1 J. & W. 559; 21 R. R. 229.

Executory Settlement—Tenancy in Common.]—By a deed it was agreed and declared that A., his executors, administrators, and assigns, should raise out of certain hereditaments 800*l.*, and should invest the same in the names of trustees at interest upon government or real securities "upon trusts to be declared for the benefit of R., for her life, with remainder to her children, and as to R. and for her separate use, and with all the powers for changing the security, and for maintenance, and other powers and trusts which are usually inserted in a money settlement of the like nature." No subsequent declaration of trust of the 800*l.* was ever made:—Held, that the deed was executory only, and that the settlement so directed ought to have limited the 800*l.*, after the death of R., amongst her children as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants. Mayn v. Mayn, L. R. 5 Eq. 150; 17 L. T. 439.

Positive Settlement.]—Where an instrument, executed previously to a marriage under the name of articles of agreement, appears on the face of it finally to declare the intention of the parties, and does not point to a future instrument as necessary to complete the contract, it will not be treated as executory, though, in order to give full effect to its provisions, a future act may remain to be done after its execution. De Havilland v. De Saumarez, 14 W. R. 118.

A testator directed 6,000*l.* to be settled on the marriage of his daughter, and then went on to give it to trustees, with a separate life interest to his daughter; after her death for her children, on their attaining twenty-one, if the mother should be then dead; but if not, then not till after her decease; and if no child should live to attain a vested interest, then to fall into his residue. And he gave his residue to A. for life, remainder to B.:—Held, first, that the testator had made a positive settlement, and the court could not add to it in any way. Fullerton v. Martin, 1 Dr. & Sm. 31; 29 L. J., Ch. 469; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 265; 1 L. T. 31; 8 W. R. 289.

Held, secondly, that the income undisposed of after the wife's death fell into the residue. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that it was undisposed of income merely, and passed as such to the tenant for life of the residue. Ib.

Words of a settlement held not to constitute an executory trust, but merely to amount to the gift of an equitable estate, by directing the property to be held in trust for the persons designated. Doncaster v. Doncaster, 3 K. & J. 26; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1066.

A testator left shares of his property to his daughters "to be settled on themselves at their marriage." One of the daughters attained twenty-one, and applied to have her share paid to her absolutely:—Held, that she was absolutely entitled to her share, and that there was no trust for settlement. Magrath v. Morehead, 41 L. J., Ch. 120; L. R. 12 Eq. 491; 24 L. T. 868.

A testator devised his real and personal estate to trustees, and gave life estates therein to several persons, namely, A., B. &c., and after their deaths he directed the trustees to pay the income to M. and N. during their respective lives, share and share alike, and in case either of them should, after the deaths of A., B., &c., depart this life without leaving issue male of his body, in trust, to pay the whole income to the survivor for life: and he directed that if M. should, after the deaths of A., B., &c., die before N., leaving issue male, then the trustees should convey a moiety of the real estate to the use of the first and other sons of M. in tail male, with remainder to N. for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail, and in default to the testator's right heirs, and lay out a moiety of the personal estate in land, and convey the same to trustees to the like uses. The testator made a similar disposition mutatis mutandis of the other moiety, in case of the death of N., after the deaths of A., B. &c., leaving issue male; and he provided that, in case M. and N. should die without leaving issue male, or if such issue male should die without any issue male, the trustees should convey the property to such person as should at the death of the survivor of M. and N. be the right heir of the testator:—Held, that the trusts on which the question arose were not executory so as to alter the construction as arising on an executed trust. Franks v. Price, 3 Beav. 182; 9 L. J., Ch. 383. And see S. C. at law, 5 Bing. (N.C.) 37; 6 Scott, 710.

A will contained a direction to trustees to convey to the testator's son in strict settlement, if he should marry, followed by a declaration that if the son should die unmarried, or without lawful issue, the property should be limited and devolve upon A. for life, remainder to A.'s eldest son for life, remainder to his issue male, and on failure of such issue to A.'s other sons in succession, the eldest of such sons and his heirs male always to be preferred:—Held, that the trusts in favour of A. and her sons were not executory; and that the testator's son, having died unmarried, and A. having died subsequently, her eldest son was entitled in tail male. Nelley, In re, 26 W. R. 88.

By a contract for sale it was agreed that 600*l.*, part of the purchase money, should be paid after the vendor's death to such uses as she should direct, for the benefit of J. B. and her children. By the conveyance, that sum was made payable to the executors, &c., of the vendor, or as she should appoint by her will; she appointed it to J. B. absolutely:—Held, that the settlement, being executory only as to the children, could not be enforced, and that J. B. took absolutely. Burrows v. Greenwood, 4 Y. & C. 251; 5 Jur. 384.

c. Limitations to Issue or Heirs (Rule in Shelley's Case).

i. Articles.

Marriage Articles—Estate Tail at Law.]—On articles on marriage to settle lands on himself for life, remainder to the heirs of his body by his intended wife, with a covenant to make the settlement within two years, or in default thereof to stand seised to the same uses; though this be an estate tail at law, yet equity will turn it into a strict settlement. Trevor v. Trevor, 1 P. Wms. 622; 10 Mod. 436. Affirmed, 5 Bro. P. C. 122.

On marriage, the husband executes a deed-poll, whereby he purports to settle all his real and personal estate on the wife, and the heirs of her body by him begotten, obliging her to give each of her children by him begotten 1,000*l.* a-piece at twenty-one, and to divide the residue equally amongst them at her death. This gives an estate for life only to the wife, with remainder in fee to the children as tenants in common. These marriage articles so far tied up the property of the settlor that a real estate purchased by him in his lifetime, with part of his personal estate, shall be considered as personal estate and be disposed of accordingly. Lowther v. Westmoreland, 1 Cox, 64.

Where, on a marriage agreement, the husband entered into a bond to surrender his copyhold to the use of himself for life; remainder to his wife for life; remainder to the heirs of their two bodies; remainder to the heirs of the husband:—Decreed, a surrender to the use of the husband for life; remainder to the first and other sons of the marriage in tail general; remainder to the daughters in tail general, in order, by making the issue purchasers, to secure them from being defeated. Nandike v. Wilkes, Gilb. Eq. R. 114.

In marriage articles to settle lands on the husband for life, remainder to the heirs male of his body, a court of equity will decree a conveyance to be made in strict settlement, according to the intent of the parties, viz. to the husband for life, remainder to the first and every other son in tail, &c., and not direct an estate tail to the husband, according to the legal operation of the words. Collins v. Plummer, 1 P. Wms. 106; Seale v. Seale, id. 291.

Articles construed against the words for the sake of the intent, as where the wife's portion was to be laid out in land, to be settled on husband and wife, and the heirs of their bodies, and if not laid out in land during their joint lives, and the wife should die first, that the money should go to the wife's brother and sister: wife dies first leaving issue, and the money is not laid out in a purchase; yet the issue, and not the wife's brother and sister, shall have it, equity supplying the words, "if the wife die without issue." Kentish v. Newman, 1 P. Wms. 234.

Strict Settlement—Power of Barring Entail.]—The rule that a limitation to the heirs of the body in articles shall be carried into execution by a strict settlement, does not prevail where the concurrence of both parties would be necessary to bar the entail. Brudenell v. Elwes, 7 Ves. 390; 6 R. R. 310.

Marriage articles to settle estates to the use of husband for life, remainder to the wife for her life, remainder to the use of the heirs of the body of the wife by the husband. The court refused to decree a strict settlement upon them, since the power of barring the entail was not in the husband alone. As to the distinctions where a court of equity will or will not rectify settlements made in pursuance of articles, &c., by decreeing a strict settlement. Election as to copyholds. Highway v. Banner, 1 Bro. C. C. 584.

One devises his lands for payment of his debts, and then to A. for life, with power to make leases, &c.; remainder to the heirs male of the body of A.; though this be but the devise of a trust, and executory, and expressed to be to A. for life, yet it is an estate tail in A., barrable by a fine and recovery. Secus, in a case of marriage articles to settle an estate on A. for life, remainder to the heirs male of his body, this being an agreement to do a future act, and in which the issue are particularly considered and looked upon as purchasers. Bale v. Coleman, 1 P. Wms. 142.

Marriage articles not decreed in strict settlement, where, by a difference in the penning the parties intended to leave part in the father's power. Howel v. Howel, 2 Ves. Sen. 358.

—— Acquiescence.]—Bill for a strict settlement, after long acquiescence by plaintiff's ancestor, and when impossible to bar the remainder, dismissed. Parker v. Philips, 1 Ves. sen. 330.

Mortgage of Estate subsequent to Articles.]—By marriage articles a husband covenanted, in consideration of his wife's portion, to settle an estate to his own use, and after his decease to the use of his heirs on the body of his intended wife, and for want of such issue to his own right heirs for ever. The articles did not express any further intention of providing for the children of the marriage, and made a provision for the intended wife, in lieu of dower. No settlement was executed, and the husband mortgaged the estate and at the same time delivered the articles to the mortgagee:—Held, on his death, that under the articles he was entitled to a life estate only, and that the mortgagee took with notice, and could not therefore hold as against the issue of the marriage. Davies v. Davies, 4 Beav. 54.

Difference between Limitation to Heirs of Body and Heirs Female of Body.]—In marriage articles there is a diversity between a limitation to the heirs of the body of a man, and to the heirs female of the body of a man, and the sons more favoured than daughters. Powell v. Price, 2 P. Wms. 539.

Remainder to Issue of Bodies of Husband and Wife.]—A limitation in marriage articles to the husband for life, to the wife for life, remainder to the issue of their two bodies, will be carried into strict settlement. Villiers v. Villiers, 2 Atk. 73.

By marriage articles, it was agreed that 3,000*l.* should be laid out in land and settled on husband and wife for their lives, remainder to such issue, &c., as they should appoint, and in default of appointment to the issue of their bodies. On the death of the husband without appointment:—Held, the land should be settled in strict settlement, viz. on wife for life, remainder to the first and other sons in tail, remainder to daughters in tail, remainder to right heirs of husband. Dod v. Dod, Amb. 274.

Where there is an ambiguity in expressions of settlement regarding issue, the presumptions are made in favour of the children. Perfect v. Curzon (Lord), 5 Madd. 442.

Upon the words "issue of the marriage," the courts, on a bill for carrying articles into execution, have frequently directed the settlement to all the issue, to the first and other sons, and for default of such issue to the daughters, with proper remainders. In this case the court determined in favour of the daughter. Hart v. Middlehurst, 3 Atk. 371.

By articles made previously to a marriage, lands were covenanted to be conveyed to the use of the husband and wife for their lives, with remainder to the use of the issue of the husband and wife, their heirs and assigns, for ever. There were a son and two daughters of the marriage, and each of them had two children :—Held, that the son would take an estate tail, with remainder to the daughters, and that the grandchildren took nothing. Phillips v. James, 3 De G. J. & S. 72 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 660 ; 12 L. T. 685 ; 13 W. R. 934.

Articles, on marriage, to settle lands on husband and wife for lives, remainder to heirs male of body of wife by husband, remainder to his heirs male by second wife, remainder to heirs female by marriage. Settlement is made before marriage, and said to be in pursuance of articles, whereby lands are limited to husband for life, without waste, and with power of making leases, remainder to first, &c., sons of marriage in tail male ; remainder to first, &c., sons in tail by second marriage ; remainder to heirs of body of husband. There are two daughters ; husband suffers recovery, and devises to sister. Daughters may compel reconveyance. West v. Erisey, 1 Comyn 412 ; 2 P. Wms. 349 ; 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 39, pl. 2. S. C., on appeal, 1 Bro. P. C. 225.

By marriage articles, it was agreed that the interest of the amount of a policy of assurance, effected on the husband's life, should be applied, first, in payment of an annuity to the wife, and that the remainder of the interest should be paid among the issue of the marriage, in such shares as the husband and wife, or the survivor of them, should by deed or will appoint ; and in default of appointment, share and share alike ; and that the principal, after the death of the wife, should remain to the use of the issue of the marriage, in such manner and in such shares and proportions to and amongst the issue, as the husband and wife, or the survivor of them, should by deed or will appoint, and for want of such appointment, share and share alike. The articles contained a covenant to execute all acts necessary to carry them into execution. The husband survived the wife ; but by a codicil to his will, made in 1854, and in her lifetime, he willed and devised that whatever property he should die possessed of, or be entitled to, either freehold or otherwise, after the payment of his debts and funeral expenses, should be equally divided amongst his sons and daughters which he then had or might have by his marriage ; and that on the death of either of his sons or daughters by his marriage, before they arrived at twenty-one, the share or shares of him or her should be equally divided amongst the survivors. And he declared it to be his will and desire that, in the event of his being entitled to any property not named in his will, which contained an exclusive, and therefore invalid, appointment of the principal of the policy, his wife should be his residuary legatee :—Held, that the will and codicil did not amount to a valid execution of the power. Cronin v. Roche, 8 Ir. Ch. R. 103.

Held, also, that if a settlement had been executed, it should have contained a clause that, in the event of any of the children dying under age and unmarried, the share of the child so dying should go to the survivors. Ib.

By the second clause of marriage articles, it was agreed that a sum should be settled on the wife (not stating how), and the husband renounced his marital right over it during the coverture. The fourth clause provided that in case of her death, leaving issue, it should belong to the husband and children successively ; the fifth gave her a power of appointment, if she died without issue ; and the sixth provided that the income should, "in all cases, belong to the husband during his life." There was no express life estate given to the wife :—Held, first, that the sixth clause being repugnant with the second clause, the husband's life interest was postponed until the death of his wife ; and, secondly, that the wife, by implication, took an immediate life estate to her separate use. Byam v. Byam, 19 Beav. 58 ; 24 L. J., Ch. 209 ; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 79 ; 3 W. R. 95.

A., on the marriage of his son, articles to settle a jointure on the wife and her issue ; but no provision is made for the son during his life. The father has the portion, and the wife dies without issue. Whether the son is entitled to an estate in the lands, quære. West v. Delaware, 1 Vern. 198.

A marriage settlement reformed after a lapse of thirty-five years, by giving the lady an absolute interest in the trust funds (her husband being dead and without issue), the evidence clearly establishing that such was the intention of the parties to the settlement. Wolterbeek v. Barrow, 23 Beav. 423 ; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 804.

T. H. by marriage articles covenanted to provide 30,000*l.* for an eldest son ; and in case there should be issue of the marriage, an only son and an only daughter living at the time of his decease, to provide 10,000*l.* for such only daughter, to be paid to her at twenty-one or day of marriage ; but in case there should be other issue of the marriage living at the time of his decease, besides one son and one daughter, then 20,000*l.* for all and every the child and children of the marriage, other than an only son, to be paid and payable to such child or children, and at such time as T. H. should appoint, and in default of appointment to such child or children, share and share alike amongst them, if more than one, at twenty-one or day of marriage ; there were living at the decease of T. H., one son and two daughters ; one of the daughters died under age and unmarried :—Held, that the other daughter who attained twenty-one, being the survivor of a class, was entitled to the entire sum of 20,000*l.* provided for that class. Hynes v. Redington, Ll. & G. t. Plunk. 33 ; 1 Jo. & Lat. 589 ; 7 Ir. Eq. R. 405.

By settlement on the marriage of A. with C., in case there was no issue male, and there should be daughters living at the death of the father, who should attain twenty-one or be married, then such daughters should have 2,000*l.* apiece ; there were three daughters and no sons ; defendant, one of the daughters, married D., and previous to her marriage covenanted to assign (with D.'s consent) 500*l.* to trustees in trust, after the death of D. and the defendant, to pay it amongst the children of the bodies of the defendant and D. ; and that D. should, after the marriage, assign to the trustees all the money and securities for it, then due and belonging to defendant. A. died in 1744 ; D. in 1745, intestate, to whom defendant administered, and received the 2,000*l.* :—Held, that the children, who were a son and daughter, have a right to the portion, which was decreed to be secured for their benefit, though under the articles the real estate was in the mother's power, and vested in her in tail; yet in equity it is to be carried into strict settlement to the wife for life, then to the first, &c., sons in tail, and, in default of issue male, to daughters. Bash v. Dalway, 3 Atk. 530.

Articles between father and son; in consideration of 1*l.* and of the son's intended marriage, the father granted him an annuity charged on land; after the father's death, the son, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns to pay annuities to his sisters and their heirs; if one of them should marry without consent, her annuity to return to the son, who was also to pay an annuity to his father's widow during viduity, and several sums of money to the other children; if the son should happen to die without issue, his wife to be paid a jointure out of the lands; if he should happen to leave issue male, the estate to devolve to said issue male; and if he should happen to die without issue, the entire property to be divided equally between the eldest sons of his sisters; on the death of the father, the land to be given up to the son. The son died after the father, leaving a daughter, his only issue. To a bill to raise the arrears of an annuity for lives, granted after the execution of the articles by the father and son, a demurrer by the daughter, because they had not such an estate as enabled them to grant the annuity, overruled; as no limitations in favour of the female issue of the son could be imposed, for the articles, having expressed the intention to provide for the issue male, raised a negative implication against females being the object of the marriage provision. It is only where the contract has expressed an intention to provide for issue generally, that females are included in the provision. M'Guire v. Scully, Beat. 370. S. C. in court below, nom. Maguire v. Scully, 2 Hog. 113.

—— Exercise of Power of Appointment.]—In marriage articles in 1802 (which were to be, but never were, followed by a formal settlement), two separate estates, one belonging to the intended husband, the other to the intended wife, were included. Both were vested in trustees, in trust to permit the husband and wife to receive the profits during life, and (as to her portion), should she survive her husband, "to such of her issue male by her husband as she may, by her last will and testament, notwithstanding her coverture, direct, limit, or appoint," and in case of no appointment, to the "issue male" of the husband and wife, and in case of no issue male, then to go amongst her daughters, "and in case of failure of issue male or female, then to go to such person or persons" as she should appoint. There were two children of the marriage, a son and a daughter. The wife survived the husband many years, and made a will, which, reciting the power reserved to her by the articles, appointed the property to her grandson, the son of her daughter, describing him as "issue male" of her marriage:—Held, that the articles were executory; that if in accordance with them a settlement had been executed, the estate would have been put in strict settlement; and that the power reserved by them was not well exercised; the grandson, the son of a daughter, not coming within the description of "issue male" therein contained. The lady married again, and on the settlement on this marriage, the surviving trustee of the articles granted, released and confirmed to the trustees under the second settlement, "all his right" to "the use and behoof of" the widow as under the articles." Lambert v. Peyton, 8 H. L. Cas. 1.

Held, also, that setting up a claim to the estate under the appointment by her, the grandson could not, as an objection to a suit to compel him to convey the estate in specific performance of the marriage articles, insist that the legal estate was not in him: nor could he object to the decree that it dealt only with the property over which the wife had assumed to exercise a power of appointment, and not with the whole property included in the marriage articles. Ib.

Before marriage, a husband executes a bond to trustees, the condition of which binds him to settle the property of the wife on her and her issue, in such manner as the trustees, in their discretion should think proper. After the marriage a settlement is made, by which part of the property is to be applied in payment of his debts, and for his furtherance in life; another part is settled on the wife for life, remainder to the issue of the marriage, and, in case there should not be any such issue, to the husband absolutely; and a third part of the property is given to the wife for life, and, after her decease, in case there should be no issue of the marriage, as she should appoint:—Held, that this settlement was not according to the condition of the bond, and did not bind the rights of the wife. Webb v. Kelly, 3 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 172.

By executory articles for valuable consideration, made between A. and his wife and sons, it was agreed, after the death of A., his estates should be limited to and settled upon B. (his eldest son) and his issue, with remainder, in the event of B. dying in the lifetime of A. without lawful issue, to each of the other sons of A. in succession, according to their seniority, with an ultimate remainder to the right heirs of A. B. survived A., and had issue:—Held, in a suit to carry these articles into execution, that B. was entitled to an estate tail in possession, with remainder to him in fee. Dillon v. Blake, 16 Ir. Ch. R. 24.

—— No Settlement Executed.]—By marriage articles, the husband agreed to settle out of the lands of K., in favour of A., his daughter by a former marriage, a jointure on his intended wife, the remainder of the lands on the issue male begotten on the wife, and in failure of issue male on the issue female; and in case A. should survive, and the lands of K. should not be made good, that then the lands of K., which were not settled on the former marriage, should be subject to the jointure, and be settled on the eldest son of the marriage, and, in failure of the said son, on the daughters of the said marriage. There was no male issue of the marriage, but female issue, B., C., and D.:—Held, that the lands of K. should be settled on them as tenants in common in tail. No settlement was executed, and the lands descended to A., B., C. and D., subject to the trusts of the articles, in 1763, when B., C. and D. went into possession. In 1783 they levied a fine, and conveyed to a purchaser for value, and covenanted that they were seised in fee. There were several subsequent conveyances for value. In 1847 the lands were contracted to be sold:—Held, in a suit for specific performance against the purchaser, that the legal title of A. and her heirs to one-fourth of the lands was barred by the statute of limitations, as a court of law would not notice the executory trusts of the articles, and the several conveyances operated as disseisins. Semble, the equitable title of the heir of A., on failure of issue of B., C. and D., was also barred; but:—Held, that as a fine created no discontinuance in equity, the title was too doubtful to be forced on the purchaser. A conveyance of all her estate, &c., was obtained from the devisee of the heir-at-law of A., and was held to put an end to the objection; for although the reversion belonged to the heir of the settlor he must trace title through the daughters, and all their right was extinguished by this conveyance and the fine. Stewart v. Conyngham (Marquis), 1 Ir. Ch. R. 534.

M. being entitled to an estate in fee, expectant upon the death of her father without other issue; by articles executed previous to her intermarriage with G. P. W. it was agreed that her estate should be settled to her separate use "if she should ever become entitled thereto," and on her issue; and that in case M. should die in the lifetime of G. P. W., he should receive the rents for his life, provided M. should ever become entitled thereto as aforesaid, but not otherwise; and G. P. W. covenanted to execute these limitations within six months after the celebration of the marriage. M. died before her father, who never had other issue, and did not execute the covenant:—Held, that under the articles, G. P. W. took an estate for life, although M. never became entitled to the possession, and that the breach of covenant did not affect the life estate. Wallace v. Wallace, 2 Dr. & War. 452; 1 Con. & L. 491.

"Issue" Construed as "Children."]—A. being seised for life of certain lands, and B. in remainder in fee simple therein; by articles executed in 1771, previously to the marriage of B. with L. N., to which articles A. was a party, it was agreed that A. and B. should, within six months after the marriage, settle and assure the said lands, so as to secure a jointure for L. N., "and so that immediately after the death of the said B. (subject, however, to the provisions made for jointure), the said lands should go to and be vested in the issue of the said B. by the said L. N.; and that such issue should also be entitled to a further sum of 1,000*l.* to be charged upon all the estate, real and personal, of the said B., but in such shares and proportions as B., by deed or will attested by three witnesses, should direct or appoint, and, failing such appointment, then in equal shares":—Held, that the word "issue" meant "children," and that the articles were to be carried into execution by giving all the children estates in common in fee. Thompson v. Simpson, 1 Dr. & War. 459.

But when the articles are very ambiguous, and there has been a great lapse of time, the court will be slow to put a construction upon them, which would affect the rights of a purchaser, which it would have adopted without hesitation as between the parties themselves. Id. 491.

By articles executed in consideration of marriage and the fortune of the wife, it was agreed that the trustees of a money fund, after the decease of the husband, should pay the residue of the interest, and also the principal sum (subject to an annuity by way of jointure for the wife) to the issue of the marriage, in such shares and proportions, or to any one or more of them, in exclusion of the others of them, as the husband should by deed or will appoint; and in default of appointment, to all the issue in equal shares, to such of said issue as should be sons at twenty-one, and to such of them as should be daughters at twenty-one or marriage; and that power should be given to pay, towards the advancement of any of said issue, any sum not exceeding one-half of the principal sum belonging to such child respectively; and in case there should be no issue, or all such issue should die in the lifetime of the husband, then, that the entire of the trust funds subject to the jointure should vest and be assigned, and go to the husband, his heirs, executors, &c., absolutely, for his and their sole use and benefit. And it was further agreed, that a regular deed of settlement should be executed, which should contain the several clauses and covenants in such cases usual and proper:—Held, first, that the word "issue," in the articles, was to be read "children"; secondly, that the settlement ought to contain clauses vesting the shares of the sons in them at twenty-one; and of the daughters, in them at twenty-one or marriage: and also clauses of survivorship and accruer of the shares of sons dying under twenty-one, and of daughters dying under that age without having been married, in favour of the surviving or other children; thirdly, that the husband was entitled to the fund, either in the event of his surviving all his children, or of no child attaining a vested interest therein; and that the settlement ought to contain clauses accordingly. Roche v. Roche, 2 Jo. & Lat. 561.

By articles relating to leases pur autre vie, and for years, and to money, it was agreed that said leases for lives and for years should be conveyed to trustees, in trust (after successive life estates to D. and J.), "after the decease of J., to the issue of J. and A., in such shares and proportions as the said J. should appoint, and for want of such appointment to go to such children equally, share and share alike; and for default of such issue, to the heirs, executors, and administrators of said J. during said leases: the money or the lands agreed to be purchased therewith to go to the issue of said J. and A., in such shares and proportions, &c.; and for want of such appointment to be equally divided among such children, share and share alike; and if no children of said marriage, or all should die before twenty-one," then a power to dispose of said money:—Held, that "issue" is to be construed "children," and that the issue of J. and A. took the absolute interest in the chattel property, and a quasi fee in the freehold property; that a quasi estate tail cannot be barred by will, semble. Campbell v. Sandys, 1 Sch. & Lef. 281; 9 R. R. 33. S. P. Williams v. Jekyl, 2 Ves. Sen. 681.

Annuities to Children.]—Rights of children under marriage articles to annuities charged on certain leaseholds for lives and a term of years. Richardson v. Nixon, 2 Jo. & Lat. 250; 7 Ir. Eq. R. 620.

Children "Suitably Provided for."]—In 1858, on the marriage of A., the eldest son of F., it was agreed by the marriage articles, to which A. and F. were parties, that certain lands, and all the stock, crops, &c., thereon, should be held by F. and A. until out of the profits they should have "suitably provided" for certain younger children of F. After the death of F., one of the children instituted a suit against A. and the executor of F. to have the trust carried into execution:—

Held, that the suit was maintainable; that the term "suitably provided for" was not too uncertain to be given effect to by the court, and that performance of the agreement should be enforced. Brenan v. Brenan, Ir. R. 2 Eq. 266.

Tenant in Tail—Covenant to Suffer Recovery not Carried Out.]—Settlement by lease and release (the settlor being tenant in tail, and covenanting to suffer a recovery which was never suffered):—Held, ineffectual to carry out intentions in favour of younger children, as against the remainderman in tail. Stanhouse v. Gaskell, 17 Jur. 157; 1 W. R. 77.

Children as Purchasers.]—When it is agreed by articles that, after an estate for life in the father, the estate is to go to the children in remainder, they take as purchasers. Cordwell v. Mackrill, Amb. 517; 2 Eden, 344.

Where marriage articles limited a joint estate to the intended husband and wife, and after the death of the survivor to the use of the heirs of the body begotten on the wife, and the settlement after marriage pursued the words of the articles: husband and wife levy a fine, and first mortgage, and then agree to sell. The articles not being produced, the court would not decree them to be carried into execution by a strict settlement against the purchaser, who had notice of them. Ib.

Settlement Executed after Marriage—Previous Articles.]—Where marriage settlement is executed after marriage, in pursuance of articles previous to marriage, and limitations are to husband for life, to wife for life, and heirs of husband by wife, it is executory, and will be carried into strict settlement by court. Secus, if executed after marriage, without previous articles. Glanville v. Payne, 2 Atk. 29; Barnard. 18.

Covenant by Father to Secure to his Daughter and her Children a Share of his Real Estate.]—A., having seven daughters and no son, by articles entered into on the marriage of his daughter B., covenanted to secure "to her and her children by C. (her intended husband), a share of his real estate, equal to that of any other of his daughters." A. died without having made any settlement:—Held, that B. was entitled to an estate for life, remainder to her first and other sons in tail, remainder to her daughters in tail. Hamilton v. Cathcart, Wall. Lyn. 282.

Post-nuptial Articles—Estate for Life only.]—By post-nuptial articles, J. F., having then two living sons, H. and T., and one daughter, M., covenanted with trustees to settle certain lands of which he was seised in fee as counsel should direct, to the use of J. F. for life, remainder to trustees to preserve, &c.; remainder to the use of H., and to permit him to take the rents and profits for his life; remainder to the heir male of the body of H., and to permit him to take the rents and profits for his life; remainder to the use of T., and to permit him to take the rents and profits for his life; remainder to the issue male of T., with remainders to the unborn sons of J. F. in tail male in strict settlement, with remainders over:—Held, that H. took an estate for life only. Rochfort v. Fitzmaurice, 2 Dr. & War. 1; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 375. S. C., nom. Rochford v. Fitzmaurice, 1 Con. & L. 158.

Semble, that a limitation to trustees to preserve contingent remainders, not confined to the lifetime of a tenant for life, will not be cut down to that life if there are contingent remainders which may require protection during a longer period. Ib.

By post-nuptial articles of 1760, J. covenanted, in pursuance of articles before marriage, and for other valuable considerations, to settle his estate to the use of himself for life; remainder to trustees, to preserve, &c., and after decease of J. (subject to a jointure), to the use of H., his son, and his assigns for life; and after his decease, "to the heirs male of his body": in default of such issue "to T., a second son, and his assigns for life; and after his decease, to his issue male; remainder to the third, fourth, and other sons and the heirs male of their respective bodies; remainders over." Power to J., H., T., or any of the issue male of J. who should become seised under the limitations, to make leases for three lives or thirty-one years. Power to H., &c., when seised to jointure not exceeding 150*l.* per annum:—Held, that H. took an estate for his life only. Brennan v. Fitzmaurice, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 113.

Articles before marriage to settle were so expressed, that the husband would have had an estate tail; a settlement copying the very words of the articles was reformed, estate for life only being intended. Randall v. Willis, 5 Ves. 275; 5 R. R. 40.

Articles before marriage for settling real estates of the husband and also all and singular his personal estate of what nature or kind soever: a proper execution would be by a covenant, that real estate, that should be purchased with the personal, should with respect to the objects of the settlement be considered personal: the settlement, therefore, made after marriage, containing no such covenant, and being in other respects a defective execution, real estates purchased by the husband according to the evidence, in order to defeat the right of his wife, were decreed to be conveyed by his devisee according to the articles. A gift by him in his life, in consideration of service was not disputed; but under the particular circumstances attending the marriage, and in the case of an infant, the court appeared to question its validity. Id. 262.

Issue Taking as Tenants in Common.]—On articles previously to the marriage of W. with R., the father of W. "bound the whole of the farm, &c., as a marriage portion to his son W., along with R.; the one-half of said farm to be the right, title, and interest of the issue, whether son or daughter, if begotten on the body of R. by W." The issue take as tenants in common. Taggart v. Taggart, 1 Sch. & Lef. 84; 2 R. R. 19. And see Thompson v. Simpson, supra, col. 381.

By a deed it was agreed and declared that A., his executors, administrators, and assigns, should raise out of certain hereditaments 800*l.*, and should invest the same in the names of trustees at interest upon government or real securities "upon trusts to be declared for the benefit of R., for her life, with remainder to her children, and as to R. to and for her separate use, and with all the powers for changing the security, and for maintenance, and other powers and trusts which are usually inserted in a money settlement of the like nature." No subsequent declaration of trust of the 800*l.* was ever made:—Held, that the deed was executory only, and that the settlement so directed ought to have limited the 800*l.*, after the death of R., amongst her children as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants. Mayn v. Mayn, L. R. 5 Eq. 150; 17 L. T. 439.

Settlement in Pursuance of Articles—Limitation to Children—Rectification.]—Ante-nuptial articles were signed for the wife's personal estates being vested in trustees, "the trusts of the income being for the benefit of the husband and wife during their lives, and the trusts of the capital being for and amongst the children according to the appointment of the husband and wife, or the survivor of them; and in default of appointment, to the children equally; and in the event of there being no children, and of the husband being the survivor, the trust property to be at his absolute disposal." After the marriage a settlement was executed which limited the income to the husband and wife, during their joint lives, and to the survivor of them during his or her life, and then gave the capital to the children absolutely as tenants in common; but if there was no child, and the husband survived the wife, then to the husband. There was only one child of the marriage, and he died at the age of six months, in the lifetime of the parents. The husband died in the lifetime of the wife:—Held, that the capital of the fund and the arrears of income at the death of the husband belonged to the wife, for that the court would have carried the articles into effect by giving the wife the first life estate to her separate use, and by making the shares of sons contingent on their attaining twenty-one, and of daughters on their attaining twenty-one or marrying, or by inserting clauses of survivorship and accruer on the death of sons under twenty-one and of daughters under that age and unmarried, so that the husband would have had no title as next of kin of his deceased infant child, and that the settlement must be rectified accordingly. Cogan v. Duffield, 45 L. J., Ch. 307; 2 Ch. D. 44; 34 L. T. 593; 24 W. R. 905.

Marriage articles carried into execution, by limiting estates in strict settlement to A. and B. respectively, with cross-remainders between B. and the issue of A., with power to A. to appoint both estates among his children. The will of A. referring to the estate, but not to the power, declared a good execution of the power, to the extent of limiting estates tail to the children; the excess reformed to effectuate the general intention of the articles. Dillon v. Dillon, 1 Ball & B. 77. See 14 R. R. 241, n.

Marriage articles for settling lands varied by decreeing the estate to one for life, with remainder in tail to his issue instead of an estate tail to him. Griffith v. Buckle, 2 Vern. 13.

Marriage settlement rectified by a strict settlement agreeably to the ordinary course, notwithstanding it agreed with the articles verbatim, and both made before marriage, the plaintiff having however taken a benefit under the will which he disputed:—Held, to have made his election, and decreed to give up part of the settlement estate in satisfaction. Roberts v. Kingsly, 1 Ves. Sen. 238.

A marriage settlement, purporting to be made in pursuance of articles recited in it, conveyed an estate to A. and his wife, and the heirs of their bodies:—Held, that they became tenants in tail special, and that a court of law could not construe the deed as rendering them tenants for life, with remainder to their issue in tail, even if that might have been the construction to be put upon the articles by a court of equity. Doe d. Daniel v. Woodroffe, 10 M. & W. 608; 12 L. J., Ex. 147. Affirmed, nom. Woodroffe v. Doe d. Daniel, 15 M. & W. 769; 15 L. J., Ex. 356; 7 Jur. 959; 2 H. L. Cas. 811; 18 L. J., Ex. 498; 13 Jur. 1013.

ii. Devises.

Principle of Construction.]—The only difference between the construction of executory trusts in a marriage settlement and a voluntary settlement or will is, that in the former the nature of the instrument affords a presumption that the intention is for a strict settlement, whereas in the latter case that intention must appear on the face of the instrument. Rochford v. Fitzmaurice, 1 Con. & L. 158. S. C., nom. Rochfort v. Fitzmaurice, 2 Dr. & War. 1; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 375.

Trusts when Executory and when Not.]—Devise in trust for a son of the testator's nephew A., at the age of twenty-four; if he have no son, to A., son of the testator's great-nephew B.; but if neither have a son, then to a son of the testator's great-niece's daughter, taking his name, whoever should take not to be put in possession of any part of the testator's effects until twenty-four, nor the executors to give up their trust till a proper entail be made to the heir male by him: is an executory trust in tail for an only son of A. in ventre at the testator's death; and not void for uncertainty, nor too remote. Blackburn v. Stables, 2 V. & B. 367; 13 R. R. 120.

Remainder to Issue.]—A. devises lands to his sisters B. and C., and their heirs and assigns, upon trust, that until his granddaughter D. should marry or die, to receive the profits, and thereout to pay her 100*l.* a year for her maintenance; the residue to pay debts and legacies. After payment thereof, in trust for said D., and upon further trust, that, if she lived, to marry a Protestant, and at time of such marriage be twenty-one, or upwards, or if under that age, such marriage be with the consent of the said B., then to convey, with all convenient speed, after such marriage, to the use of said D. for life, sans waste, voluntary waste in houses excepted; remainder to her husband for life; remainder to the issue of her body, with remainders over; and upon further trust, that if D. die unmarried, then to the use of B. for life; remainder to the son of his other granddaughter E., in tail; remainder to the defendant C., remainder to his first and other sons; remainder to A.'s right heirs; and upon further trust, that if D. marry not according to will, then upon such marriage to convey to trustees, as to one moiety to the use of D. for life; then to trustees to preserve contingent remainders; remainder to her first and every other son, being Protestant, with remainders over; and as to other moiety, to the son of his daughter E., in like manner. A. dies, D. attains her full age; and upon a treaty of marriage with F., applies to B. and C. for a conveyance to herself for life; remainder to her intended husband for life; remainder to the issue of her body: B. executes such conveyance, but C. refuses; D. suffers a recovery of the whole to use of herself in fee, and then marries F., who made a considerable settlement upon her; she covenants to settle her estate upon husband and wife; remainder to first, &c., sons in tail; remainder to survivor of husband and wife in fee. They bring a bill to compel C. to convey, &c. Decreed (not an estate tail to D.) but an estate for life sans waste, ut supra, as being intent of A., upon the will, with remainders over in strict settlement. Glenorchy (Lord) v. Bosville, Cas. t. Talb. 4.

"To one for life, and to the heirs of his body," has been always held to be an estate tail; but where it is "to one for life, and after his death to the issue of his body," there is no instance where it has been so construed. Meure v. Meure, 2 Atk. 265.

One devises his lands for payment of his debts, and then to A. for life, with power to make leases, &c., remainder to the heirs male of the body of A.; though this be but the devise of a trust, and executory, and expressed to be to A. for life, yet it is an estate tail in A., barable by a fine and recovery: secus, in case of marriage articles to settle an estate on A. for life, remainder to the heirs male of his body, this being an agreement to do a future act, and in which the issue are particularly considered, and looked upon as purchasers. Bale v. Coleman, 1 P. Wms. 142.

Money to be laid out in Lands.]—A. devised 10,000*l.* to trustees in trust to be laid out in lands, and to be settled on B. for life without impeachment of waste, remainder to trustees and their heirs for the life of B. to support contingent remainders, with a power to B. to make a jointure, remainder to the heirs of the body of B., remainders over; and by the same will devises lands to B. to the same uses, and dies, leaving C. executor; B. sues C., the executor, for the deeds relating to the lands that are in his hands, and to have the money laid out in lands and settled. Decreed that B. had but one estate for life in the lands, and so not entitled to the deeds, but that they were to be brought into court, and that the lands to be bought with the money were to be settled on B. for his life only, remainder to his first, &c., son. But on appeal, B. was decreed to have an estate tail in the lands devised, and consequently to be entitled to the deeds relating thereto; though, as to the lands to be purchased, that being executory, and in the power of the court, B. was to be but tenant for life, with remainder to his first, &c., son. Papillon v. Voice, 2 P. Wms. 471; 2 W. Kelyng, 27; Fitzg. 38; 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 185, pl. 30.

One devises all his money in the government funds, to be laid out in the purchase of land of 300*l.* or 400*l.* per annum, to be settled on the eldest son, and the heirs male of his body, remainder to the second son, and the heirs male of his body, &c., and devises the rest of his personal estate to his eldest son, and the heirs male of his body; remainder to his second son, &c. The personal estate cannot be entailed; but the whole vests in the eldest son. Seale v. Seale, 1 P. Wms. 290; Pre. Ch. 421; Gilb. Eq. R. 105.

Money was to be laid out in land to be settled to the husband for life, remainder to raise portions for younger children; the money was afterwards invested by direction of the husband in S. S. annuities; afterwards, by will, he devised generally all his manors, &c., to certain uses: the money in the funds must be laid out in land. Hickman v. Bacon, 4 Bro. C. C. 333.

Money devised to be laid out in land, and settled on the children of J. S.; land is purchased and settled on them and their heirs, and one dies. Decreed the land should not survive. Saunders v. Browne, 2 Vern. 46; 3 Ch. R. 214.

Settlement to Contain no Power to Bar Entail.]—A. devises lands to trustees to pay debts and legacies, and then to settle the remainder on her son B., and the heirs of his body, with remainders over, and directs that special care should be taken in the settlement that it should never be in the power of her son to dock the entail. Decreed, the son should be only tenant for life, without impeachment of waste, and should not have an estate tail conveyed to him. Leonard v. Sussex, 2 Vern. 526.

Property to descend Unincumbered.] — A devise subject to the life interest of the testator's widow, upon trust to convey, assign, and assure freehold property "unto and to the use of my son T., and the heirs of his body lawfully issuing, but in such manner and form, nevertheless, and subject to such limitations and restrictions, as that if T. shall happen to die without leaving lawful issue, then that the property may after his death descend unincumbered unto and belong to my daughter R her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns," is an executory trust to be executed by a conveyance to the use of T. during his life with remainder to his first and other sons and daughters as purchasers in tail, with remainder to R. in fee. Thompson v. Fisher, L. R. 10 Eq. 207; 18 W. R. 860.

Dying without Issue.]—A testator directed that an estate should be purchased by his executors, and that such estate should be made hereditary, and settled upon his constituted heir. He then appointed his nephew his heir and successor, and desired that the estate should be settled upon him, and should descend to his heirs and successors in the direct male line: and in case of his nephew dying without issue, the estate to devolve upon his brother, his heirs and successors in the direct male line:—Held, that the nephew was not to take as tenant in tail in possession, but that the estate was to be settled upon him for life, with remainder to his sons in tail male, and afterwards to the next taker and his sons in like manner. Shelton v. Watson, 16 Sim. 543; 18 L. J., Ch. 223; 13 Jur. 203.

A trust created by will to purchase land, to be added and closely entailed to testator's family estate, in the possession of T. B.; testator declaring that his object was to have a head to the family, and that if T. B. should die without male issue, or dispose of the family estate, the residue of his fortune should go to A., or his nearest relative in the male line; how to be executed. Woolmore v. Burrows, 1 Sim. 512.

Death Leaving no Heirs of Body.]—Testator devised his estate to A. in case his daughter should die leaving no heirs of her body:—Held, a gift to the daughter for life, with contingent remainder to such heir of her body as should be living at the time of her death. Read v. Snell, 2 Atk. 646.

"Leaving" is a participle of the present tense, and relates to the time of the daughter's dying. Ib.

No weight has been laid on the want of the words "for life" when the intention of the testator has otherwise appeared, especially in the case of a trust executory, for then a court of equity is bound to see a settlement made agreeably to the intention of the testator. Ib.

Trust for A. and the Heirs of his body—As Counsel should advise.]—Devise to trustees of money to be laid out in land, and to be settled as counsel should advise, in trust for A., and the heirs male of his body, to take in succession and priority, and the interest of the money till laid out, to be paid to A., his sons, and issue. A. shall have but an estate for life, with remainder to the first and other sons in tail, &c. White v. Carter, Amb. 670. Affirmed, 2 Eden, 366.

Testator devised his estates to trustees, "upon trust, as counsel should advise, to convey, settle, and assure the said premises to or for the use of or in trust for his daughter J. for her life, and after her death then on the heirs of her body, &c." The court directed the estates to be settled upon J. for her life, with remainder to her first and other sons in tail general, with remainder to her daughters in tail general, &c. The limitations being to both sons and daughters in tail general, there is no necessity for a subsequent limitation to J. and the heirs of her body. Bastard v. Proby, 2 Cox, 6.

Separate Use and Gift Over.]—A., by will, directed his trustees to convey his freehold lands to his daughter, P., and so as that she alone should receive the rents, and so as her husband should not intermeddle therewith; and from and after her decease, in trust for the heirs of the body of the said P. for ever:—Held, that this was an executory trust, and that the wife took an estate for life only; therefore the husband could not have courtesy; sed secus, if it had been an estate tail. Lord Hardwicke said in this case, that the devise being to the wife's separate use, would not bar the husband; for here is a sort of seisin in the wife. And though Coke says, that to make a tenancy by the curtesy, there ought to be an inchoate right to the husband in the wife's lifetime, he does not say he should be seised of the rents and profits. Roberts v. Dixwell, 1 Atk. 607.

Testator gave one-third of his residue to his niece, which he desired might be settled by his executors, on her, for her separate use, for her life, but to devolve to her issue at her death, and, failing issue, then to revert to his nephew. The court directed the third to be settled in trust for the niece, for her separate use for life, and after her death in trust for her issue then living, and if there should be no such issue then in trust for the nephew. Stonor v. Curwen, 5 Sim. 264.

Advice to settle upon Devisee and issue male.]—A testator devised some copyhold estate to his son Thomas, and "advised him to settle it upon himself, and his issue male by his lawful wife, and for want of such issue upon Edward and his lawful issue":—Held, first, that these words created a trust; and, secondly, that Thomas was entitled to a life estate only. Parker v. Bolton, 5 L. J., Ch. 98.

Joint Tenancy turned into Tenancy in Common.]—In an executory trust a court of equity is sometimes obliged to depart from the words of a will, in order to direct a conveyance to be made, which will answer the intention of the testator. Synge v. Hales, 2 Ball & B. 507.

A devise after the death of the survivor of testator's daughters, to all and every the child and children of his daughter S., who should be living at the time of her death, and to the heirs of such child or children, for ever, equally, share and share alike, afterwards revoked by a codicil, reciting the devise, and in lieu of it directing the trustees, upon the death of the survivor of his daughters, to convey the lands charged with 1,000*l.* for a granddaughter to the two sons of his daughter S. and their heirs; the 1,000*l.* to be paid by the grandsons as soon as they became entitled to the possession of the estate. The grandsons take as tenants in common. Id. 499.

Devise to trustees, as soon as his three daughters attained their respective ages of twenty-one, to convey to them and the heirs of their bodies as joint tenants, this is not a joint estate, but to be construed as near as may be; so that the conveyance must be at twenty-one respectively, with cross remainders. Marryat v. Townly, 1 Ves. Sen. 102.

Residuary Devise—Trust to Entail.] — A testator who was seised in fee of three estates, devised one of them, called the Tempo Estate, to his daughter Letitia for life, with remainder to her issue in tail, and, in default of such issue, to his nephew Robert James, for life, with remainder to his issue in tail, with several remainders over, but leaving the ultimate reversion in fee undisposed of. He then devised the two remaining estates to his other daughters in strict settlement, but made no disposition of the ultimate reversions in fee. The testator was also seised of divers freehold lands, and was possessed of considerable personal property, and after devising various parts of his freehold lands to the different persons, and bequeathing some pecuniary legacies, he concluded with these words: "I leave and bequeath the rest, residue, and remainder of my properties, both freehold and personal, of whatsoever nature and kind I may die possessed of, to my brother Robert; and if my said brother Robert shall survive me, I request and desire that he shall convert all the personal property into fee simple property, and at his decease leave the same entailed on his son Robert James, in the same manner as I have myself entailed the Tempo Estate":—Held, that the freehold estates which passed under the residuary devise, as well as the residuary personal property, are within the trust to entail contained in the residuary devise. Held, also, that this trust was to be executed by giving a life estate to Robert James, with remainder to his sons and daughters in tail, according to the limitations of the Tempo Estate. Tennent v. Tennent, 1 Dr. 161; 1 Jo. & Lat. 379; 7 Ir. Eq. R. 361.

"Issue" including Children and Grandchildren.]—It does not follow, because the word "issue" in one part of the will means children only, that it should have that meaning also in another part; and where, after a bequest to A. and B. and their issue, in the sense of children, the residue was given to A. and B. equally, and to be divided between them, with benefit of survivorship, upon the death of either under twenty-one; not to be subject to the control of their husbands, but to be held in trust for them and their issue respectively until they attained twenty-one, if unmarried, or if married until a proper settlement could be made upon them and their issue, so that they should receive the dividends exclusively of their husbands, and if they both died under twenty-one, and without issue, then over; both attained twenty-one, and one of them died leaving children and grandchildren:—Held, that both the children and grandchildren were entitled to her share per capita as tenants in common. Head v. Randall, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 231; 7 Jur. 298.

A testator directed his property to be divided between his children at twenty-five, share and share alike, and all moneys inherited by his daughters to be placed in the hands of trustees, to be settled on them for the sole use of themselves and their lawful issue:—Held, that "strict settlement" was not intended by these words, but the money inherited was to be settled upon the daughters and their lawful issue, which would have the effect of giving to the daughters an absolute interest. Samuel v. Samuel, 14 L. J., Ch. 222.

Vague Direction to Settle "On Marriage."]—A father directed his property to be divided into nine shares, and gave one share and a half to each of his two daughters, "to be settled on themselves at their marriage." At his death the two daughters were infants. The two daughters having attained twenty-one, and being unmarried:—Held, that they were entitled to their shares absolutely, and that there was no trust for a settlement which the court could execute. Magrath v. Morehead, 41 L. J., Ch. 120; L. R., 12 Eq. 491; 24 L. T. 868.

Direction to take Testator's Name.]—A testator directed his estates and house property to be settled on his son, D., and his heirs male; and should he have no heirs male, then the property to go to his grandson, B., on his taking the name of D., in addition to his own, within twelve months after his succession: and in the event of his having no heirs male, then the estate to go to his brother and his heirs male, he taking the name of D.:—Held, that an executory trust was created, which the court directed to be carried out by a settlement, with limitations to the several devisees for life, and remainders to their sons in tail, successively. Duncan v. Bluett, Ir. R. 4 Eq. 469; 19 W. R. 41.

Testator directed his estates to be settled on G. R. for life, with remainder to his issue in tail male in strict settlement, upon condition that all persons from time to time to come into possession of the estates should take and use the name and arms of T.:—Held, that the estates ought to be settled on G. R. for life, with remainder to his sons successively in tail male, with remainder to his daughters as tenants in common, with cross-remainders in tail male: and that the proviso to be inserted in the settlement, as to taking the name and arms and for giving over the estates on default, ought to be so expressed as to take away the estates from the defaulting party and his descendants only; that is, if a grandson of G. R. were the defaulting party, the consequence ought not to extend to the grandson's brothers. Trevor v. Trevor, 13 Sim. 108; 11 L. J., Ch. 417; 6 Jur. 863. Affirmed. 1 H. L. Cas. 239.

Testator made two wills, one of his estates in Sussex, and the other of his estates in Bedfordshire. By the latter he devised those estates to trustees in trust to settle them on G. R., who was heir to the barony of D., for life, with remainder to his issue in tail male in strict settlement; "Upon the like condition to that I have made my will of my Sussex estates, so far as the change of circumstances will permit, that the said estates shall go over to the party next entitled, on the person for the time being possessed becoming entitled to the barony of D.":—Held, regard being had to the will of the Sussex estates, that the succession of a child or any male issue of a child of G. R. to the barony ought not to exclude that child or his issue male from the enjoyment of the Bedfordshire estates, unless some other child or the issue male of some child of G. R. were in existence to whom those estates might go over. Ib.

Devise after Life Interests to Convey "in due Course of Entail."]—A testator devised to trustees, to the use of eight persons successively for life, and afterwards in trust to convey to all the sons and daughters of the eight who should be then living, and the heirs of their bodies "respectively in a due course of entail;" and he empowered his sister to cut down the estates of children "thereafter born of the eight to life estates." The plaintiff was a child of one of the eight born at the date of the will:—Held, that though the trust was executory, she was tenant in tail, and not tenant for life. Randall v. Daniel, 24 Beav. 193.

Settlement whereby real estate was conveyed in consideration of natural love and affection to trustees and their heirs, to the use of such persons as the settlor should appoint, and in default to the use of settlor for life, with certain intermediate uses, and then upon trust to convey the property to all and every other the sons and daughters of G., and to all and every other the sons and daughters of S., and so on of six other persons in succession, who should be then living, and to the heirs male and female of his, her, and their body and bodies respectively, in a course of entail; the sons and daughters of G. and the heirs of his, her, and their body and bodies respectively, to take and be preferred before all the other persons last above named; with a similar clause for S. and each of the other six persons named, the sons of all and every the persons last named, and the heirs of his and their body and bodies to take before the daughters and the heirs of her and their bodies. The settlor then by his will devised other lands to trustees to the use of certain persons for life, and after the termination thereof upon trust to convey the estate to all the sons and daughters of eight persons and the heirs of their bodies respectively in a due course of entail, with power to one of the tenants for life to cut down the estates of children thereafter to be born, to life estates. Upon the above settlement it was held that the daughters of G. took in priority to the sons of S.; and that a daughter of G., who at the death of the last tenant for life was the only child of G., took an estate tail in the devised estate. Ib.

Held, also, that in construing the will, there being no ambiguity upon it, the settlement must not be looked at for the purpose of construing the will. Ib.

"Family."]—A testator directed that upon the death of his wife, to whom he gave a life interest in all his property, both real and personal, his nephew, whom he named, should be heir to all his property not otherwise disposed of; but added, that as he had had little intercourse with his nephew, and was apprehensive that his habits might require some control, whatever portion of the property might be possessed by him was to be secured by the executors for the benefit of his family:—Held, that the real estate was to be settled on the nephew for life, with remainder to his sons successively in tail male, with remainder to his daughters as tenants in common in fee, and the personal estate upon the nephew for life, with remainder to all his children as joint tenants, with a proviso, that in the event of all the children dying under twenty-one, and daughters unmarried, or if sons, without issue, the personalty should be held in trust for the nephew absolutely. White v. Briggs, 2 Ph. 583; 17 L. J., Ch. 196.

Family Arrangements—Erroneous Decree—Re-hearing.]—A will directed real estate to be settled to uses which did not exhaust the fee. In a suit to carry out the trusts of the will, to which the persons beneficially interested, who were an infant and a married woman, and the trustees of the will, were parties, the court approved of a settlement purporting to be made in accordance with the will, the uses of which did exhaust the fee:—Held, first, that the decree approving the settlement was erroneous. Head v. Godlee, Johns. 536; 29 L. J., Ch. 633; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 495; 8 W. R. 141.

But secondly, semble, that in a suit by persons claiming under one of the beneficiaries against persons claiming under the other beneficiary through the medium of the uses in excess of the limitations directed by the will, the court was bound by the former decree until set aside upon a re-hearing. Ib.

Directions to settle on Descendants of Mother of Devisee in Fee.]—Devise to A. in fee, with directions to settle on descendants of his mother for their several lives, &c., A. may limit an inheritance to effectuate the general intent. Godolphin v. Godolphin, 1 Ves. Sen. 21.

Direction to Settle with Power to Beneficiaries to Lease.]—A testator by his will directed the trustees therein appointed, to call in a certain sum of money to which he was entitled, and invest the same in the purchase of freehold estates in lands or hereditaments, of a clear estate of inheritance for the use of his son A. for his natural life, and after his death to the use of his first and other sons, according to seniority of age and priority of birth; and in case the said A. should happen to die without issue male, then in trust for his second son B. and the heirs male of his body, according to seniority of age and priority of birth; and desired that his said sons, and the several persons who should be in possession of such estates, should have a power to make leases not exceeding three lives or thirty-one years, at the full improved value:—Held, that A. was entitled to an estate tail in the lands to be purchased. Herbert v. Blunden, 1 Dr. & War. 78.

Power to raise Moneys for Portions.]—L. by his will devised his manors to trustees upon trust, to convey the same to his son J., for life, with remainder to trustees to preserve contingent remainders; with remainder to the second and other younger sons of J., in tail male. There was no limitation to the first son of J.; but the declaration of the trust of the term contained a provision to raise money for the daughters, on failure of issue male of the body of J. The will also provided, that in case J. should have any children, other than and besides an eldest or only son, then J. might raise money for the portion of younger sons or daughters:—Held, that the true construction of the will was, that the first son should have an estate tail male in reversion, after the death of his father. Langston v. Pole, Tam. 119: 7 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 185; 31 R. R. 74. S. C. at law, 5 Bing, 228; 2 M. & P. 490; 7 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 1.

Direction to convey Lands to Right Heirs of Tenant for Life.]—Under an executory trust in a will to settle lands, to be purchased with certain funds, upon A. for life, and afterwards according to her appointment, and, in default of appointment, to convey to the right heirs of A., with a similar trust as to the residue of the fund not laid out in the purchase of land; the trust, in default of appointment, being for the executors or administrators of A., it was held, that, as A. took an absolute interest in the money under the last trust, in default of appointment, the direction to convey the lands to her right heirs must be construed as words of limitation, and not to vest any estate in her heirs as purchasers. Webb v. Shaftesbury (Earl), 3 Myl. & K. 590.

Direction to Settle if Daughter married a Professional Man.]—Testator directed that if his daughter should marry a professional gentleman, or a man embarked in trade or business, and not possessed of landed property whereon to charge a suitable provision for her, certain trust funds should be settled upon her for life, and, after her decease, the principal to the issue of her marriage; but if she should marry a gentleman possessed of landed estate and he should make a suitable provision for her, and settle his estate on the issue of the marriage, that the trust fund should be paid to her husband. The daughter married a country gentleman not possessed of any landed estate, and not a professional gentleman, or embarked in any trade or business. He afterwards purchased a landed estate, and offered to make a settlement of it upon being paid his wife's fortune; but it was held, that the trust fund should be settled according to the directions in the will; and that the husband was not entitled to a life interest therein. Briscoe v. Briscoe, 1 Jo. & Lat. 334; 7 Ir. Eq. R. 123.

Gift in Succession or to a Class as Tenants in Common—Cross Remainders.]—Testator directed his trustees to purchase lands in the counties of N. and D. to be settled, on the death of the eldest son of J. S. without issue (which happened), to the use of every son of J. S. then living, or who should be born in the testator's lifetime, and the assigns of such son during his life, with remainder to trustees to preserve contingent remainders; but to permit such son and his assigns to receive the rents during his life, and after his death to the use of such son's first and every other son successively in tail male, and on failure of such issue to the use of the testator's right heirs:—Held, that the younger sons of S. took as tenants in common for life, with remainder as to each son's share to his first and other sons in tail male, with cross remainders over. Surtees v. Surtees, L. R. 12 Eq. 400; 25 L. T. 288; 19 W. R. 1043.

Testatrix by her will gave 500*l.* to each of her two nieces to be settled as she should thereinafter describe, and directed that the provision therein made for her nieces should not be subject to the control of any husbands they might marry, but should remain vested in her executors in trust until a proper settlement was made. And by a codicil she directed that if either of her nieces should die without leaving issue, the legacy given to her should devolve to the other niece and her children, with a gift over if both should die without issue:—Held, that this was an executory trust, and that the nieces took life interests with remainder to their children and cross remainders between them. Holloway v. Collier, 1 W. R. 266.

A testator empowered his trustees to purchase freeholds, "to the amount of 1,500*l.* of his personal estate, for the use of A. during life, and then to be divided among his issue, if any":—Held, that this was executory, and that A. took for life, with remainder to his children as tenants in common in tail, with cross remainders between them in tail, with an ultimate reversion in fee to A. Hadwen v. Hadwen, 23 Beav. 551.

d. Express Directions to settle in "Strict Settlement."

General Rule.]—When the general intent is to make a strict settlement, it shall prevail, though some of the limitations may seem contingent; but where the intent to create an estate tail is not plain, but doubtful, the court will lay hold of anything, rather than put it in the power of a person on a remote contingency to bar all subsequent remainders. Lethieullier v. Tracy, 3 Atk. 781, 797; Amb. 204. And see 3 Ken. 40.

Proviso that if any of the tenants for life, in a devise and executory trust to convey in strict settlement, shall become possessed of the family estate, the devise or limitation directed shall thereupon cease and become void and not take effect; and the person next in remainder, under the said limitations or directions, thereupon become entitled to the possession. The first tenant in tail is entitled under the proviso, notwithstanding the descent of the other estate upon his father for life. Stanley v. Stanley, 16 Ves. 491.

Direction to trustees to correct any defect or incorrect expression in the will, and to form the settlement, from what appears to them to be the testator's real meaning, does not authorise them to change the limitations. Ib.

Devise in strict settlement, with power to the tenants for life to jointure, on condition that two-thirds of the portion should, upon such marriage, be settled, one-third upon the eldest son of the marriage, and one other third upon the younger children. Upon the intention that the settlement should be conformable to the limitations of the real estate, a trust for the father for life was established, and the interest of the eldest son was not to be devested, except by his death under twenty-one, without issue male. Burrell v. Crutchley, 15 Ves. 544.

In an executory trust to be effected by the court, it is sufficient if it can satisfy itself of the testator's intention to carry it into execution; therefore, where testator gave his real estate in A., to a devisee in strict settlement, and ordered other estates to be sold, and converted into personalty, and the produce, with the residue of his property, to be laid out in land in A., contiguous and convenient to his estate in A., and by strong expressions (though without direct words) showed he intended it to go to the same uses, it was decreed so to be. Browne v. De Last, 4 Bro. C. C. 527.

Devise to Heir-at-law and his Issue.]—Devise to the heir-at-law and his issue male in strict settlement, remainder in trust to be sold, and the money to be distributed among certain persons, or the survivors or survivor of them, and that the share of one should, previous to her marriage, be settled upon her for life, and after her death upon her issue, in default of issue upon her right heirs; the produce of the sale is to be considered as personal estate, and vests in the survivors at the death of the tenant for life, without issue male. A settlement in trust for the husband for life, then for the wife for life, then for the children as they should appoint; in default of appointment, equally; if no children, according to their joint appointment: in default thereof, to the husband, his executors, &c. is a sufficient execution of the direction in the will. Brograve v. Winder, 2 Ves. 634. See 20 R. R. 261.

Devise of Lands in Trust for One and his Heirs in Strict Entail.]—If lands are devised in trust to be settled on A. and his heirs, in strict entail, the lands ought to be settled on A. for life, and on the persons designated as his heirs, in succession. Testator devised lands, subject to an annuity to his wife, to his son for life, with remainder to the son's first and other sons in tail, with remainder, subject to another annuity, to his wife, to his grandson, and the grandson's first and other sons in like manner, with remainders over; and he gave his residuary personal estate to his son. The son died without issue; and, thereupon, the testator, by a codicil, charged the lands with three further annuities, one for his wife, another for his daughter, and the third for her husband: and gave his residuary personal estate to his wife. He afterwards made two other codicils, but they were not duly attested. He then made a fourth, which was duly attested, "revoking several of the dispositions, heretofore made by me in my said will and codicils, of all my freehold, copyhold, and personal estate of every kind; and, instead of such devise, disposition, and bequest thereof, I do give all my freehold, copyhold, and personal estate of every kind, and wheresoever situate, unto my daughter, for her life; and, after the determination of that estate, unto my grandson and his heirs in strict entail as in my will directed." He then directed that his grandson, who was an infant, should not be put in possession of his estates until he attained thirty-one; and that, in the interval, the rents should be accumulated for the benefit of his grandson and heirs; "and, in failure of issue of my said grandson, I order that my said estates and effects shall go and descend as is by my said will directed." The testator then confirmed the several annuities and donations bequeathed in his will and former codicils, and gave another annuity to his wife; thereby, in all other respects but what was above mentioned, ratifying and confirming his will and codicils:—Held, that the grandson took, not an estate tail, but only an estate for life in the lands. Graves v. Hicks, 11 Sim. 536; 10 L. J., Ch. 185; 5 Jur. 674. And see S. C. at law, nom. Doe d. Hearle v. Hicks, 8 Bing. 475; 1 Cl. & F. 20; 6 Bligh (N.S.) 37; 1 M. & Sc. 759 H. L.—(E.)

Tenant for Life punishable for Waste.]—When an executory trust for the settlement of freehold estates in strict settlement directs, either expressly or by reference to the trusts of other property, that certain persons shall take life estates, the use of the words "in strict settlement" does not make the tenants for life dispunishable for waste. Stanley v. Colthurst, 39 L. J., Ch. 650; L. R. 10 Eq. 259; 18 W. R. 969; 23 L. T. 761.

Form of Settlement.]—Directions as to the proper settlement to be made where property was directed by will to be "settled strictly." Loch v. Bagley, L. R. 4 Eq. 122; 15 W. R. 1103.

Bill for Strict Settlement Dismissed—Acquiescence.]—Bill for a strict settlement, after long acquiescence by plaintiff's ancestor, and when impossible to bar the remainder, dismissed. Parker v. Philips, 1 Ves. Sen. 530.

e. Directions to Settle on a Female.

Legacy to Married Woman to be Settled on her in Italy.]—A legacy given to a married woman, to be settled on her in Italy, was ordered to be paid to a banker in Italy, on his giving security that it should be settled, according to the law of Italy, on the wife, for her separate use. Brown v. Tatnall, 6 L. J., Ch. 371.

Children.]—Bequest of the testator's property to his wife to bring up and educate his children, and when they should come of age, to settle on them what she should deem prudent, reserving to herself a sufficient maintenance; and, at her death, the property remaining to be equally divided amongst his children; with a gift to trustees for the children, in case of the marriage of his widow:—Held, that the widow took a life interest in the property, with a power to settle or appoint the same on or to the children of the testator, but not on or to his grandchildren; and that the children took vested interests in the property at the testator's death, liable to be divested by such appointment. Kennerley v. Kennerley, 10 Hare, 160; 16 Jur. 649.

Where a precatory trust has been created by will in favour of "children," simpliciter, the trustee may, in executing the trust, limit the shares of daughters to their separate use. Willis v. Kymer, 47 L. J., Ch. 90; 7 Ch. D. 181; 38 L. T. 207.

Daughters' Shares—To be Settled on Themselves Strictly.]—Where a testator directed that his daughters' shares under his will should be "settled upon themselves strictly":—Held, that the income of each daughter's share should, during the joint lives of herself and her husband, be paid to her for life for her separate use, without power of anticipation; and if she died first, then her share should go as she should by will appoint, and in default of appointment to her next-of-kin, exclusively of her husband; and if she survived, then to her absolutely. Loch v. Bagley, L. R. 4 Eq. 122; 15 W. R. 1103.

—— To be Settled on Marriage.]—A father directed his property to be divided into nine shares, and gave one and a half share to each of his two daughters, "to be settled on themselves at their marriage." At his death the two daughters were infants. The two daughters having attained twenty-one, and being unmarried:—Held, that they were entitled to their shares absolutely, and that there was no trust for a settlement which the court could execute. Magrath v. Morehead, 41 L. J., Ch. 120; L. R. 12 Eq. 491; 24 L. T. 868.

A testator gave to his daughter 15,000*l.*, to be kept in trust by his executors till she should attain the age of twenty-one or marry with consent, whichever might first happen, when this sum was to be settled on his daughter, but, failing her attaining twenty-one or having issue by such marriage, then the money to devolve upon others. The daughter attained the age of twenty-one, without having been married:—Held, that she was entitled to the legacy absolutely, without any settlement being made. Arnold v. Arnold, 16 Sim. 404; 18 L. J., Ch. 90.

—— Marriage under Age without Consent of Trustees.]—J. T. by his will gave all his property to trustees in trust for his three daughters equally, to be paid to them as they respectively attained twenty-one, or married with the consent of the trustees. Provided that, if they married with such consent under age, the trustees at their discretion might pay the share to such daughter so marrying, or settle it upon her or her issue, with a gift over. One of the daughters having married under age and without consent, the question was, whether her share could be settled, the trustees being willing to settle it:—Held, that there was nothing in the will to authorise a settlement, and nothing could be done until she attained twenty-one. Taylor v. Austen, 1 Drew. 459; 1 W. R. 252.

Bequest—Fund "to be Settled."]—A testator bequeathed, as follows: "To my daughter A., wife of M. W., I bequeath 10,000*l.* This amount to be settled upon her for her life, and to be invested for her in good securities in the names of two or more trustees. At her death 8,000*l.* of the above sum to be divided equally amongst her children, and the remaining 2,000*l.* to be given to her husband if living; if deceased, then the whole amount is to be equally divided amongst her children." The daughter and her husband and child applied for the sanction of the court to a settlement of the legacy:—Held, that a settlement ought to be directed, treating the directions in the will as instructions for a settlement. Parrott, In re, Walter v. Parrott, 33 Ch. D. 274; 55 L. T. 132; 34 W. R. 553—C. A.

—— To be Paid or Settled by Executors on Infant attaining Twenty-one Years.]—Testator gave 5,000*l.* stock to a female infant, to be paid or transferred to or settled on her, by his executors, by such deed or instrument in writing as they should think most prudent and proper on her attaining twenty-one. The infant married in the testator's lifetime, and afterwards attained twenty-one. The court ordered the stock to be transferred to her on her sole receipt. Laing v. Laing, 10 Sim. 315; 9 L. J., Ch. 48; 3 Jur. 1119.

A father gave the residue of his estate in trust for all his children, who, being sons, should attain twenty-one, or being daughters should attain that age or marry, and if any of his children should die before attaining a vested interest, leaving issue, their shares to go to their children with a proviso that, notwithstanding the trusts aforesaid, on the marriage of any daughter a moiety of her share should be held in trust for such daughter for life, and afterwards for her children:—Held, that the daughters who had attained twenty-one, and had not married, were entitled to the whole of their shares absolutely. Dowling's Trusts, In re, L. R. 14 Eq. 463.

—— To be Paid upon Marriage and to be Settled on Feme Sole.]—Bequest of 2,000*l.*, for the benefit of a feme sole, "to be paid upon her marriage, and to be settled upon her by her settlement," the interest to be paid to her in the meantime; and, in case she should not marry before attaining the age of thirty-five years, the principal sum to be paid to herself. The legatee married under the age of thirty-five years, and applied for payment of a sum of money in court, which represented the legacy:—Held, that a settlement should be made of the legacy upon the legatee and her children. Duckett v. Thompson, 11 L. R., Ir. 424.

Restraint on Anticipation—Articles for Settlement.]—Where articles for a settlement directed the property to be conveyed on trust to pay the income to the wife, or such person as she should appoint, during her life, for her own absolute use and benefit, free from marital control and liability:—Held, that in the settlement a restraint against anticipation should not be inserted. Symonds v. Wilkes, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 659; 12 L. T. 598; 13 W. R. 1026.

—— Legacy to Married Woman Judicially Separated from Husband.]—A testator by his will dated July 2, 1870, gave a legacy to a married woman for her separate use without power of anticipation, and directed that "for the purpose of securing to her the separate enjoyment without power of anticipation against any husband for the time being, the trustee should settle the legacy in such manner as would carry out the said purpose." Previously to the date of the will the legatee had been judicially separated from her husband, and had ever since lived apart from him:—Held, that she was entitled to have the legacy paid to her. Munt v. Glynes, 41 L. J., Ch. 639; 27 L. T. 366; 20 W. R. 823.

—— Form of Settlement where Direction to hold Fund free from Husband's Control.]—Form of settlement directed by the court, where a testator had directed his trustees to hold a fund in trust for his daughters, to be settled on them and their issue free from their husbands' control during the life of such daughters. Stanley v. Jackman, 23 Beav. 450; 5 W. R. 302.

Form of settlement directed by the court, where a testator directed personalty to be settled on his daughters, independent of their coverture. Eustace v. Robinson, 7 L. R., Ir. 83.

A father gave real and personal property to trustees for his daughter, and directed that, if she should marry, it should be so settled that she might enjoy the income during her life for her separate use:—Held, that the trust for the separate use during life, being merely executory, should be carried into execution with a restraint upon anticipation. Dunnill's Trusts, In re, Ir. R., 6 Eq. 322.

A testator, by his will, gave real and personal property to his daughter A. absolutely; but by a codicil made subsequent to her marriage, he directed that "it should be settled to the exclusion of her present or any future husband, that the same might belong to her during her life, and be secured for the benefit of her children, equally, after death, so that the issue of any such child dying in her lifetime might take his or her parent's share;" and in default of such children or other issue over:—Held, that the property must be settled in trust for A. for life, to her separate use without power of anticipation; and, after her decease, upon trust for such of her children as should survive her, and for the issue living at her death of such of her children as should not survive her equally as tenants in common, the issue to take per stirpes, but inter se equally as tenants in common. That there should be limitations, in the nature of cross-remainders, in favour of such of the children and issue as should survive A. in respect of the share of any child dying in her lifetime without leaving issue, and in respect of the share of any issue of any child similarly dying. That the realty should be settled as realty: and (as the testator, by simply directing a settlement, must have intended) with powers of leasing and sale and exchange, and with a receipt clause; and that the settlement should contain provisions for maintenance, education, and advancement, and a power to appoint new trustees. Turner v. Sargent, 17 Beav. 515; 2 W. R. 50.

—— Impeachment of Waste.]—A grandfather devised his residuary real estate to trustees for his granddaughter in fee at twenty-one or marriage, and directed that if she should marry under twenty-one his trustees should settle the real estate on her for life for her separate use, without power of anticipation, with remainder to her children as tenants in common in tail, and he authorised his trustees to give a life estate to his granddaughter's husband, to commence after her death, and to be either with or without impeachment of waste:—Held, that the life estate given to the granddaughter must not be without impeachment of waste: such an estate being inconsistent with the restraint on anticipation. Clive v. Clive, 41 L. J., Ch. 386; L. R. 7 Ch. 433; 26 L. T. 409; 20 W. R. 477.

f. Directions to Settle Personalty as Heirlooms or on the Trusts of Freeholds.

Family Jewels.]—A testatrix bequeathed jewels to S. "to go and be held as heirlooms by him and by his eldest son on his decease, and to go and descend to the eldest son of such eldest son, and so on to the eldest son of his descendants, as far as the rules of law or equity would permit," and she requested him to do all in his power, by his will or otherwise, to give effect to that her wish:—Held, that these words created an executory trust in S., and that the jewels must be settled on him for life, with remainder to his eldest son for life, with remainder to the eldest son of such eldest son, but to be divested in case of his death in his father's life, or after his father's death under twenty-one; but that, subject to these limitations, the beneficial interest in the jewels remained in him. Shelley v. Shelley, 37 L. J., Ch. 357; L. R. 6 Eq. 540; 16 W. R. 1036.

Family jewels may be settled as heirlooms independently of any real estate. Ib.

"To select and set aside Collection."]—A testatrix bequeathed certain legacies to A. C., sixth Earl of E., and as to all her household furniture, paintings, books, china, and the whole contents of her house, she bequeathed the same to her trustees and executors upon trust that they should in the first place select and set aside a collection of the best paintings, statuary, and china for the said Earl of E., and his successors, to be held and settled as heirlooms, and to go with the title:—Held, that the gift was a clear direction to settle, and created an executory trust, and a settlement was directed (to be settled in chambers) giving a life interest to the sixth Earl, with remainder to the next heir to the earldom for his life. Johnston, In re, Cockerell v. Essex (Earl), 53 L. J., Ch. 645; 26 Ch. D. 538; 52 L. T. 44; 32 W. R. 684.

Leaseholds.]—Covenant in marriage settlement, to settle leasehold estates in trust for such persons, and such or the like estates, ends, intent, and purposes, as far as the law would allow, as declared concerning real estates limited to the first and other sons in tail male, with several remainders; the court, in executing the covenant, declared that no person should be entitled to the absolute property unless he should attain twenty-one, or die under that age, leaving issue male. Newcastle (Duke) v. Lincoln (Countess), 3 Ves. 387. But see the variations in this decree, id. 398 n., and 12 Ves. 218, on appeal.

Other Personal Estate.]—If a testator directs his real estate to be settled on his son, his heir apparent, for life, with remainder to the first and other sons of his son in tail, with remainder to A. for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail, with remainders to other persons and their sons in like manner, and, ultimately, on his right heirs, and his personal estate to be settled on the same persons, in the same order and succession, and for the same estates and interests, so far as the nature of the property and the rules of law and equity will admit of, the court, if a suit is instituted immediately after the testator's death for the purpose of having a settlement made, will order the ultimate limitation of the personal and real estate to be made to the person who is the testator's heir. Boydell v. Golightly, 14 Sim. 328; 9 Jur. 2.

A settlement, on marriage, of real estate, upon trust for the intended wife for life, remainder to the husband for life, and, after the death of the survivor, "in trust for and to be released and conveyed unto" the children, as the parents or the survivor should appoint; in default, "in trust for and to be released and conveyed unto" the children, as tenants in common in tail; and in default of issue, if the wife should survive the husband, "in trust for and to be released and conveyed unto" the wife, "her heirs and assigns for ever." By the same deed personal property was assigned to the trustees, upon trust to pay the income and principal, "to such person and persons, for such uses, ends, intents, and purposes, and in such manner and form, and subject to the same powers, provisoes, contingencies, declarations, and agreements, as were expressed concerning the payment by the trustees of the rents and profits of the real estate, and concerning their release and conveyance of the same, or as near thereto as circumstances and the nature of the case would admit":—Held, that this trust of the personalty was not rendered executory by reference to the direction to release and convey the real estate, such direction being merely superadded to a distinct declaration of trust of such real estate. Doncaster v. Doncaster, 3 K. & J. 26; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1066.

This construction was not altered by a proviso immediately following the limitation of the personal estate, that the ultimate limitation in favour of the heirs of the wife should, with respect to the personal estate, be construed to be for her next-of-kin; the meaning of such proviso being only, that if, by the failure of the preceding limitations, the real estate should at any time become vested in possession in the heirs of the wife, the personalty, which was settled upon corresponding trusts, should belong to her next-of-kin. Ib.

There was only one child of the marriage, who died an infant in the lifetime of his father. On the death of the father:—Held, that such child took an absolute interest in the personalty, subject to open and let in other children, if any. Ib.

—— Share of Real Estate under Will devised in Trust for Sale.]—Part of the personal property consisted of a share of real estate under a will, by which it had been devised in trust for sale; and the settlement contained a power for the trustees, with the consent of the husband and wife, and with the concurrence of the persons entitled to other shares of this property, to elect to take it as real estate, and to hold it upon the trusts of the other real estate contained in the settlement:—Held, that this power did not alter the construction of the limitations of the personal estate; but that, when the settled personal estate became the absolute property of the child, the power could no longer be exercised. Ib.

Executed Settlements.]—See SETTLEMENT.

g. Directions to settle Property to go with a Title.

Barony in Fee.—Form of Settlement.]—Estates settled so as to go along with a barony in fee. Form of settlement approved of by the court, in pursuance of a direction contained in a deed executed by the late Lord Le Despencer, that his estates should, so far as the law would allow, be strictly settled, after his death, so as to go along with the baronial dignity of Le Despencer (which was a barony in fee), and be held and enjoyed by the person for the time being possessed of the same dignity, for the support thereof, so long as the person possessed of the same dignity should be a lineal descendant of the late lord, but with a provision that in case the dignity should, at any time or times within the limits prescribed by law for strict settlements, be suspended or in abeyance, the rents and profits of the same estates should, during the continuance of every such suspension or abeyance, be equally divided amongst the co-heirs per stirpes of the person or persons respectively by reason of whose death or deaths without issue male, such suspension or abeyance should be, for the time being, occasioned. The court approved of a settlement in which the latter object was secured by a proviso, subject to be defeated by a recovery, and not as suggested by the court at the first hearing, by a term of 1,000 years, prior in limitation to all the other uses; and the court also declined to appoint a protector of the settlement, by reason of his irresponsibility if appointed. Bankes v. Le Despencer, 11 Sim. 508; 12 L. J., Ch. 293; 7 Jur. 210.

Estate to be attached to Title as closely as possible.]—A., having a power of revocation and new appointment over an estate, of which B., his heir, was tenant in tail, by his will directed the estate "to be attached to his title as closely as possible":—Held, that the estate of B., and those of all other tenants in tail in esse at A.'s death (living in the line of the title), were abridged to estates for life only. Dorchester (Lord) v. Effingham (Earl) 2 Beav. 180, n.

Course of Entail to correspond as far as might be practicable with newly created Peerage.]—Property was by a codicil directed to be settled "in a course of entail to correspond as far as may be practicable" with the limitations of a newly created peerage contained in letters patent, which limitations were to a countess for life, remainder to her second son and the heirs male of his body, remainder to her third and other younger sons and the heirs male of their respective bodies successively: —Held, that a strict settlement of the property ought to be directed corresponding in order of succession with the limitations of the peerage, but limiting the estates of the second and other younger sons of the countess, being lives in esse at the death of the testatrix, to estates for their respectives lives, with remainder to their first and other sons in tail male, mainly on the ground that the object was to endow the title, and that a peerage being inalienable, such limitations would best correspond in effect with the limitations of the peerage. Sackville-West v. Holmesdale (Viscount), 39 L. J., Ch. 505; L. R. 4 H. L. 543.

The codicil, by which the settlement was directed, referred to a will thereby revoked, limiting a different course of entail, and containing powers of jointuring and charging portions, and making the estates for life unimpeachable for waste. The codicil only directed that the settlement should "contain such powers, provisoes, declarations, and agreements, as the trustees therein named should consider proper, or their counsel should advise": —Held, that the will ought to be the model of the settlement, and that the estates of tenants for life should be without impeachment of waste, and that the settlement should contain powers of jointuring and charging portions to the limits contained in the revoked devise. Ib.

The vice-chancellor subsequently held that clauses postponing the vesting of portions until the death of the person creating them, and providing for the cesser of jointures and portions charged on the estates upon the person charging them succeeding to the earldom of D., ought not to be inserted in the settlement. Holmesdale (Viscount) v. Sackville-West, 40 L. J., Ch. 795; L. R. 12 Eq. 280.

Executed Settlements.]—See SETTLEMENT.

h. Powers inserted in the Settlement.

Powers of Appointment—Amongst children.]—A testator left to his daughter Jane the sum of 2,000*l.*, to be settled on her when she married, or to be paid to her on her attaining twenty-one; should she die not leaving issue, the 2,000*l.* to fall into the residue of his estate. Jane married in her father's lifetime. The court directed the legacy to be settled in trust for her separate use for life, remainder for her children living at her death, according to her appointment; in default of appointment, for her sons at twenty-one, and her daughters at that age or on marriage; remainder for her next-of-kin; and if she had no child living at her death, the legacy to become part of the testator's residue. Young v. Mackintosh, 13 Sim. 445; 7 Jur. 383.

In settling a fund in pursuance of a will by which the fund was bequeathed to a man until marriage and then to be settled on his wife and children, the court inserted a power for the husband and wife jointly by deed, and for the survivor by deed or will, to appoint among the children. Observations on Oliver v. Oliver (infra). Gowan, In re, Gowan v. Gowan, 50 L. J., Ch. 248; 17 Ch. D. 778.

Form of judgment settling a fund. Ib.

An order of the court making a settlement should bear the usual settlement stamp. Ib.

In a settlement of a wife's property made in pursuance of her equity an exclusive power of appointment by deed or will among her children ought to be given to her in priority to the limitations in favour of the children; and the like power was inserted in a case where the husband had, by post-nuptial deed, covenanted to settle the property on trusts not including such a power. Oliver v. Oliver, 48 L. J., Ch. 630; 10 Ch. D. 765; 27 W. R. 657.

A testator bequeathed as follows: — "To my daughter A., wife of M. W., I bequeath 10,000*l.* This amount to be settled upon her for her life, and to be invested for her in good securities in the names of two or more trustees. At her death 8,000*l.* of the above sum to be divided equally amongst her children, and the remaining 2,000*l.* to be given to her husband if living; if deceased, then the whole amount to be equally divided amongst her children." The daughter and her husband and child applied for the sanction of the court to a settlement of the legacy:—Held, that, a settlement ought to be directed, treating the directions in the will as instructions for a will:—Held, further, that the settlement ought to be framed so as to make the fund divisible only among children who, being sons, should attain the age of twenty-one, or, being daughters, attain that age or marry, and that it ought to contain the usual powers of maintenance and advancement, and a power of appointment by the daughter in default of children, with the usual limitations to herself or her next-of-kin in default of appointment, but not any power of appointment among the children, as such a power would be inconsistent with the directions for equal division. Oliver v. Oliver (supra), distinguished. Parrott, In re, Walter v. Parrott, 33 Ch. D. 274; 55 L. T. 132; 34 W. R. 553—C. A.

—— In default of Issue.]—A father directed a fund, given to his daughter, to be settled "upon her and her issue," so that "the same might not be liable or subject to the debts, control, or engagements of any husband" whom she might happen to marry during her lifetime:—Held, that the settlement ought to give the daughter a power of appointment by will, in default of issue. Stanley v. Jackman, 23 Beav. 450; 5 W. R. 302.

Form of settlement in such a case. Ib.

—— Life Estate to Husband.]—Where a testator had directed, that, in the event of the marriage of his daughter, a portion of his property should be secured to her and the issue of her marriage by a settlement or some other good assurance, in such manner as his trustees or trustee for the time being might think fit, the court, on an application to which the surviving trustee was a party, approved of a power in the settlement made on the marriage of a daughter enabling her to appoint by will a life estate in the property to her husband. Charlton v. Rendall, 11 Hare, 296.

Successive Powers of Appointment.]—Upon the marriage of H. T. with L. N., he covenanted to convey certain lands upon trust, that the same should go and be vested in the issue of H. T. by L. N., and that such issue should also be entitled to a further sum of 1,000*l.* to be charged on all other the real and personal estates of H. T. not therein comprised, but in such shares and proportions as H. T. should by deed or will appoint, and in default thereof as L. N., in case she survived H. T., should by deed or will appoint, and failing such direction in equal shares:—Held, that a court of equity would execute the articles by giving successive powers of appointment to H. T. and L. N., and in default of appointment a limitation to the children of the marriage as tenants in common in fee. Thompson v. Simpson, 1 Dr. & War. 459.

Powers of Appointment of New Trustees.]—A lady being entitled to a sum, payable at a future time, out of her father's estates, it was agreed, by articles on her marriage, that in the settlement to be made in pursuance thereof a power should be inserted for her father in his lifetime, or his executors within six months after the sum should be payable, to invest that sum in the names of trustees to be appointed for the purpose, and for the trustees, with the consent of the husband and wife, or the survivor, or of their own authority, as the case should happen, to change the securities, the trusts of the fund being for the husband for his life, then to the wife for her life, then to the children. No settlement was executed, and the father and the husband died before the fund was invested, leaving the wife surviving and four children:—Held, that the wife had no power to appoint a trustee to receive the funds. Brasier v. Hudson, 9 Sim. 11.

Where a marriage was contracted abroad, by articles stipulating that the funds settled should, "under the laws of England, be regulated, made binding, and carried into full and complete effect;" on a subsequent bill filed for carrying the articles into effect:—Held, that power to appoint new trustees, as often as should be necessary, was a proper power to be inserted in the settlement. Sampayo v. Gould, 12 Sim. 426; 11 L. J., Ch. 121.

Court will not order a clause to enable trustees to appoint others to be inserted in a conveyance, there being no provision to that effect in trust deed. Bayley v. Mansell, 4 Madd. 226.

Testator directed his real estates to be settled on certain persons in strict settlement, and that there should be inserted in the settlement so to be made powers of leasing, sale, partition, and exchange. "And my will is that, in such intended settlement shall be inserted all such other proper and reasonable powers, as are usually inserted in settlements of the like nature":—Held, that a power to appoint new trustees was a proper and reasonable power to be inserted in the settlement. Lindow v. Fleetwood, 6 Sim. 152. And see Turner v. Sargent, infra.

Powers to Jointure or Charge Portions.]—Will directed settlement to be made of real estate on A., and his first and other sons in tail with power of jointuring, leasing, sale, and exchange, and all other clauses, powers, and provisions usually inserted in settlements of same kind:—Held, these last words did not give power to charge with portions. Higginson v. Barneby, 2 Sim. & S. 616; 25 R. R. 256.

A power was reserved, in articles before marriage, to husband and wife to alter and vary the provisions and terms of the articles, in such manner as to them should seem fit, previous to the execution of the settlement:—Held, not to authorise the insertion in the settlement of a power enabling the husband to jointure a future wife, or to charge portions for younger children of a future marriage. Bedford (Duke) v. Abercorn (Marquis), 1 Myl. & Cr. 312; 5 L. J., Ch. 230.

Testator directed a settlement to be made of his estates, and a power to be inserted in it enabling the tenant for life to jointure any wife or wives, at one or several times to the extent of one-fifth part of the then ordinary annual rental of the estates:—Held, that the settlement ought to authorise the tenant for life to charge the estates with a clear yearly rent-charge not exceeding one-fifth of the yearly rent of the estates payable at the time of creating the charge. Trevor v. Trevor, 1 H. L. Cas. 239. Affirming 13 Sim. 108; 11 L. J., Ch. 417; 6 Jur. 863.

A covenant in marriage articles to settle an estate, after the payment of an annuity to the intended wife, "upon his issue" by the intended wife, must be construed as a covenant for strict settlement, and excludes the husband from creating charges in favour of younger children. Grier v. Grier, L. R. 5 H. L. 688. Affirming, Ir. R. 6 Eq. 1.

By articles of marriage it was recited that the intended husband had received 600*l.* from his intended wife, and he covenanted to settle upon her his lands, with the ordinary powers of distress and entry, and to settle the remainder of his lands "upon his issue by" his intended wife. There were several children of the marriage. Some years after the marriage he executed a deed by which he charged on his land various sums of money in favour of younger children, devising the lands themselves to his eldest son and his other sons successively in tail male:—Held, that this deed creating these charges was void, for that the covenant in the articles gave him no power to charge the lands for the benefit of the younger children, and must be interpreted to mean that he would settle the lands in the ordinary form of strict settlement. Ib.

A lady devised freehold estates to trustees for her sister E. for life, with remainder in strict settlement to her sons, excluding the second, and with powers of jointuring and charging portions. By letters patent, subsequent to the will, a barony was created and limited to E. for life, with remainder to her second son R. and the heirs male of his body, and in default of such issue to the third and younger sons of E. and the heirs male of their bodies respectively and successively. The patent contained a shifting clause, by which if any person taking thereunder should succeed to the earldom of D., and there should then or thereafter be a younger son or heir male of a younger son of E., then the succession to the barony was to devolve upon the son of E. or the heir who would be next entitled to succeed thereto if the person succeeding to the earldom of D. was dead without issue. By a subsequent codicil, the testatrix devised her estates to trustees on trust, to settle the same in a course of entail corresponding as nearly as might be with the limitations of the barony, and the provisoes affecting the same contained in the patent, and with all such powers, provisoes, declarations, and agreements as the trustees should think proper or their counsel advise. The house of lords after E.'s death declared that the estates ought to be limited in strict settlement to the second son for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail male, with remainder to the third and other younger sons of E. and the heirs male of their bodies respectively and successively in tail male, and that the settlement should contain a shifting clause similar to that in the letters patent:—Held, that clauses postponing the vesting of portions until the death of the person creating them, and providing for the cesser of jointures and portions charged on the estates upon the person charging them succeeding to the earldom of D., ought not to be inserted in the settlement. Holmesdale (Viscount) v. Sackville-West, 40 L. J., Ch. 795; L. R. 12 Eq. 280.

A testator, by his will, gave real and personal property to his daughter A., absolutely; but by a codicil made subsequent to her marriage, he directed that "it should be settled to the exclusion of her present or any future husband, that the same might belong to her during her life, and be secured for the benefit of her children, equally, after her death, so that the issue of any such child dying in her lifetime might take his or her parent's share;" and in default of such children or other issue, over:—Held, that the property must be settled in trust for A. for life, to her separate use; without power of anticipation; and, after her decease, upon trust for such of her children as should survive her, and for the issue living at her death of such of her children as should not survive her equally as tenants in common, the issue to take per stirpes, but inter se equally as tenants in common. That there should be limitations, in the nature of cross-remainders, in favour of such of the children and issue as should survive A. in respect of the share of any issue of any child similarly dying. That the realty should be settled as realty; and (as the testator, by simply directing a settlement, must have intended) with powers of leasing and sale and exchange, and with a receipt clause; and that the settlement should contain provisions for maintenance, education, and advancement, and a power to appoint new trustees. Turner v. Sargent, 17 Beav. 515; 2 W. R. 50.

Powers of Leasing.]—Articles for settlement on ward of court, with a power of leasing for twenty-one years, and other usual powers, &c., do not authorise the introduction of a power granting building leases for long terms. Pearse v. Baron, Jacob, 158.

In a settlement of personal property, the parties covenanted to settle all future acquired property upon the same trusts and subject to the same powers, or as near thereto as the nature and tenure of the property would admit of:—Held, that this authorised the insertion of a power to grant mining leases in the settlement of subsequently acquiring freeholds, the prior owner having granted such leases, though the mines had never been effectually worked under them. Scott v. Steward, 27 Beav. 367.

A reference was made to the master, to inquire whether certain proposed powers of leasing were usual in that part of Ireland in which the estates were situated, and whether any circumstances connected with the property rendered such powers expedient, and to the interest of all parties; with liberty to state special circumstances. Bedford (Duke) v. Abercorn (Marquis), 1 Myl. & Cr. 312; 5 L. J., Ch. 230.

Powers of Sale and Exchange.]—A stipulation was made, in articles before marriage, that the intended settlement, which related to estates in Ireland, should contain all the covenants, provisions, and conditions usually contained in marriage settlements made in England:—Held, to authorise the insertion of a power of sale and exchange under which lands in England might be taken in exchange for lands in Ireland. Ib.

By marriage articles, it was agreed that estates should be settled in strict settlement, and that there should be contained in the settlement powers to the husband to charge the estates, by way of mortgage, with a certain sum, and also to charge the estates with another sum for younger children, and to create terms for raising those sums, and likewise all other powers, &c., usually inserted in settlements of the like nature, and which should be proper for effecting any of the purposes aforesaid:—Held, that a power of sale and exchange might be introduced into the settlement. Hill v. Hill, 6 Sim. 136.

A will directing a settlement of estates, and that there should be inserted all proper powers for making leases, and otherwise according to circumstances, to and for the tenants for life, to be exercised by them when qualified, and when not by the trustees, does not authorise the insertion of a power of sale and exchange. Horne v. Barton, Jacob, 437.

Powers of sale and exchange inserted in a settlement under clause in articles for all usual powers. Peake v. Penlington, 2 V. & B. 311.

A will, directing settlement of estates, and that there should be inserted all proper powers for making leases, and otherwise, according to circumstances, for the tenants for life, to be exercised by them when qualified, and when not by the trustees, does not authorise the insertion of a power of sale and exchange to the trustees, to be exercised with the consent of the tenant for life. Whether the will authorises the introduction of a power of sale and exchange of any description, quære. Brewster v. Angell, 1 J. & W. 625.

A testator having, by his will, devised his freehold and copyhold estates in trust for his son in strict settlement, with remainder to his nephew; and having given by his first codicil a special power of sale over a part of his estates, to be exercised at the request of his son, in favour of his nephew; and by his second codicil a general power of sale over "all or any part of his estates," to be exercised at the discretion of his trustees, the conveyance by the trustees must contain both the particular and the general power of sale. Green v. Wigglesworth, 1 Swanst. 234; 1 Wils. Ch. 313.

A testator, who made his will in 1810, and died in 1820, directed by his will that his daughters' shares in his property (which consisted of realty and personalty) should be so settled that, if they married, one-half of their fortune should be settled on them and their children, exclusive of their husbands:—Held, that this direction authorised the insertion in the settlement of a power of sale and exchange of that moiety of a daughter's share in the testator's real estate which was to be settled on her and her children. Wise v. Piper, 49 L. J., Ch. 611; 13 Ch. D. 848; 41 L. T. 794; 28 W. R. 442.

Turner v. Sargent, supra, followed. Ib.

Wheate v. Hall, infra, distinguished. Ib.

Purchaser not compelled to take a doubtful title, viz. by executing a power of sale, introduced under a direction by a decree, establishing a will, to the master to approve a proper settlement: the will not authorising the insertion of such a power; nor could it be sustained under a power by a former settlement; which, if not extinct by the failure of the limitations, and the union of the estate for life with the reversion, could not be duly applied to purposes clearly foreign to its original object, and, though purchasers are not put to exercise a very nice and critical judgment with regard to the purposes for which powers are created, it could never be intended to refer to a perfectly new set of limitations, in a new settlement, at a long subsequent period, under a disposition by the will of the owner of the fee, to be exercised, not for any purpose in the least degree connected with the settlement, but avowedly as an expedient to supply the want of a valid power in that settlement, and enable those whom he had made only tenants for life to dispose of the estate. Wheate v. Hall, 17 Ves. 80.

Implication of Powers of Sale.]—See POWERS.

Power to Cut Timber.]—Testator devised F. (a well-timbered estate) to defendant in fee, and directed him to settle it on himself for life, with divers remainders over, and directed that such settlement should contain such powers of jointuring, &c. as defendant should direct, and all other usual and proper provisions for giving effect to his intentions therein expressed, and all such other powers and provisions as counsel should advise:—Held, that the successive tenants for life ought not to be made dispunishable for waste, but power should be inserted in the settlement for trustees to cut timber in a due course of management for the benefit of all parties interested. Davenport v. Davenport, 3 N. R. 26; 1 H. & M. 775; 12 W. R. 6.

Power of Revocation.]—A., before marriage, covenants to settle lands, in consideration of 2,000*l.* portion, on himself for life, remainder to the first and other sons in tail, remainder to the daughters in tail, remainder to himself in fee, with a power of revocation reserved to the wife's father, then beyond sea. The marriage is had, and a daughter born, and the husband, being taken sick, devises 1,500*l.* to his daughter, and, if his wife (being enceinte) should have a posthumous daughter, she to have 500*l.* of the 1,500*l.*, and if either should die before twenty-one, or marriage, the survivor to have the whole; and gives all his lands to his wife and her heirs, and the surplus of his personal estate, after debts paid, to his wife, her executors, &c. and makes his wife executrix; then another daughter is born, and the husband dies without any alteration of his will, or any settlement made:—Decreed, that a settlement be made, with a power of revocation to the father, and the legacies be likewise paid the children, the youngest daughter being a posthumous child, within the intent of the will. Jaggard v. Jaggard, Pre. Ch. 175.

Power to Change Securities.]—A marriage contract in the Portuguese language, between British subjects resident in Lisbon, expressed that the parties were desirous it should be regulated, made binding, and carried into full and complete effect according to the laws of England; some years afterwards the parties, who were then resident in England, filed a bill, praying that a settlement in strict conformity with the contract, and containing all the covenants, clauses, powers, &c. usually inserted in marriage settlements and deemed necessary, and at the same time consistent with the substance of the contract, might be executed under a decree of the court:—Held (nothwithstanding the contract provided that the settled moneys should be invested, as they had been, in the English and French funds), that a power to change those securities for any other of the government stock or funds of England or France or for real securities in Great Britain or Ireland, was a proper power to be inserted in the settlement. Sampayo v. Gould, 12 Sim. 426; 11 L. J., Ch. 121.

Powers of Maintenance, Education and Advancement.]—See Turner v. Sargent, supra; and Parrott, In re, Walter v. Parrott, 33 Ch. D. 274; 55 L. T. 132; 34 W. R. 553—C. A. Supra, col. 404.

i. Hotchpot Clause.

Absence of Words Indicating Intention to Introduce Clause.]—The court of chancery will not insert a hotchpot clause in executory marriage articles in the absence of any words therein indicating the intention of the parties to introduce such clause. Lees v. Lees, Ir. R. 5 Eq. 549.

j. Trustees to Preserve Contingent Remainders.

Money to be laid out in Land—No Trustees to Preserve Contingent Remainders.]—Where testator directed that money should be laid out in lands to be conveyed after the expiration of a term to the use of B. for life, and his first and other sons in tail male, remainder to several others successively for life, with like limitations; remainder to his own right heirs, and there were no trustees to preserve contingent remainders; decreed, that such trustees should be inserted in the conveyances, to be settled by the master, of the lands purchased with the money. Baskerville v. Baskerville, 2 Atk. 279.

Lord Hardwicke said, in the directions he gave in this case, that he adhered to the rules of conveyancing laid down by the great men before the Restoration, and during the Usurpation. Ib.

Testator directs his executors to invest personal estate in the purchase of real estates, which, when purchased, he devises to A., to him and the male heirs of his body for ever, and if A. should die without issue male, then he devised the same to the heir male of the body of B., after in tail to A.: the court will insert a limitation to trustees to preserve contingent remainders. Harrison v. Naylor, 2 Cox, 248; 3 Bro. C. C. 108.

Devise of Real Estate—Bill for Conveyance of Estate according to Will.]—A devised his estate to trustees, in trust for H., and E., his wife, for their lives, and life of longest liver; remainder to first son of E. for ninety-nine years, if he should so long live; remainder to heirs male of body of such first son; remainder to all and every the sons of said E. for ninety years, if every such son respectively should so long live; remainder to heirs male of every of them, to take not jointly, but successively, one after other, according to births of each, sons to take term of ninety-nine years, with immediate remainder to his said heirs male. On bill brought for conveyance of this estate according to testator's will, it was decreed that in such conveyance, where any part of the estate was limited in use to plaintiff for ninety-nine years, if he should so long live, there should be a limitation over to trustees and their heirs, during his life, to preserve contingent uses in remainder, and then to first and other sons of plaintiff successively. Stamford (Earl) v. Hobart, 3 Bro. P. C. 31.

Order for Strict Settlement.]—Upon a trust in equity, no estate can be gained by disseisin, abatement, or intrusion, while the trustee continues in possession of the land, neither will equity suffer a merger of the trust estate; for uses and mere trusts stand on very different foundations, and are not governed by the same reasoning. All trusts are executory, and the court must follow the intent of the parties, as far as the rules of law will admit, howsoever improperly a will may be penned; therefore, if a testator intended a strict settlement the court will direct it; and where the court make use of the words "strict settlement" in an order, it implies a direction to the master to have trustees to preserve contingent remainders inserted, and, whether a conveyance be directed or not, the court must decree one, when asked at the proper time. Hopkins v. Hopkins, 1 Atk. 593; 1 Ves. Sen. 268; Cas. t. Talb. 644. And see Cholmondeley (Lord) v. Clinton (Lord), 2 Mer. 173, 358; 16 R. R. 167; 2 J. & W. 18; 22 R. R. 84, where the report of this case is corrected from an MS. note.

Semble, that a limitation to trustees to preserve contingent remainders, not confined to the lifetime of a tenant for life, will not be cut down to that life if there are contingent remainders which may require protection during a longer period. Rochford v. Fitzmaurice, 1 Con. & L. 158. S. C., nom. Rochfort v. Fitzmaurice, 2 Dr. & War. 1; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 375.

Devise of Freeholds and Copyholds.]—Devise of freehold and copyhold surrendered to the use of the will to trustees, and the survivor and his heirs, in trust to pay debts and legacies, an annuity to the testator's son, and for other purposes; then on the marriage, or attaining twenty-one, of his granddaughter, to convey to her for life, remainder to trustees, &c. remainder to her first and other sons in tail male, remainder to her daughters in tail general, remainder to such persons, for such estates, and subject to such charges and conditions, as he should by any deed or instrument, with two or more witnesses, appoint. The next day, by deed poll with two witnesses, reciting his will, and that he had reserved a power of disposing of his estate farther, he directed his trustees, immediately after the death of his granddaughter, and failure of her issue, to convey all his real estate to the first and other sons of his son in tail male, then to his daughters in tail general, then to the right heirs of the survivor of his trustees, his heirs, and assigns for ever. No conveyance was made. The granddaughter died without issue; then the son died without issue, leaving one trustee surviving. Under the will alone, the trustees have a mere legal estate, and all the equitable interest beyond the express dispositions would result to the son as heir; but the deed was considered as a codicil sufficiently executed to pass copyhold, but not freehold. The last limitation is a contingent remainder to the heir of the surviving trustee, and a conveyance was directed with an insertion of trustees to support that remainder as to the copyhold; the rents and profits of the copyhold during the life of the trustee, and all the freehold, to go to the heir of the testator. Habergham v. Vincent, 2 Ves. 204; 4 Bro. C. C. 353; S. P., 4 R. R. 455, 461.

Contingent Remainders—In General and Duties of Trustees.]—See VESTED, CONTINGENT AND FUTURE INTERESTS.

3. LEGAL AND ILLEGAL TRUSTS.

Illegal Trusts.]—Although, where a trust has been created for an illegal purpose the court will not in general interfere, it will do so where the illegal purpose fails to take effect. Symes v. Hughes, 39 L. J., Ch. 304; L. R. 9 Eq. 475; 22 L. T. 462.

The court will not assist a party in recovering an estate conveyed by him for an illegal purpose, such as to enable a grantee to vote at an election, or seat in parliament. Groves v. Groves, 3 Y. & J. 163.

—— Pleading.]—The plaintiff conveyed an estate to the defendant by a deed, in which the conveyance was expressed to be absolute in consideration of a sum of money paid by the defendant; but no purchase-money actually passed, and the plaintiff alleged that he conveyed the estate to the defendant as a trustee for him. The defendant, in his answer, admitted that he gave no consideration for the estate, but stated that the plaintiff made the conveyance fearing that an adverse decision would be made against him in a suit pending in chancery; and that it was understood that the defendant should account to the plaintiff for the rents until he could make arrangements for paying the purchase-money, and if no such arrangements could be made that he should reconvey the estate. The defendant claimed to hold the estate discharged from any trust, and claimed the benefit of the statute of frauds:—Held, first, that there was no sufficient averment that the transaction was an illegal one. Haigh v. Kaye, 41 L. J., Ch. 567; L. R. 7 Ch. 469; 26 L. T. 675; 20 W. R. 597.

Held, secondly, that the statute of frauds could not be pleaded in answer to the claim; and that, as the evidence did not establish the existence of any such agreement as was alleged by the defendant, he must reconvey the estate. Ib.

Public Policy — Gift to Unborn Illegitimate Child.]—By the law of England a trust for illegitimate children to be begotten cannot be supported. Hamilton v. Waring, 2 Bligh, 209.

E. T. assigned by deed to J. T. (her reputed husband) and another a policy of assurance on her life upon trust, to stand possessed of the policy moneys for the use of A. and B., being the two children then living of the said E. T., and for all and every other, the child or children of the said E. T. thereafter to be born, and as might be living at her death, in equal shares. E. T. and J. T. were not lawfully married, and a third child, C., was born after the execution of the deed:—Held, that the gift by the mother to her unborn illegitimate child was void as contrary to public policy, and that C. took no share of the policy moneys. Thompson v. Thomas, 27 L. R., Ir. 457.

Will — Trust not communicated till after Testator's Death.]—A testator cannot by imposing a trust upon his devisee or legatee, the object of which he does not communicate to him, enable himself to evade the statute of wills by declaring those objects in an unattested paper found after his death. In order to make such a trust binding, it is essential that it should be communicated to the devisee or legatee during the testator's lifetime, and that he should accept that particular trust. Boyes, In re, Boyes v. Carritt, 53 L. J., Ch. 654; 26 Ch. D. 531; 50 L. T. 581; 32 W. R. 630.

The testator, by his will, made shortly before going abroad, gave all his property to C., his sole executor, who was a solicitor, and drew the will. In an action in the probate division, C. admitted that he was only a trustee of the property, and said that the intention of the testator was that he should hold upon certain trusts of which he would inform him when he arrived abroad. No direction was given to C. by the testator during his lifetime, but after his death two letters were found among his papers addressed to C., and naming a person whom he wished to be the object of his bounty:—Held, that C. was a trustee for the next of kin of the testator. Ib.

Bequest of 200*l.* to A. and B. "to spend as I" (the testatrix) "shall, by word of mouth, direct during my lifetime." The testatrix verbally informed A. that she wished to leave "something to J., and something to the Lord's work," and suggested C. and D. as persons to whom she proposed to give the last-mentioned bequest. After the testatrix's death A. found a letter in her handwriting, which, after reciting the bequest in the will of the 200*l.*, proceeded as follows:—"I would ask you to give or send 100*l.* to J.; the second I wish sent for the Lord's work, 50*l.* to C., and 50*l.* to D.; I would ask them to lay it out:"—Held, that no valid trust was created affecting any portion of the 200*l.* King's Estate, In re, 21 L. R., Ir. 273.

Bequest for Keep of a Mare.]—Bequest by a testator of 50*l.* per annum, to his executor, to be paid for the keep of a mare, with a direction that the executor should consider himself bound in honour to fulfil this wish, and see that she be well provided for:—Held, that the trust in favour of the mare ought to be performed, and that the executor was entitled to the surplus not required for the mare's keep. Pettingall v. Pettingall, 11 L. J., Ch. 176.

4. PUBLIC OR CHARITABLE TRUSTS.

Jurisdiction — Parliamentary Grant.]—The court has no jurisdiction to take account of money voted by parliament for the general expenses of a branch of the executive. Grenville Murray v. Clarendon (Earl), 39 L. J., Ch. 221.

It is clear that a suit may be maintained against a public officer having in his hands money issued by government for the use of an individual, for the recovery of such money, but where government had ordered the money to be withheld, the question is only between government and the individual or his assignees, and the court has no jurisdiction. Priddy v. Rose, 3 Mer. 102; 17 R. R. 24.

Money raised on Parish Rates.]—Commissioners were authorised by an act of parliament to raise money on the security of the assignment of parish rates. Interest on the debentures was to be paid pari passu, and the debentures were to be paid off by ballot:—Held, that the relation of trustee and cestui que trust was constituted by the act, and that the holders of the debentures were entitled to sue for an account of the moneys received by the trustees, and of their payments; and that they were not bound to proceed on their bonds at law. Fletcher v. Gibbon, 23 Beav. 212.

Bombay Civil Fund.]—The Bombay civil fund was formed to provide retiring pensions for civil servants, and annuities and portions for their widows and children. The fund was constituted by the subscriptions of the members, and by a grant from the government. It was managed by a committee, the members of which resided in Bombay, and by the rules the property of the fund was vested in the committee of managers as trustees. In fact, however, the funds were always in the hands of the government as a floating debt due to the association. A suit having been instituted by the representatives of the widow of a member of the association, against the trustees of the fund and the secretary of state for India, claiming payment of an annuity which they alleged ought to have been paid to her in her lifetime:—Held, that they were not mere trustees for the association, but trustees properly so called, and that the members of the fund were the beneficiaries, so that the defence of the statute of limitations could not be set up against a claimant on the fund, merely on account of lapse of time. Edwards v. Warden, 45 L. J., Ch. 713; 1 App. Cas. 281; 35 L. T. 174—H. L. (E.) Reversing, 22 W. R. 669.

Foreign Sovereign—Interest in Fund in Court.]—If a trust fund is in the court of chancery, that court may proceed to administer it, even although a foreign sovereign may be interested in it, and may not think fit to come before the court in a suit relating to it. Morgan v. Lariviere, 44 L. J., Ch. 457; L. R. 7 H. L. 423; 32 L. T. 41; 23 W. R. 537.

The Irish Society.]—The Irish society held to be trustees for public purposes; and though accountable to the crown and the city of London for any neglect, &c., they were not so to the companies of London, notwithstanding the latter were, after providing for the public objects, entitled to the surplus revenues of the estates vested in the former. Skinners' Co. v.

Irish Society, 7 Beav. 593. Affirmed, 12 Cl. & F. 425; 9 Jur. 1043—H. L. (E.) And see S. C., 1 Myl. & Cr. 162.

Collegiate Body.]—A collegiate body compellable to execute a trust as a private person, and though the bill not brought recently. Green v. Rutherforth, 1 Ves. Sen. 468.

Power of Majority—Cestuis Que Trust.]—Where office of justice or profits is in trust, the acts of majority of the cestuis que trust may bind the rest. Younger v. Welham, 3 Swanst. 180; 19 R. R. 196.

—— Trustees of Baptist Chapel.]—Where a general trust of a public nature is created, it is essential to the purposes of the trusts that a majority of the trustees should have the power, both at law and in equity, of binding the minority. Perry v. Shipway, 4 De G. & J. 353; 28 L. J., Ch. 660; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1015; 7 W. R. 574. S. P., Wilkinson v. Malin, 2 C. & J. 636; 2 Tyrw. 544; 1 L. J., Ex. 234; Cooper v. Gordon, 38 L. J., Ch. 489; L. R. 8 Eq. 249; 20 L. T. 732; 17 W. R. 908.

Trustees under Bridge Act—Notice of Meetings.]—A bridge act, provided that sixteen persons therein named, "and all other parties" who possessed a certain property qualification, "shall be, and they are hereby appointed, the trustees for carrying this act into execution." It also provided for the holding and calling of meetings, but contained no expressed power of adjournment. It gave the trustees power to assess at meetings called for the purpose, but no assessment was to be valid unless notice of the intention of making it, and of the time at which it was intended to be made, should be given to all persons to be charged therewith. The word "trustees" was defined in the interpretation clause "the trustees acting by virtue of this act." The trustees named in the act were alone summoned to the meetings. K., who by his qualification was a trustee, but had never acted, and whose name was not inserted in the act, brought an action to set aside the assessment and proceedings, on the ground that the meetings had not been duly called, and that one of the assessments was made at an adjourned meeting, without any fresh notice to the parties to be charged:—Held, that he never having acted as a trustee, was not entitled to require the statutable notice. Kerr v. Wilkie, 6 Jur. (N.S.) 383; 2 L. T. 501; 8 W. R. 286.

Held, also, that where notice of a meeting had been properly given, there was no necessity for notice of its bonâ fide adjournment. Ib.

Select Vestry.]—The commissioners for building and enlarging churches having pursuant to the statutes, 58 Geo. 3, c. 45 and 59 Geo. 3, c. 30, appointed twenty-six persons to be a select vestry, for the care and management of a church, and all matters relating thereto:—Held, that, in order to constitute a good assembly of the select vestry so appointed, there must be present a majority of the number (viz. fourteen) named in the appointment; and, therefore, that a rate for the repair of the church, made at a meeting where there was not such a majority, was illegal, and that payment of such a rate could not be enforced in the ecclesiastical court. Blacket v. Blizard, 9 B. & C. 851; 4 M. & Ry. 641; 8 L. J. (O.S.) M. C. 103.

5. CONSTRUCTIVE TRUSTS.

a. In General.

What is a Constructive Trust.]—Constructive trustees, how constituted, and liabilities of. Watson, Ex parte, Acraman, In re, 7 Jur. 1001.

Trusts may be constituted, not merely by direct declaration of trust, but also by the constructive operation of the consequences flowing from the acts of parties. Thus equity will enforce the execution of a trust, not only against the trustees themselves, but against all persons who obtain possession of the property affected by the trust, provided they had notice of it. Pooley v. Budd, 14 Beav. 34.

A., who sold 500 tons of iron stacked on his wharf to B., in consideration of a bill accepted by a third party, gave an acknowledgment engaging to deliver it to the bearer, he (A.) "having been paid for the same." B. mortgaged the iron, and, the bill having been dishonoured, A. refused to deliver the iron. The mortgagee proceeded in equity to make A. responsible for the iron:—Held, that A. had no ownership or property in the iron so stacked, and was a trustee, and therefore a demurrer for want of equity was overruled. Ib.

Where trustees acquire a benefit as ostensible owners of trust property, that benefit cannot be retained by them, but must be surrendered to those who are beneficially interested. Aberdeen Town Council v. Aberdeen University, 2 App. Cas. 544—H. L. (Sc.)

Surviving Partner.]—A trust may well be created in the absence of any expression importing confidence; and in the case before the court the obligation on the surviving partner created by the partnership articles, with reference to the legal interest in the partnership, did not in substance differ from a trust, and it was therefore held that the articles of partnership created a trust attaching on the property. Page v. Cox, 10 Hare. 163.

Heir at Law.]—Real estate having been applied, for a century and a half, upon trusts specified by will, which named no trustee, the court assumed the will to have created an express trust in the heir at law. Gore's Charities, In re, 2 Con. & L. 411; 4 Dr. & War. 270.

Vendor under Contract for Sale.]—Vendor under contract for purchase dying before conveyance, vendor is trustee for him. Dorrel's Case, 3 Salk. 85.

If a purchaser for a valuable consideration has not the legal estate properly conveyed to him, though the consideration cannot create a use by way of covenant to stand seised, yet the vendor will be considered a trustee for the purchaser. Pollexfen v. Moore, 3 Atk. 273.

Purchasers in Equal Moieties.]—Where two purchase in equal moieties between them, and one has abatement in price, &c. made to him, he shall account as to it to the other. Carter v Horne, 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 7.

Two persons article that whatever J. S. shall leave to either of them, shall be equally divided between both; such agreement good, and shall be carried into execution by this court; also, if after this, one of them contrives that J. S. shall lease part of his estate to a third person in trust for him, this is within the articles. Beckley v. Newland, 2 P. Wms. 182.

Attorney.]—An attorney is bound to give sufficient advice to his client; and if any advantage of property come to him by his ignorance, or the neglect of his duty, he shall be trustee thereof for the benefit of the person who would be entitled thereto, if the attorney had known and done his duty. Bulkley v. Wilford, 2 Cl. & F. 177; 8 Bligh (N.S.) 111—H. L. (E.)

—— Implied Authority of Member of Firm.]—See Mara v. Browne, 65 L. J., Ch. 225; [1896] 1 Ch. 199; 73 L. T. 638; 44 W. R. 330—C. A.

Mortgagee and Purchaser.]—Where a man enters into a treaty with a mortgagee for the purchase of his interest, but, finding he has not the legal estate, procures it to be conveyed to himself without the privity of the mortgagee, equity will consider such person as a trustee for the mortgagee. Howes v. Wadham, Ridgw. 199.

Mortgagor and Mortgagee.]—The position that the mortgagee is a trustee for the mortgagor, to be received with considerable qualifications. Cholmondeley v. Clinton, 2 Mer. 362; 2 J. & W. 182; 22 R. R. 84. Affirmed 4 Bligh, 1; 22 R. R. 83.

If mortgagor and mortgagee deposit deeds with A., A. is a trustee for mortgagor before condition broken, and for mortgagee afterwards. Anon., 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 284.

A. and his wife, being assignees of a lease, mortgage to B.; A. becomes insolvent, and, the title not being good, C., who had the real title, in compassion to A.'s wife, makes a lease in trust for her. Decreed, the trustees to make a new mortgage to B. Seabourne v. Powell, 2 Vern. 11.

Trustee of Charity.]—A scheme, made in 1855 provided that no person should act as trustee of the charity, who should hold or occupy any part of the charity property. At that time one of the trustees held a small piece of charity land, under a twenty-one years lease granted in 1847 by public tender:—Held, that he must either give up the lease or the trusteeship. Foord v. Baker, 27 Beav. 193.

Guardian and Ward.]—A placed his son, who was much addicted to intemperance, under the care of B., a relation by marriage, and at his death left his son an annuity of 500*l*. The son resided with B. for several years after his father's death and until a few months before his own death. B. always accompanied him when he went to receive his annuity from his father's executors, and he as soon as he received it handed it over to B. to keep for him; and B. from time to time gave him small sums and paid his bills:—Held, that B. was accountable in a court of equity for what he had received from the son. Terry v. Wacher, 15 Sim. 447.

—— Express or Constructive Trust.]—Where a statement of claim alleges that A. as trustee and guardian of B. took possession of lands, this constitutes (at most) a constructive trust and not an express trust, and such possession having been taken in 1771, the statement of claim was on motion ordered to be struck out as disclosing no reasonable cause of action, and the action was dismissed as frivolous and vexatious, and leave to appeal was refused. Lord Cairns' definition of an express trust in Cunningham v. Foot (3 App. Cas. 984; 38 L. T. 889; 26 W. R. 858—H. L. (Ir.), ante, col. 332), applied. Bowen, L.J.'s dictum in Soar v. Ashwell ([1893] 2 Q. B. 390; 69 L. T. 585; 42 W. R. 165; 4 R. 602) followed. Life Association of Scotland v. Siddal (3 De. G. F. & J. 58; 4 L. T. 311; 9 W. R. 541) explained. Price v. Phillips, 13 R. 191.

—— Persons assisting Executrix in carrying on Testator's Business in Breach of Trust.]—See Barney, In re, Barney v. Barney, 61 L. J., Ch. 585; [1892] 2 Ch. 265; 67 L. T. 23; 40 W. R. 637.

Vendor of Shares.]—The plaintiff, through his brokers, purchased ten shares in a company on the stock exchange from the defendant. A transfer was duly executed and left for registration. Before it was registered, an issue of new shares in respect of original ones was made, within fourteen days, for shareholders to accept or refuse. The defendant, whose name was still on the register for the ten shares sold to the plaintiff, applied for ten new shares in respect of them, and they were allotted to him. The plaintiff did not become aware of the issue of the new shares till after the expiration of the fourteen days, and he then applied to the defendant to hand over to him the ten new shares, which the defendant refused to do:—Held, that the defendant was a trustee of the ten new shares for the plaintiff. Stewart v. Lupton, 22 W. R. 855.

Tenant for Life.]—A tenant for life of an estate under settlement agreed, in consideration of 3,000*l*., to withdraw his opposition to a bill in parliament by a railway company, authorising the construction of a line of railway through the estate. The bill passed and the money was paid, but the act was allowed to expire. Subsequently the company obtained another act for construction of a similar line, and took part of the settled estate:—Held, that the 3,000*l*. must be treated as having been received for the benefit of the tenant for life, and those entitled to the estate in remainder. Pole v. De la Pole, 2 Dr. & Sm. 420; 6 N. R. 19; 34 L. J., Ch. 586; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 477; 12 L. T. 337; 13 W. R. 648.

The possessor of lands, encroachments on the Forest of Dean, devised the same to his wife for life, with remainder to his sons. The statute 20 Car. s. 2, c. 3, had enacted that all titles obtained by encroachment after the passing of the act should be void. The statute 1 & 2 Vict. c. 42, enabled "holders" of certain encroachments so made to acquire the fee. The wife obtained a conveyance of the fee in such encroachments:—Held, that she had acquired the fee, not for her own benefit only, but for the benefit of all parties interested under her husband's will. Yem v. Edwards, 3 K. & J. 564; 26 L. J., Ch. 590; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 462; 5 W. R. 552. Affirmed, 1 De G. & J. 598; 27 L. J., Ch. 23; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 647; 6 W. R. 20.

Consignees for Sale.]—The foreign agent of a mercantile house in London, dealing in African produce, was appointed executor of A., a merchant at Sierra Leone, with directions to sell the testator's property, and place the proceeds in the Bank of England. The agent accordingly wrote to his principals in London, advising them of consignments which he should make to them of some of A.'s property, and directing them to place the proceeds to his credit as executor of A. The consignments were made, and the merchants placed the proceeds to a separate account, namely, that of A.'s estate:—Held, that the goods were specifically and not generally consigned, and that the produce of the consignments was trust money in the hands of the merchants, which, upon a motion in a suit filed against them by the representative of A. for an account, they were bound to pay into court. Leigh v. Macaulay, 1 Y. & C. 260; 4 L. J., Ex. Eq. 37.

Assignee of Legacy to Pay Debt.]—C. assigned to H. his interest in a fund in court by way of trust for sale, to secure what was due from C. to H. Before the execution of the deed H. bought up a debt owing by C. for half its amount, of which transaction C. was cognisant:—Held, that the relation of trustee and cestui que trust did not exist between H. and C. in respect of the debt which H. had so purchased; but that H. was a creditor of C. for the whole amount of such debt, and not merely in respect of the amount which H. had actually paid. Crompton v. Huber, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 465; 3 W. R. 347.

Assignee of Judgment Debt.]—A. sued B., a debtor of his intestate, upon a bond debt, and obtained a decree against him for the amount. B. appealed from this decree to the sudder court. By a deed of arrangement entered into by A. and C., after the commencement of the suit, C. became entitled to a six-anna share of the debt. Pending the appeal to the sudder court, A. entered into a compromise with B., postponing the payment of the amount recovered by the decree, for three years, and foregoing altogether interest upon the principal. This was done without the privity or consent of C. B. failed to pay the amount within the stipulated time, and proceedings were taken by A. against him, but he had not realised the amount of the decree. In a suit by C. against A. to make him chargeable for the six-anna share in the decree, the sudder court held that A. was chargeable to C. for such share, with interest. Upon appeal, such decree reversed; the judicial committee holding, that A. must be treated as a trustee for C., and that in the absence of fraud upon the cestui que trust in executing the compromise, or that it was not beneficial for all parties, he was responsible only to C. for such amount of the debt as had been recovered, or without his wilful default might have been recovered. Doorga Persad Roy Chowdry v. Tarra Persad Roy Chowdry, 4 Moore, Ind. App. 452.

Assignees under Partnership Deed.]—P. bequeathed all his property, right, and interest in and to a public newspaper, and all the benefit and advantage thereof unto three trustees, in trust to carry on and conduct the same, and, after paying certain expenses, out of the residue to pay an annuity to his daughter B. for life, for her separate use, and restrained from alienation. The testator died in 1831, and in 1832 the parties entitled to the newspaper property subject to the annuity entered into a partnership with Z., whereby it was provided, that after payment of certain expenses, the clear profits should be applied in the first place in the payment of the annuity; and for clearing the partnership of the annuity, and for making some provision for the children of B., a reserve of 200*l.* a year for five years should be made, and retained by the trustees, who should be at liberty to settle the same as they should think proper for answering the annuity, and for the benefit of B.'s child or children. Entries were, as alleged, made in the books of the partners relating to the partnership deed. B. was not a party to this deed. The annuity was paid half-yearly during the lives of and after the deaths of the trustees. The property became vested in other parties, who subsequently, as alleged, disputed the validity of the partnership deed, and stated that an arrangement had been come to between the surviving trustees and Z., whereby they put an end to the arrangements effected by the deed, and divided the annuity among certain parties:—Held, on a bill filed by B. and her children, that the partnership deed, having dealt with the property charged with the annuity, had created such a trust in favour of B. and her children as the court would give effect to; and the annuity was ordered to be raised for their benefit. Burton v. Jackson, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 224; 4 W. R. 271.

Inspectorship Deed—Trusts as to Partnership Assets and Separate Assets of Partners—Trust as to Separate Assets, whether Express or Constructive.]—By an inspectorship deed, executed in 1833, the debtors, who were partners, covenanted to collect and get in the partnership assets, and to pay the moneys received into the banking-house of the firm and apply them, so far as the same would extend, in satisfaction of the debts due to their creditors named in the deed: and each of them further covenanted to collect and get in the assets belonging to his separate estate and apply them in payment of his separate debts, and pay the surplus (there being none in the event which happened) into the banking house of the firm, to be applied for the benefit of the creditors of the firm according to the first covenant above-mentioned. A claim having been made by a creditor of the firm to funds which subsequently accrued standing to the credit of the account of the legal personal representative of the last surviving partner for distribution among certain persons as part of the separate assets:—Held, on the construction of the deed, that there was no express trust thereby constituted as regarded the separate assets of the partners, and that the period fixed by the statute of limitations having expired, the claim was barred. Trevor v. Hutchins, 7 L. T. 183, 636—C. A.

Money Advanced to Man during Cohabitation.]—Where a man lived with a woman in the character of her husband, and obtained money from her that he might invest it, the court refused, without positive proof, to declare he was not a trustee, or to permit him, after eleven years, to claim the money and the investments as his own, or to say that it was a loan, and plead the statute of limitations in bar of the suit. James v. Holmes, 31 L. J., Ch. 567; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 732; 6 L. T. 589; 10 W. R. 634.

Upon a balance of testimony weight will be given to the character in which parties stand to one another. Ib.

Landlord and Tenant—Agreement to Pay Tenant's Debt.]—W., landlord to P., having the power to distrain for rent in arrear, and having distrained for part, and being a creditor of P. for money lent, as well as for rent in arrear, upon P.'s representing to him that he is also indebted to G. to the amount of about 900*l.*, for which he is in fear of arrest, and about to leave the country, undertakes that, if P. will give up to him the farm and execute an assignment of all his property, he will pay G.'s debt in the first instance out of the proceeds, and apply the residue in satisfaction of his own demand, and pay the surplus (if any) to P., who executes a bill of sale to W. accordingly on the faith of such undertaking. Upon the bill of G. and P., this agreement was enforced against W. to the extent of 900*l.*, the alleged amount of G.'s debt, but no further, the actual debt having proved to exceed that amount; and not prevented from having effect, either by the circumstance that P.'s property fell short of the estimated amount, or of P.'s being at the time indebted to other persons besides G. and W., which formed no part of the consideration for the agreement, although noticed in W.'s undertaking as having been represented otherwise. The engagement to pay G. in the first instance not being made directly to G., but through the medium of P., by whom also the consideration was furnished, P. was held, in a court of equity, to be a trustee for G. But, quære, if the plaintiffs could recover at law upon such agreement. Gregory v. Williams, 3 Mer. 582; 17 R. R. 136.

Legacy Revoked by Misrepresentations to the Testator.]—A testator, by false and fraudulent misrepresentations respecting the character of the plaintiff, was induced by a clause in a codicil to his will to revoke a bequest before made to the plaintiff, and the result of this revocation was to benefit the party making the misrepresentations. The ecclesiastical court granted probate to this codicil, though opposed by the plaintiff, refusing to allow any case to be gone into affecting merely a part of the codicil:—Held, that, under the circumstances, the court of chancery had no jurisdiction to declare the party, by whose means revocation was obtained, a trustee for the plaintiff. Allen v. M'Pherson, 1 H. L. Cas. 191; 11 Jur. 785.

b. Implied and Resulting Trusts.

i. In General.

Nature of Presumptive Trusts.]—Trust by implication, without the word "trusts." King v. Denison, 1 V. & B. 273; 12 R. R. 227.

Nature of presumptive trusts. Cook v. Fountain, 3 Swanst. 491.

Trusts never implied or presumed without necessity. Id. 592.

No Declaration of Trusts.]—If, in voluntary deeds and wills, there is no declaration of trusts of term, it results to donor; but secus if "for valuable consideration," and in nature of a contract for the benefit of the wife and issue. Brown v. Jones, 1 Atk. 190.

A., tenant for life, in case she should so long continue unmarried; in case of her marriage, to her in fee; in case of her decease unmarried, to her sister B. in fee. A. and B., and the husband of B., join in a sale by fine. The purchase-money was laid out in funds in names of trustees, without any declaration of trust or agreement as to the application: nor was any notice of this fund taken in the wills of B. and her husband. B., being the survivor, made a general disposition of all her personal estate in favour of A. A., though still unmarried, held absolutely entitled to the stock. Seawen v. Blunt, 7 Ves. 294.

By a settlement executed on the marriage of B. and C., reciting that B. (the wife) was entitled to the lands of X., under a will, and was entitled under the will to a part of the lands of Y., as having survived her sister, and of the lands of Z., in remainder, and as also entitled to 600*l.*; that it had been agreed that the properties before mentioned should be vested in a trustee upon certain trusts, i.e., in the first place, to secure a jointure for her, B. conveyed the lands of X. and Y. to the use, as to X., of C. for life; remainder to the use of B. for life; remainder for the issue of the marriage; and it was agreed that B. was to have all the property that C. might have or be entitled to during her life, and that C. would not sell or mortgage any of the properties during the life of B. without her consent and approbation first had and obtained under her signature:—Held, first, that there was a resulting trust as to the lands of Y., for B. and C., in her right; and, secondly, that C. was entitled to the lands of Z. for life, with remainder to B. for life. Elliott v. Kempston, 15 Ir. Ch. R. 120.

Grant of Next Avoidance.]—A grant of the next avoidance to one without his privity:—Held, a resulting trust for the grantor, no other trust being declared. Norfolk v. Browne, Pre. Ch. 80.

Trust Void for Remoteness.]—A trustee is not entitled to retain for his own use a sum of money bequeathed to him in trust, under circumstances which rendered the trust void for remoteness. A trust differs from a charge in this—that where a man has an estate subject to a charge, if the charge fail he has the benefit of it; but a trust once declared, although unlawful or impossible, excludes the notion of a beneficial interest being intended in the trustee. The subject matter of the trust in question to fall into the residue. Joy v. Aspinwall, 18 Jur. 284.

Assignment of Property of Convict.]—A person being in prison on the charge of felony assigned real estate, which was in the hands of trustees, to his brother. He was acquitted on the ground of insanity. His brother accumulated the income except a small portion which he spent for the benefit of the convict. After the brother's death it was held that he was trustee for the convict. Manning v. Gill, 41 L. J., Ch. 736; L. R. 13 Eq. 485; 26 L. T. 14; 20 W. R. 357.

Grant of Lease in Trust.]—A. grants a lease to B., which is intended to be in trust for A., and B. declares a trust accordingly. B. afterwards surrenders the lease to A., who makes a new lease to C. without a declaration of trust:—Held, that C. was entitled to full benefit, and that no trust existed for A. Pilkington v. Bayley, 7 Bro. P. C. 383.

Payment in Name of Another with his Money.]—Payment made in the name of A. with his money raises a trust, but it is an equity which may be rebutted by evidence. Graham v. Graham, 1 Ves. 275.

Grant of Common by Lord of Manor.]—Where lord of manor by feoffment grants certain parcels of common, &c., to trustees, for the benefit of themselves and the rest of tenants of manor, in lieu of and recompense for their several claims of common in all the rest of the common lands, &c., in the manor, the whole interest passes from the lord, and there is no resulting trust for him as to the ownership of the soil. Irwin v. Simpson, 7 Bro. P. C. 306.

Express Trust by Parol.]—A mortgagee assigns over his mortgage to S., and declares a trust by parol to other persons; J. acknowledges the trust: there being an express trust declared, though by parol only, shall prevent a resulting trust to the assignee. Bellasis v. Compton, 2 Vern. 294.

Father and Son—Settlement—No Trust Declared of Surplus.]—By a deed between a father and son, reciting that the father was desirous of settling the property therein comprised, so as to make the same provision for himself during his life, and for his wife, and her children by him, after his decease, he released and assigned the same and every part thereof to the son, upon the trusts therein mentioned concerning the same. The father proceeded to declare the trusts as to part of his property in favour of his wife and daughter, and a niece, but no trust was declared as to the surplus:—Held, that the surplus did not result to the grantor, but belonged to the son, and, the father having been maintained by the son for fifteen years, a bill filed after the father's death, by his representative, was dismissed with costs as to that part of it which sought an account of interest. Cook v. Hutchinson, 1 Keen, 42.

Conveyance by Father jointly Seised with Others to Son.]—A., jointly seised with two others, conveys his third part to the use of himself for life: remainder to his wife for life, remainder to his son in fee, and at the same time makes his will and gives the same lands to his son in tail, charged with his debts. The son not a trustee for the father in the settlement; otherwise it would have been, if the entire fee had been conveyed to the son. Baylis v. Newton, 2 Vern. 28.

Refusal of Creditors to Accept in Full Discharge Money Covenanted to be Advanced.]—Where the plaintiff, being entitled to the residuary estate of his father, filed a bill against his mother, the executrix, for an account, &c., and she, by arrangement with him, by deed covenanted to settle a yearly sum on him and his family, and to advance a sum for the benefit of his creditors, if they would accept it in full discharge; the latter having refused:—Held, that no resulting trust arose in favour of the son, as to the sum so to have been advanced to the consenting creditors. Sherwood v. Walker, 6 Beav. 401; 7 Jur. 293. Affirmed 13 L. J., Ch. 258; 8 Jur. 229.

Husband and Wife—Joint Banking Account.]—A testator, who was in failing health, opened a new banking account in the joint names of himself and wife, authorising the bank to cash cheques drawn by either of them, and telling the bank manager that the balance of the account would belong to the survivor of himself and his wife. Cheques were thenceforward drawn by the wife only, and were applied by her in payment of household and other expenses, the husband paying in sums of money from time to time to the credit of the account. At the time of his death there was a large sum standing to the credit of the account, which the wife claimed to be entitled to for her own use:—Held, that the evidence of circumstances was not sufficient to rebut the presumption of a resulting trust in favour of the testator. Marshal v. Crutwell, 44 L. J., Ch. 504; L. R. 20 Eq. 328.

Proceeds of Sale of Real Property remaining Subject to Trusts of Settlement.]—Under a settlement, real estate was limited to such uses as A. and B. should by deed jointly appoint, and subject thereto to the use of A. for life, with remainder to the use of B. for life, with remainder to the first and other sons of B. in tail, with divers remainders over; and there was a power of sale vested in four trustees, and exercisable at the request of A. and B. and the survivor of them. By a deed (which contained a recital that A. and B. were desirous of selling part of the settled property, and, with a view to facilitate the sale and conveyance thereof to the respective purchasers, had agreed to execute the deed), A. and B., in exercise of the joint power of appointment, appointed part of the settled property to trustees upon trust for sale; and it was declared that the trustees should stand possessed of the proceeds upon the trusts intended to be declared by a deed of even date. No deed declaring the trusts was ever executed, and there was evidence to show that the deed of appointment was executed with the view of avoiding the trouble and expense of an application to the trustees to exercise the power of sale:—Held, that the disposition of the proceeds of sale was a question of intention; and that both on the terms of the deed of appointment (independently of the evidence) and also having regard to the evidence, the proceeds of sale remained subject to the trusts of the settlement. Biddulph v. Williams, 1 Ch. D. 203.

Mortgage—Power of Sale—Trust of Surplus Sale Moneys.]—By a marriage settlement land belonging to the husband was conveyed, for making a provision for the wife and the issue of the marriage, to such uses as the husband and wife should by deed jointly appoint, remainder to the use of the husband for life, remainder to the use of the wife for life, remainder to uses in favour of the children of the marriage, with ultimate remainder to the use of the heirs and assigns of the husband. A right of entry was given to the trustees in the event of the death of the parents during the minority of the children. There was no settlement of any money, and no power of sale. The husband and wife exercised their joint power of appointment, and mortgaged the property comprised in the settlement. There was a proviso for redemption which provided that, on payment of the mortgage debt, the mortgagee should reconvey the property to the uses of the settlement. The mortgage contained a power of sale which provided that the mortgagee should pay over the surplus proceeds of the sale to the husband, "his heirs, executors, administrators and assigns." The husband died and the mortgagee exercised his power of sale, and after payment of the mortgage debt, interest, and expenses, had a surplus in his hands:—Held, that there was no resulting trust of the surplus, and that the husband's legal personal representative was entitled to the fund, and not his heir-at-law. Jones v. Davies, 47 L. J., Ch. 654; 8 Ch. D. 205; 38 L. T. 710; 26 W. R. 554.

ii. Joint Purchases.

Joint Advance—Purchase in Name of one.]—Resulting trust by a joint advance upon a purchase in the name of one. Wray v. Steele, 2 V. & B. 388; 13 R. R. 124.

—— Parol Evidence.]—On a purchase by two contributing equally to the cost of it, parol evidence of surrounding circumstances and of subsequent dealings is, notwithstanding the statute of frauds, admissible to prove an intention to hold it severally. But, semble, parol evidence of statements of intention is not admissible. Harrison v. Barton, 1 J. & H. 287; 30 L. J., Ch. 213; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 519; 3 L. T. 614; 9 W. R. 177.

—— Stock Standing in Joint Names.]—Stock purchased in the joint names of two sisters, and a balance to their joint account at their bankers:—Held, under the circumstances, to belong to them as tenants in common, notwithstanding they had contributed equally, the court looking to the source whence the funds were derived, viz., rents of land, of which the two were tenants in common. Robinson v. Preston, 4 K. & J. 585; 27 L. J., Ch. 395; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 186.

The rule as to the investment of moneys in the names of two or more persons in the purchase of property is this: if invested in unequal shares, the purchasers remain tenants in common of the purchased property; if in equal shares, and the matter on the face of it purports to be a joint tenancy, it is considered to be a joint tenancy, and no equity is supposed to intervene by which it can be reduced to a tenancy in common. Ib. And see Aveling v. Knipe, 19 Ves. 441.

Renewal of Lease by Testator in Names of his Brother and himself, paying the Fine.]—Testator on renewal of a lease takes it in the names of his brother and himself, paying the fine, and receiving the profits himself:—Held, not to be assets, but vested in the brother beneficially upon the ground of intention, though proved but by one witness. Maddison v. Andrew, 1 Ves. Sen. 58.

Personal Office or Employment Purchased with Partnership Funds.]—Where a personal office or employment is purchased with the partnership funds for the benefit of the partnership, the partner in whose name it is purchased is not necessarily a trustee for the profits of the office for the other partners, after the term of the partnership has expired. Clark v. Richards, 1 Y. & C. 351; 4 L. J., Ex. Eq. 49.

Transfer of Stock into Joint Names—Proof of Gift.]—Transfer of stock of intestate into name of himself jointly with that of husband of one of his two nieces, accompanied with proof of his having said in his lifetime that it was his intention to give husband stock at his death in consideration of affection, &c., and that he had transferred it for that purpose (if not repelled by counter testimony):—Held, to be sufficient proof of gift of such stock, and no trust; and the court will not continue injunction granted to restrain husband, who had administered, from disposing of it. George v. Howard, 7 Price, 646; 21 R. R. 775. And see Wheeler v. Smith, 1 Giff. 300; 29 L. J., Ch. 194; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 62; 1 L. T. 430; 8 W. R. 173.

Presumption of Intention to Advance—Reputed Wife.]—H. married in 1840 the sister of a deceased wife. He afterwards invested parts of the savings of his income in consols in their joint names. It did not appear that the reputed wife had at the time of performing the ceremony of marriage any property of her own. In 1845 H. died, leaving his reputed wife surviving:—Held, that she was a trustee of the stock, and that it formed part of the estate of H. Soar v. Foster, 4 K. & J. 152; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 406; 6 W. R. 265.

No intention of advancement in cases of a purchase in joint names will be presumed, except in the case of a lawful wife, or a person to whom the purchaser stands in loco parentis. Ib.

In all other cases the onus of proving the intention to advance is thrown on the person claiming the advancement, and such a circumstance as the performance of the ceremony of marriage, where the parties knew it to be inoperative, will not be regarded. Ib.

Transfer to Save Legacy Duty.]—D., having expressed a wish to save her sister legacy duty, in her lifetime transferred stock into the names of herself and sister, whom she made her universal legatee, the husband of the sister being a witness to the will. On bill filed for a declaration that the testatrix died intestate, and that the stock formed no part of her personal estate:—Held, that the bequest by the will was void, and that the stock formed no part of the personal estate, but the sister was entitled to the beneficial interest in it. Deacon v. Colquhoun, 2 Drew. 21; 23 L. J., Ch. 16; 2 Eq. R. 319; 2 W. R. 67.

Transfer to Evade the Savings Bank Act.]—A testator, under s. 33 of the Savings Bank Act, 9 Geo. 4, c. 92, made deposits in the names of himself and his sisters; but he did not communicate to them the fact of such deposits being made:—Held, that a trust was not thereby created for the benefit of the sisters, the testator's object being, in the opinion of the court, merely to evade the provisions of the act. Field v. Lonsdale, 13 Beav. 78; 19 L. J., Ch. 560; 14 Jur. 995.

Purchase in Name of Wife or Child, and by Persons in loco parentis.]—See HUSBAND AND WIFE—INFANT—PORTION.

Purchase by Partners.]—See PARTNERSHIP.

iii. Purchases in Name of Stranger.

General Rule.]—Trusts by implication arise where one party pays the purchase money, and the conveyance is taken in the name of another; but the rule is not so large as to extend to every voluntary conveyance. Young v. Peachy, 2 Atk. 256.

When an estate is purchased in the name of one person, and the money is paid by another, he has a resulting trust; or where it is declared only as to part, and nothing said as to the rest, what remains undisposed of results to the heir-at-law. Lloyd v. Spillett, 2 Atk. 150; Barnard. 388; 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 745, pl. 13. S. P., Lane v. Dighton, Amb. 411.

In no other instance has the court declared resulting trusts by operation of the law, unless in cases of fraud, and where transactions have been carried on malâ fide. Ib.

The heir-at-law does not want an express intention to take by will, though it is otherwise with regard to a deed. Ib.

Though, in the purchase deed, the consideration money is mentioned to be paid by the purchaser, and there is no express declaration of a trust, yet upon the circumstances of the case decreed a trust, though to the disappointment of the purchaser's will and of his creditors. Plymouth (Earl) v. Hickman, 2 Vern. 167.

Conveyance to B. of an estate, the money being paid by A.; B. is a trustee, and C., taking from B. with notice, is also a trustee. Mackreth v. Symmons, 15 Ves. 350; 10 R. R. 85.

Presumption Rebutted by Evidence.]—Where land is purchased with the money of A., in the name of B., the resulting trust to A. may be rebutted as to part of the land or part of the interest in the land. Where A. took a mortgage in the name of B., declaring that the principal sum should be for the benefit of B., and received the interest during his life, this being personal estate is not within the clause in the statute of frauds relating to resulting trusts, or the doctrine of resulting trusts under the statute; but the property after the death of A. will belong to B. by force of the parol declaration. Benbow v. Townsend, 1 Myl. & K. 506; 2 L. J., Ch. 215.

A purchase by A. in name of B., a stranger in blood, is a trust for A., unless presumption is repelled by evidence. Rider v. Kidder, 10 Ves. 360.

The person in whose name South Sea stock is entered in the company's book, is with regard to them the proprietor. Stockdale v. South Sea Co., 2 Atk. 141.

Parol evidence cannot be admitted to show that a party, having agreed for the purchase of an estate in his own name, had in fact purchased it on behalf of another person. Bartlett v. Pickersgill, 1 Cox. 15; 1 Eden. 515; 1 R. R. 1; and see 20 R. R. 294, n. But see Rochefoucauld v. Boustead, 66 L. J., Ch. 74; [1897] 1 Ch. 196; 75 L. T. 502; 45 W. R. 272; ante, col. 320.

Purchase by A., and receipt in his name; evidence admitted to prove trust for B. Knight v. Pechey, Dick. 327.

He who pays purchase-money has a resulting trust, but he must clearly prove payments. Willis v. Willis, 2 Atk. 71. S. P., Gascoigne v. Thwing, 1 Vern. 366.

Parol evidence admitted to show a trust from the mean circumstances of the pretended owner of the real estate. Ib.

A. purchases an estate in the name of B., and suffers him to execute lease thereof, and gives receipt for rents in the name of B., but no declaration of trust was executed by B. Bill by A.'s heir for conveyance and account dismissed. Delane v. Delane, 7 Bro. P. C. 279.

N. took a lease of land in the name of his sister M. from S. He subsequently, in June, 1860, agreed to purchase the land from S. It was afterwards discovered that proceedings in the landed estates court were necessary to establish the title of S., and a new agreement between N. and S. was prepared. N. had this draft agreement altered by substituting the name of M. for his own, and M., when directed to do so, signed the agreement as also did S., in October, 1860. During the proceedings in the landed estates court N. died intestate. The purchase was subsequently completed: a conveyance was made to M., and she, as administratrix of N., was allowed credit for the purchase-money out of the assets of N. In his lifetime he acted as master and absolute owner of the property, and had spoken of it as purchased by him for M., and as intended by him for her benefit :—Held, that there was no evidence sufficient to rebut a resulting trust ; but that M. was the agent of N. authorised by parol, with a right to be indemnified inconsistent with any beneficial interest belonging to her. Nicholson v. Mulligan, Ir R 3 Eq. 308 ; 17 W.R. 659.

Held, also, that her representative capacity, reconciling the two agreements, excepted the case from the operation of the doctrine admitting evidence to rebut a resulting trust. Ib.

A., a freeman of London, purchases in the name of B., but no trust declared ; A. dies, and B. gives a declaration of trust : this is good against the custom. Ambrose v. Ambrose, 1 P. Wms. 321.

Purchase of Reversion by Lessee—Conveyance to another Person without Declaration of Trust.]—A., being in possession of lands for a long term of years, contracts for the purchase of the reversion and inheritance, but to prevent merger of the term takes conveyance to B. absolutely and without declarations of trust from B. The title deeds remain throughout in the custody of A. and those claiming under him. B. held to be a trustee only for A. Lever v. Andrews, 7 Bro. P. C. 288.

Lease taken in Name of Person Advancing Money to Pay Fine.]—A. agrees for a beneficial lease of forty-one years, B. advances money towards paying the fine, &c., and lease is taken in B.'s name without any declaration of trust :—Held, that B. was a trustee for A., and, upon being repaid the money advanced, with interest, should assign the lease to A., account with him for the profits, and pay his costs. Held, also, that the trust, being proved by letters of B.'s own handwriting, this case was not within the statute of frauds. O'Hara v. O'Neill, 7 Bro. P. C. 227 ; 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 745, pl. 9.

Lease to One in Trust for Person Paying Fine.]—C. proposed to A. that A. should take out a lease of certain lands in his own name, but in trust for C., to which A. verbally consented, and C. paid the fine for the lease, which was afterwards executed by A. A difference having arisen as to the terms of the agreement between A. and C. :—Held, that it lay on C. to sustain his view beyond all doubt, or be bound by the offer made by A. in his answer. Before the bill was filed A. had repudiated the trust, but having admitted it by his answer upon terms :—Held, entitled to his costs from the filing of the answer. Chartres v. Ainsworth, 1 Hay. & J. 68.

Declaration of Trust of Lease by Nominal Lessee after Bankruptcy.]—A lease was granted to W., who afterwards committed an act of bankruptcy; and then executed a deed, stating that his name had been used in the lease in trust for R., and declaring the trust accordingly. A bill was filed on behalf of the creditors of W. under the commission, claiming the lease as part of his estate ; and the court directed an issue to try whether W.'s name was used in the lease as a trustee for R. :—Held, that the issue was properly directed. The jury having found a verdict in the affirmative :—Held, that the declaration of trust was valid, though executed after bankruptcy, and that the lease did not pass to W.'s assignees. Gardner v. Rowe, 5 Russ. 258 ; 7 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 2. Affirming 2 Sim. & S. 346 ; 3 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 220 ; 25 R. R. 214.

Shares Purchased in Name of Bankrupt.]—By the rules of a joint-stock company, only principals could become subscribers. The petitioner purchased forty shares in the name of the bankrupt, who verbally declared that he held them as a trustee for the petitioner, and the certificates of the shares were kept in the possession of the petitioner ; but no notice was given to the company of the trust, nor did the bankrupt sign a written declaration of trust until seven days before the fiat was issued :—Held, that the shares were in the order and disposition of the bankrupt as reputed owner, and passed to his assignees. Ord, Ex parte, 1 Deac. 166 ; 2 Mont. & Ayr. 724 ; 4 L. J., Bk. 84.

Purchase in Name of Son of Land Covenanted to be Settled.]—A. by marriage articles covenanted that all lands he should afterwards purchase in the parish of K. should be to the uses of the articles. He purchased lands in K. and took a conveyance in fee in the name of his youngest son ; but there was no declaration of trust :—Held, that youngest son was a trustee as to the lands for the parties entitled under the settlement. Blake v. Blake, 7 Bro. P. C. 241.

Mortgage to Secure to Mortgagee Money advanced to Purchase Estate.]—In 1805 A. B. purchased an estate with the money of C. D., and executed a mortgage to secure the amount. A. B. was evicted, and he died in 1812 ; C. D. died in 1816. The same individuals represented both A. B. and C. D., and in 1845 they established, under the covenant for title, a claim against the vendor's estate, for the amount of the purchase-money. The residuary legatees of C. D. filed a bill in 1846 against the representatives to recover the amount. The court thought that there was so much probability, at least, of their ultimately establishing their equity, that it overruled a demurrer to the bill, leaving the question open at the hearing. Norman v. Stiby, 9 Beav. 560.

Surrenderee of Customary Freeholds not Devisable Admitted.]—A., seised of freehold estates, and of customary freeholds, which were not devisable, made a voluntary surrender of the latter to B. in fee, in trust, as B. admitted for A., and after his death for the purposes of his will ; but B. executed no declaration of trust. A. made a general devise of all his real estates, and after A.'s death B. was admitted :—Held, that he was a trustee for the devisees, and not for A.'s customary heir. Wilson v. Dent, 3 Sim. 385.

Copyholds—Custom as to Grant in Reversion to Tenant for Life in Name of Another.]—Custom of manor, that, if tenant for life of copyholds obtains a grant in reversion, in the name of a third person, unless a trust is mentioned on the rolls of the manor, such third person should be beneficially entitled thereto, and not as trustee :—Held, good. Edwards v. Fidel, 3 Madd. 237.

A. buys a copyhold estate for his own, and two lives in the manor of M., where the custom was, that whoever purchases in it, the estate shall go in succession, and by his will devises all his estate, real and personal, to his wife :—Held, that though the legal interest be according to the custom of the manor, yet A. has an equitable interest from being the sole purchaser, and it shall be construed as a trust for him, he having advanced the money. Smith v. Baker, 1 Atk. 385.

—— Grant for Three Lives.]—Where in a grant of a copyhold for three lives, viz., to the husband and wife and a third person, the fine was mentioned to be paid by the husband and wife, this, there being no full evidence to the contrary, made the third person only a trustee for the husband and wife and the survivor of them. Benger v. Drew, 1 P. Wms. 781 ; 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 739, pl. 5.

In a manor the custom was to grant for three lives successively ; A., being the last life in an old copy, obtained a fresh grant to B. and C. ; A. paying the whole fine, B. and C. were held trustees for A. Withers v. Withers, Amb. 151.

—— Purchase of Equity of Redemption by Mortgagee—Surrender in Name of Another.]—C. lends money upon mortgage of copyhold, but being infirm, &c., surrender, &c., is taken in name of D., who executes a declaration of trust. C. afterwards purchases the equity of redemption, and second surrender is made in the name also of D., but without a declaration of trust :—Held, sufficient trust within the statute of frauds without a second declaration of trust. Acherley v. Acherley, 7 Bro. P. C. 273.

When Advancement Presumed.]—Purchase in the name of another is a trust for the party who pays the consideration, except by a parent in the name of his child, which is presumed an advancement ; the presumption capable of being rebutted, but does not give way to slight circumstances. Finch v. Finch, 15 Ves. 43 ; 10 R. R. 12.

—— Purchase in Name of Brother by Elder Brother.]—Where one claimed as an advancement shares purchased in his name by an elder brother, and also alleged a gift of them seven years after the purchase, and stated his belief they were intended to be ultimately for his benefit :—Held, no advancement. Forrest v. Forrest, 5 N. R. 299 ; 34 L. J., Ch. 428 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 317 ; 11 L. T. 763 ; 13 W. R. 380.

Purchase by Married Woman in Name of Niece.]—A married woman, out of the savings of her separate estate, purchased stock in the name of a niece, and told the niece by letter that it was her intention that the stock should be for the niece herself, but took from the niece a power of attorney to receive the dividends, and sell the stock :—Held, that on the death of the aunt the niece was entitled to the stock. Beecher v. Major, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 537 ; 12 L. T. 562. Affirmed, 6 N. R. 370 ; 13 L. T. 554 ; 13 W. R. 1054—L. C.

Money Standing in Name of Married Woman Claimed after her Decease by her Mother—Evidence.]—Money which was standing in the funds in the name of a married woman was claimed, after her decease and that of her husband, by her mother, as having been invested by her while separated from her husband in her daughter's name. The only evidence of the trust was the affidavit of the mother, and proof that the dividends had been received by her with the assent of the daughter and her husband :—Held, that the claim of the mother was established. Down v. Ellis, 35 Beav. 578.

Grandmother Purchasing Annuity in Grandchild's Name — Bond by Child's Father to Repay Purchase Money.]—Grandmother buys an annuity in 14*l.* per cents. for 100*l.*, in the grandchild's name. Child's father gives the grandmother a bond to repay the 100*l.* if the child dies before the grandmother, who receives the income and keeps the talley, the grandchild making no claim : this no trust for the grandchild. Lloyd v. Read, 1 P. Wms. 607.

Voluntary Conveyance of Realty.]—There is no resulting trust to the donor in the case of a voluntary conveyance of real estate made in order to qualify the donee to act as a justice of the peace. Crichton v. Crichton, 65 L. J., Ch. 13 ; [1895] 2 Ch. 853 ; 13 R. 770 ; 73 L. T. 556 ; 44 W. R. 203 ; 59 J. P. 792.

Voluntary Assignment—Death of Beneficiary—Residuary Trust.]—T., who was contingently entitled to a prospective share in certain property, voluntarily assigned it, in 1880, to trustees upon trust (among other trusts) to pay a sum of 500*l.* to one K., and as to the residue upon other trusts. T. became entitled to her share of the property in 1894, and by a letter, in 1895, directed that a portion of it should be transferred to the trustees of the voluntary assignment of 1880. K. died in 1888, intestate, and the question now arose as to his 500*l.*, which was claimed (1) by his personal representative and (2) by the settlor as upon a resulting trust :—Held, (1) that a person dead at the date of the execution of a deed could take no benefit under it, and the confirmation of the deed by the letter of 1895 only set up such trusts as were then subsisting, and had no retrospective effect ; and (2) that the 500*l.* belonged to T., the settlor, by way of resulting trust. Tilt, In re, Lampet v. Kennedy, 74 L. T. 163.

Power of Appointment—Infant Appointor—Death of Infant while still under Age — Failure of Ultimate Limitation.]—An infant had a life interest and a general power of appointment under her mother's will. She made a settlement in exercise of the power, with the sanction of the court, under the Infants' Settlement Act, 1855. She died while still an infant, and the ultimate limitation in the settlement, which was in favour of the infant's next of kin, according to the statutes of distribution, failed by reason of the infant's illegitimacy :—Held, that there was a resulting trust in favour of the infant herself, and that the property appointed passed to her surviving husband, who was her administrator, and not to the persons entitled under the mother's will in default of exercise of the power of appointment. Scott, In re, Scott v. Hunbury, 60 L. J., Ch. 461 ; [1891] 1 Ch. 298 ; 63 L. T. 800 ; 39 W. R. 264.

Settlement—Reference to Non-Existing Deed.]—By a voluntary settlement executed on 2nd December, 1873, certain property was settled upon trust for W. during his life, with remainder to his children. And it was declared that if there should be no children of the said W. who should take a vested interest in the trust property, the trustees were to stand possessed of the trust property in trust for J. and her child and children "subject to the like trusts . . . . declared of . . . . certain trust property settled, comprised in, and assured by a certain indenture bearing even date with these presents, and made between Charles Wilcock and Mary, his wife, of the one part and the said Thomas Charles Wilcock of the other part." No such indenture was ever executed. At the time, however, when the settlement was prepared an indenture was prepared and engrossed by which certain property was settled upon trust for J. for life, with remainder to her children. This indenture, however, was never executed, but instead thereof a deed was prepared conveying the property to J. absolutely. This deed was executed on the same day as the settlement, but it was not made between the same parties. W. died without leaving a child:—Held, that no trusts were sufficiently declared either for J. or for J. and her children. Consequently there was a resulting trust for the benefit of the settlor. Wilcock, In re, Wilcock v. Johnson, 62 L. T. 317.

Assignment in Favour of Creditors—Surplus.]—By a deed of assignment executed by a firm in favour of their creditors, after a recital of the inability of the firm to pay their debts in full, the business was assigned to trustees, upon trust either to carry on or sell the same, and, after payment of costs, to pay and divide the residue of the profits and proceeds of sale unto and among all and singular the creditors in rateable proportions, according to the amount of their respective debts, subject nevertheless to the provisions thereinafter contained, and the creditors granted a release of the debts. The deed contained a provision empowering the trustees to pay off or make arrangements with creditors under 30*l*. The profits of the business were more than sufficient to pay the creditors in full:—Held, that there was no resulting trust of the surplus for the assignors. Smith v. Cooke, 60 L. J., Ch. 607; [1891] A. C. 297; 65 L. T. 1; 40 W. R. 67—H. L. (E.)

b. Charitable Gifts.

Rents before Devise carried into Effect.]—Upon a devise to a charitable use, the heir has no right to the rents and profits accrued before the devise is carried into effect. Att.-Gen. v. Bowyer, 3 Ves. 714; 4 R. R. 132.

Devise upon a future contingency, and no intermediate disposition of the rents and profits, is a resulting trust for the heir. Ib. 725.

Devise on happening of a Particular Event.]—When lands are given to charity purposes on the happening of a particular event, there is a resulting trust in the meanwhile; but where real estate was vested in A. in trust, out of the rents, to keep it ready for the reception of plague patients during their sickness, but no longer, and for a burying-place for them, and for no other use:—Held, first, that this was a present gift to charitable purposes, and not merely a gift contingent upon the re-appearance of the plague; and, secondly, that there was no resulting trust in the meanwhile for the donor or his heirs, though the plague had not re-appeared for more than 180 years. Att.-Gen. v. Craven (Earl). 21 Beav. 392; 25 L. J., Ch. 291; 2 Jur. (N.S.), 296; 4 W. R. 340.

Devise of Copyhold on Condition to Pay Sum to Charity.]—Devise of copyhold land in fee, on condition to pay 1,000*l*. to charity. Testator having left no next of kin, nor any customary heir, and gift of charity being void, devisee held entitled to 1,000*l*., and not the crown or lord of manor. Henchman v. Att.-Gen., 3 Myl. & K. 485. Reversing 2 Sim. & S. 498.

Money charged on Real Estate for Charity.]—Money charged upon a real estate for a charity void by the statute of mortmain shall sink in favour of the specific devisee, not go to the heir-at-law or residuary legatee. Secus, when it is an exception out of the devise. Wright v. Row, 1 Bro. C. C. 61. S. P., Baker v. Hall, 12 Ves. 497; 8 R. R. 366.

Specific Devise.]—A testator gave all his real and personal estate to his executors; then mentioned a specific house, 71, Queen's Road, Bayswater, which he gave to the inhabitants of B., to found a charity, directed the executors to call a meeting of the inhabitants, to appoint trustees to carry his scheme into execution, named his godson, W., to be one of the trustees, leaving to the inhabitants to choose as many more as they pleased: and then said, in the event of the inhabitants not being willing to carry out the scheme, "I will that all my property so given to the charity shall absolutely belong to my godson." He afterwards made some pecuniary gifts, and devised leasehold and freehold houses for life to different persons; each house, on the death of the devisee, being given to the "residuary legatee or legatees" for the charity. As to one freehold house alone, 4, Douglas Place, there was a gift of it to W. for life, then to the trustees of the charity; but should there be no charity established, then to W. absolutely. The gifts to the charity being contrary to the statute of mortmain, no meeting of inhabitants was called, nor were any trustees appointed:—Held, that on the general failure of the gift to the charity, the gift over took effect; and therefore, in the case of the house, 4, Douglas Place, W. became entitled to it absolutely. Hall v. Warren, 9 H. L. Cas. 420.

Held, also, that W. was only entitled, in addition, to the house, 71, Queen's Road, Bayswater, for that the words "all my property so given" must be restricted to that house, and did not affect the general property of the testator, as to which he must be treated as having died intestate. Ib.

Gift of Particular Residue of Lands.]—A married woman, having a power of appointment under her marriage settlement over estates A. and B., appointed by will, in September, 1838, estate A. to her husband in fee; "and all other the hereditaments comprised in the settlement not hereinbefore disposed of" to another person. By codicils to her will, she revoked the appointment of estate A. to her husband, and gave him the same estate for life, with remainder to trustees to sell and pay certain legacies, and pay the residue to charities:—Held, that the devise of "all other the hereditaments," &c., by the will was not residuary, but specific; and that the void gifts to the charities did not pass by it, but lapsed as unappointed. Brown's Trusts, In re, 1 K. & J. 522; 3 W. R. 542.

A testatrix gave certain lands in the parish of H. to A., B., and C., as joint tenants in fee, and devised to the plaintiff "the rest of my freehold hereditaments in the parish of H., and all my freehold hereditaments in the parishes of," &c. The devise to A., B., and C., having been declared void, as made on a secret trust for a charity:—Held, that the lands comprised in that devise did not pass under the gift of "the rest of my freehold hereditaments in the parish of H.," but were undisposed of. Springett v. Jennings, 40 L. J., Ch. 348; L. R. 6 Ch. 333; 24 L. T. 643; 19 W. R. 575.

Unenrolled Deed.]—Real estate was by deed expressed to be conveyed to trustees upon charitable trusts. The deed was not enrolled, and the grantor died within a year after the execution of the deed. On his death the trustees named in the deed entered into possession, and applied the rents and profits according to the trusts of the deed:—Held, that the deed was not voidable only, but was absolutely void under 9 Geo. 2, c. 36, s. 3, and was not valid as conveying the legal estate, and void only as creating charitable trusts. Thurcher v. Martin, 58 L. J., Ch. 586; 42 Ch. D. 312; 61 L. T. 113; 37 W. R. 682.

—— Title by Possession — One of Several Trustees Barred.]—The trustees of the deed, having been in possession more than twelve years prior to the commencement of an action against them by persons claiming under the grantor:—Held, that the action was barred by the statute of limitations. The fact that one of the trustees was the general devisee and legatee of the grantor did not defeat their title, as the trustees could not be held mere licensees of the devisee and legatee Ib.

Failure of Objects of Society—Undisposed of Fund—Bona Vacantia.]—A society formed for the sole purpose of raising, by the subscriptions of its members, and the fines and forfeitures imposed by its rules, a fund to provide annuities for the widows of deceased members of the society, and subsequently brought under the provisions of the Friendly Societies Act, 1829 (10 Geo. 4, c. 56), is not a charity, and its funds cannot on the failure of the objects of the society be administered cy près. Cunnack v. Edwards, 65 L. J., Ch. 801; [1896] 2 Ch. 679; 75 L. T. 122; 45 W. R. 99—C. A.

The members of such a society are not in the position of cestuis que trust as regards the society, but are persons who have entered into a contract with the society that on their making certain payments their widows should receive certain benefits out of the funds of the society, and that being the only destination of the funds of the society, there cannot, on the failure of the objects of the society, be any resulting trust of the funds remaining unexpended in favour of the representatives of the deceased members, and such funds must go to the crown as bona vacantia. Ib.

Legacies.]—Legacies to charity, void by the stat. 9 Geo. 2, c. 36, fell into the general residue. Page v. Leapingwell, 18 Ves. 463.

When there is a clear intention to give to charitable purposes, and the gift is immediate, there is no resulting trust for the next of kin, although the particular application of the fund directed by the will would not of necessity take effect within any assignable limit of time, and could never take effect at all except upon the occurrence of uncertain and contingent events. But if the gift to charity is conditional, and the condition is so remote and indefinite as to transgress the rules of law against perpetuities, the gift fails ab initio. Chamberlayne v. Brockett, 21 W. R. 299.

Leaseholds.]—A leasehold house, the bequest of which, being to a charity, fails, passes under a general disposition of the residue, and does not belong to the next of kin as undisposed of. Shanley v. Baker, 4 Ves. 732.

Particular and General Residue.]—A testator gave a fund to particular trustees upon trust to invest on freehold mortgage enough to provide for certain annuities, and gave the residue of that fund to his nephew, J. A. The will contained a general residuary bequest. Some of the gifts of annuities, being charitable, were void:—Held, that J. A. took the whole of the particular residue. Aston v. Wood, 43 L. J., Ch. 715; 31 L. T. 293; 22 W. R. 893.

Testatrix, after giving certain legacies, bequeathed "all her moneys, securities for money, moneys secured on mortgage, railway stocks and shares, moneys to be produced from sale of any property at S. or P. to which she was entitled, all moneys to which she was entitled under the will of her late grandfather, and also all her moneys secured upon any securities or in any way or manner howsoever" to trustees, upon trust, after payment of her legacies and debts, to invest and pay the income to A. for life, and after her decease to pay thereout a certain charitable legacy, and as to the residue thereof, upon certain trusts, in favour of the defendants. The will contained a general residuary bequest in favour of A. The charitable legacy was partially invalid under the statute of mortmain:—Held, that the portion of such legacy which failed passed to the defendants under the particular gift of residue, and not to A. under the general residuary gift. Champney v. Davy, 48 L. J., Ch. 268; 11 Ch. D. 949; 40 L. T. 189; 27 W. R. 390.

Pier Bonds.]—More than fifteen years before his death, a testator purchased two Southampton Pier Bonds for 500*l.* each, having, before the purchase, told the plaintiff that he had left her by his will more than her sisters, to enable her to subscribe to some charities, and, very soon after the purchase, that he had invested the 1,000*l.* on the pier bonds in her and his own name, but did not mention any trust or purpose. He privately applied the interest in subscribing to certain charities; and, fourteen years after the purchase, mentioned in several letters the charities to which he wished her to apply the interest, but said he did not intend to bind her by any legal document:—Held, that no valid trust was created, and no resulting trust, but that the sister was entitled to the fund. Wheeler v. Smith, 1 Giff. 300; 29 L. J., Ch. 194; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 62; 1 L. T. 430; 8 W. R. 173.

Trusts for Masses for the Dead.]—Trusts declared for certain Roman Catholic chapels, for saying masses and requiems for the soul of the donor and for other souls, and for the souls of the "poor dead," and for other purposes:—Held, that the gift for masses, &c., for the dead was superstitious and void; that the pious uses could not, as religious uses, be separated from the others, and were therefore also bad; and that the words "pious uses" could not be construed charitable uses; consequently, the property given to these uses went to the residuary legatees of the donor. Heath v. Chapman, 2 Drew. 417; 23 L. J., Ch. 947; 2 Eq. R. 1264; 2 W. R. 649.

Bequest to Trustees in Event of Charitable Bequests being Void.]—A bequest of personal estate "to be appropriated for the pious and benevolent uses and purposes" of a charitable association, the objects of which included the purchase of and erection upon land, and also other purposes not within the stat. 9 Geo. 2, c. 36, held to be valid, but that any appropriation of the fund towards purchasing more land would be an illegal application of the bequest. Testator, by a codicil, declared that in case any of the charitable bequests in his will should be incapable of taking effect, he gave all such moneys, &c., to four legatees absolutely, free from any trust or conditions whatever. These four legatees were the trustees named in the will of the charitable bequests:—Held, that in the event of the charitable bequests being void, the four legatees were entitled, and not the next of kin of the testator. Carter v. Green, 5 W. R. 856.

After giving charitable legacies by her will, a testatrix, by codicil, declared that if any of them should fail, by reason of any part of her estate being of such a nature as could not legally be made applicable to charitable purposes, she gave such part to A. and B., for their absolute use and benefit, having full confidence that they would desire to carry out her intentions, but she declared that that should not have the effect of imposing a trust upon them, or in any manner qualify their interest in the bequest:—Held, that A. and B. took beneficially, and not as trustees for the next of kin. Cawood v. Thompson, 1 Sm. & G. 409; 22 L. J., Ch. 835; 17 Jur. 798.

A testatrix gave charitable legacies, and the residue to her sister, who survived her, and also made several bequests to charities:—Held, that the impure personalty, which the sister took under the former will, and kept unconverted until her death, was not to be treated as converted for the purpose of the charitable legacies in her own will. Ib.

Bequest as Trustee in his Discretion should Approve.]—Bequest in trust for such objects of benevolence and liberality as trustee in his own discretion should most approve, cannot be supported as a charitable legacy, and is therefore a trust for the next of kin. Morice v. Durham (Bishop), 10 Ves. 522. And see Aston v. Wood, L. R. 6 Eq. 419.

c. Renewal of Leases.

By Settlor.]—A., possessed of a chattel interest for an unexpired term of years in certain premises, assigned the same to trustees under his marriage settlement. He afterwards obtained, in pursuance of a covenant in the original lease, a renewal lease to himself of the same premises for a longer term of years. Having become a bankrupt, his assignees claimed to be entitled to sell the premises and all interest therein granted by the renewal lease for the benefit of the bankrupt's estate:—Held, that the trustees of the settlement were entitled to the benefit of the additional term granted by the renewal lease subject to the life estate of A. under the settlement (which, subject to the charge of a sum of money received from his wife on marriage), was ordered to be sold for the benefit of his creditors. Held, also, that the premises comprised in the renewal lease in addition to those devised by the original lease should enure to the trusts of the settlement. Anderson's Estate, In re, 18 W. R. 248 (Ir).

By Co-Lessees.]—Three lessees of a church lease; one renews in his own name; it shall be a trust for all. Palmer v. Young, 1 Vern. 376.

Parties interested, jointly with others, in a lease, cannot take to themselves the benefit of a renewal to the exclusion of the others so jointly interested with them. Clegg v. Fishwick, 1 Mac. & G. 294; 1 Hall & Tw. 396; 19 L. J., Ch. 49; 13 Jur. 993.

By Partners—By One Partner in His Own Name.]—Lease of premises where a partnership trade was carried on, renewed by one partner in his own name clandestinely, is a trust for the partnership, to be accounted for as joint property. Featherstonhaugh v. Fenwick, 17 Ves. 298; 11 R. R. 77.

—— Private Advantage to Partner Negotiating Lease.]—A person employed on behalf of himself and his co-partners, in negotiating the term of a lease, is not entitled to stipulate clandestinely with the lessors for any private advantage to himself; where, therefore, a sum of 12,000*l.* was paid in pursuance of such a stipulation, the party receiving it was declared to hold it in trust for the partnership. Before the transaction was discovered, one of the partners withdrew, and subsequently another partner assigned a share in the stock, and in his proportion of this claim, to persons then admitted into the concern:—Held, that the retired, the continuing, and the new partners were properly joined as co-plaintiffs in a suit to have the trust declared. Fawcett v. Whitehouse, 1 Russ. & M. 132; 4 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 64; 8 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 50; 27 R. R. 260.

—— Partnership at Will of Mines—Renewal by Some of the Partners—Laches.]—Several persons were engaged as partners in working coal mines. The partnership was at will. The mines were worked by some of the partners, who, before the expiration of the last lease, agreed among themselves to conduct the whole for their own benefit. They thereupon gave notice to the other partners to dissolve the partnership, and entered into an agreement with the landlord for renewal to themselves only. They gave public notice of the sale by auction of the plant and stock, and informed the other partners that they might bid, and that they themselves intended to do so, and told them that the landlord had agreed to a renewal. Accounts were made up, and such of the excluded partners as assented and executed releases were paid their shares, but others refused their assent, and claimed the benefit of the renewed lease, besides their shares of the partnership assets. The new lease was granted in 1846, and in 1855 some of the excluded partners filed a bill to have the benefit of the renewed lease, and an account of the profits of the old and new partnership:—Held, that the renewal was a constructive trust for the benefit of all the partners, but that these excluded partners, having taken no active steps for such a length of time to assert their rights, could not have relief, for that mere words were not sufficient without active proceedings. Clegg v. Edmondson, 8 De G. M. & G. 787; 26 L. J., Ch. 673; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 299.

—— Agreement for Division of Partnership Effects—Injunction.]—In 1853, articles of partnership were entered into between the plaintiff and J. H., whereby, after reciting the partnership previously existing, and that the effects consisted of a leasehold dwelling-house, workshop, and land at N., and that the plaintiff and J. H. were jointly entitled to another dwelling-house at M. A., it was agreed that J. H. should stand possessed of the property at N., as to the dwelling-house and one-half of the land, for his own absolute use and benefit, and as to the workshop and other part of the land, in trust to assign the same to the plaintiff; that the property at M. A. should be assigned to the plaintiff, and that when and so soon as the plaintiff and J. H. should erect a dwelling-house at M. A. of equal value with the dwelling-house at N., the same should be assigned to the plaintiff, who should thereupon re-assign the workshop to J. H. It was also agreed that an equal division should be made of the partnership effects, and that neither of the partners should apply any part of the co-partnership moneys or effects for his own private use until such divisions as aforesaid. A renewed lease of the property at N. was afterwards obtained from the lessor by J. H. to himself alone. The partnership continued for some time, but no assignment was made, nor was any dwelling-house built, as contemplated by the agreement of 1853. J. H. afterwards assigned to G. M. the dwelling-house and half of the land at N., of which the plaintiff was then in possession, and G. M. commenced proceedings by ejectment in the county court against the plaintiff, in order to obtain possession of the premises. On a bill filed by the plaintiff against J. H. and G. M., praying for a partnership account, and for an injunction against G. M.:—Held, that, from the circumstances which had arisen, J. H. was not entitled to hold the dwelling-house and half of the land at N. in severalty, but that the plaintiff had sufficient interest in the property to maintain his right to an injunction against G. M., J. H.'s assignee, from bringing ejectment; and an injunction was granted accordingly. Hawkins v. Hawkins, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1044.

—— Right of Representative of Deceased Partner.]—If partnership property consists in part of leaseholds, the representative of a deceased partner may treat the surviving partner as trustee, and if the latter renews the lease, he is considered to do so for the benefit of the estate of the partner; but where the trade is one of a speculative character, requiring outlay, with an uncertain return, then, if the surviving partner continues the trade in his own name and renews the lease, the court will not consider that the representative of the deceased partner has any interest unless he contributes a due proportion of capital. Clements v. Hall, 2 De G. & J. 173; 27 L. J., Ch. 349; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 494; 6 W. R. 358.

A. and B. were partners in lead mines held under a lease, which expired in 1845; after that time they continued to work the mines as tenants from year to year, until the death of A. in 1847, when B. worked them, so far only as was necessary to keep the mines in operation, until 1850. In that year he received notice to quit, but before the expiration of such notice he obtained an agreement for a new lease, on the understanding that he would employ a larger amount of capital in working the mines. He continued to work the mines under the new lease until 1853, when he died intestate. On a bill filed by the assignee of C., who was entitled under the will of A. to an annuity charged on the testator's interest in the mines, against D., the legal personal representative of both A. and B., claiming that the estate of the testator had an interest in the mines after his death:—Held, that the testator's interest did not cease on his death, but continued in the partnership for the benefit of the estate. Ib.

A deceased partner, having contracted in his own name for a lease of the premises to be employed in the partnership trade, the court refused to restrain the landlord from granting a lease to his representatives, but restrained the representatives from disposing of the lease when granted, except for partnership purposes, and with the assent of the surviving partner. Alder v. Fouracre, 3 Swanst. 489; 19 R. R. 256.

By Tenant for Life—Crown Lease.]—Tenant for life, under the settlement of a Crown lease, gets a renewal in reversion, it shall go to the uses of the settlement. Tasker v. Marriott, Amb. 668.

Tenant for life, with remainders over, of a Crown lease for years applies for a further term; a powerful opponent applies for a grant, the tenant for life gives up her pretensions for a sum of money; the money shall be settled to the same uses as the estate was. Owen v. Williams, Amb. 734.

—— Leasehold Estates Held under Duchy of Cornwall.]—One bequeaths several leasehold estates, held for years under the Duchy of Cornwall, to his wife, during so many years of the term as she may live, and after her decease, if the terms of the several leases be then in being, unto and amongst, &c. The wife got an additional term, and:—Held, it shall not be for her own benefit, but should go to the uses of the will. Rawe v. Chichester, Amb. 715.

—— Lease Suffered to Expire.]—When a tenant for life of leaseholds, under a marriage settlement, suffered the lease to expire, and obtained another lease, and died, it was held that the renewed lease must be held upon the trusts of the settlement, and not enure for the benefit of his representatives. Pickering v. Vowles, 1 Bro. C. C. 197.

—— Renewable Leaseholds Settled by Regis- tered Deed.]—If a man has a limited interest in a term and settles it to a certain use, and then gets a new and extended term substituted for it, he cannot, by so doing, avoid the previous settlement. In 1830 a settlement of certain property held under renewable leases was made in favour of A. In 1831, A., being about to marry, made a settlement of his property to the uses of the marriage. The deed of 1830 was not registered under the Irish Registration Act (6 Anne, c. 2). The settlement of 1831 was registered. In 1840 A., being in actual possession, sold to B., and B., who had no actual notice of the settlement of 1831, entered into possession, and made alterations in the premises. After the death of A., his son, who was entitled under the settlement of 1831, filed a bill against B. to set aside the sale, for an account, and for waste :—Held, that it was not necessary to register the deed of 1830, that the registered settlement of 1831 prevailed against the bonâ fide purchase of B., and that the court below had properly declared him to stand possessed of the leases as a trustee for the parties beneficially interested under that settlement, but held also, that he was entitled to indemnity against the covenants in the leases which he was thus declared to hold as trustee ; that an inquiry ought to be made as to alleged improvements and as to alleged waste ; and that he was entitled to be allowed the benefits of those improvements ; and that, being a bonâ fide purchaser, without misconduct, he ought not to be charged with costs. Mill v. Hill, 3 H. L. Cas. 828. S. C. in court below, nom. Hill v. Mill, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 107.

—— Lessee Suffered to be Ejected by Landlord.]—A leasehold interest was subject to the trusts of a settlement under which A. was tenant for life, with a leasing power. A. made a lease of the premises to B., and at the same time entered into an agreement with B. to sell to him the absolute interest of the leaschold, and to make title at a future period. The agreement contained notice of the settlement. B. assigned the underlease and the benefit of the agreement to C., who entered into possession, and paid the head rent to the landlord. He subsequently entered into an arrangement with the landlord for a reduction of the head rent, to carry out which he suffered the lessee to be evicted by ejectment, and took a new lease from the landlord, at the reduced rent :—Held, that the new lease was a graft, and bound by the trusts of the settlement. Stratton v. Murphy, Ir. R. 1 Eq. 345 ; 15 W. R. 1125.

—— Leaseholds for Years Determinable upon Lives.]—Bequest of leaseholds for years determinable upon lives, for life, with remainder over, for all the residue of the testator's term and interest to come therein at his decease. The term expired in the life of the testator, who continued to hold, and paid half a year's rent before his death as tenant by the year ; upon the general words unrestrained, comprising the interest from year to year, and the intention upon the whole will, and subsequent lease obtained by the executrix, the widow and tenant for life under the will was held subject to the uses of the will, as the residue of the term at his death, if any, however short, would have been. James v. Dean, 15 Ves. 236 ; 8 R. R. 178. And see Kempton v. Packman, cited in Moody v. Matthews, 7 Ves. 174, 176.

—— Surrender of Old Lease.]—A tenant for life of a leasehold interest, the subject of settlement, surrendering the lease, and taking a new one for his own benefit, is a trustee for those entitled to estate in remainder under the settlement ; and an accumulation of rent from the death of the tenant for life to the expiration of the new lease, belongs not to his devisee, but to the person next entitled under the settlement. Eyre v. Dolphin, 2 Ball & B. 290 ; 12 R. R. 94.

—— Tenant for Life with Power of Appointment.]—Renewal of a college lease by tenant for life, with a power of appointment, in her own name and at her expense, has not the effect of an appointment in her own favour ; and, therefore, by the death of the appointee in the life of the tenant, there will be a resulting trust by lapse for the representative of the author of the power. Brookman v. Hales, 2 V. & B. 45 ; 13 R. R. 9.

A., under a voluntary settlement, of which it did not appear that she had notice, was entitled to certain leaseholds held for lives for her life, with remainder to B. Under a subsequent voluntary settlement she took a life interest in the same leaseholds, with an absolute power of appointment over the residue of the leasehold interest. While in possession of the property, she took a renewed lease of it, and died, having appointed all her interest to C. :—Held, that the renewal enured to the benefit of B. Waters v. Bailey, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 219.

—— No Obligation to Renew—Provision that Particular Renewal should Enure to Benefit of Trust.]—Where the tenant for life of leaseholds in settlement, being under no obligation to renew, obtains an extension of the term, he is a trustee for those claiming under the settlement ; and the fact of the settlement containing a special provision that a particular renewal shall enure to the benefit of the trust, does not prevent the application of this general rule. Tanner v. Elworthy, 4 Beav. 487 ; 5 Jur. 1099.

—— Lease Renewed in Pursuance of Covenant but not Assigned.]—A., on the marriage of B. his son, settles a lease on B. for life, to the wife for life, and then to the issue of the marriage ; and B. covenants from time to time to renew the lease and assign it on the same trusts. B. renews the lease, but does not assign it, and dies indebted. This lease is bound by the marriage articles, and is not assets for the payment of debts. Plowman v. Plowman, 2 Vern. 289.

—— Tenant for Life of Under-lease Purchasing Interest of Immediate Lessor.]—If a tenant for life of an under-lease for eighteen years, granted by a person who himself holds the premises so underlet along with other property under a lease for twenty-one years, purchases the interest of his immediate lessor, and obtains from the superior lessor a renewal of the lease thus purchased, the renewed lease is subject, so far as regards the premises which were comprised in the under-lease, to the same trusts, as would have affected the under-lease if it had not been merged or had not expired by the efflaxion of time. The same rule holds, though the lease at the time of the purchase was vested in a trustee upon trusts, under which he could not have granted a renewal of the under-lease, and though the tenant for life outlived by twenty-five years the time at which the under-lease would have expired by effluxion of time. Giddings v. Giddings, 3 Russ. 241; 27 R. R. 78.

A., being tenant for life of a leasehold for years, with remainder to B., after devising one estate to B. in tail, bequeathed to him the leasehold during his life, with remainder over, and gave him all the residue of his real and personal property. B. took possession of the residuary estate; suffered a recovery of the lands devised to him in tail; acted as the absolute owner of the leasehold estate; and outlived the term for which the lease was granted, having previously acquired a new interest in the demised premises:—Held, that B. elected to take under the will, and was bound to give effect to the devise of the leasehold in favour of the remainderman. Ib.

—— Tenant for Life of Lease for Lives.]—A renewal taken by tenant for life of a lease for lives, is a trust for the benefit of those in remainder, and a fine levied by the heir of such tenant for life keeping possession of the title deeds, will not bar those in remainder, nor will any length of time during such a suppression of deeds. Bowles v. Stewart, 1 Sch. & Lef. 209.

Lands, held under a lease for lives, having been devised to Mary for life, and, after her death, to Thomas absolutely, they joined in surrendering the lease, and procured a new one for lives to themselves and their heirs as joint tenants. Thomas devised the lands, but Mary survived him and devised them:—Held, that the legal estate granted by the new lease was vested in the devisee of Mary, in trust for the heir of Thomas and also of his devisee. Hill v. Hill, Ir. R. 8 Eq. 140.

J. B. being entitled, by virtue of a lease of 1735, to the lands of C., held under M. for three lives, devised the same to his son, John, for life, with remainders over. John, upon the death of his father, entered into possession under the will, and in 1796 (one only of the cestuis que vie in the lease of 1735 being in existence), obtained from G. and B. (the then head landlords) a new lease, reciting the lease of 1735, for the lives of the surviving cestui que vie in that lease, and two other persons, with a covenant for perpetual renewal at an increased rent and fine:—Held, that the lease of 1796 was a graft upon the original lease of 1735, and subject to the trusts of the will. Buckley v. Lanauze, Ll. & G. t. Plunk. 327.

R., the last life in a bishop's lease, agrees with C. to surrender this lease on a promise of the bishop to grant a new one for the lives of C. and the son of C., and, in consideration of C. surrendering the old lease, it was agreed the new one should be in trust for the infant son of C. The whole purchase money was paid by C. to the bishop, but the legal estate was granted in the new lease to R. and his heirs during his own life, and the lives of C. and his son. C., after the death of R., took upon him to dispose of it. R., by a deed poll, dated the day after the lease, declares his intention to be, that C. and his son should, after his decease, hold to them and their heirs during the remainder of the term:—Held, that R. had a valuable share in the consideration of the new lease, having given up his interest in the old, and that, having a right to declare the trust, C. had his life only in the lease. Crop v. Norton, 2 Atk. 74; 9 Mod. 233; Barnard. 179.

—— Tenant for Life Purchasing Reversion.]—The doctrine that a renewal of leaseholds by a tenant for life enures for the benefit of the remainderman applies equally to a purchase of the reversion. Phillips v. Phillips, 54 L. J., Ch. 943; 29 Ch. D. 673; 53 L. T. 403; 33 W. R. 863—C. A.

By his will, J. L., the lessee of certain leaseholds (not renewable), gave the same to his brother for life, with remainder to E. J. L. for life, with remainder for the benefit of the children of E. J. L. During the life of the first tenant for life, E. J. L. purchased the reversion expectant on the determination of the lease. On a summons taken out in these circumstances to ascertain whether the purchaser was a trustee for the remaindermen:—Held, that, there being no case in which the doctrine of Keech v. Sandford (infra) had been applied to leaseholds not renewable by contract or custom, the purchaser was not a trustee for the remaindermen. Longton v. Wilsby, 76 L. T. 770.

—— Leaseholds for Lives subject to Charges.]—A. was beneficially entitled for his life to renewable leaseholds for three lives held on trust to renew, and subject to certain charges. All the cestuis que vie had died. It being disputed whether the right to renew was lost, the reversioners granted a lease to A. for three new lives, without prejudice to the disputed question. A. subsequently bought the reversion:—Held that the fee became subject to the charges. Trumper v. Trumper, 42 L. J., Ch. 641; L. R. 8 Ch. 870; 29 L. T. 86; 21 W. R. 692.

—— Purchase of Reversion by Administrator of Intestate at Auction.]—A. became entitled, as administrator of an intestate, to certain lands held under a lease from the Commissioners of Church Temporalities in Ireland for twenty-one years, customarily renewable, and being so entitled he, as such administrator, obtained from the commissioners a renewal of the lease for twenty-one years. The commissioners subsequently, under s. 34 of the Irish Church Act, 1869, offered to sell the reversion in fee in the lands in question to A., as their immediate tenant, at a certain price. A. declined to buy at the price named, and the commissioners thereupon set up the reversion in fee for sale by auction, and A. purchased it at the auction, and obtained a conveyance from the commissioners, which was made expressly subject to the lease and to the right of renewal thereunder:—Held, that A. became a constructive trustee of the reversion so purchased for the persons beneficially entitled to the personal estate of the intestate, and that it formed portion of such personal estate, the persons claiming it to pay the purchase-money and all expenses incurred by A. in the purchase. Randall v. Russell (infra) distinguished. Gabbett v. Lawder, 11 L. R., Ir. 295.

—— Purchase of Reversion from Person to whom Reversion had been Conveyed.]—Testator, seised in fee of a moiety of an estate at L., and in possession of the other moiety as tenant from year to year to St. J. College (this lease from the college having expired), gives to his wife, durante viduitate, "all that his messuage or tenement, with the farm and lands at L., and all his estate and interest therein, she paying the rent reserved to St. J. College, &c." The widow, after his death, obtains a new lease, and subsequently purchases the reversion of one to whom it had been conveyed by the college under an act of parliament:—Held, that the renewed lease was taken subject to the trusts of the will, and those in remainder to contribute to the fine paid by the widow in proportions to be settled by the master:—Held, that the purchase of the reversion, not from the college, but from the person to whom it had been conveyed by the college, was not, under the circumstances, to be taken subject to the trusts of the will. Randall v. Russell, 3 Mer. 190; 17 R. R. 56. And see Hardman v. Johnson, id. 347; and Aberdeen Town Council v. Aberdeen University, 2 App. Cas. 544—H. L. (Sc.)

—— Renewal becoming Impossible—Purchase of Reversion by Assignee of Tenant for Life.]—A leasehold for lives was devised by a testator who died in 1820 to trustees, on trust for a tenant for life and other persons in remainder, the ultimate remainder in fee being given to the tenant for life. The first trust was to renew the lease from time to time, paying the necessary fines and expenses out of the rents, or raising them by mortgage. In 1825, the trustees obtained a renewed lease for three lives, one of which was that of the tenant for life. In 1855 and 1859, respectively, the other two lives dropped. In October, 1876, the tenant for life contracted to sell all his interest in the property to B., and a conveyance was executed in March, 1879. In December, 1876, the ecclesiastical commissioners, in whom the reversion subject to the lease was then vested, and who would not renew the lease, contracted to sell the reversion to B., and in August, 1879, they executed a conveyance to him, the conveyance being expressly made subject to "such trusts, equities, estates, and interests," as then affected the leasehold interest. In June, 1878, the School Board for London, under their statutory powers, took part of the property, and in January, 1880, they paid the purchase-money and compensation money into court. The legal estate in the lease was outstanding in the representatives of the last surviving trustee of the will:—Held, that, irrespectively of the form of the conveyance of the reversion to B., it was, according to the ordinary doctrine of a court of equity, impossible for him to purchase the reversion otherwise than as a trustee for the persons interested in the lease under the trusts of the will, and that, subject to his right to be recouped the purchase-money, he was only entitled to an order for payment of the interest on the fund in court during the life of the tenant for life under the will. Hardman v. Johnson (3 Mer. 347) distinguished. Rawlagh's (Lord) Will, In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 689; 26 Ch. D. 590; 51 L. T. 87; 32 W. R. 714.

By Husband of Tenant for Life.]—By a will, a renewable lease was devised to A. for life, remainder to B. for life, or so long as the said lease should continue, remainder to trustees for sale and division of the produce amongst various persons. C., the husband of A., purchased the life interest of B., and then obtained a renewal of the lease to himself, for three lives; and died. The personal representative of B. was held, by the court, to be a trustee for those claiming under the will of the original lessee; and was decreed to convey as they should direct, on payment of their respective due portions of the expenses of the renewal; but the price given by C. for the life interest of B. was not allowed to be considered as a portion of those expenses, although B. was himself the last surviving cestui que vie of the original lease, and therefore was not likely to have renewed. Cridland v. Luxton, 9 L. J. (O.S.), Ch. 99. And see Parker v. Brooke, 9 Ves. 583; 7 R. R. 299.

Previously to marriage the fortune of the wife is so settled as, in the event of her surviving her husband, to belong to her absolutely, and by other deeds of the same date, the husband makes a settlement of his property, under which certain interests are given to the wife; he dies in her lifetime, having by his will bequeathed to her considerable benefits, which he directs shall be in satisfaction of all her claims or demands against his estate, or executors, under the settlement made by him, or on any other account whatsoever: the acceptance of the benefit given to her by the will does not preclude the wife from claiming a leasehold, part of her own fortune, which the husband was bound, by deed settling her fortune, to renew in the name of trustees, and upon the trusts of that settlement, but which he had renewed in his own name. Coleman v. Jones, 3 Russ. 312; 6 L. J. (O.S.), Ch. 16.

Rights as between Lessor and Lessee.]—See LANDLORD AND TENANT.

By Trustees.]—A. being possessed of a lease of a market, bequeathed it to B. in trust for an infant. B., before the expiration of the lease, applied to the lessor for a renewal for the benefit of the infant. The lessor refused to grant such renewal, whereupon B. got a lease made to himself:—Held, that B. was a trustee of the lease for the infant, and must assign the same to him, and account for the profits, but he was entitled to be indemnified from the covenants in the lease. Keech v. Sandford, Select Ca., Ch. 61; 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 741, pl. 7.

If trustees or mortgagee renew, the new lease is always subject to the trust and limitations of the old lease. Rawe v. Chichester, Amb. 719.

The word "advantages" is sufficient to take in all the benefits belonging to the trust of an estate for years, not to the profits only, but the renewals which are consequential. Carte v. Carte, 3 Atk. 178.

Renewal of a lease taken by a trustee, shall accrue to the benefit of the cestui que trust. Griffin v. Griffin, 1 Sch. & Lef. 352; 9 R. R. 51.

Trustee of a lease, renewing for his own benefit, is considered as still holding for his cestui que trust, even where it is clear that the lessor would not have renewed for cestui que trust. Fizgibbon v. Scanlan, 1 Dow, 269—H. L. (Ir.)

Renewable leaseholds having been devised by testator upon trusts, one of the trustees obtained a renewal of the lease of the devised lands, and a new lease of additional lands, in one lease, at a bulk rent:—Held, that, quoad the additional land, the renewal was not a graft upon the old lease. Acheson v. Fair, 2 Con. & L. 208; 3 Dr. & War. 512.

In a suit against a trustee of a church lease, who had expended considerable sums in obtaining renewals and a perpetuity grant, and had made an arrangement for the purchase of the lands in consideration of an annuity to the cestui que trust, under an award, in obtaining which there was some concealment and which was never completed, though acted on for fourteen years:—Held, that the new interest was a graft, and the trustee bound to account for the entire period. The cases where accounts against defendants are limited in point of time, and where not, considered. Lovatt v. Knipe, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 124.

Purchase of Reversion by Trustee of Term to Pay Debts.]—Trustee of term to pay debts purchased the inheritance from tenant for life; and had it conveyed to him by fine and feoffment; remainderman is not entitled to account of rents, except from his entry to avoid the fine, and if he neglects to claim for five years he is barred. Reynolds v. Jones, 2 Sim. & S. 206.

Duty of Trustee to Renew.]—See post, C. 6. b. iv.

Executors.]—If an executor renews a lease, he shall account for the new lease as well as the old one for the benefit of the creditors. Anon., 2 Ca. Ch. 208.

An executor to a tenant by sufferance or at will obtaining a larger interest, is a trustee for the residuary legatee, like the case of general occupancy. James v. Dean, 15 Ves. 236.

A testatrix by will gave her executor all her interest in a farming lease upon trust to carry on the farm for the benefit of the plaintiff. The executor accordingly carried on the farm until the expiration of the lease, and then obtained a new lease. Under the circumstances, held by the court below that the defendant was a trustee for the plaintiff, and an account was ordered of all moneys expended or received by the defendant in carrying on the farm. Upon appeal by the plaintiff against so much of the order as directed accounts:—Held, his having elected to claim the profits of the farm, he could not resist the taking of such an account. Kendall v. Marsters, 2 De G. F. & J. 200; 2 L. T. 709; 8 W. R. 747.

An executor, six years after the death of the testator, surrendered a lease belonging to the testator, and took a renewed lease, including additional property, and at an increased rent, in his own name. He afterwards deposited the lease as security for money advanced to him, which he applied to his own purposes. The renewed lease contained no mention of the surrender, and the mortgagee did not know that the borrower was an executor, or that he was not the beneficial owner of the lease. He did not, however, make any inquiry into the title. An action was afterwards brought to administer the testator's estate, and a consent order was made for the sale of the leasehold property, without prejudice to any right, the mortgagee giving up the lease to facilitate the sale. He claimed to be paid the amount due to him by the executor out of the proceeds of sale:—Held, that the lease was in equity part of the testator's estate, and that the equity of the estate, being prior to the equity of the mortgagee, must prevail against it. Morgan, In re, Pillgrem v. Pillgrem, 50 L. J., Ch. 834; 18 Ch. D. 93; 45 L. T. 183; 30 W. R. 223—C. A.

Held, also, that the equitable mortgagee was not injured by the order to give up the indenture of lease, and did not thereby acquire any claim upon the proceeds of the sale. Ib.

A., by his will, bequeathed a term of years to his two sons, R. and F., subject to debts and legacies, and appointed his widow executrix during her viduity, and died during the same year; the widow, having married, ceased to be executrix, and thereupon administration de bonis non was taken out by R. in 1789, but previously, in 1786, R. had procured a new lease for himself for three lives:—Held, that the new lease was a graft on the original interest, and subject to the trusts of the will, although it did not appear that the original term was unexpired at the date of the new lease. Jackson v. Welsh, Ll. & G. t. Plunk. 346.

Executor de son tort.]—A bishop's lease was granted, after the expiration of a former one, at a less fine, because the lessee was son of the old tenant who died without assets to pay the fine; another person was his administrator, but the son had made himself executor de son tort; the new lease was held a graft, and the lessee bound to renew to a sub-lessee, without contribution. The sub-lessee, having been evicted on the expiration of the term granted by his lease, sued on a covenant to grant an additional term; but the term covenanted to be granted having nearly expired at the time of the decree, instead of a specific performance, an account in the nature of an inquiry quantum damnificatus was directed. M'Nulty v. Hamill, Beat. 544.

Lease obtained by a person interfering with the assets, and compelling the surrender by executors of a leasehold interest, bequeathed to minors, a graft on the former lease so surrendered. Mulvany v. Dillon, 1 Ball & B. 400; 12 R. R. 43.

Mortgagee.]—A new lease obtained by a mortgagee of a leasehold interest who had been evicted for nonpayment of rent, taken after the expiration of six and nine months, allowed to the lessee and mortgagee to redeem by 3 Geo. 4, c. 2, s. 4, but in pursuance of a contract entered into in the period between the six and nine months, if the parties interested did not redeem, is not a graft on the former lease, nor a trust for the lessee, the mortgagee not being in possession nor procuring the lease behind the back of the lessee. The principles on which courts of equity act in considering renewed interests obtained by mortgagees, trustees, &c., to be grafts are, that the advantage was procured either by being in possession, or, when out of it, by a contrivance to oust the lessee of the benefit of renewal. Nesbitt v. Tredennick, 1 Ball & B. 29; 12 R. R. 1.

In 1822 a lease of lands was made for twenty-one years. The lands were afterwards mortgaged, and a renewal was granted to a mortgagee in 1829. In 1830, by deed, reciting the lease of 1822 and the mortgage, but not the renewal, the mortgagee conveyed the lands, and all his estate, title, interest, use, trust, property, profit, claim, challenge and demand, both at law and in equity therein, and also the mortgage debt and interest, to hold during the residue of the term granted by the lease of 1822. The deed contained covenants against acts by the mortgagee, for good title and further assurance:—Held, on exceptions to the master's report of bad title, that the legal estate, under the renewal of 1829, passed by the deed of 1830. Reynolds v. Reynolds, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 172.

Mortgagor.]—The defendants, who were entitled to the equity of redemption of leaseholds charged with a mortgage, attempted to get rid of it by fraudulently incurring a forfeiture, which they induced the lessor to take advantage of.

They afterwards obtained a new lease from him, which they sold:—Held, that the new lease was subject to the mortgage, notwithstanding the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, ss. 2, 10, and a decree was made for payment by the defendants of the mortgage, with costs. Hughes v. Howard, 25 Beav. 575.

A. being entitled to a leasehold interest, in 1814, assigns the same, by way of mortgage, to B. In 1824, A. obtains from the landlord a lease of lives renewable for ever, in lieu of the former interest, and in 1835, deposits this new lease with his solicitor in England, to whom he was considerably indebted for costs at the time. By the decree pronounced at the original hearing, the new lease was declared to be a graft upon the old one, and that the mortgagee was entitled to the benefit of it:—Held, that the solicitor's lien upon the new lease could not prevail against the mortgagee. Smith v. Chichester, 2 Dr. & War. 393; 1 Con. & L. 485; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 580.

By Owner of Rent-charge.]—Renewal obtained by a party having a rent-charge on leasehold interest, evicted for nonpayment of rent, is a trust for the original lessee, and a grant on the former lease. Fitzgerald v. Rainsford, 1 Ball & B. 37, n.

Assignee of Lease—Subject to Annuity.]—Where a party is in possession of premises as the assignee of a lease, subject to an annuity, amongst other charges, and, pending an eviction for non-payment of rent, enters into a new agreement, whereby, subject to the right of redemption, he is, in consideration of a sum of 750*l*., to get a lease at a less rent, to commence from the termination of the nine months allowed for redemption; there though the ejectment proceeding has been perfected, and the eviction actually had, yet the new interest is a graft upon the old, and, as such, subject to the annuity. Jones v. Kearney, 1 Dr. & War. 134; 1 Con. & L. 34; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 74.

Whoever has a lease has an interest in the renewal; and when an additional term has been granted, the old term may be said to be still in existence. Winslow v. Tighe, 2 Ball & B. 205; 12 R. R. 75.

The tenant's right of renewal is a part of his interest in the lease. Ib.

—— To Discharge Tithes.]—A testator, being seised in fee of a farm in the parish of A., and being also possessed of a lease for lives of the rectorial tithes of that parish, devised the farm to his nephews in tail male, and the lease to his brother J., his executors, administrators, and assigns, upon condition that his said brother J., his executors, administrators, and assigns, owners or occupiers of the said parsonage, tithes, and premises, should, at all times after his decease, free and discharge his said farm from all manner of tithes which should be payable out of the same to the said owner or occupier of the parsonage and tithes aforesaid. J. survived the testator, and devised his interest in the lease to his four sons, who took several renewals, and in 1782 assigned the existing lease for a valuable consideration to A. B., with notice of the trusts of the will:—Held, that a party to whom the tithes were bequeathed by the will of A. B., and who took a renewal of the lease in 1817, held the renewed lease upon the trusts of the will, and consequently he had no title to the tithes of the farm, and that the owner of the farm was not bound to contribute to the renewal fines. Webb v. Lugar, 2 Y. & C. 247; 6 L. J., Ex. Eq. 49.

Leases for Lives, one to "Lessee and her Heirs" and another to "Lessee and her Executors."]—One lease for lives is to the "lessee and her heirs," and another to the "lessee and her executors;" as to the effect in equity of a declaration of trust for A. simply, quære. But if the leases were merely renewals by a guardian, the trust must follow the actual interest of the infant; viz. in one estate to the heir, in the other to the executor. Milner v. Harewood (Lord), 18 Ves. 274.

Ecclesiastical Leases.]—A., possessed of a church lease for three lives, devised it to trustees for certain purposes till his son, R., should attain twenty-one; and when his said son should attain that age, he directed his trustees to stand seised of it to the use of his said son, and the heirs of his body; and, by a codicil, he directed, that if his son, R., should die without issue, his son, P., should inherit the estate in the same manner as R. was to inherit it. R. being quasi tenant in tail, if he surrender his lease, and take a new one to himself and his heirs for three new lives, there is no equity on behalf of P., to make R. or his devisees trustees of the new lease for P. Blake v. Blake, 1 Cox, 266; 1 R. R. 35.

In the case of leases from colleges and ecclesiastical bodies, if the lessee in the new lease takes in the right of him who had the old one, he must be subject to all the equity to which the original lessee was liable. Elwards v. Lewis, 3 Atk. 538.

By Husband of One of the Persons entitled.]—S. was entitled, with her brother and four sisters, to a lease for thirty-one years, as one of the next of kin to her mother, one of whose personal representatives she also was. The landlord made a lease for fifty-one years, which was expressed to be made in consideration of the surrender of the former lease, and described the lands as late in the possession of the mother, and then in the possession of S., and one of her sisters, who was her co-administratrix. There was an indorsement on the lease, stating that it was made in trust for herself and her brothers and sisters. S. married, and the landlord made a lease to her husband of the same lands for forty years, to commence after the expiration of the fifty-one years:—Held, that the new lease was a graft. M'Allister v. Walsh, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 250.

Lessee of Way-leave at a Rent—Land and Rent sold Separately—Agreement to put an End to Lease.]—Lands were subject to a lease of a way-leave at a certain rent for sixty-three years, which the lessee had the power of determining. The land and rent were sold separately by auction in two lots, and were purchased by two different persons. After some time, the purchaser of the land entered into an arrangement with the lessee, to put an end to the lease, and entered into a different one, in order to defeat the right of the purchaser of the rent:—Held, that this was contrary to equity, and the right of the purchaser of the rent was made good out of the new contract. Wood v. Londonderry (Marquis), 10 Beav. 465; 16 L. J., Ch. 460; 12 Jur. 735.

Assignment and Declaration of Trust for Creditors.]—In May, 1835, a lease (to commence in December, 1833, and to continue for twenty-one years and thirty-three days) of certain lead mines in Yorkshire, was granted by the crown to four lessees, of whom F. M. was one. In June, 1848, F. M. conveyed and assigned to J. H., inter alia, the property of which he was possessed for any term of years, &c., upon the trusts mentioned; and in July, 1848, F. M. granted and assigned to J. H. all his personal estate, and the surplus, if any, which might arise on the sale of his freehold and leasehold estates, upon trusts, after paying costs, &c., for the benefit of creditors, as therein mentioned. The plaintiffs, who were creditors of F. M., executed the deed in 1849, but no other creditor executed the deed until 1855. J. H. did not dispose of F. M.'s share in the mines. In May, 1854, the crown granted a lease of the said lead mines to seven lessees (two of whom were F. M. and J. H.) for a term of twenty-one years, to commence on the 5th January, 1855. F. M. died intestate in August, 1854. G. B., in August, 1848, recovered a judgment on two bonds against F. M., which was duly entered up; and in July, 1848, J. C. and others also recovered judgment against F. M., which was duly entered up in August following. Subsequently these judgments were assigned to J. B. S., and were duly registered in the county of York, and in the common pleas, which was afterwards renewed: —Held, that the plaintiffs had, by virtue of the assignment of June, 1848, and of the declaration of trust of July, 1848, they having executed the latter deed in 1849, acquired a beneficial interest in the renewed lease. Langhorne v. Harland, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 872; 4 W. R. 696.

Reversionary Lease.]—A. demises lands to B. for ninety-nine years; B. demises same to C., reserving a reversion of two years. C. demises the premises to occupying tenants, and afterwards, without notice to B., applies for and obtains a reversionary lease of the premises from A.; such lease is not a graft upon the original lease nor a trust for B. Maunsell v. O'Brien, 1 Jones, 176.

Semble, if C. had obtained the reversion lease, by representations made by him to A., that he was entitled to the entire interest in the lease made by A. to B., such misrepresentation would not be a ground for decreeing that lease a trust for B. Ib.

The reservation of a reversion by the intermediate landlord does not create an implied contract between him and the sub-lessee, that the latter shall not seek to obtain for his own benefit a reversionary lease of the premises from the head landlord. Ib.

Testator gave leasehold premises to his daughter for life, if his term or terms and interest should therein for so long subsist, for her sole and separate use, notwithstanding her present or future coverture, and after her decease to her children equally, their executors, &c., during all the remainder of the estate, term or terms, and interest therein which should be then to come and unexpired. No trustees being interposed, the husband, having possession, was held accountable according to the uses of the will, both as to the original leases, and also as to reversionary leases granted to him, as the person entitled under the will of the former tenant upon favourable terms, and the equity was established against a purchaser from him with notice. Parker v. Brooke, 9 Ves. 583; 7 R. R. 299.

6. Trusts for Advancement and Maintenance.

a. Advancement.

Persons Entitled.]—A. makes two of his daughters his executors, and directs them to distribute a sum of 400*l.* and also the residue of his personal estate among themselves and their brothers and sisters, according to their needs and necessities, as they in their discretion should think fit. The court restrained the exercise of this power, by decreeing a double share to the eldest son and heir, looking upon him as a necessitous person. Warburton v. Warburton, 4 Bro. P. C. 1.

Bequest of residue to A. for life, with power thereout to advance her eldest son, and a gift, after A.'s death, of the said residue to A.'s children equally:—Held, on the context, that the amount advanced to A.'s eldest son was not to be taken into account in the ultimate division of the remainder amongst A.'s children. Upjohn v. Upjohn, 7 Beav. 152.

By a marriage settlement certain stock in the funds was settled upon the intended husband and wife for their joint lives, and the life of the survivor, and then upon the children of the marriage, with a power to the trustees, with the consent of the wife, to advance part of the fund for the benefit of the children in her lifetime. There were four children of the marriage; the husband died; the wife married again; the second husband assigned the wife's life interest for value; after the assignment the trustees, with the consent of the wife, exercised the power of advancement in favour of the children of the first marriage:—Held, that the power was well executed as against the assignee of the second husband. Whitmarsh v. Robertson, 1 Coll. C. C. 571; 14 L. J., Ch. 157; 9 Jur. 125. And see S. C., 1 Y. & C. C. C. 715; 11 L. J., Ch. 404; 6 Jur. 921.

Consent to Exercise of Power.]—A tenant for life of a fund under a settlement which empowered the trustees with his consent to advance part of the presumptive share of a child, assigned his life interest in the fund by way of mortgage: —Held, that the trustees might be restrained from making any advancement to a son of the tenant for life during his life, he having by executing the mortgage lost his power to consent. Nottidge v. Green, 33 L. T. 220.

Duration and Cesser—Power not restricted to Minority.]—On the construction of a power of advancement, it was held not to be restricted to minority, and did not cease by the expiration of twenty-one years from the date of the testator's death, when the power of accumulation ceased. Pride v. Fooks, 2 Beav. 430; 9 L. J., Ch. 234; 4 Jur. 213.

"Collieries" held to mean freehold collieries, and not shares in leasehold collieries, the testator having both. Ib.

A deed, after reciting that A. was desirous of securing the payment after his death of the several annuities and the gross sum thereinafter specified, to the several persons thereinafter named, contained a covenant by A. with trustees that if B. should attain the age of twenty-one, either in the lifetime or after the death of A., then the heirs, executors, or administrators of A. should at such time after his death, or after the day on which B. should attain the age of twenty-one, whichever should last happen, as the trustees or the survivors or survivor of them should in their or his uncontrolled discretion think fit, and either in one sum or from time to time in various sums pay to B., or for his use or benefit, any sum not exceeding 300*l.*, without any deduction or abatement whatever. The covenant, as originally drawn, was an absolute covenant for the payment of 300*l.*, but was altered by the direction of the covenantor at the time when he executed the deed. The sum of 300*l.* was the only gross sum mentioned. The trustees proposed to exercise their discretion by paying B. 5*l.*, and expressed their intention of not exercising it further for his benefit:—Held, that the discretion of the trustees was confined to the time at which the sum or sums was or were to be paid to B., and that he was entitled to the full sum of 300*l.* Palmer v. Newell, 25 L. T. 892.

—— Power ceasing at Majority.]—Under a will a mother was tenant for life of a fund, to her separate use, without power of anticipation. After her death the fund was to go to her children as she should appoint by deed or will, and in default of appointment, among her children equally, the shares of sons being vested at twenty-one, and the shares of daughters at twenty-one or on marriage. The trustees had power to advance the whole or any part of the share to which each of the children being a minor was actually or presumptively entitled:—Held, that there was no power, even with the consent of the mother, to make an advance to a son who had attained twenty-one. Clarke v. Hogg, 19 W. R. 617.

—— Purpose becoming impossible.]—By a deed of settlement a sum of money was settled upon trust for A. for life, and after her death for B. for life, or until alienation, and afterwards in trust for B.'s children, and it was declared that the trustees might, in their absolute discretion, but with the consent of the first tenant for life, if living, advance any sum not exceeding 2,000*l.* for the promotion in the army of B. In 1871 promotion in the army by purchase was abolished:—Held, that the trustees could not after that raise the money and pay it to B. Palmer v. Flower (infra) distinguished. Ward's Trusts, In re, 42 L. J., Ch. 4; L. R. 7 Ch. 727; 27 L. T. 668; 20 W. R. 1024.

In the event of the object failing for which money has been advanced by trustees under a power of advancement, the money belongs to the person for whose benefit it was advanced, and cannot be recalled into the original fund. Lawrie v. Bankes, 4 K. & J. 142; 27 L. J., Ch. 265; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 299; 6 W. R. 244.

Therefore, where, under such a power, the trustees purchased a commission in the army, and the person for whom the commission was purchased sold out shortly after joining his regiment, there being no fraud:—Held, that he, and not the trustees, was entitled to the purchase money. Ib.

A testator by his will declared that it should be lawful for his trustees, at the request of E. P., during her life and after her death, at their discretion, to expend any sum or sums not exceeding 6,500*l.* in purchasing commissions for or obtaining the promotion of W. P. in the army. E. P. requested the trustees to pay, under the trusts of the will, the sum of 6,500*l.* absolutely to W. P., who was in the army. Before any payment had been made purchase in the army was abolished:—Held, that W. P. was entitled to have the 6,500*l.*, with interest at 4 per cent. from the date of the request, paid to him absolutely. Palmer v. Flower, 41 L. J., Ch. 193; L. R. 13 Eq. 250; 25 L. T. 816; 20 W. R. 174.

A power in a settlement to withdraw funds and lay them out in the purchase of a trade for the benefit of the husband and wife may be exercised after the death of one of them for the benefit of the survivor alone. Doorly v. Arnold, 18 W. R. 540.

In exercising it the trustees ought to see that a purchase is bonâ fide made, but they need not inquire into the value of the property or expediency of the purchase. Ib.

—— Inquiry as to Necessity of Advancement.]—Trust by will as to the residue of real and personal estate, for a nephew and his heirs, to pay him the interest for life, with power to the trustees, in case they should see it would be for his benefit, to advance him, when it may be in their power, any part of the principal for his advancement in life, that they will not withhold such assistance as they may deem necessary; but in case no part should be advanced, the residue to be divided among the nephew's issue; with a limitation over, if he should leave no issue. The nephew is entitled, not to the absolute property, but for life only; and no advancement having been made, an inquiry was directed, whether his circumstances required advancement. Robinson v. Cleator, 15 Ves. 526; 10 R. R. 118.

Proper Advances—Purchase of Commission.]—A fund, bequeathed by will, was directed to accumulate till infants should attain twenty-one, deducting annually from the interest such portion as might be necessary for their education and other expenses; with benefit of survivorship; in case of either dying under twenty-one, the shares to be vested at twenty-one. The court (parties to whom the fund was given over consenting) directed an advancement for the purchase of a commission for one of the infants, but with considerable hesitation. Evans v. Massey, 1 Y. & J. 196.

—— Expenses as a Cadet.]—Under a marriage settlement, stock was vested in trustees, in trust to pay the interest and dividends to the wife for life, remainder to the husband for life, with a power to them and the survivor to appoint the principal among the children of the marriage. The wife died, and the husband appointed a third part thereof absolutely and at once in trust for an infant child, payment to be postponed till twenty-one. The court, on the application of the infant that the trustees might apply a sufficient part of the capital of his share of the stock in payment of the expenses incurred and to be incurred for his education as a cadet, and his advancement in India, granted the prayer of the petition so far as related to payment of part of the expenses incurred, and as to the expenses of education and residence as a cadet at Addiscombe, and ordered the rest of the petition to stand over. Lane, In re, 17 Jur. 219.

—— Outfit.]—Trustees having a power of advancement for the benefit of children, were authorised by the court to make an advancement for the passage and outfit of the children with their parents to New Zealand, for the sake of their health, each child's share contributing equally to the passage and outfit of their parents. Long's Settlement, In re, 38 L. J., Ch. 125; 19 L. T. 672; 17 W. R. 218.

The court declined to sanction the transfer of the trust funds to new trustees resident in New Zealand. Ib.

—— Past Maintenance and Future Outfit.]—The whole of a small legacy and its accumulations, were paid out of court to the solicitor of an infant who had no other property, upon his undertaking to apply it in discharging a sum claimed for past maintenance and for a prospective outfit, and, after deducting the costs, to pay any remaining balance to the infant at majority. Welch, In re, 23 L. J., Ch. 344; 2 W. R. 310.

—— Payments of Debts of Adults.]—A father bequeathed a fund upon trust for L. during his life, and after his death for his children, as he should by will appoint, and in default of appointment for his children, who being sons should attain twenty-one, or being daughters should attain that age or marry, in equal shares. The testator empowered the trustees, at any time or times during the life of L., to apply any part of the fund not exceeding one moiety in or towards the preferment or advancement of L., or otherwise for his benefit as the trustees should in their discretion think fit. At the date of the will L. was thirty years of age, and had been married for nearly three years:—Held, that the trustees might apply one moiety of the trust fund in payment of debts incurred by L., the interest on which absorbed nearly the whole of L.'s income, and the principal of which he was unable to pay out of his own resources. Lowther v. Bentinck, 44 L. J., Ch. 197; L. R. 19 Eq. 166; 31 L. T. 719; 23 W. R. 156.

A testator gave 5,000*l.* to trustees upon trust to pay and apply so much of the interest as they should in their uncontrolled discretion think necessary or expedient to be paid and applied yearly and every year from the time of his death, until A. should attain thirty-two, in aid of the allowance which A.'s father should or ought to make for that purpose in order to prepare A. for his establishment in and to enable him to follow some profession, &c., and, subject thereto, to accumulate the income by way of compound interest, and upon A. attaining thirty-two to pay the interest of the 5,000*l.*, and of the accumulated fund arising therefrom to A. during his life, so long as he should not have been bankrupt. And after the death of A. the 5,000*l.* and the accumulated fund were to be held in trust for the children of A. &c. On the testator's death, in 1842, A. was six years old, and his father died in 1849. The testator's estate was being administered in chancery, and a considerable fund arose from the accumulations of the income. A. was married, and had one child; and having contracted debts which prevented his living in this country, he petitioned the court that a sufficient sum for their payment might be raised out of the accumulated fund:—Held, that there was power to apply a portion of the accumulations for that purpose; and that as it was clearly, under the circumstances, for A.'s benefit, the court directed the necessary sum to be so raised, and applied in payment of the debts. Edwards v. Grove, 2 De G. F. & J. 210; 29 L. J., Ch. 839; 2 L. T. 620.

E. B. by will gave 1,000*l.* to trustees to invest and stand possessed of the same until P. L. attained twenty-one, and then pay the interest to him for life, with remainder to his children at twenty-one or marriage, with power to the trustees if they thought proper, but not otherwise, to advance all or any part of the legacy for the advancement of P. L. P. L. had twelve children; seven died infants, and unmarried, and five attained twenty-one; and P. L. being distressed, and having mortgaged the legacy, now petitioned, with the consent of four of the surviving children, one being abroad, that the security might be paid off out of the legacy, and the residue paid to him under the power in the will:—Held, that the trustees had no power to do what was asked. Luard v. Pease, 22 L. J., Ch. 1069; 1 W. R. 527.

—— Payment to Trustees of Post-nuptial Settlement.]—A power in a marriage settlement to advance to a son of the marriage part of the trust funds for placing or establishing him in any business, profession, or employment, or otherwise for his advancement or preferment in the world:—Held, to authorise the payment of part of the trust fund to the trustees of a post-nuptial settlement made by a son in favour of himself and his wife and the issue of their marriage, neither the son nor his wife being entitled to any property producing an immediate income, and the son being engaged in study, preparatory to entering the legal profession. Roper-Curzon v. Roper-Curzon, L. R. 11 Eq. 452; 24 L. T. 406; 19 W. R. 519.

—— Setting up Husband in Business.]—Trustees having power to advance for the benefit of a testator's daughter at any period of her life half the capital, the income of which was given by the will to her separate use, were authorised by the court to make the advance for the purpose of setting up her husband in business. Kershaw's Trusts, In re, 37 L. J., Ch. 751; L. R. 6 Eq. 322; 18 L. T. 899; 16 W. R. 963.

Where there was a power of advancement in favour of an infant female legatee to whom an interest for life for her separate use, without power of anticipation, was given, with remainder to her children, the court, after the legatee had attained twenty-one, and married, ordered an advancement to be made for the purpose of enabling the husband to enter into a partnership, upon the husband insuring his life, and entering into a bond for the payment of the sum advanced and the premiums on the policy. Phillips v. Phillips, Kay, 40; 2 Eq. R. 362; 23 L. J., Ch. 7; 18 Jur. 69.

A discretionary power of advancement vested in trustees for setting up testator's sons and daughters in business may not be exercised in favour of the married daughters' husbands, either for paying their debts or setting them up in business. Talbot v. Marshfield, 37 L. J., Ch. 52; L. R. 4 Eq. 661. Affirmed, with a variation, L. R. 3 Ch. 622; 19 L. T. 223.

But where a share was advanced for the purpose of setting up a married daughter in a farming business, her husband covenanting that the business should be for her separate use:—Held, that this was a good execution of the power. Ib.

If such a power is exercised by the trustees pending a suit for administration of their testator's estate, the court will require the strictest evidence of bona fides, and of the propriety of the advancement. Ib.

Trustees having, in the opinion of the court, exercised such a power malâ fide, for the purpose of defeating the plaintiff's interest, were ordered to refund the sums advanced, and pay all costs of the litigation occasioned beyond the estimated costs of an ordinary administration suit. Ib.

—— Marriage Portion.]—Trustees of a marriage settlement had authority, with the consent of the husband and wife, or the survivor, to raise 2,000*l.* for placing the issue of the marriage to any profession, trade, or business, or for their advancement in life:—Held, that in the case of a daughter, "advancement in life" might be taken to mean "advancement in life by way of marriage." Lloyd v. Cocker, 27 Beav. 645; 29 L. J., Ch. 513; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 336; 8 W. R. 252.

—— Benefit and Advancement.]—Power of advancing the capital of a fund was given to a trustee for the "benefit and advancement in the world" of the person entitled to the income of the fund for life, and there were words at the end of the clause conferring the power, which seemed to indicate that the power was to be a wide one:—Held, that the word "and" must be read disjunctively, and that the trustee could advance the fund, not only for the advancement, in a strict sense, of the object of the power, but also for such wider purposes as would come within the meaning of "benefit." Brittlebank, In re, Coates v. Brittlebank, 30 W. R. 99.

—— Reference to Master to Inquire.]—Testator, after making a certain provision for A., the son of a relation, till he attained the age of sixteen, added: "I then leave him to the care of my trustees to provide for him in some business or profession, and his future maintenance, out of my funded property":—Held, that these words created a trust for placing out A. in business, and also that he was entitled for life to a certain annual sum, the amount of which, as well as of the sum for placing him out, was referred to the master. Kilvington v. Gray, 10 Sim. 293.

Powers of Advancement and Appointment—Hotchpot Clause.]—A settlement contained a power of advancement, a power of appointment, and a hotchpot clause, applicable to the former, and not to the latter. Part of the trust fund having been taken out of the settlement and paid over to a child, without stating under which power:—Held, that it was primâ facie attributable to the advancement clause, and that this was confirmed by subsequent memoranda in the handwriting of the donee of the power. Gosset's Settlement, In re, 19 Beav. 529.

—— Allowances to Trustees in Accounts.]—A trustee bonâ fide advanced a sum to apprentice an infant, in the life of his father, who was in great pecuniary distress, and while the infant's interest in the trust fund was contingent, and before a power of advancement had come into operation:—Held, that in taking the accounts as against the trustee, the amount ought to be allowed him. Worthington v. M'Craer or M'Craw, 23 Beav. 81; 26 L. J., Ch. 286; 5 W. R. 124.

Trustees applied a part of the capital of a fund belonging to infants, who had been left destitute by their father, for their benefit. They were allowed the amount. Prince v. Hine, 26 Beav. 634.

When two trustees under a will, one of them the wife of the testator, had a power to make advances to the testator's children, and there was a direction to appoint new trustees, or a new trustee, in case of the first two or either of them dying or not acting, and the wife only acted and made advances without the concurrence of the other trustee, as was alleged:—Held, that the power of making advances was not vested in her, and the court refused to inquire into the propriety of particular advances made by her with a view to their being allowed. Palmer v. Wakefield, 3 Beav. 227.

b. Maintenance.

i. Persons Entitled.

In General Terms—Children.]—A direction for maintenance in general terms, comprehending all children, not restrained by the bequest of the capital, in terms limited, to those living at the date of the will. Freemantle v. Taylor, 15 Ves. 363.

—— Children requiring Support.]—Bequest in trust to pay the interest to the testator's wife for life, for the separate use of his wife and their children, and applied for the maintenance and support of himself, and the maintenance, education, clothing, and support of such children. The widow mortgaged her interest and became insolvent:—Held, that the trust was only for the benefit of those children requiring support, and a reference was directed to ascertain what part of the income was necessary for that purpose. Carr v. Living, 28 Beav. 644. And see S.C., 33 Beav. 474.

Devise until Youngest Child attained Twenty-one.]—Devise to the children of A., B., and C., who should be living when the youngest attained twenty-one, with a direction that "the present yearly rents" should be paid to the persons who brought up the children of C.:—Held, upon the context, that until the contingency happened, the rents were to be paid to such person in trust not only for the children of C., but of A. and B. Sanders v. Miller, 25 Beav. 154.

Persons absolutely or presumptively Entitled.]—Power of maintenance of the "person for the time being entitled" to the estate:—Held, to include persons absolutely or presumptively entitled. Sidney v. Wilmer, 25 Beav. 260.

Maintenance of Infants—In General and Orders of Court.]—See INFANT.

Gifts on Condition as to Maintenance or Education of Infants.]—See CONDITION.

ii. Lunatics.

Fund primarily Liable.]—A mother, whose only daughter, a lunatic, was entitled to a large real and personal estate under her father's will, bequeathed the residue of her estate and effects to trustees, upon trust to apply the interest, amounting to about 1,600*l.* a year, towards the maintenance and support of her daughter, and otherwise for her comfort and advantage, as they should think proper, without being liable to account; and after her decease to pay the principal, and also such interest as should not have been actually so applied, to the testatrix's nieces:—Held, that the allowance of the lunatic ought to be borne exclusively by the maternal estate, as that arrangement, in the event of her recovery, would be most beneficial for her. Ashley, In re, 1 Russ. & M. 371. And see Sanderson's Will, In re, 3 K. & J. 497; 26 L. J., Ch. 804; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 658; 5 W. R. 864, post, col. 488.

A father, by will, directed the income of his real and personal estate to be expended as the trustees might think fit, in the maintenance of his son, a lunatic, and gave the corpus so that it vested in the lunatic absolutely. Afterwards, the mother of the lunatic gave her personal estate to trustees, upon trust, to apply a sufficient part of the income in his maintenance, with a direction to accumulate the surplus, and gave the corpus and accumulations over:—Held, that the mother had dedicated the whole of the income of her estate for the benefit of her son, subject to a provision that the surplus should be added to the principal, and that the question of contribution between the two estates to the lunatic's maintenance must be decided solely with reference to his interest; and the income of the mother's estate alone being insufficient for the lunatic's maintenance, the whole thereof must be applied for that purpose in the first instance, before any part of the income of the father's estate should be applied. Methold v. Turner, 4 De G. & Sm. 249; 20 L. J., Ch. 201; 15 Jur. 810.

A testator gave a fund to trustees in trust to pay the income to his sister for her life or "apply the same, or so much as may be necessary, for her support and maintenance, in such manner as may be most to her comfort and advantage." He then directed the surplus, if any, to be accumulated and added to the capital of the fund, which was given over after her death. The sister, who was of unsound mind, was entitled to a life interest under a settlement of which the testator was a trustee. After the testator's death she was found lunatic, and the allowance for her maintenance was fixed at a sum exceeding the income of the bequeathed fund:—Held, that this income was the primary fund for her maintenance, and that therefore the whole of it must be so applied. Rudland v. Crozier, 2 De G. & J. 143; 27 L. J., Ch. 261; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 675; 6 W. R. 305.

Where a lunatic has property to which he is entitled for life under a settlement as well as property to which he is absolutely entitled, the court will apply the life interest in the first place towards his maintenance; unless the trustees of the settled property have an absolute discretion whether to employ the whole or any part of the income for the lunatic's benefit. Therefore where property was held upon trust to pay the income in such way, at such time, and in such manner as the trustees should think fit towards the maintenance of a lunatic during her life, with power to invest any surplus not required for the purpose as capital, it was held that the trustees had no such discretion as would oust the jurisdiction of the court to apply the whole of the income in the lunatic's maintenance in exoneration of her absolute property. Gisborne v. Gisborne (infra) distinguished. Weaver, In re, 21 Ch. D. 615; 48 L. T. 93; 31 W. R. 224—C. A.

The brother of a lunatic lady not so found by inquisition advanced money for the maintenance of his sister for several years under circumstances which left it doubtful whether he intended it for a gift or expected to be repaid. He died, and his sister was then found to be lunatic by inquisition. His executors having brought in a claim against the lunatic's estate for repayment of the advances, the court made an allowance to the testator's estate for past maintenance, but limited it to advances made within six years before the testator's death. Ib.

Where there are two funds, both of them applicable to the maintenance of a lunatic, under the management of the court of chancery, to one of which the lunatic would be absolutely entitled as her own property, the other of which, so far as she might not benefit by it, would pass away to different persons, the court might direct her maintenance to be provided for out of the latter fund. But where such latter fund is provided by a will which vests the fund in trustees, and gives them an absolute discretion and "uncontrollable authority" over its application, the court will not exercise its ordinary power. The fund so specially provided will be left to the exercise, bonâ fide, of the discretion of the trustees. Gisborne v. Gisborne, 46 L. J., Ch. 556; 2 App. Cas. 300; 36 L. T. 564; 25 W. R. 516—H. L. (E.)

A testator devised real estate, and bequeathed his residuary personal estate to trustees upon trust, that they, in their discretion and of their uncontrollable authority, should pay and apply the whole or such portion only of the annual income, of his real and residuary personal estate as they should think expedient to or for the maintenance of his wife (a lunatic) at such time or times and in such proportion and manner in all respects as his trustees should think most conducive to her comfort, enjoyment, and convenience, without being liable to account for such payment and application. The lunatic became, on her husband's death without issue, entitled under her marriage settlement to a life interest in certain funds, and absolutely to other funds therein respectively comprised. By an order of the lords justices in lunacy, it was ordered that without prejudice to the question as to the primary liability of the testator's estate to provide for the maintenance of the lunatic, the sum of 696*l.* a year should be applied for that purpose:—Held, that the trustees had an absolute discretion as to whether or not they would apply any and what part of the income of the testator's estate for the maintenance of the lunatic, and that the court was not entitled to control or interfere with such discretion. Ib.

Absolute Gift.]—A testator gave the residue of his estate to trustees, upon the usual trusts for conversion and investment, and directed them to pay such sums for the maintenance and education of his sons M. and N. during their minorities, or for apprenticing them, as his trustees should think proper; and declared that, when his sons should have attained their ages of twenty-one years, his trustees should pay the then residue of the money unto his two sons, provided that they should be, in the opinion of his trustees, of competent understanding and sufficient discretion to manage and take due care thereof. M. and N. were both lunatic at the time of their attaining their majority:—Held, that the qualification as to the sons being of competent understanding did not make the gift to them conditional, and that the testator's estate vested in them absolutely. Wright v. Wright, 21 L. J., Ch. 775.

A testatrix gave real and personal estate to trustees to pay the income to E. for life, and hold the capital in trust as E. should by will appoint, and in default to pay thereout certain legacies, and hold the residue in trust for C. and W. And in case E. should become of unsound mind, to apply the income or any part of it at their discretion towards her maintenance and support:—Held, that while E. was of sound mind, she, together with C. and W., could, on providing for the legacies, dispose of the estate. Gardiner v. Young, 34 L. T. 348.

Charge upon Estate for Maintenance.]—P., by his will, directed that his widow A., and second son B., who were devisees of his estates, should apply a sum not exceeding 400*l.* per annum for the maintenance and care of his son John, who was a lunatic, and that whoever should at any time be in possession of his estate should, during the life of his son, apply such sum annually for his comfortable support, care, and maintenance; and that such sum should be deemed, taken, and considered as a charge thereon:—Held, that there was no greater charge upon the estate than what was actually required and applied for the maintenance of the lunatic. Ponsonby, In re, 3 Dr. & War. 27; 2 Con. & L. 30; 5 Ir. Eq. R. 268.

After A. and B. had died, the court fixed the allowance of 280*l.* a year:—Held, after the lunatic's death, as between the owner of the estate charged and the administrator of the lunatic, that the owner of the estate was entitled to the difference between 280*l.* and 400*l.* a year, and not the administrator of the lunatic. Ib.

The committee of a lunatic is beneficially entitled to the savings out of the lunatic's allowance. Ib.

Allowance out of Wife's Separate Maintenance.]—A wife was insane before and during the time of her being entitled to a separate maintenance left by the will of a testator who knew her to be insane; no commission had issued; she had an only child, an infant, entitled to the capital in the event of surviving his mother; upon the husband's application for an allowance out of the wife's separate maintenance for her support, a reference was directed to the master to inquire who had maintained the wife, at what expense, how far the husband was able and willing to maintain her, and if any part of this fund was to be advanced to any one, what securities should be taken for its due application. Brodie v. Barry, 2 V. & B. 36; 13 R. R. 6, 37.

iii. Married Women or Widows.

Separate Use.]—A testator directed his trustees to apply a legacy for the support and maintenance of the wife of H., and for the support and education of his children. There were none at the testator's death:—Held, that the wife took absolutely for her separate use. Cape v. Cape, 2 Y. & C. 543; 1 Jur. 307.

If an estate is given to a husband for the livelihood of his wife, he will be a trustee for her separate use, and technical words are not necessary to create a separate trust; "livelihood" is enough here to show the testator's intention. Darley v. Darley, 3 Atk. 399.

Held, under the limitations of an antenuptial settlement giving inter alia a life interest to the wife for her separate use, without power of anticipation, with a clause of maintenance, that the maintenance clause did not enable the wife to affect her life interest by a prospective provision for the children, at all events as regarded any period beyond the minority of the sons, or the minority or marriage of the daughters. Horlock v. Horlock, 2 De G. M. & G. 644.

Gift to Widow in Consideration of Maintenance of Children.]—Testator gave his wife 400*l.* a year in addition to 500*l.* a year under her settlement, in consideration of the expense and care she would incur in the maintenance of their children; she must maintain them when at home, but is not to be charged with education or maintenance at school. Collier v. Collier, 3 Ves. 33.

Second Husband.]—Testator gave his property to trustees on trust during the life of his son to pay, apply, and dispose of the annual produce of a portion of it for the maintenance and support of his son and his present or any future wife, and the maintenance, education, and support of their children, or any or either of them his son and his wife and children, in such manner and such proportions as the trustees should in their discretion think fit and proper, without being answerable or accountable to any person for the way in which they should apply the same; and, after the decease of his son, to pay and apply the annual proceeds in like manner unto and for the benefit of any widow for life, and any children until they should attain twenty-one or marry, and subject to those trusts in trust for the children. The son died in 1849, leaving a wife and six children, the youngest of whom attained twenty-one in 1870. In 1851 the widow married again. The settlement made on the marriage did not comprise the above annual proceeds, and the trustees continued to pay them to the wife as part of her separate estate and on her separate receipt. The second husband, who was living apart from his wife, claimed to be entitled to the income during her life:—Held, that the trustees had a discretion to pay the wife the income for her separate use. Austin v. Austin, 46 L. J., Ch. 92; 4 Ch. D. 233; 36 L. T. 96; 25 W. R. 346.

Testator bequeathed his residuary estate to trustees in trust to pay the income to his wife for her life, to be by her applied for the maintenance of herself and such children as he might leave at his death:—Held, not to be a trust for the separate use of the wife. Wardle v. Claxton, 9 Sim. 524; 8 L. J., Ch. 119; 3 Jur. 145.

—— Widow's Pension.]—Under a trust deed providing pensions to be paid for the maintenance of widows and children of clerks in the East India company's service, and stipulating that any recipient of a pension who should dispose of or incumber it should lose all right to such pension, a widow became entitled to a pension. She married a second husband, who claimed to be entitled to the pension in his marital right:—Held, that the pension provided for the petitioner was intended by the trust deed to be for her separate use, and the money was ordered to be paid to her upon her sole receipt. Peacock's Trusts, In re, 48 L. J., Ch. 265; 10 Ch. D. 490; 39 L. T. 661; 27 W. R. 500.

iv. Statutory Powers of Maintenance.

Contingent Legacy — Income — Lord Cranworth's Act.]—Trustees may, under 23 & 24 Vict. c. 145, s. 26, apply for or towards the maintenance of an infant the income of a legacy bequeathed to an infant by a stranger contingently on attaining the age of twenty-one years. Cotton's Trusts, In re, 45 L. J., Ch. 201; 1 Ch. D. 232; 33 L. T. 720; 24 W. R. 243.

When a fund was bequeathed upon trust for all the children of A. who should attain twenty-one in equal shares, and if there should be but one such child, then for that child, and A. died leaving one infant child:—Held, that the income of the fund might be applied in the maintenance of the child. Ib.

The 23 & 24 Vict. c. 145, s. 26, empowering trustees to apply towards the maintenance of an infant the income to which such infant may be entitled in respect of a legacy payable contingently on his attaining twenty-one, does not apply to a case where the infant on attaining twenty-one would not be entitled to interest on his legacy till the time of payment. George, In re, 47 L. J., Ch. 118; 5 Ch. D. 837; 37 L. T. 204; 26 W. R. 65—C. A.

A testator declared that his personal estate should be held upon trust out of the annual produce to raise for every daughter who should be under age and unmarried the yearly sum of 50*l.* for their maintenance and education, and to accumulate the surplus income as part of his residuary personal estate, and he bequeathed to each of his daughters a legacy of 4,000*l.* if and when they should respectively attain twenty-one or be married, and gave his residuary personal estate to his eldest son:—Held, that the legacies to the daughters did not carry interest until the time of payment, and that the court had no power, under s. 26 of the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 145, to apply any part of the income of the expectant legacies to the maintenance of the daughters. Ib.

—— Conveyancing Act, 1881.]—Trustees cannot, under s. 43 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), apply the income of an infant's contingent legacy for the benefit of the infant, unless the income will go along with the capital of the legacy if and when such capital vests. Judkin's Trusts, In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 496; 25 Ch. D. 743.

—— "Contrary Intention."]—A testator gave a fund to trustees, on trust for all the children of A. equally, who being sons should attain twenty-one, or being daughters should attain twenty-one or marry, with benefit of survivorship amongst them, and he directed his trustees to accumulate the income of the shares of the children, and to pay the same to them as and when their presumptive shares should become payable under the previous trust:—Held, that the will did not express a "contrary intention" within the meaning of s. 43 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, and that, the children being infants and unmarried, the trustees might at their discretion apply the income of the trust fund in or towards the maintenance and education of the infants. Thatcher's Trusts, In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 1050; 26 Ch. D. 426; 32 W. R. 679.

—— Bequest of Residue.]—A testatrix bequeathed "the residue of my money" to an infant:—Held, that the estate being cleared and the residue ascertained, the executor would hold the residue in trust for the infant, within the meaning of s. 43 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, and would be entitled to apply the income for the infant's maintenance, education, or benefit, as provided by that section. Smith, In re, Henderson-Roe v. Hitchins, 58 L. J., Ch. 860; 42 Ch. D. 302; 61 L. T. 363; 37 W. R. 705.

v. Fund out of which Maintenance Payable.

General rule.]—General rule, that trustee shall not break in of his own authority upon the capital of infant's fortune. Walker v. Wetherell, 6 Ves. 473.

Capital.]—Trustees may, in a case of necessity, be justified in breaking in upon the capital of a trust fund, either for the maintenance and education, or for the advancement in life of infant children, even where there is a gift over to the issue of such children in the event of their dying under twenty-one. Tibbs' Trusts, In re, 17 W. R. 304.

When a settlor directed maintenance for his children to be paid to their mother for their support up to fourteen years of age out of yearly income, and from fourteen to twenty-one to be allowed by trustees "out of the share" of each child in a certain fund of 6,000*l.*, to which each would be entitled on attaining the latter age, and there was no direction for the payment of interest on that fund from fourteen to twenty-one:—Held, that the maintenance for each child from fourteen to twenty-one must come wholly out of the capital of the share of that child in the 6,000*l.* Cusack v. Jellico, 22 W. R. 344.

A testator left stock to trustees for the maintenance of his two granddaughters till twenty-one, and then to be divided between them. The court refused to assume as a fact against one of these granddaughters, who, after the lapse of many years, was claiming her share of the principal fund against the estate of the surviving trustee, that that share had been expended by the trustees in maintaining her. Clarke v. Wyburn, 12 Jur. 613.

Quære, whether the trustees would have a right so to have applied the principal fund. Ib.

Interim Rents of specifically devised Freeholds.]—A testator, in 1853, devised freeholds to trustees, to pay the rents (after satisfying certain premiums and repairs) to and for the use of his grandson for life, and after his decease "to and for the use of all and every child or children of his grandson, equally as tenants in common, who should attain the age of twenty-one being sons, or being daughters, should attain that age or marry," and if but one such child, to him or her absolutely. The testator devised and bequeathed the residue of his estates to his trustees, to convert, invest, and hold the same and the accumulations, upon similar trusts for his grandchildren and their issue. He then directed his trustees to apply a competent part of the income of the investments for the maintenance and education of such "grandchildren and their issue"; and to accumulate the residue, as in his will was mentioned. The grandson attained twenty-one and died in 1869, leaving three children, infants:—Held, that they were entitled to maintenance out of the interim rents and profits of the specifically devised freeholds. Best v. Donmall, 40 L. J., Ch. 160; 24 L. T. 217; 19 W. R. 400.

Bequest of Income for Lunatic possessed of Absolute Property.]—A testator gave a share of his residuary estate to trustees upon trust to pay the annual produce to the plaintiff for her life; or to apply the same, or so much as might be necessary for her support and maintenance, in such manner as might be most for her comfort and advantage. The plaintiff having been found lunatic by inquisition, an allowance out of her fortune was made for her maintenance. The plaintiff was also entitled to certain property in her absolute right:—Held, that the income of her life estate, under the will, must be first applied for her maintenance in exoneration of her absolute property. Rudland v. Crozier, 2 De G. & J. 143; 27 L. J., Ch. 261; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 675; 6 W. R. 305.

Life Interest of Widow of Testator.]—Testator gave his real estate and residuary property to his wife for life, remainder to an infant great-nephew for life; a statement in the will that it was his particular wish and request that his wife and the infant's grandfather would superintend and take care of the infant's education, so as to fit him for any respectable profession or employment, was held, under the circumstances, and upon the effect of the whole instrument, to charge the maintenance and education of the infant upon the interest taken by the testator's widow under the will. Foley v. Parry, 2 Myl. & K. 138; Coop. t. Brough. 219; 5 Sim. 138.

A testator bequeathed as follows: "I leave J. B. under the protection of my wife A. P., to be by her apprenticed and taken care of, and to be provided for to the best of her judgment, as long as the said A. P. remains unmarried":—Held, that J. B. was entitled to maintenance out of the testator's estate. Batt v. Anns, 11 L. J., Ch. 52.

Testator gave all his property to his wife and two other persons in trust for the under-mentioned purpose, namely, to pay the income to his wife for the education and support of his children by her, and after her death the property to be divided among his children; and he gave his furniture, plate, &c., to his wife absolutely:—Held, that the children were not entitled to the trust property on their father's death; but that their mother was entitled to the income for her life, she maintaining and educating the children out of it. Gilbert v. Bennett, 10 Sim. 371.

Residue.] — A testator, having bequeathed various legacies, and, among others, an annuity of 5*l.* to his daughter during her life, directs his son (whom he afterwards makes his executor) to take care of and provide for her, and, "subject as aforesaid," he gave to that son the residue of his real and personal estate: the daughter is entitled to a provision out of the residue in addition to her annuity, and a reference will be directed to the master to fix the amount of such provision. Broad v. Bevan, 1 Russ. 511, n.; 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 69; 25 R. R. 123.

Accumulations of Surplus Income.]—A legacy of 5,000*l.* was bequeathed to trustees, to pay and apply so much of the interest as they, in their uncontrolled discretion, should think necessary or expedient, yearly and every year from the time of the testator's decease, until A. should attain thirty-two, in aid of the allowance which A.'s father should or ought to make for that purpose, in order to prepare A. for his establishment, and to enable him to follow, some profession or business, and subject thereto, to accumulate the income until A. should attain thirty-two or die, whichever should first happen; and on A. attaining thirty-two, to pay the interest of the capital, and of the accumulated fund arising therefrom, to A., during his life, so long as he should not have been found bankrupt, or taken the benefit of the insolvent acts, or have assigned his estate for the benefit of, or have compounded with, his creditors for payment of less than the debts due to them; and subject to the trust above mentioned, the principal and the accumulated fund were to be held in trust for the child or children of A. in manner therein mentioned, with a gift over in default of a child or children becoming entitled under such trust. A., soon after attaining his majority, became involved in debt, and, in consequence, unable to provide for his wife and infant child, or to pursue any profession or business. The court directed a portion of the fund which had arisen from accumulations of surplus income to be applied in payment of his debts. Edwards v. Grove, 2 De G. F. & J. 210; 29 L. J., Ch. 839; 2 L. T. 620.

Power of trustees to resort for future maintenance to accumulations of dividends which would, if required, have been applicable to past maintenance. Ib.

Policy Money and Bonus.]—Money, secured by a policy, was settled to A. and B., wife and husband, successively, for life, then in trust for the children of the marriage, with powers of advancement and for maintenance, with an ultimate trust; on failure of children, to the wife's appointment. There was but one child of the marriage, and the wife bequeathed all her interest under the settlement to her husband, and died. There was a bonus declared on the policy, and the assurance office was willing to pay money in respect of it. The husband was in insolvent circumstances, and about to emigrate, and he and the child petitioned that the trustees might be at liberty to receive the money payable in respect of the bonus, and, by yearly payments out of it, maintain the child; and the court granted the prayer of the petition, on the husband (the father) agreeing to give up all his life-interest, not only in the bonus money, but in the principal money assured, although there was no suit in court for the administration of the trust. Hays, Ex parte, 18 L. J., Ch. 441; 13 Jur. 762.

Money raised under Term of Years.]—Term of years to trustees to raise money for maintenance, &c. of younger children of A. in such shares, &c. as A. should direct, and, in default of direction, to be applied for the benefit of children equally, the same to be paid them respectively till their respective portions provided out of other property should be paid. A., by will, appointed a certain portion for the plaintiff, to be vested in her at the age of twenty-one or marriage, and directed that a certain part of the interest and dividends should be applied towards her maintenance, &c. but did not make any appointment, or give any directions relative to the sum of money raisable for that purpose under the term :— Held, on the construction of the settlement, that the plaintiff was entitled to have her share of the money provided by the term raised for her benefit, until her portion should become payable. Poulett v. Poulett, 6 Madd. 167.

Accumulation of Rents.]—A testator devised estates to trustees upon trust to pay certain annuities to his wife and other persons, with a direction that during the life of his wife the surplus rents should be applied in discharge of incumbrances affecting the devised property; and subject to these trusts, he declared that the trustees should stand seised of the property, in trust for various persons (not in esse at the testator's death) successively in tail, with remainder to the testator's niece for life, with a direction that during her minority the rents should be applied as after mentioned ; and then followed a clause to the effect that, if any person beneficially entitled to the rents should be in his or her minority, an annual sum not exceeding 300*l.* should be applied out of the rents to the maintenance of that person, and that the residue of the rents should accumulate, and the accumulations be applied in the discharge of incumbrances :—Held, upon the construction of these inconsistent clauses, and other parts of the will, that the testator's niece was not (at least during the life of the testator's widow) entitled to any part of the rents for her maintenance during minority. Williams v. Edwards, 2 Coll. C. C. 176.

Income during Widowhood.]—Testator desired his trustees to pay the whole of the income of his property to his wife "for her own use and the use of her children" ; but if she married again he gave her one-third only, the other two-thirds to be received for the benefit of the children in providing for their education and outfits in life. The wife's third to be for her life, and then to go to the children with the remainder :—Held, that during the widowhood of their mother the children were not entitled to any portion of the income, or to have any part set apart for their maintenance or advancement. Kennedy v. Kennedy, 2 W. R. 298.

Third Person interested not Sui Juris.]—W. by will gave all his real estate to trustees until his son attained twenty-five, remainder to his said son W. the younger for life, remainder to trustees to preserve, remainder to his first and other sons in tail, with remainders over. And in case his said son should leave any child other than an eldest or only son, the trustees had power, at any time after the son's death, to demise or mortgage for years to raise 5,000*l.* for portions for younger children, as W. the younger should appoint, and in default equally between them, to be vested and payable at twenty-one. W. the younger never appointed, and died leaving an infant son and three younger children. On bill filed, and an application for maintenance for them :— Held, that there being a third person (the eldest son) interested, and not sui juris, no maintenance could be allowed. Wilcox v. Brown, 2 W. R. 153.

Annuity to Children payable at Twenty-one.] —Where a testator bequeathed an annuity to his granddaughter for her life, and directed that if she should die during the lifetime of his widow, the annuity should be paid for the maintenance of the children of the granddaughter, and that from and after the decease of his widow and granddaughter, the value or the amount of the annuity (such a sum as would produce it according to the then legal rate of interest) should be paid to all and every the child and children of the granddaughter, if more than one, to be equally divided amongst them, when and as they should respectively attain the age of twenty-one years, and if there should be but one, then the whole to such one child, with a gift over, in case of the death of the granddaughter without issue who should attain the age of twenty-one ; the children of the granddaughter are not entitled to the annuity or interest of the fund after the death of the widow and their mother, until they attain the age of twenty-one years. Festing v. Allen, 5 Hare, 575. S. C. at law, 12 M. & W. 279 ; 13 L. J. Ex. 74.

Interest of Pecuniary Legacies.]—A testator bequeathed pecuniary legacies to each of his children, some of whom were minors : and he bequeathed the residue of his property, after payment of all his just debts, and funeral and testamentary expenses, and the several legacies bequeathed by his will, to be equally divided between all his sons and daughters ; and he directed that the "interest of the legacies" thereby given to such of his children as should not be of age at the time of his decease should be paid to his wife, to be applied by her for and towards their maintenance and education :— Held, that the interest of the respective shares of the residue, as well as that of the pecuniary legacies, was applicable to the maintenance of the minor children. Guinness v. Guinness, 14 Ir. Ch. R. 218.

Where a testator made a special provision for the maintenance of his younger children until receipt of their portions, and stated that the maintenance given to the sons (saying nothing as to daughters), which was less than the interest on their portions, should be in lieu of interest :—Held, that the daughters were not entitled to interest as well as maintenance, although the will directed that the trustees should stand possessed of the fund appointed for payment of their portion, and of the interest, dividends, and annual produce thereof, in trust for the daughters, on their attaining twenty-one. Selby v. Gillum, 2 Y. & C. 379.

Devise of real estate to the testator's daughter for life, with remainder to his two sons in fee : and in case the daughter should leave any child or children living at her death, then he directed that the two sons or their heirs, should pay to such child or children, 200*l.*, equally between them, as they should severally attain twenty-one, and interest for the same, until the legacy should become due, for maintenance, &c. The daughter left one child, which lived several years, but died an infant:—Held, that interest was due from the mother's death to the child's death. Harris v. Finch, M'Cle. 141.

Testatrix directed the interest of her residuary estate to be applied in defraying the expenses of the education of her nephews George and Charles, and the principal to be applied either in binding them apprentices at the age of fourteen, or to be reserved till they attained twenty-one, to commence business. "In the event of George and Charles (both or either of them) being settled before this will comes in force, I provide that the next boy (James or Henry) have the benefit, and so on." George and Charles survived the testatrix, but died under twenty-one:—Held, that James and Henry were entitled to the residue. Prestwidge v. Groombridge, 6 Sim. 171.

A testator, standing in loco parentis, directed his trustees to levy and raise, for the maintenance of such of the children of his son J. and his daughter E. for whom it was his intention to provide portions, in the meantime, until such portions should become payable, such yearly sum (not exceeding what the interest of the expectant portions intended to be provided for such children would amount to at 4 per cent.) as the trustees should deem sufficient:—Held, that the legatees were not entitled to interest at 4 per cent. from the testator's death, but to maintenance only. And the trustees having applied less than 4 per cent. on their portions for the maintenance of the children:—Held, that they were not entitled to have the difference paid to them. Rudge v. Winnall, 12 Beav. 357; 18 L. J. Ch. 469; 13 Jur. 737.

Legacy to a father, the better to enable him to provide for his younger children: he consented to secure the capital, but was held entitled to the interest. Brown v. Casamajor, 4 Ves. 498.

A testator bequeathed to each of his six grandchildren 200*l*., and in case any of them should not have attained twenty-one at the death of the testator, he directed his trustees, who were also his executors and residuary legatees, to pay interest for the legacies of such children, after the rate of 5 per cent., towards their maintenance and education. Upon differences arising between the father of the children and the trustees as to the investment of the money pending minorities, the trustees file their bill to obtain the direction of the court, and for leave to pay the amount into court:—Held, that the trustees might pay the principal money into court; and, semble, the trustees will not be liable to make up the difference between the dividends on the money in court and the 5 per cent. Abraham v. Holderness, 6 Jur. 290.

Semble, if the direction in the will had been, for the trustees to pay interest at 2 per cent., and the money was paid into court, the legatees would be entitled to the full amount of the dividends. Ib.

Interest of Portions—Eldest Son put to Election.]—By the settlement on the marriage of J. H. with C. R., portions were to be raised for the younger children of J. H. by C. R. or any future wife, but not to be paid until after the decease of J. H., C. R., or any future wife, though no estate was given to such future wife; and power was given to J. H. to appoint the interest of the portions to be raised for the children's maintenance; and on his default the same power was given to the trustees, and the maintenance was directed to be paid on the first quarter day after the decease of the survivor of J. H., C. R., or such future wife. J. H. died, leaving his second wife surviving, and by his will, which was not duly attested, directed the maintenance to be raised from the time of his death, and gave other benefits to his eldest son:—Held, that the trustees had no power to allow maintenance during the second wife's lifetime; but that the eldest son should be put to his election, as he had other benefits under the will, and was the only party that could be benefited by withholding the maintenance. Hume v. Rundell, 2 Sim. & S. 174.

Reversionary Interest of Infants.]—The court has jurisdiction to charge reversionary property of infants with money required for their maintenance, even where some of the infants for whose benefit the money is raised may not ultimately become entitled in possession to the property charged. A security for this purpose approved, with a provision for restoring the money by means of an insurance against the contingency. De Witte v. Palin, L. R. 14 Eq. 251; 26 L. T. 825; 20 W. R. 858.

Profits of Trade.]—An hotel keeper by his will desired his wife to carry on the business after his decease for the benefit of herself and his family so long as it might be conducted with advantage; and gave the hotel, &c., to trustees, upon trust to permit his wife to receive the profits, that she might apply the same in the maintenance of herself and family and for the education of the children; and if such profits were not sufficient, a sufficient proportion of the interest, &c., of the residue of his property was to be so applied. The testator left two children. The wife in 1852, after his death, left the hotel, abandoned her children, and otherwise misconducted herself. Upon the construction of the will:—Held, that since that time she was entitled to maintenance only out of the testator's estate; and one-third of the profits of the business was allowed to her for that purpose. Castle v. Castle, 5 W. R. 643.

Income of Life Estate of Parents given on Condition of Maintaining Children.]—By marriage settlement a sum of stock was vested in trustees, upon trust to pay the dividends to the husband and wife, and the survivor during life, upon the condition that they should, during the minorities of their children, find and provide them with suitable diet, clothing, and general maintenance and support, in proportion to the circumstances and condition in life of the husband and wife, and to the expectancies of the children. The husband subsequently presented a petition, under the Insolvent Debtors Protection Act, upon which an official assignee was appointed and an order for protection granted, on the terms of his paying 30*l*. a year out of the dividends of the settled estate in discharge of his debts. The husband and wife afterwards assigned all their interest in the trust fund to R. O., an assignee, for valuable consideration. The trustees having paid the fund into court, under the provisions of the Trustee Relief Act, the infant children presented a petition, asking that the dividends of the whole trust fund might be applied for their maintenance and support. This petition was opposed by R. O. The lord chancellor, however, made the order, holding that under the terms of the settlement the children were entitled, but without deciding what he would have done if it had been shown that the money borrowed from R. O. had been directly for the benefit of the children, and without determining what was the effect on the interest of the husband of the order for protection. Dalton's Settlement, In re, 1 De G. M. & G. 265; 21 L. J., Ch. 681; 16 Jur. 253.

Surplus Income for Grandchildren attaining Twenty-five.]—Testator devised his real and personal estate to trustees, in trust to pay certain annual sums for the maintenance of his grandchildren till they attained twenty-five, and to accumulate the surplus income of his estates, which was to form part of his residuary personal estate; and to divide the income of his estates amongst his grandchildren when they attained twenty-five, with benefit of survivorship on any of them dying under twenty-one, without leaving a child that should attain twenty-one; and, on the death of them leaving such child, to convey the parent's share to such child; and he empowered his trustees, after the death of the father of his grandchildren, to convey to his grandsons, absolutely, the shares of his estates to which, under the previous trusts, they would be entitled for their lives. A petition by one of the grandsons for an increase of the maintenance provided by the testator was dismissed, the disposition of the property not being such as that the grandchildren must of necessity take the whole fund. Turner v. Turner, 4 Sim. 430.

Annual Proceeds of Portions raised by Long Term.]—Upon a marriage settlement, the settlor conveyed certain lands in trust for himself for life, remainder to trustees for a term, to raise an annuity for the lives of the husband and wife, and of the survivor, and subject thereto and in the meantime to trustees for a long term, in trust, subsequently to the previous charge, by mortgage or otherwise, to raise a sum as a portion for the children of the marriage; and with the annual proceeds, or otherwise, to provide for their maintenance from and after the decease of the settlor, as the parents should by deed appoint:—Held, that the latter term did not wait for the commencement of it until after the death of the survivor of the husband and wife, but commenced at the death of the settlor; and that the parents, after the death of the settlor, might, by deed under the powers, direct an annual sum to be raised for such maintenance. Gough v. Andrews, 1 Coll. C. C. 59; 8 Jur. 305.

vi. Duration and Cesser.

Interest—Interval between Twenty-one and Twenty-five.]—A husband directed his trustees to pay to his widow 100*l.* per annum for the maintenance and support of each of his children until he or she should attain twenty-one, with power to increase or decrease such allowance; and he empowered his trustees, with the consent of his widow, to advance any sums not exceeding in the whole one-fourth of the presumptive share of any child for his or her placing out or advancement in life, or otherwise for his or her benefit; the residue to be held in trust for all the children of the testator, who being sons should attain twenty-one, or being daughters should attain twenty-five or marry, without any provision for the maintenance of unmarried daughters during the interval:—Held, that the trustees had no power, either under 23 & 24 Vict. c. 145, s. 26, or by way of interest on their contingent shares, to allow maintenance to unmarried daughters during the interval; but that the advancement clause enabled them to advance the necessary sums of money for the purpose. Breed's Will, In re, 45 L. J., Ch. 191; 1 Ch. D. 226; 24 W. R. 200.

Semble, that if the testator's estate was being administered by the court, interest on their contingent shares would have been given by way of maintenance. Ib.

Held, also, that the trustees would be justified in increasing the allowance for infant daughters of the testator so as to meet the expenses of education, as included in maintenance and support. Ib.

—— For Daughter until Twenty-one or Marriage.]—Testator directed maintenance for his sons during minority and for his daughter till twenty-one or marriage, and gave her a legacy in case she should attain twenty-one, payable at and to carry interest from that time. Having married at eighteen, she was allowed maintenance for the interval until twenty-one. Chambers v. Goldwin, 11 Ves. 1; 8 R. R. 61. S. P., Martin v. Martin, 35 L. J., Ch. 281; L. R. 1 Eq. 369; 14 L. T. 129; 14 W. R. 421; but see Kime v. Welfitt, 3 Sim. 533.

Testator directed his residue to be converted into money, and his wife to receive the interest of it for the maintenance of herself and children, and at her death he bequeathed the whole, share and share alike, to all the children she might have by him. The testator left a son and a daughter. Some years after his death the daughter married:—Held, that thereupon her right to maintenance ceased. Bowden v. Laing, 14 Sim. 113.

A discretionary trust, for the maintenance of children during their minority, and for their future advancement in life:—Held, not to be determined as to the maintenance, by marriage of a female object of it, but only on her attaining the age of twenty-one; and as to the advancement to be still subsisting after her marriage. The trust was as to the income of a fund which was directed to be accumulated, subject to the trust, and the period of lawful accumulation had expired before the suit. Pride v. Fooks, 2 Beav. 430; 9 L. J., Ch. 234; 4 Jur. 213.

Under a trust for maintenance of an infant till twenty-one, at which age the corpus of the fund was given her, maintenance allowed from her marriage at twenty till twenty-one. Coleman v. Rackham, 8 Jur. 556.

A testator bequeathed a fund to his widow to be at her sole and entire disposal for the maintenance of herself and their children. There was only one child, a daughter, who attained twenty-one and married:—Held, that the trust for maintenance did not cease when the child attained twenty-one or married, and that the widow was not entitled to have the fund transferred to her. Scott v. Key, 35 Beav. 291; 6 N. R. 349; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 819; 13 W. R. 1030.

Bequest by a man to his wife, to be applied for the maintenance of herself and their children :—Held, that the right of an unmarried daughter to maintenance did not cease on her attaining twenty-one. Carr v. Living, 33 Beav. 474.

By marriage settlement maintenance for daughters is made payable half-yearly, at Lady-day and Michaelmas, until the portion became payable, which was at eighteen or marriage. A daughter attained her age of eighteen the 16th August. Decreed to have her maintenance pro ratâ, from the last Lady-day to the time of her attaining her age of eighteen. Hay v. Palmer, 2 P. Wms. 501.

By a marriage settlement, a term was limited to trustees for raising, on failure of issue male, 3,000*l.* for daughters' portions, payable at eighteen, or marriage. The father and mother die, leaving issue two daughters only, who at the death of the father (who survived the mother) were fifteen or sixteen years of age, and who had, by the father's will, 500*l.* a piece devised to them, payable at the same time with their original portions ; but the estate was devised to S., one of the daughters, being married and being of the age of twenty :—Held, on her bill, that she must have maintenance from the time of her father's death till the portion became due. and from thence interest at five per cent. till paid. Greenhill v. Waldoe, Pre. Ch. 367 ; Gilb. Eq. R. 31.

—— For Sons during Minority.]—Testator bequeathed one-fifth of his residuary personal estate to trustees, upon trust for all and every the children or child of his son J. B., born and to be born, and who, being a son or sons, should live to attain twenty-one, or, being a daughter or daughters, should live to attain that age or be married, to be equally divided between them, if more than one, share and share alike, as tenants in common ; and he directed that the dividends, interest, and income of the share or expectant share of each such child should be paid to his said son J. B., during his life, and after his decease then during the minority of each such child should be retained by his said trustees or trustee, and be applied by him or them, as the event should happen, in, for, or towards the maintenance, clothing, and advancement of each such child, in such proportion, manner, and form as his said son J. B., or, as the event might happen, his said trustee or trustees should think fit. At the date of the will and of the testator's death, J. B. had three children, one of whom, a son, afterwards attained twenty-one, married, and lived separately from his father :—Held, first, that a trust was constituted in J. B. of the income, for the maintenance, clothing, and advancement of his children, which trust did not terminate upon all or any of his three children attaining majority in his lifetime ; secondly, that J. B. was not entitled to apply the income arbitrarily, according to his own will and pleasure ; thirdly, that he was entitled to apply the income of a child's prospective share towards that child's maintenance, clothing, and advancement, without reference to his ability to maintain and educate that child ; and fourthly, that the son who had attained his majority was not entitled to an immediate transfer of one-third of the fund, inasmuch as it did not appear that the testator meant to exclude after-born children, and at all events he did intend to authorise an unequal distribution from time to time of the income, for the benefit of J. B.'s children. Bateman v. Foster, 1 Coll. C. C. 118.

A party whose interest in a fund had not vested :—Held, under the terms of a power in a will, entitled to maintenance, even after attaining twenty-one. Ellis v. Maxwell, 3 Beav. 587 ; 10 L. J., Ch. 266.

Gift to a widow, she maintaining and educating the testator's son and two daughters thereout, until the son attained twenty-one :—Held, that the son, who had married and ceased to reside with his mother, but was still a minor, was not entitled to maintenance. Staniland v. Staniland, 34 Beav. 536.

Annuity for Mother and Children for Joint Maintenance.]—A bequest of 30*l.* a year to A., together with her children B., C. and D., and for their joint maintenance :—Held, a bequest of that annual sum to the mother and her children as joint tenants for the life of the longest liver of them. Wilson v. Maddison, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 372 ; 12 L. J., Ch. 420 ; 7 Jur. 572.

A bequest of an annual sum to be raised for the support of the children of H., to be paid them from time to time as their necessities require, without regard to their father and mother, cannot be confined to the minority of the children. Alexander v. M'Culloch, 1 Cox, 391.

A testator gave an annuity to his niece of 8*s.* a week "towards the support and maintenance of her two children until they shall attain the age of twenty-one years." By a codicil the testator gave certain leasehold property to the niece "to enable her to provide for her children," and referred to his will as "my said will in her favour." One of the children of the niece died, and the other attained twenty-one :—Held, that the words in the gift of the annuity referring to the support and maintenance of the children were merely descriptive of the testator's motive in making the gift, and that they did not cut down the life estate of the niece. Farr v. Hennis, 44 L. T. 202.

Annuity to Son from Majority to Death or Second Marriage of Testator's Widow.]—The testator bequeathed to his son an annuity of 40*l.* from the period of his majority to the death or second marriage of the testator's wife. The son attained twenty-one, and died before the widow : —Held, that the legal personal representative of the son was entitled to the annuity until the death or second marriage of the widow. Ord, In re, Dickinson v. Dickinson, 12 Ch. D., 22 : 41 L. T. 13—C. A. Affirming, 26 W. R. 880.

Direction for Conversion—Annuities Payable until Distribution.]—R. N. gave and bequeathed the residue of his estate and effects to trustees, upon trust, out of the rents, profits, and dividends, to pay each of his children, R. C. N. and P. N., an annuity of 150*l.* ; and as his other children respectively attained the age of twenty-one, to pay to each of them an annuity of 100*l.* ; all the annuities to be paid until the period should have arrived for the distribution and division of his estate and effects between his children in the manner after mentioned ; and when and so soon as all his children should have attained twenty-one, or at such earlier or deferred period as the trustees might think proper, the testator authorised and empowered the trustees to sell and convert into money all his estate and effects, and to invest the residue in their names upon trust, during such time as any of his children should be under the age of twenty-one, to pay to those who might have attained twenty-one the said several annuities until such period of distribution and division; but when and so soon as all his children should have attained the age of twenty-one, then the trustees were directed to distribute and divide the stocks, funds, &c., between all those who should have attained that age. The testator directed "that the rents and profits of his real and personal estate and effects, remaining unsold and unconverted, should be applied in the same manner as the income of the produce of such estate and effects, if sold and converted, might be applicable." The youngest son attained the age of twenty-one years on May 15th, 1853, and an order had been obtained for the sale of the real estate, but no conversion had actually taken place:—Held, that the annuities did not determine upon all the children attaining the age of twenty-one, but were to be continued until the period of distribution; and that, as the conversion of the estates had not been effected, no present distribution could be made; the annuities, therefore, to be continued until the period for actual distribution should have arrived. Nicholson v. Locke, 18 Jur. 263.

Annuity for Maintenance of Children until Twenty-one — Further Sum to be Divided amongst them as they attain Twenty-one.]—Bequest of an annuity to a father for the maintenance of his children until they respectively attained twenty-one, and a further bequest of a principal sum to be divided among the children as they respectively attained twenty-one, the amount of the annuity will not be reduced proportionately as the children respectively come of age. Bortoft v. Wadsworth, 12 W. R. 523.

Annuity to Children "for their Maintenance and Education."]—An annuity to the children of A. "for their maintenance and education" is not confined to the minorities of the children. Bequest of an annuity of 100*l.* to A., followed by a direction in these words: "In the event of her death the annuity is to be continued to her children for their maintenance and education, and I have to request Mr. W. G., banker, to see it carried into execution." A. survived the testator and died. On the death of A.:—Held, that the annuity of 100*l.* was payable to the children, not merely during their respective minorities, but during their joint lives and the lives and life of the survivors and survivor of them. Somes v. Martin, infra, followed. Gardner v. Barker, infra, observed upon. Knapp v. Noyes, Amb. 662, explained. Wilkins v. Jodrell, 49 L. J., Ch. 26; 13 Ch. D. 564; 41 L. T. 649; 28 W. R. 224.

Under a trust in a will to apply the yearly sum of 50*l.* (and so on in proportion for any less term than a year) for the maintenance and education of A. in such manner as the trustees should, in their own discretion, think proper, the will containing gifts of other annuities during life:—Held that this annuity ceased upon A.'s attaining twenty-one. Somes v. Martin, infra, overruled. Gardner v. Barker, 2 Eq. R. 888; 18 Jur. 508; 2 W. R. 407.

Held, also, that, the annuities being in arrear, they should abate pro tanto for the present, to be recouped out of the interest accruing on the outstanding portions of the trust funds, which, when paid, was to be regarded as income for this purpose. Ib.

A gift of the interest of a sum of money, for the "maintenance and education" of A., is a gift for life: aliter, "bringing up." Somes v. Martin, 10 Sim. 287; 8 L. J., Ch. 367; 3 Jur. 1144.

A direction by testator to apply the interest of a fund for the maintenance and education of his infant nephew, without any disposition of the principal:—Held, to give the interest for life to the nephew. Ib.

Annuity for Maintenance, Clothing, and Education of Children.]—Testator devised estates to trustees in trust to pay 300*l.* a year for the maintenance, clothing, and education of his son's children during the life of their father. The son had three children, all of whom attained twenty-one, and then one of them died:—Held, that the personal representative of the deceased child was entitled to one-third of 300*l.* a year during the father's life. Lewes v. Lewes, 16 Sim. 266; 17 L. J., Ch. 425.

An annuity charged on lands was bequeathed to three trustees and the longest liver of them, to continue during the life of the longest liver of them, and no longer, in trust to apply it, "to assist in the support of" the testator's daughter, A., "in aid of, and towards the clothing, maintenance, and education of her children, free from the control or interference of her present or any future husband, and not subject to his or their debts, contracts, or engagements." After the death of A., her children, being all of full age, and forisfamiliated, filed a bill, praying for a declaration that the annuity was well charged on the lands, and that they were entitled to have it applied towards their clothing, and maintenance, or otherwise for their benefit:—Held, that the will created no trust in favour of the children of A. of which they could enforce the execution in equity; and, therefore, that the trusts of the annuity ceased on the death of A. Ryan v. Keogh, Ir. R. 4 Eq. 357.

—— Maintenance, Education, and Bringing Up.]—A testatrix devised lands to trustees, in trust, in the first place, at their discretion, to pay an annuity to her son A.; and next, to apply the rents to the maintenance, education, and bringing up of the three children of A. during A.'s life; the sole survivor of the three children attained twenty-one in the lifetime of A.:—Held, that the interest of such surviving child in the surplus rents and profits did not cease on his attaining twenty-one, but that he continued entitled to them during the life of his father. Badham v. Mee, 1 Russ. & M. 631.

Income during Life of One to Another for his Maintenance.]—A gift of the income to arise from a fund during the life of A. to B., for his maintenance, is an absolute gift to B., his executors and administrators, during the life of A., and is not confined to the joint lives of A. and B. Attwood v. Alford, L. R. 2 Eq. 479; 14 W. R. 956.

Annuity to Mother for Life, and after Decease to "Support, Maintenance, and Education" of her Children until Twenty-one—Sale and Division of Proceeds among Children.]—A testator, by will, made in 1810, bequeathed "one annuity or clear yearly rentcharge or sum of 300*l.*" to his niece, "for and during the term of her natural life;" and after her decease he bequeathed "the said annuity, yearly rentcharge, or sum of 300*l.* unto all and every the children, if any, of his said niece lawfully to be begotten; if more than one, share and share alike; and if but one, then to such only child," to be applied in the "support, maintenance, and education of such child or children" until such only child, or the youngest of such children, should attain twenty-one, when he directed that the annuity should "be absolutely sold and disposed of by such child or children," and the produce to be derived from such sale to be equally divided among such children, if more than one, share and share alike; and he charged his real estates with the annuity, and, subject thereto, devised the same to H. in fee:—Held (affirming 27 L. J., Ch. 769), that the annuity was a perpetual charge upon the real estate. Manserqh v. Campbell, 3 De G. & J. 232; 28 L. J., Ch. 61; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1207; 7 W. R. 72.

The devise of an estate in fee-simple charged with an annuity is not of itself sufficient to indicate an intention that the duration of the annuity should correspond with the limits of the estate charged. Ib.

Annuity to One for bringing up Another.—Gift to A. of 15*l.* per annum for bringing up B.:—Held, that a trust was created for the benefit of B., which did not fail by the death of A. Pilcher v. Randall, 4 L. T. 398; 9 W. R. 251.

A testator directed his executors to apply 500*l.* for the support and education of his nephew, whose education for holy orders he directed to be under the control of certain persons named, and that, if any part of the sum should remain after providing for such support and education, such residue should be applied for certain religious purposes:—Held, first, that this was not a general legacy. Lee's Trusts, In re, Ir. R. 10 Eq. 157.

Held, secondly, that although the nephew had determined not to enter holy orders, and had been apprenticed to a trade, an adequate part of the sum bequeathed should be applied for his maintenance and education. Ib.

Income to Testator's Wife for her own Use and for Maintenance and Education of his Children so long as she Continued his Widow.]—Testator gave, devised, and bequeathed to his executors all his real and personal estate upon trust, to permit his wife M. to receive the income thereof for her own use and benefit, and for the maintenance and education of his children, naming them, so long as she should continue his widow; and in case she should marry, to pay her an annuity of 100*l.* per annum; and subject to such trusts, in trust, after the decease or marriage of M., for his said children in equal shares, when and as they should attain the age of twenty-one:—Held, that a trust was constituted of a sufficient part of the income of the property for the maintenance and education of the children, and that such trust was capable of continuance beyond the period of a son attaining twenty-one, or a daughter attaining that age or marrying. The court, however, being of opinion that a discretionary power as to the mode of executing the trust was given to M., directed inquiries for the purpose of ascertaining how such discretionary power had been and how it ought to be exercised. Longmore v. Elcum, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 363; 12 L. J., Ch. 469.

Income to Testator's Wife and Daughters for Life—Share of Daughter Dying to be applied to Maintenance of her Issue.]—A testator gave the income of his estate to his wife and daughters for their respective lives, with a survivorship clause amongst them for their respective lives in case of the death of his wife or of any of his daughters leaving no issue. In the event of a daughter dying and leaving issue, the trustees were empowered to apply all or any part of the trust moneys or annual produce and premises to which such daughter, if living, would be entitled, in the maintenance, education, and advancement of such her issue. After the death of his wife and all his daughters, the principal was to be divided amongst the issue then living of his daughters:—Held, that the trustees had power to make allowances for the maintenance of the deceased daughter's children after they attained their majority. Hill v. Rawlinson, 15 W. R. 148.

Marriage Settlement—Rents to be paid to Husband for Life—On his Second Marriage One-half to be paid to Him, and the other Half to be applied for Maintenance and Education of Children.]—By a marriage settlement property was vested in trustees upon trust, after the death of the wife, to pay the rents and profits to the husband for life, or until he married again, and in case he married again and there was issue of the intended marriage, then to pay him one-half of the rents and profits, and out of the other half to levy and raise for the maintenance and education of one child one-fourth, of two or three children one-third, and of four or more children the whole income of such other half, and subject thereto to pay the whole income thereof to the husband for his life, and if there should be no issue, then to pay the whole of the rents and profits to the husband. The husband married again, and at the date of the decree there were four children of the first marriage, two daughters and one son who had attained twenty-one, one son under age, and a child of a deceased daughter:—Held, that the trust for maintenance and education did not cease upon the children attaining twenty-one, but that the four children were entitled equally to one-half of the rents and profits during the life of their father, that the daughters were equally entitled in the event of their marrying, and that the word "issue" was restricted to the first generation, and, therefore, that the child of a deceased daughter took no interest. Frewen v. Hamilton, 47 L. J., Ch. 391.

Gift to Children equally—Gift over to Survivors if any died under Twenty-five—Power to apply Accumulations during Minority.]—A testator gave the residue of his estate and effects to his four children equally to be divided between them, share and share alike, with a gift over to the survivors or survivor, in the event of any dying under twenty-five. He appointed guardians during their minorities, with a power to apply accumulations of the income of each child's share, during minority, in maintenance, education, &c.:—Held, that the children were entitled, for maintenance, &c., to the income of their shares between twenty-one and twenty-five. Fraser v. Fraser, 1 N. R. 430; 8 L. T. 20.

Legacy to unborn Children of named Person to vest at Twenty-five—Direction to apply Income in Meantime for their Maintenance.]—A legacy to unborn children of a person named in a will to vest at twenty-five being void for remoteness, a direction in the same will to apply the income in the meantime for their maintenance is also void, and cannot be supported even for a period of twenty-one years. Pickford v. Brown, 2 K. & J. 426; 25 L. J., Ch. 702; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 781; 4 W. R. 473.

Widow to be allowed Money during Minority of Son — Abandonment of Son.]—A widow who was by the terms of the will to be allowed money by the trustees during the minority of an infant—her son—abandoned the child, for whom other guardians were appointed by the court, and afterwards having cohabited with a married man, and by him had several illegitimate children, lived with them in a house to the use of which she was entitled under the will. The trustees under these circumstances refused to make her any allowance out of the trust moneys:—Held, that she could not compel the trustees so to do, but was disqualified from making any claim by her abandonment of the child independently of other misconduct. Mellor v. Mellor, 20 W. R. 51.

Provision for Infant until Sixteen—Trustee then to provide for his Future Maintenance.]—Testator made a certain provision for the infant son of his relation M. W. until the age of sixteen, and then left the infant to the care of his trustees, to provide for him in some business or profession, and his future maintenance, out of the testator's funded property:—Held, that the infant, on attaining sixteen, was entitled to receive out of the testator's funded property a sum sufficient to provide for him in some business or profession, and to an annual allowance for his future maintenance during his life; and it was referred to the master to inquire and state what sums were proper to be allowed for those purposes. Kilvington v. Gray, 10 Sim. 293.

Income Payable till Bankruptcy—Discretion to apply for Benefit of Bankrupt—Assignment of Income—Date of Operation of Cesser.]—Testatrix directed her late husband's trustees to stand possessed of 15,000*l.*, and invest the same, and pay the income to B. "during his life, or until he should become a bankrupt or a liquidating debtor, or cease to be entitled to receive such income or any part thereof for his own personal use or benefit by any means or for any purpose, and in the event of or upon the said B. becoming a bankrupt or a liquidating debtor, or ceasing to be entitled to receive the said income or any part thereof for his own personal use or benefit, by any means or for any purpose, to pay to him or apply for his benefit during the remainder of his life, either the whole, or so much, and so much only, of the said income as my late husband's trustees or trustee shall in their uncontrolled discretion think fit, and subject to the aforesaid interest hereinbefore appointed in favour of the said B," to hold the said 15,000*l.* and the investments and income thereof, in trust for the persons therein named. The income of the investment was payable on the 15th of January and the 15th of July. On the 30th of January, 1889, B. charged his interest to secure an advance to L., notice of which charge was received by the trustees on the 23rd of August, 1890. In November, 1890, B. was adjudicated a bankrupt, but the trustee in bankruptcy withdrew his claim to receive the income:—Held, first, that the charge operated as a cesser of B.'s interest from the date thereof, and not from the date of the notice, and, therefore, L. was not entitled to the income accruing before notice given; and secondly, that notwithstanding the discretionary trust did not extend to benefiting any wife or children of B., such trust was valid, and, although the income could not be properly paid to B., the whole or part thereof might be applied by the trustees for his maintenance. Bullock, In re, Good v. Lickorish, 60 L. J., Ch. 341; 64 L. T. 736; 39 W. R. 472.

Insolvency — Discretion of Trustees as to Application of Trust Fund for Particular Individual.]—Where trustees under a will have a discretion as to the manner of the application of the trust fund for the benefit of a particular person, but no power to apply it otherwise than for the benefit of that cestui que trust during his life, his interest passes to his assignees under the Insolvent Act, notwithstanding a proviso in the will, that he shall not have power to sell, mortgage, or anticipate the income of the fund. Green v. Spicer, 1 Russ. & M. 395; Tam. 396; 8 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 105.

A testator bequeathed a legacy of 400*l.* to his executors, upon trust to pay the same to his son, in such smaller or larger portions, at such time or times, and in such way or manner, as they should, in their judgment and discretion, think best:—Held, that the discretion of the executors was determined by the insolvency of the legatee, and that the legacy vested in the assignee of the insolvent. Piercy v. Roberts, 1 Myl. & K. 4; 2 L. J., Ch. 17.

A. assigned 800*l.* to trustees in trust during the life of B., or such part thereof as they should think proper, or at such other times and in such portions as they should judge expedient, to pay the interest to him, or, if they should think fit, to lay it out in procuring for him diet and other necessaries, but so that he should not have any right to the interest other than the trustees, in their uncontrolled discretion, should think proper, and so that no creditor of his should have any claim thereon, nor should the same be subject to his debts, disposition or engagements: and it was declared that, after his death, the 800*l.*, and all savings and accumulations of interest, if any, should be in trust for his children, and, if he should have no child, then in trust for C. B. became bankrupt. The trustees had paid him the interest down to his bankruptcy:—Held, that his life interest passed to the assignees. Snowden v. Dales, 6 Sim. 524; 3 L. J., Ch. 188.

Under a marriage settlement, trustees were, after the bankruptcy of the husband and the death of the wife, to pay the income "in such manner, for the maintenance and support or otherwise for the benefit of the husband and the issue," as they might think proper:—Held, that the discretionary power of the trustees, as to the application of the income, was not taken away by the bankruptcy, so as to entitle the objects to take equally. An inquiry was directed as to what had been properly applied for the maintenance of the issue, and the assignees were declared entitled to the surplus. Wallace v. Anderson, 16 Beav. 533.

A testatrix gave the interest of a share of her residuary personal estate to A. for life; and afterwards, by a codicil, she noticed the facts of the bankruptcy of A., and of his becoming of unsound mind, and thereby revoked the bequest to A., and gave the same to her executors, upon trust, during the life of A., to apply the whole or such part thereof, at such time, and in such proportions and manner, for the maintenance and support of A., and for no other purposes whatsoever, as her executors should in their discretion think expedient :—Held, that the interest given by the said bequest did not pass to the assignees of A. under his bankruptcy. Twopeny v. Peyton, 10 Sim. 487 ; 9 L. J., Ch. 172 ; 4 Jur. 456.

—— Valid Gift over on Alienation.]—If there is a valid gift over on alienation by one entitled to a life interest in personalty, it will take effect on insolvency, and the interest of the insolvent will not pass to his assignee. Rochford v. Hackman, 9 Hare, 475 ; 21 L. J., Ch. 511 ; 16 Jur. 212.

—— Trust for Support, Clothing and Maintenance of an Adult.]—Trust for the support, clothing, and maintenance of an adult :—Held, to be a trust for his benefit generally, and to devolve to his assignees under the Insolvent Act, notwithstanding a provision to the contrary in the will by which the trust was created. Younghusband v. Gisborne, 1 Coll. C. C. 400 ; 8 Jur. 750. Affirmed, 15 L. J., Ch. 355 ; 10 Jur. 419.

—— Annuity for Personal Support.] — An annuity given to A. for his personal support, not to be liable to his debts, and to be paid from time to time into his proper hands, and not to any other person, and his receipt only to be a sufficient discharge, passes on A.'s bankruptcy to his assignees. Graves v. Dolphin, 1 Sim. 66 ; 5 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 45 ; 27 R. R. 16.

—— Trust to Pay Rents of Husband's Estate for Maintenance and Support of Husband, Wife and Children.]—Settlement of husband's estate on his marriage, in trust to pay the rents, &c., "unto or for the maintenance and support of the husband, wife, and children, or otherwise, if the trustees should think proper to permit the same to be received by the husband during his life, without power to charge, &c."; on the bankruptcy of the husband :—Held, that a trust had been created for the maintenance and support of the wife and children out of the property during the husband's life. Page v. Way, 3 Beav. 20 ; 4 Jur. 600.

—— Bequest of Share in Trust Funds—Proviso for Forfeiture if Donee should during certain Lives Assign Charge or otherwise Dispose of Share—Assignment to Trustees for Creditors.]—Bequest of a share in certain trust funds, in trust for A., his executors, administrators, and assigns, provided that, if A. should, during the life of B. or C. assign, charge, or otherwise dispose of his share in the principal or interest thereof, or attempt or agree so to do, or do any act whereby his share in the said moneys, if payable to himself or his executors, or administrators, would become vested in some other person, then, and in such case, all his estate, right, title, and interest in such trust moneys should absolutely cease and determine, and thereby and thereupon become absolutely forfeited ; and the trustees should thenceforward stand possessed of the shares or share so forfeited, in trust to pay, apply, and dispose of the annual produce thereof, during the lives of B. and C., for the support and maintenance of A., and of his wife and family, or otherwise for his and their benefit, in such manner as the trustees should think proper ; and after the death of B. and C. should settle and assure, or pay and apply, and dispose of the share so forfeited, in trust for, or for the benefit of A. and his family, in such manner as they should in their discretion think proper ; A. assigned all his property to trustees for his creditors, and thereby committed an act of bankruptcy, and, a fiat being issued against him, he was declared a bankrupt :—Held, that, upon the execution by A. of the assignment, his share and interest in the trust moneys became subject to the trust declared by the will for the benefit of A. and his wife and family ; that A. was not of necessity entitled to any part of the income of the trust moneys separately from his wife and children ; but that any interest of A. in the trust moneys not applicable for the support and maintenance of his wife and children passed to his assignees on his bankruptcy. Kearsley v. Woodcock, 3 Hare, 185 ; 8 Jur. 150.

Testator bequeathed his residuary estate to trustees, and, after making a provision out of it for the benefit of his son for his life, and after the son's death for his wife and children, directed, that if his son should assign or charge the interest to which he was entitled for life, or attempt or agree to do or commit any act whereby the same or any part thereof might, if the absolute property thereof were vested in him, be forfeited to or become vested in any person or persons, then the trustees should pay and apply the said interest for the maintenance and support of his son, and any wife and child or children he might have, and for the education of such issue as the trustees should in their discretion think fit. Some years after the testator's death the son became bankrupt :—Held, that the trust for the benefit of the son, his wife, and children was valid, and that the assignees were not entitled to any part of the provision. Godden v. Crowhurst, 10 Sim. 642 ; 11 L. J., Ch. 145.

A testator bequeathed the dividends of certain stock to his nephew, solely for the maintenance of himself and his family, declaring that such dividends should not be capable of being charged with his debts or engagements, and that he should have no power to charge, assign, anticipate, or incumber them ; but that if he should attempt so to do, or if the dividends, by bankruptcy, insolvency, or otherwise, should be assigned or become payable to any other person, or be or become applicable to any other purpose than for the maintenance of the nephew and his family, his interests therein should cease, and the stock be held upon trusts for his children. Long subsequently to the date of the will, and a few weeks prior to a codicil confirming it, the nephew took the benefit of the Lords Act (1 Geo. 4, c. 119), in the usual way ; and some years afterwards the testator died : — Held, that this insolvency operated as a forfeiture of the life interest given to the nephew by the will. Yarnold v. Moorhouse, 1 Russ. & M. 364.

—— Trusts for Accumulation if Son in any way Impeded or Frustrated the Trusts of Will.]—Testator devised his estates to trustees, in trust to pay out of the rents 300*l.* a year for the maintenance of his son's children, and to pay the surplus rents during his life for the maintenance of himself and his family; but so that he should not have any power to charge or alienate the same: provided that if his son should, in any manner, impede or frustrate the trusts of the will, then the surplus rents, should be no longer paid to him, but should be accumulated by the trustees, for the benefit of the children. The son conveyed his interest under the will to trustees for his creditors:—Held, that, thereupon, the trust for accumulation took effect. Lewes v. Lewes, 6 Sim. 304; 3 L. J., Ch. 55. Affirmed, 4 L. J., Ch. 77.

—— Settlement of Life Interest for Maintenance of Settlor, his Wife and Children.]—A. being entitled to a life interest in the dividends of 9,000*l.* consols, and being largely indebted, his brother agreed to pay all debts not charged on A.'s life interest, upon condition that such life interest should be settled so as to be applicable for the maintenance of A., his wife and children, or any of them, at the absolute discretion of the trustees. This transaction having been carried into effect:—Held, that such settlement was valid against subsequent creditors, and also against a person who was a creditor of A. at the time of the settlement, and whose debt was concealed by A. from his brother, and was the only one not paid by him. Holmes v. Penney, 3 K. & J. 90; 26 L. J., Ch. 179; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 80; 5 W. R. 132.

Property Settled by Father on Son until he should take Benefit of Insolvent Debtors Act.]—Property was settled on J. R. by his father, until he should take the benefit of the insolvent debtors act, and then the trustees were, during his life, to apply it in such manner and to such persons, for the board, lodging, and subsistence of J. R. and his family, as the trustees should think proper; and after his decease upon trust for such persons as J. R. should appoint, and in default of appointment in trust for his children. J. R. took the benefit of the insolvent debtors act. He had three children, but his wife was dead:—Held, that his children, who were all infants, became entitled to three-fourths, and the assignees to one-fourth, of the life interest of J. R. Rippon v. Norton, 2 Beav. 63.

A person conveyed certain freehold and leasehold property to trustees upon trust, to pay the rents and profits to his son T. for life, provided that in case T. should be declared bankrupt, or be discharged under any insolvent act, the trustees should apply the rents and profits in or towards the maintenance, clothing, lodging, and support of T. and his then present or any future wife, and his children or any of them, or otherwise for his, her, their, or any of their use and benefit, in such manner as the trustees should in their discretion think proper. T. was taken in execution for debt, and sent to prison at the suit of a creditor who obtained a vesting order against him under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110. The insolvent was afterwards discharged under that act:—Held, that the life estate of the insolvent was forfeited at the time of his discharge; that from the date of the vesting order to the time of the discharge the rents and profits of the estate belonged to the assignee under the act; that upon the discharge taking place, the discretionary power given to the trustees by the settlement might be exercised by them in favour of the insolvent, his wife and children collectively, or in favour of any of those persons, to the exclusion of the others; and that to whatever extent the power might be exercised in favour of the insolvent, the benefit which he would take by the appointment would vest in the assignee. Lord v. Bunn, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 98.

Legacy in trust for the testator's son for his own use and benefit, provided no misfortune in business shall in the meantime have happened to him, so as to deprive him or his family of the benefit of it; the testator declaring his intention, his son's fortune being amply sufficient, by this fund to form a certain and permanent provision for him or his family; but in case he fail in business at any time before the age of thirty-two, then in trust for the support of him, his wife, and children, as the trustees think proper, so long as he shall labour under the effects of any misfortune in trade; but as soon as he shall be freed and absolutely discharged from the effects of any misfortune or failure in trade, then (but not before) to be paid to him: otherwise the interest to be continued to be paid for the support of him, his wife, and children, for his life; and if at his death he shall be under any difficulty from misfortune or failure in business, in trust for his wife and children according to his appointment by will; and if he shall leave no widow or child, according to his disposition. There was a considerable settlement. The son in the twenty-eighth year of his age being discharged under a deed of composition, the legacy was decreed to him; the trustees and his children not opposing it: but the court observed, that if he should not be discharged, as in case it should end in a bankruptcy, the trustees would not be indemnified. De Mierre v. Turner, 5 Ves. 306.

Bankruptcy under Scotch Sequestration — Before Discharge Will of Wife giving Bankrupt Annuity for Life with Cesser on Bankruptcy.]—After G. had been adjudged a bankrupt by a Scotch sequestration, and before he obtained his discharge, his wife, who had taken part in procuring the sequestration, made her will, and thereby gave an annuity to him for life, and declared, that if he should become bankrupt, or should assign, the annuity should cease; and she also empowered the trustees of her will in their discretion at any time to refuse or discontinue payment of the annuity to her husband. After the death of the testatrix, and before the first payment of the annuity became due, G. obtained a discharge which did not divest the property from the trustee in the sequestration:—Held, that the annuity was forfeited. Trappes v. Meredith, 41 L. J., Ch. 237; 26 L. T. 5.

Uncertificated Bankrupt—Life Interest if he obtained Discharge.]—A testatrix gave real and personal estate to trustees, during the life of her nephew, an uncertificated bankrupt, at their uncontrolled discretion, to apply the interest for the benefit of him, or his wife, or his children; and as to the income which should not be applied, to invest the same; but should he at any time obtain his certificate so as to enable him to hold and enjoy real and personal estate for his own personal use, enjoyment, and benefit, then she directed that thenceforth during his life, and so long as he should be able to hold and enjoy real and personal estate for his own personal use, enjoyment, and benefit, the whole income should be paid to him for his own use. The nephew never married, and after several years he obtained his discharge :—Held, that the will conferred on the nephew a contingent interest in the income, which passed to the assignees, and, upon his obtaining his discharge, vested in them absolutely. Davidson v. Chalmers, Perry v. Chalmers, 33 L. J., Ch. 622 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 910 ; 11 L. T. 217 ; 12 W. R. 592.

Annuity until Annuitant should attempt to Charge it or some other Person should Claim it.] —A testator directed his trustees to pay an annuity to his brother, until he should attempt to charge it, or some other person should claim it, and then to apply it for his support and maintenance. The annuitant having become insolvent :—Held, that his assignees were entitled to the annuity. Younghusband v. Gisborne, 1 Coll. C. C. 400 ; 15 L. J., Ch. 355. And see Coleman, In re, Henry v. Strong, post, col. 494.

Fund on Condition that Person should Conduct Himself to Satisfaction of Trustees—Effect of Assignment.] — A fund was bequeathed to trustees upon trust after the death of the testator's widow to make a weekly allowance to S. and his children, if he should have died leaving any, towards his or their maintenance and support, such allowance to be in the discretion of the trustees. The testator also declared that it should be in the discretion of the trustees during the life of his widow with her consent to advance and pay all or any part of the principal money to S. or his children towards his maintenance and advancement in the world, it being his wish that S., if living, should have the whole benefit of such moneys if he should conduct himself to the satisfaction of the trustees. S. assigned all his interest under the will to X. The trustees having paid the fund into court without imputing any unsatisfactory behaviour to S. :—Held, that X., the assignee of S., took the whole fund. Coe's Trust, In re, 4 K. & J. 199 ; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 158.

vii. Surplus.

Surplus Rents and Profits.] — A testatrix devised lands to trustees, in trust, in the first place, at their discretion, to pay an annuity to her son A. ; and next to apply the rents to the maintenance, education, and bringing up of the three children of A. during A.'s life ; the sole survivor of the three children attained twenty-one in the lifetime of A. :—Held, that the interest of such surviving child in the surplus rents and profits did not cease on his attaining twenty-one, but that he continued entitled to them during the life of his father. Badham v. Mee, 1 Russ. & M. 631.

A., seised of an estate of 600*l.* per annum, devises 300*l.* per annum to an infant, whose father was his heir-at-law, and the other 300*l.* per annum he devises to the father for his care in looking after the son's estate till he should come to the age of twenty-one. The father dies, leaving the son six years of age, having, by his will, devised this 300*l.* to his wife, and desired her to save what she could out of it for a portion for his daughter, and appointed her guardian for his son. This 300*l.* per annum does not determine by the father's death, but the wife shall have it till the son arrives at the age of twenty-one. Anon., Pre. Ch. 597.

An estate was devised to trustees for five hundred years, with remainder to persons still unborn, with remainder to the plaintiff. The trustees had active duties as to the management of the estate and large discretionary powers, and they were authorised, "during the minority of any person absolutely or presumptively entitled," to apply the surplus income for the benefit of such person, accumulating the surplus : —Held, that the plaintiff, who had attained her majority, had no right to any part of the surplus rents accruing prior to her estate becoming vested in possession. Sidney v. Wilmer, 25 Beav. 260.

Where after a devise for successive estates for life, with remainders in tail, subject to a term of ninety-nine years, the trusts of such term were declared to be that the trustees should, out of the rents and profits of the estates, insure the messuages and keep the same in repair during the respective lives of the several tenants for life, and should, during the respective minorities of each and every person thereby made tenants for life or in tail, apply the surplus or residue of the rents and profits for the maintenance and education of the tenants for life or in tail, who for the time being should be entitled in possession to the estates : and in case the whole of the surplus of the said rents and profits should not, during the minority of any such tenant for life or in tail as aforesaid, be applied for his or her maintenance and education, then the surplus thereof was from time to time to be laid out on real or government securities, at interest, in the names of the trustees, upon trust for such person or persons from time to time, as for the time being should under the limitations of the will be entitled in possession to the said estates ; and if any person who might become entitled in possession or remainder to an estate tail in the estates under any of the said limitations should die under twenty-one, without issue inheritable to such estate-tail, then the absolute interest in the moneys so directed to be laid out and invested was to be considered as not having vested in such person, but the same was to go over to the next taker :—Held, that the first tenant for life in possession of the estates was not absolutely entitled to the accumulations of the rents and profits which had accrued during his minority, but was only tenant for life of such accumulations. Crosse v. Glennie, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 237 ; 7 Jur. 274.

Devise of houses to executors in trust to receive the rents for the support, clothing, maintenance, and education of the testator's children, until they should respectively attain the ages of twenty-one years or marriage, and from and after which to A., B. and C., or such of them as shall be then living :—Held, that the devise to A., B. and C. did not take effect in possession until after all the children attained twenty-one or married. Farran v. Smith, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 254.

Quære, whether there was an intestacy as to the surplus rents beyond what was necessary for maintenance and education of the children during their minorities. Ib.

Surplus Income.]—Bequest of stock, &c., and interest and dividends to accrue. to the testator's two great-nieces, equally to be divided, and to be assigned, transferred, &c., to them, when and as they should respectively attain twenty-one ; with limitations of their respective shares in the event of death under twenty-one to their respective children ; with survivorship in case of no children, and a direction, that the executors should during the respective minorities of the legatees receive the dividends, interest, &c., and that so much as should be necessary should be applied for maintenance, &c.; and the residue accumulate for their respective benefits, until they should respectively become entitled to their respective parts. The surplus interest held to go with the principal upon the death of one under twenty-one without children. Sisson v. Shaw, 9 Ves. 285; 7 R. R. 190.

A particular sum being given for maintenance will not bar the party from being entitled to the surplus profits. Stafford (Earl) v. Buckley, 2 Ves. Sen. 171.

Upon the construction of a will:—Held, that the surplus dividends of a legacy, after payments for maintenance during the minority of the legatee, go with the corpus. Slade v. Parr, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 565.

A legacy was given to trustees to be expended by them for the benefit and advancement of an infant as they in their absolute discretion should think fit. There was also a gift by the will, of the income of a share of the residue to the infant for life on his attaining twenty-one, with a power to the trustees to apply the income during his minority for his maintenance and education. A suit for administration was instituted by the trustees immediately after the testator's death, and orders were from time to time made in it for the advancement, and also the maintenance and education of the infant out of the legacy. On his attaining twenty-one:—Held, that he was absolutely entitled to the unapplied residue of the legacy. Furley v. Hyder, 41 L. J., Ch. 583; 26 L. T. 864.

Held, also, that inasmuch as maintenance would have been ordered out of the income of the contingent share of the infant, he was entitled to be recouped out of the past income of the residuary estate what had been expended out of the legacy for his maintenance and education. Ib.

Discretionary Trust of Residue for Benefit of Legatee—Non-exercise of Discretion—Interest of Legatee.]—Gift of a share of residue, after the determination of a life tenancy therein, to trustees, upon trust to "pay or apply all or any portion of the income or corpus of the same in or towards the support or maintenance or otherwise for the benefit of their brother R., in such manner and proportions in every respect and at such times as they shall deem most conducive to his welfare." The brother predeceased the tenant for life:—Held, that the effect of the gift was to empower the trustees to apply so much of the share as might be required for the personal benefit of their brother, but that no trust was to be implied in his favour as to the whole of the share; consequently that the share did not pass to his legal personal representative. Sanderson's Will, In re, infra, followed. Gude v. Worthington (3 De G. & Sm. 389; 18 L. J., Ch. 303; 13 Jur. 847) distinguished. Stanger, In re, Moorsom v. Tate, 60 L. J., Ch. 326; 64 L. T. 693; 39 W. R. 455.

Accumulations—Interest.]—Such part of interest of legacy of 4000*l.* as was not wanted for support of M. Q. to accumulate and be added to, and managed along with, the principal sum for the benefit of the persons to be entitled to the same after M. Q.'s death. In that event the principal and accumulations to go to her child or children. If no issue 1,000*l.*, part thereof, to J. H.; 750*l.*, other part thereof, to G. W.; 750*l.*, other part thereof to J. M.; and the remainder to T. H.:—Held, that the latter took the whole accumulations. Woodhead v. Marriot, C. P. Cooper, 62.

T. gave the residue to trustees, inter alia, to lay out one-third part in securities, the interest to accumulate for the benefit of the children of his niece, and if she should survive her husband, and have issue under twenty-one years of age, the trustees were to apply the interest for their maintenance till twenty-one, and upon the children attaining their ages of twenty-one equal shares of the principal to be transferred to them; the interest accrued between the elder and the younger children coming of age decreed to be divided between them. Hawkins v. Combe, 1 Bro. C. C. 335.

—— Mixed Fund.]—Testator directed his executors to pay and apply the whole or any part of the rents, issues, and profits of his real and personal estates during the life of J. S. for or towards his maintenance, attendance and comfort; and after the death of J. S., to sell the real and personal estate, the produce of the sale to be deemed part of the testator's personal estate, and the rents and profits of the real estate in the meantime, and until a sale, to be deemed part of the annual income of his personal estate. The whole of the rents of the real estate, and part only of the personal estate, had been applied by the trustees for the maintenance of J. S., who was of unsound mind, without touching upon his private property:—Held, that the personal representatives of J. S. were not entitled to the unapplied savings of the testator's real and personal estate as upon an absolute gift of the income to J. S., though the whole income, however large, might have been applied by the trustees for his maintenance, if necessary; but that the mixed fund must be apportioned between the testator's heir-at-law and residuary legatees. Sanderson's Will, In re, 3 K. & J. 497; 26 L. J., Ch. 804; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 658; 5 W. R. 864.

Held, also, that if the trustees had accumulated the testator's estate, and allowed J. S. to have been maintained out of his own property, his administration would have been entitled to be recouped to the full extent. Ib.

—— Investments of Unapplied Income.]—Funds were vested in trustees by M., upon trust (after certain intermediate trusts) to pay the whole or so much as they should think fit of the dividends thereof towards the maintenance, &c., of an infant; and upon trust, when the infant attained twenty-one, to pay the whole dividends to her, with further trust as to corpus of the fund for her children; but if the infant died under twenty-one without issue, then upon trusts as to the corpus of the fund, and the dividends thenceforth to accrue, for the next of kin of M. A power was contained in the settlement authorising the trustees to invest so much of the income to which the infant "shall be entitled" as might not be required for her maintenance, etc., and to transfer such investments to the infant on her attaining twenty-one, with power to the trustees to resort to the accumulations of any previous year, and apply the same for the infant's maintenance, &c., in any succeeding year. The infant died under twenty-one, and there was a considerable sum invested, being accumulations of unapplied income:—Held, as between the parties claiming under the gift over, the next of kin of the infant, and the personal representatives of the settlor, that the invested accumulations passed to the personal representatives of the settlor as a resulting trust. Baker v. Pugh, 5 W. R. 239.

—— Arrears of Fund never raised for Maintenance.]—By a post-nuptial settlement the sum of 15,000*l.*, secured by mortgage of the settlor's property, was settled upon his children, with power for the trustees to apply the income for their maintenance. The money was never raised or paid to the trustees; the settlor maintained his children until his bankruptcy:—Held, that the children were entitled to the arrears of the fund. Kerrison's Trusts, In re, 40 L. J., Ch. 637; 25 L. T. 57; 19 W. R. 967.

—— No Direction to Accumulate—Past Accumulations and Future Income during Children's Minority.]—By settlement trustees were directed to pay the income of 1,000*l.* for the maintenance, education and support of the children of the marriage, and when they should attain twenty-one years to pay the same sum and the accumulations thereof accruing to such children. The father had maintained the children at a greater expense than the income of 1,000*l.* There was no direction to accumulate:—Held, that the father was entitled to the past accumulations of income, and the future income during his children's minority. Birch v. Sumner, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 712.

Interest accruing due on Shares during Minority not applied for Maintenance.]—A testator, after bequeathing certain shares of his residuary estate (the produce of a mixed fund) to his son and daughter respectively, directed that the interest of the share given to the son should be applied for his maintenance and education till twenty-one, and that after such period he should have power to receive and dispose of such interest till his age of twenty-five, when the whole of the property bequeathed to him was to be at his own disposal. He further directed that half the property given to his daughter should be invested, in trust, for her maintenance, education, use, and benefit, during her life, and for her children, if any, after her decease; and if there was no issue living at her decease, the said property was to devolve to his son; and in case he was dead also, and had left no issue, the said property was to devolve to his executors thereinafter named. The other half of the property bequeathed to his daughter he directed to be invested for her sole use and benefit till twenty-one, and that the said property should then be at her own disposal; and if either the son or daughter should die under twenty-one, the property bequeathed to the one so dying should devolve to the other; and if both should die under that age, then the property bequeathed to them should devolve to, and become the property of, the four persons therein named and described, to be divided betwixt them, in equal proportions, and their heirs for ever; which four persons he also appointed his executors. One of the four persons named executors renounced probate, and declined to act; and afterwards both the son and daughter died under twenty-one, and without issue:—Held, that the interest which accrued upon the shares of the son and daughter, during their respective minorities, so far as it had not been applied to their maintenance and education, vested absolutely in them, and passed to their personal representatives. Barber v. Barber, 3 Myl. & Cr. 688; 8 L. J., Ch. 36; 2 Jur. 1029.

Testator bequeathed the residue of his personal estate to three trustees, in trust to pay, apply, and dispose of all the interest thereof for the maintenance, support, and benefit of his three children and the survivors and survivor of them, in such shares and proportions, and in such manner, as they should think most proper and advisable; and if all the children should die without leaving issue, then that the trust fund should remain vested in two of the trustees in trust for the persons thereinafter mentioned:—Held, that the whole income of the residue was given for the children's benefit, and, the trustees having applied only part of it for their benefit, that the surplus devolved on the survivor's death to his personal representative. Beevor v. Partridge, 11 Sim. 229; 10 L. J., Ch. 89.

—— Liability to Account for Surplus.]—Testator gave all his property to trustees, in trust to pay an annuity to his wife, and, subject to that payment, to convey, assign, or transfer, all his property, unto and equally between his children, when and as they severally attained twenty-one; and, in the meantime to pay, to his wife, or otherwise apply the rents and proceeds of their respective shares for or towards their respective maintenance, education, and advancement. But, in case of the decease of any of the children under twenty-one, then upon trust to convey, assign or transfer the shares of such of them as should so die, and the accumulations, if any, unto and equally between such of them as should attain twenty-one. The testator's widow maintained and educated the children for several years, and advanced three of them, out of the income received by her from the testator's property, exclusive of her annuity; and, the income being more than sufficient for those purposes a considerable surplus remained in her hands:—Held, that the surplus belonged, not to the children, but to the widow. Browne v. Paull, 1 Sim. (N.S.) 92; 20 L. J., Ch. 75; 15 Jur. 5. S. P. Berkeley v. Swinburne, 6 Sim. 613; 3 L. J., Ch. 165; 5 L. J., Ch. 32. Hadow v. Hadow, 9 Sim. 438. And see Raikes v. Ward, 1 Hare, 446; 11 L. J., Ch. 276.

A testator directed his executors to apply the dividends of the property belonging to him, which might remain after paying legacies and providing for the payment of annuities, with his funeral expenses, his debts being all paid, to the maintenance, education, and benefit of R. S., as they should judge most advantageous for him; and in the event of the death of R. S. under twenty-one, he directed the dividends to be applied as therein mentioned. R. S. survived the testator about two years, and the executors applied a part of the dividends to his maintenance, education, and benefit:—Held, that the unapplied part of the dividends, with the accumulations, formed part of the residue. M'Donald v. Bryce, 2 Keen, 517; 7 L. J., Ch. 217; 2 Jur. 295.

C., by his will, devised all his freehold and copyhold estates to his two daughters, A. and M., and all other daughters that he might thereafter have, as tenants in common fee; he had afterwards another daughter L. He then gave directions for another will, by which he gave all his real estates to his two eldest daughters, and a sum of 15,000*l.* to his daughter L. The attorney took the minutes of this second will in writing, but before it was prepared the testator died; these minutes were proved in the spiritual court as a testamentary paper:—Held, first, this paper, being proved in the spiritual court, is sufficient to pass copyhold estate; secondly, but is so totally void as to the freehold, that it will not put L. to her election, and she thereafter will take her share of the freeholds under the first will, as well as the 15,000*l.* under the second; thirdly, the testator gave the 15,000*l.* to his daughter L., to be paid to her at twenty-one or marriage, without interest for the same in the meantime; but if she died before twenty-one or marriage, then the 15,000*l.* was not to be raised, but was to sink into the residue of his personal estate. And he directed that, out of the interest of the 15,000*l.*, certain sums of money should be applied for the maintenance of L. The interest of this legacy, beyond the maintenance, is vested in L., and must be appropriated to accumulate for her benefit. Carey v. Askew, 2 Bro. C. C. 51; 1 Cox, 241. And see Sheddon v. Goodrich, 8 Ves. 492, 498, 499.

—— Defeasible Estate.]—A testator directed that certain funds should be made payable to children on their arriving at the age of twenty-one, and that his trustee should in the meantime pay and apply the interest towards the maintenance of such children until their respective shares should became payable; and that it should be lawful to apply the whole or any part of the principal to which any infant might be entitled under the provisions thereinbefore contained, at any earlier period than the same would become vested or payable by virtue of such provision, for the advancement of such infant:—Held, that the representatives of a child who died under the age of twenty-one were not entitled to the interest accrued during his minority. Skaife v. Stewart, 10 Jur. 299.

Property was bequeathed to trustees in trust for an infant, with a gift over in case of his death under twenty-one. The trustees accumulated the income of the property not required for his maintenance, in pursuance of the powers given by s. 26 of Lord Cranworth's Act. The infant died under twenty-one:—Held, that the accumulations of income to the time of the death of the infant belonged to the infant, and were not to be held for the benefit of the remainderman who ultimately became entitled to the property from which the accumulations arose. Buckley's Estate, In re, 52 L. J., Ch. 439; 22 Ch. D. 583; 48 L. T. 109; 31 W. R. 376.

Exercise of Power of Appointment—Discretion not taken away.]—Under a marriage settlement, property was to be held by the trustees, after the death of the wife, for all and every or such one or more of the children of the marriage, &c., as the wife should appoint, and in default of appointment, for the children equally; and the trustees were empowered during the minorities of the children to apply the income of their presumptive shares for their maintenance and education, although the father might be of ability to maintain them. In exercise of the power, the wife appointed the property among the children equally, and directed that during their minorities the income of their respective shares should be paid to the husband, to be applied by him for their maintenance:—Held, that the discretion of the trustees as to the application of the income during the minorities was not thereby taken away. White v. Grane, 18 Beav. 571; 23 L. J., Ch. 863; 2 W. R. 320.

Delegated Authority.]—Devise and bequest of freehold, copyhold, and personal estate, upon trust for sale at the discretion of the trustee, and that the rents, interest, and proceeds should be divided amongst a class, either equally or in other proportions, as the trustee having regard to their circumstances, should appoint; followed by an unattested codicil, directing the application of such rents, interest, and proceeds for the benefit of such of the class as were unsettled, and particularly for the comfortable support of P. (one of the class), who was of weak mind; and in case the trustee should not live to perform the whole trust, the rest to be executed by any persons he might appoint, having regard to the said intentions. The trustee by deed directed the manner in which the estates should be sold, and the proportions of the proceeds applied, and directed the division thereof amongst the other objects to be postponed until after the death of P., and nominated other persons to execute the trusts, which might remain unexecuted at his (the trustee's) death, with the same discretionary power that he had himself:—Held, that the trustee, for the government of his own discretion, might properly have regard to the direction of the unattested codicil, even as to the proceeds of the real estate, so far as he was not restrained by the effect of the will; that the prospective directions in the deed of appointment were not necessarily invalid, especially those which related to the future maintenance of P.; and that the attempt to delegate powers which the trustee could not transfer did not invalidate the directions in the same deed which he had power to give. Hitch v. Leworthy, 2 Hare, 200; 15 L. J., Ch. 235.

A testator directed his trustees, in their uncontrolled discretion, to apply such part of his residuary estate for the maintenance, comfort, and support of his wife, as, together with her own property, should make up her annual income to 500*l.* At the date of the will, and at his death, the wife was of unsound mind, but she afterwards recovered:—Held, that she was entitled to have her income made up to 500*l.* per annum. Bullock v. Bullock, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 29; 11 L. T. 561; 13 W. R. 212.

A. disinherits his son, and by will gives the greatest part of his estate to B., and tells B., if his son behaved well, he might pay him 20*l.* a quarter; and if he used that well, he might make it up 40*l.* a quarter. Decreed 40*l.* a quarter to the son. Kingsman v. Kingsman, 2 Vern. 559.

Refusal to make Allowance.]—A widow, who was by the terms of the will to be allowed money by the trustees during the minority of an infant—her son—abandoned the child, for whom other guardians were appointed by the court, and afterwards having cohabited with a married man, and by him had several illegitimate children, lived with them in a house to the use of which she was entitled under the will. The trustees under the circumstances refused to make her any allowance out of the trust moneys:—Held, that she could not compel the trustees so to do, but was disqualified from making any claim by her abandonment of the child, independently of other misconduct. Mellor v. Mellor, 20 W. R. 51.

Keeping considerable Balances in Hand.]—Trustee, being directed to apply in his discretion such portions of the income as he should think fit, towards the support of F. H. and her children, and to invest and accumulate such part of the income as should not be so applied:—Held, to be justified in keeping considerable balances in his hands to answer contingencies, and not chargeable with interest on such balances. Cantwell v. Higgins, 1 Jur. 792.

Difference between Trustees as to Accumulation.] — Under a settlement, discretionary power over a fund of 500*l.* a year was given to two trustees upon trust, to apply it to the maintenance of an infant, or else in their discretion to accumulate it, and if the trustees did not apply the fund to either of these objects, it was to be paid to Mrs. W. They both agreed the fund was not required for maintenance, but differed on the question of accumulation:—Held, that as the maintenance was amply provided for, and the court in the exercise of its discretion on the point, when the trustees differed, thought the accumulation unnecessary, Mrs. W. was entitled to the fund until further order. Windham v. Cooper, 24 L. T. 793.

Payment to Annuitant where Discretionary Power to Purchase Annuity.]—By will a sum was given to two trustees on trust to pay the income to C. for his life, with a gift over of the principal on his death; but the trustees had a discretionary power to purchase with the principal an irredeemable annuity for the life of C. for his benefit. The trustees did not purchase an annuity, but one of them paid to C. during his life, from time to time, various small sums, amounting in the aggregate to more than the total income, but less than the principal:—Held, that this was a proper exercise of the discretionary power. Messeena v. Carr, 39 L. J., Ch. 216; L. R. 9 Eq. 260; 22 L. T. 3; 18 W. R. 415.

Arrestment by Creditors—Effect on Power to Postpone Payments.]—Where trustees have an unlimited discretionary power to postpone, as long as they think fit, the payments of shares of a residuary fund; and where of the time and manner of exercising the power they are to be the sole and final judges, arresting creditors of the fund will be defeated by the trustees executing, even after action raised, a deed applying the fund as an alimentary provision for the behoof of the beneficiaries. No proceedings resorted to by creditors of the beneficiaries can in such a case abridge the powers of the trustees. Chambers v. Smith, 3 App. Cas. 795—H. L. (Sc.)

Power to Purchase a Trade.]—A power in a settlement to withdraw funds and lay them out in the purchase of a trade for the benefit of the husband and wife may be exercised after the death of one of them for the benefit of the survivor alone. Doorly v. Arnold, 18 W. R. 540.

In exercising it the trustees ought to see that a purchase is bonâ fide made, but they need not inquire into the value of the property or expediency of the purchase. Ib.

Discretionary Trust for Maintenance — Child Assigning Interest.]—A testator directed his trustees, after the death of his wife, to apply the income of his estate "in and towards the maintenance, education, and advancement of my children in such manner as they shall deem most expedient until the youngest of my said children attains the age of twenty-one years," and on the happening of that event he directed them to divide his estate equally among all his children then living. The testator left four children, two of whom at the death of the widow in 1884 were of age, and the youngest was in his seventh year. After the decease of the widow the trustees paid each of the adult children one-fourth of the income, and applied the other two-fourths for the benefit of the minors equally till 1886, when J. S. C., the eldest son, made an absolute assignment for value of all his interest under the testator's will to H. The trustees declining to pay one-fourth of the income to H. he took out a summons to have the construction of the will determined:—Held, that no child of the testator was entitled, prior to the attainment of twenty-one by the youngest of the testator's children, to the payment of any part of the income, and that the trustees were entitled to apply the income for the maintenance, education, or advancement of the children, including J. S. C., in their absolute discretion. Coleman, In re, Henry v. Strong, 58 L. J., Ch. 226; 39 Ch. D. 443; 60 L. T. 127—C. A.

Held, also, that H. was entitled to no interest in the income except such moneys or property, if any, as might be paid or delivered or appropriated for payment or delivery by the trustees to J. S. C., and that the trustees could not pay or deliver to J. S. C. money or goods forming part of the income or purchased out of the income, for that such moneys and goods so paid or delivered, or appropriated to be paid or delivered, would pass by the assignment. Ib.

Payment into Court.]—Where, under a will, the income of a fund is payable for the maintenance of T., the trustee, by paying the fund into court, relinquishes his discretionary power. Tegg's Trusts, In re, 15 L. T. 236; 15 W. R. 52.

—— Power to Advance Money.]—A testator by his will devised and bequeathed his residuary estate to trustees, and gave thereout a legacy of 10,000*l.* to each of his five daughters, and directed that the legacies should be held upon certain trusts for the benefit of his daughters, their husbands and children respectively, and he provided that, on the request of any of his daughters, it should be lawful for the trustees, if they should think fit, to advance to the husband or husbands of any one or more of his daughters, part of her legacy (not exceeding 5,000*l.*) for the purpose of setting up the husband in business, or otherwise promoting the advancement or benefit of his said daughter and her husband and family. The trustees paid the legacy of one of the daughters into court under the trustee relief act. Application was now made for the advance of a sum of 3,000*l.* to the husband of the daughter whose share had been so paid in, for the purpose of furnishing him with a professional residence. The surviving trustee of the will consented to the advance being made:—Held (following Cole's Trust, In re, supra, col. 485), that the trustees, by paying into court, had terminated their discretion, and that the discretion being a personal one could not be exercised by the court, and the advance could not therefore be made to the husband. Landon's Trusts, In re, post, col. 512, not followed. Nettlefold's Trusts, In re, 59 L. T. 315.

But see Ashburnham's Trusts, In re, 54 L. T. 84.

A testator bequeathed to his executors a sum of 450*l.*, which he directed should be held by them in trust for his brother James' family; and should be by his said executors expended for the benefit of the said family, in such a manner as to them should seem most expedient. The executors having paid the 450*l.* into court under the trustee relief act:—Held, that the payment into court terminated the discretionary power of applying the fund. Mulqueen's Trusts, In re, Mulqueen, Ex parte, 7 L. R. Ir. 127.

Pending Suit.]—Power given by a will to trustees, at their discretion, to apply during the life of the testator's wife any part not exceeding one moiety of the annual income of the trust estate for or towards the maintenance and education of his daughter, or otherwise for her benefit, in such manner as the trustees should think proper, may be exercised, notwithstanding bill filed by trustees to have the trusts of the will performed and carried into execution under the direction of the court. Sillibourne v. Newport, 1 K. & J. 602; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 608; 3 W. R. 653.

Decree for Administration.]—When a testator by his will gives his trustees a discretionary power of advancement for the maintenance and education of children presumptively entitled under the will, the court will not control the trustees in the exercise of their discretion, because a decree has been made in a suit for the administration of the testator's estate. Brophy v. Bellamy, 43 L. J., Ch. 183; L. R. 8 Ch. 798; 29 L. T. 380—C. A.

But see Minors v. Battison, post, col. 503.

Interference of Court—Maintenance of Infant.]—A female infant was entitled contingently on her attaining twenty-one, or marrying, to a fund of which her deceased mother had been tenant for life. The trustees had power to "apply all or any part" of the income (about 538*l.* a year) for her maintenance and education. On a summons in the matter of the infant, Bacon, V.-C., held that he had jurisdiction to control the discretion of the trustees as to the quantum to be allowed, and made an order on them to pay 400*l.* a year to the father for her maintenance and education. The trustees appealed, and in answer to an inquiry by the court, stated their intention to allow 250*l.* to the father for her maintenance and education:—Held, that the order of the vice-chancellor was irregular, and must be discharged, the court having no jurisdiction on a summons in the matter of an infant to make any order for payment by trustees or other persons. Lofthouse, In re, 54 L. J., Ch. 1087; 29 Ch. D. 921; 53 L. T. 174; 33 W. R. 668—C. A.

Whether the court could control the discretion of the trustees as to the amount to be allowed for maintenance and education, so long as such discretion was honestly exercised. Quære. Ib.

—— Reasonable and Honest Exercise of Discretion.]—A direction by will that the testator's widow shall receive all the income of his real and personal estate, and pay and apply the same to and for the use of herself and the children of their marriage, agreeably and according to her own discretion during her life, confers on the wife a discretionary power, which the court will not disturb so long as it is reasonably and honestly exercised. Costabadie v. Costabadie, 6 Hare, 410; 16 L. J., Ch. 259; 11 Jur. 345.

Where in a marriage settlement the trustees had power to apply the income of the settled fund for the benefit of the husband and wife and their children as they should "in their uncontrolled and irresponsible discretion think proper," the court, while expressing an opinion that the trustees were not acting judiciously, declined to interfere with their discretion, there being no proof of mala fides. Tabor v. Brooks, 48 L. J., Ch. 130; 10 Ch. D. 273; 39 L. T. 528.

Where a testator has reposed a discretion in his trustees as to the application of rents and profits in the maintenance, &c., of his widow and children, the court will not interfere, in the absence of misconduct, without their consent. Collins v. Vining, C. P. Cooper, 472.

Where a testator has given a discretionary power to trustees to apply the income of his estate for the maintenance of an infant, the court will not interfere unless the trustees have been guilty of extravagance. Douglas v. Andrews, 3 Jur. 949.

Where a fund was by will given to trustees for infants, and the trustees were desired to pay the income to the mother to be by her applied for their benefit at her discretion:—Held, that the court had power, where the mother had not exercised a sound discretion, to order the income to be paid to the father for the maintenance of the infants. Roper's Trusts, In re, 11 Ch. D. 272; 40 L. T. 97; 27 W. R. 408.

——Past and Future Maintenance.]—A testator gave a legacy of 3,000*l.* to three children, or the survivors or survivor, who should attain twenty-one; but if all three died under twenty-one there was a gift over. The will contained a direction to the trustees to apply the whole, or such parts as they should think fit of the income of the legacy for the maintenance and education of the legatees while under twenty-one:—Held, that the court had power to control the discretion of the trustees in the allowance to be made for children; and the court, in opposition to the trustees, directed that the whole income should be paid to the father of the children for their maintenance, together with an equal amount for past maintenance. Hodges, In re, Davey v. Ward, 47 L. J., Ch. 335; 7 Ch. D. 754; 26 W. R. 390.

Testator bequeathed an annuity to his granddaughter, to be applied whilst she was under age in and towards her maintenance and education, in such manner as his trustees should in their absolute and uncontrollable discretion think fit, and whether her father should be able to maintain and provide for her or not. The trustees having made a very small payment on account of the annuity, and having made no provision for the maintenance or education of the infant, who had been wholly provided for by her father, the court declared that, in the event of its appearing that the father had properly maintained and educated the infant from the testator's death, he should receive the whole annuity for the time past and till further notice; he undertaking properly to maintain and educate her, and to abide by the order of the court. Stephens v. Lawry, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 87.

—— Inquiry as to Exercise of Discretionary

Power.]—A testator gave to his executors certain real and personal estate, upon trust to permit his wife M. to receive the rents, &c., thereof for her own use and benefit, and for the maintenance and education of his children (naming them), so long as his said wife should continue his widow; and in case she should marry, to pay her an annuity of 100*l.* per annum; and subject to such trusts, in trust, after the decease or marriage of M., for his said children in equal shares, when and as they should attain the age of twenty-one:—Held, that a trust was constituted of a sufficient part of the income of the property for the maintenance and education of the children, and that such trust was capable of continuance beyond the period of a son attaining twenty-one, or a daughter attaining that age or marrying. The court, however, being of opinion that a discretionary power as to the mode of executing the trust was given to M., directed inquiries for the purpose of ascertaining how such discretionary power had been and how it ought to be exercised. Longmore v. Elcum, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 363; 12 L. J., Ch. 469.

ix. Account against Trustees.

Fund to be Applied at Discretion of Trustee for Benefit of a Minor.]—When an annuity was given to A. in trust to apply it at his discretion for the benefit of B. during his life, and for his advancement, maintenance, support, or otherwise for his benefit, without being answerable for any of the money so laid out, or the exercise of the discretion so vested in the trustee as to the mode and extent of expending and laying out the same:—Held, that A. could not apply any portion of the annuity for his own benefit, but was bound to account for all sums not shown to be applied for the advancement, maintenance, support, or benefit of B. Wainford v. Heyl, 44 L. J., Ch. 567; L. R. 20 Eq. 321; 33 L. T. 155; 23 W. R. 848.

Trustee Insolvent.]—Where lands are devised to maintain an infant till twenty-three, and then to account, he shall not have an account until he attains twenty-three, unless the trustee be insolvent. Tilly v. Simpson, Mosely, 244.

Application of Fund during Minority.]—A testator gave his residue, on trust to apply the income for the maintenance, education, and support of his children until the youngest attained twenty-one. The children having been maintained and educated, the court declined to direct an account of the application of the income during the minority of the youngest child, without a special case being made out. Hora v. Hora, 33 Beav. 88.

Testator gave an annuity to a trustee in trust to pay the same to his daughter for her separate use for life, remainder to her husband, to enable him to maintain his children by her until the youngest attained twenty-one; and if the husband should die before the youngest child attained twenty-one, then upon trust for the trustee to apply the annuity in like manner as the husband was directed to do:—Held, the daughter being dead, that the husband was bound to apply the annuity for the maintenance of the children; but that if he maintained them properly, they would not be entitled to an account against him. Leach v. Leach, 13 Sim. 304; 7 Jur. 273.

The sum of 100*l.* devised to an infant payable at twenty-one, and if he dies before, then it is devised over, and the interest of the 100*l.* is for the child's maintenance. The trustee lays out 20*l.* of the 100*l.* for placing out the child as an apprentice, and the child died under twenty-one. This 20*l.* shall be allowed. Franklin v. Green, 2 Vern. 137.

Considerable Balances of Income Kept in Hand.]—Trustee, being directed to apply in his discretion such portions of the income as he should think fit, towards the support of F. H. and her children, and to invest and accumulate such part of the income as should not be so applied:—Held, to be justified in keeping considerable balances in his hands to answer contingencies, and not chargeable with interest on such balances. Cantwell v. Higgins, 1 Jur. 792.

Sums Expended in Luxuries.]—Charges by trustees for money laid out in luxuries under colour of maintenance, and for money unnecessarily expended in pulling down and rebuilding a house, disallowed. Bridge v. Brown, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 181.

Maintenance of Incapable Adult Cestui que Trust.]—If a trustee be sued in chancery for an account, and it appears that he has properly expended sums of money for the protection and safety, or for the maintenance and support, of his cestui que trust, at a time when he, though adult, was incapable of taking care of himself, the court will allow him credit, in account, for such sums of money. Nelson v. Duncombe, 9 Beav. 211; 15 L. J., Ch. 296; 10 Jur. 399. S. P., Sherwood v. Sanderson, 19 Ves. 280; 13 R. R. 193.

No Direction to Accumulate and no Power of Maintenance.]—The fact that a will contains an express direction to accumulate, and no power of maintenance, will not be a ground for charging the trustee with sums properly paid for maintenance. Aveline v. Melhuish, 10 Jur. (N.S.) 788; 12 W. R. 1020—L.JJ.

Payment to Co-trustee—Vouching Items of Expenditure.]—H. and C. were trustees and executors of a will, and guardians of the testator's daughters. The daughters during their infancy were maintained by C., and H. allowed him to receive the income for that purpose. After they attained majority judgment was given for administration of the testator's estate, in which the usual accounts of the personal estate were directed, and an inquiry how and by whom each of the daughters was maintained during infancy, and what was proper to be allowed and to whom out of the income of her share for her maintenance and education. A dispute having arisen in taking the accounts and inquiry, H. applied for a declaration that the receipts by C. of the income of the shares of the daughters for maintenance were a good discharge to H., and that H. was not to be called upon to produce vouchers in respect of the particular manner in which the income was applied. Kay, J., made an order expressing the opinion of the court that the accounts of the trustees should be taken as directed by the judgment as between guardian and ward, and ordering H. to pay the costs of the application:—Held, on appeal, that H., as trustee, was not discharged by mere evidence of payment of the income to C., his co-guardian, but that under the inquiry H. was not bound to vouch the items of expenditure; and if it was shown that C. had properly maintained and educated the children, the sum proper for that purpose would be allowed against the balance found due on the account, without vouching the details of the application. Evans, In re, Welsh v. Channell, 53 L. J., Ch. 709; 26 Ch. D. 58; 51 L. T. 175; 32 W. R. 736—C. A.

Payments by Trustees after Notice of Assignment of Interest by Beneficiary.]—By the will of a testator a share of his estate was given to trustees upon trust during the life of one of his sons to pay and apply the whole or any part of the income or accumulations of income of the share for the support, maintenance, or education, or otherwise for the benefit of that son, his wife, or children, in such manner in all respects as the trustees should in their uncontrolled discretion think fit. The son assigned his interest by way of mortgage to the plaintiff. Notice of the assignment was duly given to the trustees of the will; but, after receiving such notice, they made payments out of the income of the share to or on behalf of the son. The plaintiff sought to make the trustees liable in respect of the payments so made:—Held, that the beneficial interest of the son under the will was that which he was entitled to assign; that money paid to him or to any person on his behalf was necessarily part of his beneficial interest; and that it must be assumed that money paid by the trustees to him or to any person on his behalf was his in their irrevocable determination immediately before the payment, at which period of time the trustees were affected with notice of assignment; and, therefore, that the trustees were liable for all sums paid to or on behalf of the son after they had received notice of assignment. Neil, In re, Hemming v. Neil, 62 L. T. 649.

Trust for Maintenance of Children—Ability of Father to Maintain.]—J. B. M. having absolute power to dispose of property, devised it to her husband J. M. for life, in trust that he should "apply the same, or as much thereof as he should from time to time think proper, for or towards the maintenance and education or otherwise for the benefit of my son D. M., and shall and do invest the unapplied income, &c., in such stocks, &c., as the said J. M. in his absolute and uncontrolled discretion shall think fit, with power to him at any time and from time to time to use and apply all or any part of such accumulated income for the benefit of my said son, or to pay the same over to him, as the said J. M. may from time to time think proper": and after the death of J. M. she devised the property, and all accumulations which should not have been applied or paid over, in trust for her son D. M. absolutely; and if he should die in the lifetime of his father, J. M., to J. M. absolutely. After the testatrix's death, J. M. received the rents and maintained his son in a manner suitable to his rank until his own death. Independently of the testatrix's property he was during his life of ability to maintain his son. J. M. having died, his administratrix, in an action brought by D. M., claimed credit for a considerable sum for the maintenance and education, &c., of the minor by J. M., during several years. It was sought, on behalf of the plaintiff, to have this credit disallowed on the ground that the father, having been of sufficient ability to maintain and educate his child, was not entitled to apply any of the trust funds for that purpose:—Held, that J. M. was, under the testatrix's will, entitled (notwithstanding his own ability) to apply so much of the income of the trust funds as he should from time to time think proper for and towards the maintenance and education, or otherwise for the benefit, of his son, D. M. Malcomson v. Malcomson, 17 L. R. Ir. 69—C. A.

7. Discretionary Trusts and Powers in the Nature of Trusts.

a. Who may exercise Powers or Trusts.

Quorum of Trustees.]—A testator devising an estate to persons whom he names trustees, for such purposes as they, or the major part of them, shall think fit, gives no benefit to them, but is an authority only, by appointing a quorum out of them. Cook v. Duckenfield, 2 Atk. 568.

Personal Trust.]—Archbishop P. devised his options to trustees, regard being had in the dispositions of them, according to their discretion, to his eldest son, Dr. P., the husbands of his daughters, his present and former chaplains, &c.:—Held, a personal trust, and, the treasurership of C. being vacant, one of the trustees might present the other, he being within the description in the will. Potter v. Chapman, Amb. 98; Dick. 146.

A testator gave his residuary personal estate to the trustees named in his will, their executors, administrators, and assigns, upon trust to apply the same as he should appoint: and in default of appointment as to any part, he directed the trustees to settle such part at their discretion either for pious and charitable purposes, or otherwise for the benefit of the testator's sister and her children:—Held, that this was a personal trust, which a representative of the surviving trustee could not execute, and that a sum which remained at the decease of the surviving trustee, and which had not been applied to charitable purposes, or for the benefit of the testator's sister and her children, was undisposed of, and belonged to the testator's next-of kin. Down v. Worrall, 1 Myl. & K. 561.

A bequest of 2,000*l.* to testator's executors, in trust, to build a bridge in Scotland over the river Don, "the situation to be chosen by them," was allowed by them to remain unapplied, and to accumulate for thirty years. Semble, the power of selection given to the original executors ceased upon their death. Forbes v. Forbes, 18 Beav. 552.

Disclaimer by Trustees—Lease by Heir-at-Law.]—Where lands are devised to trustees in fee upon trusts, or with powers requiring the exercise of judgment and discretion, and they disclaim, the heir-at-law cannot exercise such powers or trusts, although he may hold the estate subject to the trusts of the will. Robson v. Flight, 34 L. J., Ch. 226; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 147; 11 L. T. 725; 13 W. R. 393.

A testator devised real estate to trustees, and directed that they should and might grant leases thereof for the term of twenty-one years. The trustees disclaimed the trusts, and the heir-at-law, who was tenant for life of a moiety, granted a lease:—Held, that the lease was invalid. Ib.

Held, also, that the acceptance of rent from 1860, payable under the lease, by one of the plaintiffs, was not a confirmation of the lease. Ib.

Person accepting Trust with Bias.]—A person before he accepts of a trusteeship, to which a discretionary power is annexed, is bound to disclose any circumstances in his situation, which may give him a bias or an interest against the due exercise of that discretionary power. If he accepts the trusteeship, without disclosing such circumstances in his situation, he cannot afterwards exercise the discretionary authority for his own benefit. Peyton v. Robinson, 1 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 191.

Trustee of Mortgage.]—A discretionary power given to a trustee of a mortgage to act in the premises as the settlor might have done, and to accept part of the debt in satisfaction of the whole, &c., will not authorise him to discharge part of the security. Dawes v. Betts, 17 L. J., Ch. 315 ; 12 Jur. 709.

Exercise of Trusts for Advancement and Maintenance.]—See ante, 6.

Exercise of Powers and Trusts by New Trustees.]—See post, c. 5.

See also POWERS.

b. Jurisdiction of Court to Interfere with Discretion of Trustees.

Maintenance of Children—Power or Trust.]—A testator, B., by his will directed that, after the decease or remarriage of his wife, L., his trustees should apply the whole, or such part as they should think fit, of the income of any child's share of his (the testator's) residuary estate for or towards such child's maintenance, and appointed L. and four other persons trustees of his will. L. remarried, but the infant children of her marriage with B. continued to live with her. On an application by the infants that the trustees might be ordered to provide for their maintenance pursuant to the above provision of B.'s will :—Held, that there was no absolute trust to so apply the whole or any part of the income, but only a discretionary trust, carrying an obligation to entertain and consider the question, and then a discretion in the execution of the duty ; and, consequently, that the court could not overrule the discretion of the four trustees, who, after having considered all the circumstances and their duty under the circumstances, had, in the exercise of an honest discretion, refused to make any allowance for maintenance out of the testator's estate ; but assuming the court had a discretion, it would exercise that discretion similarly to these trustees. Tempest v. Camoys (Lord) (infra, col. 504) and Wilson v. Turner (22 Ch. D. 521) considered and applied. Bryant, In re, Bryant v. Hickley, 63 L. J., Ch. 197 ; [1894] 1 Ch. 324 ; 8 R 32 ; 70 L. T. 301 ; 42 W. R. 183.

Power coupled with a Trust.]—Where a power is coupled with a trust or duty, the court will enforce the proper and timely exercise of the power, but will not interfere with the discretion of the trustees as to the particular time or manner of their bonâ fide exercise of it. Burrage, In re, Burningham v. Burrage, 62 L. T. 752.

—— Power to Release.]—A marriage settlement executed in 1843 contained a proviso that if the husband should survive the wife it should be lawful for the trustees at their option to withhold the income from him, and to appropriate it as they might think most proper for the benefit of him or his children. After the death of the survivor of the husband and wife, the property was to go as the wife should by deed or will appoint :—Held, that the power, being in the nature of a trust, could not be released. Saul v. Pattinson, 55 L. J., Ch. 831 ; 54 L. T. 670 ; 34 W. R. 561.

When a power coupled with a duty is conferred upon trustees to be executed by them at a fixed period, and after they have come to a judgment as to the conduct of the individual to be affected, they cannot divest themselves of the power or execute it until the time appointed ; nor can they enter into any anterior compact respecting it. Weller v. Ker, L. R. 1 H. L. (Sc.) 11.

Power of Revocation.]—A discretion vested in trustees of a settlement must be exercised in such a way as to preserve, not to defeat, the objects of the settlement. Eland v. Baker, 29 Beav. 137 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 956 ; 9 W. R. 444.

Power to Expend Hindoo Testator's Fortune in Religious Ceremonies.]—Where a Hindoo testator made two of his sons his executors, and after directing the performance of various religious acts by them, and that when they should do them they should give notice to their brothers, and that they should all of them perform the acts ; otherwise, whatever the executors might think proper they might do, and, should any one raise objections, they should be inadmissible :—Held, that the executors had not an unlimited discretion in expending the testator's fortune in religious ceremonies. Mullick v. Mullick, 1 Knapp, 245.

Sale of Leaseholds.]—A testator gave leaseholds, some of which were held on short terms, to two trustees, one of whom was his wife, upon trust for his wife for life, and after her death upon trust that the whole should be sold, and the proceeds divided between four persons. And he authorised his trustees, provided that they should deem it advisable, to sell his short leaseholds and invest the proceeds and allow his wife to receive the income during her life. The leaseholds were in a bad state of repair at the death of the testator ; the widow kept them up in the same state of repair, but declined to do more than this. The remaindermen applied for an order to oblige the tenant for life to maintain the leaseholds in such a state of repair as to satisfy the covenants in the leases, so as to avoid a forfeiture, or else to concur in selling the short leaseholds :—Held, that the court had no jurisdiction to interfere with the discretion of the widow, who had then become surviving trustee, and to order her to exercise her power of selling the leaseholds. Tempest v. Camoys (Lord) (infra) distinguished. Courtier, In re, Coles v. Courtier, 56 L. J., Ch. 350 ; 34 Ch. D. 136 ; 55 L. T. 574 ; 35 W. R. 85 ; 51 J. P. 117—C. A.

When a residue comprising leaseholds, freeholds and other property is devised in strict settlement, and a direction is given to the trustees to sell so much and such part as, in their sole discretion, they may think necessary for the purpose of paying all the testator's debts, a presumption is raised against the conversion of such parts as the trustees may not think necessary to sell for the purpose mentioned, and the court will not interfere with the discretion of the trustees. L. & N. W. Ry., In re, 19 W. R. 220.

Power of Leasing.]—A testator gave to his trustees a special power of leasing at their absolute discretion; which formed part of a special scheme of management of his mansion house and estate for a limited period:—Held, in a suit for the execution of the trusts of the will, that the court would compel the trustees to exercise the power of leasing. Tempest v. Camoys (Lord), 21 Ch. D. 576, n.

Power of or Trust for Sale.]—Where real estate is devised to trustees in trust for sale, with a discretionary power to postpone the sale, the court will not interfere with a bonâ fide exercise of their discretion as to the time and mode of sale. Blake, In re, Jones v. Blake, 29 Ch. D. 913—C. A.

—— Termination of.]—A discretionary power of, or trust for, sale held not to have been put an end to during the life of the tenant for life by the fact that all the reversioners had acquired vested interests in their shares. Biggs v. Peacock, 52 L. J., Ch. 1; 22 Ch. D. 284; 47 L. T. 341; 31 W. R. 148—C. A.

—— Discretionary Power to Sell Property.]—Frederick Hobson, the elder, by his will, gave to three trustees (one of whom was his eldest son William) all his real and personal property, which included the proprietorship of a newspaper, on trust, to carry on the newspaper during the life of his wife, and they were annually to set apart and invest one-fourth of the profits of the paper as a reserve fund to meet emergencies, and to divide the remaining three-fourth parts of the profits of the same, and the income from his real and personal estate, into six equal parts for his wife and five children (all specially named), and in case of the death of any such child during the life of the wife, to pay the share of that child to the lawful issue of that child, or if none such, equally among the survivors of his children. And, after the decease of his wife "(or during her life if she and the majority of my children, and my trustees, shall deem it proper and expedient so to do), at the sole discretion of my trustees," to sell the real and personal estate and the newspaper, and divide the proceeds among the wife and children, bringing in the amount of the reserve fund as part; the shares to be for their absolute use and benefit immediately after such division. He declared that, "in case, under the above clause, it shall be agreed, or my trustees shall decide to sell" the paper, and if any of his sons should wish to carry on the same, such one should be entitled to purchase it at 500*l.* less than the market price. Till all the property was sold the trustees were to apply the income of the part unsold in the manner before expressed as to the income of the real and personal estate:—Held, that the will created not a mere power, but a trust, to sell, with a discretion in the trustees as to the manner and particular time of selling; that after the death of the wife the trust to sell became absolute; that on the happening of that event the shares of the survivors became absolutely vested; and (there being but three children of the testator then surviving) that William Hobson took an absolute vested interest in an equal third part of the testator's real and personal estate, including the newspaper. Minors v. Battison, 46 L. J., Ch. 2; 1 App. Cas. 428; 35 L. T. 1; 25 W. R. 27—H. L. (E.)

A testator devised his real and personal estate to trustees upon trust, that a piece of land, part of his real estate, might be absolutely sold as soon as conveniently might be after his death, in such mode as his trustees should decide upon, but in case it should so happen that at that time the complying with his will in that particular would be a sacrifice of property, then it was his will that the piece of land should not be disposed of until such time as his trustees should judge most beneficial for his estate; and when all his children attained the age of twenty-one, then he devised his real and personal estate to his children equally as tenants in common. All the children attained the age of twenty-one. The trustees did not sell the piece of land:—Held, that the trustees had a discretionary power and not a trust for sale, and that there was no constructive conversion of the piece of land; and that, consequently, the heir-at-law and not the next of kin of a deceased child was entitled to the share of such child. Glover v. Heelis, 32 L. T. 534; 23 W. R. 677.

Two trustees having power to sell the freehold property of an infant at the request of the guardians, and one trustee having declined upon such request to exercise the power of sale, the court refused to control the discretion of the trustees by ordering them to sell the estate—there being no absolute necessity for raising money and the existing income being sufficient to keep down the charges upon the estate—notwithstanding that the effect of the sale would be to increase very considerably the income of the property. Camden (Marquis) v. Murray, 50 L. J., Ch. 282; 16 Ch. D. 161; 43 L. T. 661; 29 W. R. 190.

Where absolute discretion has been given to trustees as to the exercise of a power, the court will not compel them to exercise it, but if they propose to exercise it, the court will see that they do not exercise it improperly or unreasonably. Where the power is coupled with a trust or duty, the court will enforce the proper and timely exercise of the power, but will not interfere with the discretion of the trustees as to the particular time or manner of their bonâ fide exercise of it. Tempest v. Camoys (Lord) 51 L. J., Ch. 785; 21 Ch. D. 571; 48 L. T. 13; 31 W. R. 326.

Power of Purchasing Real Estate and of Mortgaging.]—A testator gave his trustees a power to be exercised at their absolute discretion of selling real estates, with a declaration that the proceeds should be applied, at the like discretion, in the purchase of other real estates. He also gave them power at their absolute discretion to raise money by mortgage for the purchase of real estates. A suit having been instituted for the execution of the trusts of the will, and a sum of money, the proceeds of the sale of real estate, having been paid into court, one of the trustees proposed to purchase a large estate and to apply the fund in court in part payment of the purchase-money, and to raise the remainder of the purchase-money by mortgage of the purchased estate. The other trustee refused to concur in the purchase:—Held, that the court could not control the dissentient trustee in the exercise of his discretion in refusing to make the purchase, or in refusing to exercise his power of raising money by mortgage for the proposed purpose. Ib.

Power to Delegate Authority.]—A testatrix devised freehold and copyhold estates to a trustee, upon trust to sell and divide the proceeds among her brothers and sisters living at her decease, equally or in other proportions, at the discretion of the trustee. She afterwards executed an unattested codicil, by which she directed that the interest of the trust property should be applied for the benefit of such of her brothers and sisters as were not otherwise provided for, and particularly towards the support of one of her brothers, P., who was of weak mind; and in case the trustee should not live to execute all the trusts, they were to be performed by such person as he should appoint. He executed a deed of appointment, naming other trustees, and giving directions as to the time for selling the trust estates and the application of the proceeds, and directed P. to be supported out of the income; and the proceeds of one estate to be divided equally among P.'s brothers and sisters who should be living at his death; and the proceeds of another estate to be divided at his death among such of his brothers and sisters as should most require it:—Held, that the appointment by the trustee, and the directions contained in it, were not altogether invalid; but the court directed, that, after providing for the comfortable support of P., the proceeds from both estates should be divided equally among all the testatrix's brothers and sisters who were living at the death of the testatrix, except P. Hitch v. Leworthy, 2 Hare, 200; 15 L. J., Ch. 235.

A trustee for the government of his own discretion may have regard to the directions of an unattested codicil, even as to the proceeds of real estate, so far as he is not restrained by the effect of the will. Ib.

Absolute Trust for Sale—Discretionary Power to Postpone—Trustees not Agreed.]—A testator devised and bequeathed all his real and leasehold estates to trustees upon trust for sale, and, after providing for investment of the proceeds and payment of the income thereof to his widow for her life, and afterwards for distribution among certain persons, he declared "that it shall be lawful for my trustees or trustee, with the consent of my said wife, during her life, to allow any part or parts of my said residuary estate to remain in their actual state of investment at the time of my decease; and that it shall not be necessary for them to sell my real or leasehold estates, or any part thereof, during the life of my said wife, unless she shall in writing request them so to do." The trustees were not agreed as to the expediency of a sale; but the remaindermen desired it. The testator's widow had not made any request in writing to the trustees:—Held, that it was not obligatory on the trustees to sell the real and leasehold estates during the life of the testator's widow, unless she should in writing request them so to do, or unless the trustees were both of opinion that a sale ought to take place; but that, if they did not so agree that a sale was desirable, and there was no such request in writing, then they could not be compelled to sell. Lever, In re, Cordwell v. Lever, 76 L. T. 71—C. A.

Discretionary Powers of and Trusts for Sale.] See also POWERS.

Personal Trust — Mala Fide Exercise.]—In case of personal trust under a will, the court never interferes, unless the trust be corruptly executed. Potter v. Chapman, Amb. 99; Dick. 146.

If testator's intention is clearly manifested on will to give an unlimited discretion to trustees, the court will not control it; but, in general, discretion must be held to refer to the limitations in the will. Cowley v. Hartstronge, 1 Dow, 361, 378—H. L. (Ir.) And see Evans v. Ball, 47 L. T. 165; 30 W. R. 899—H. L. (E.)

A complete miscarriage in the exercise of discretionary power on the part of trustees puts the subject-matter of the trust just as much under the cognizance of the court as if such discretion had been fraudulently exercised. Feltham v. Turner, 23 L. T. 345.

Direction in will, that executors shall pay annuity, unless circumstances render it unnecessary, impracticable and inexpedient, means unless in the opinion of the executors it shall become so, and the court has no control over such discretion, unless they act mala fide. French v. Davidson, 3 Madd. 396; 18 R. R. 253.

The court will control the discretion reposed in trustees by the provisions of a will when such discretion is dishonestly or improperly exercised. Hodges, In re, Davey v. Ward, 47 L. J., Ch. 335; 7 Ch. D. 754; 26 W. R. 390.

Where in a marriage settlement the trustees had power to apply the income of the settled fund for the benefit of the husband and wife and their children as they should "in their uncontrolled and irresponsible discretion think proper," the court, while expressing an opinion that the trustees were not acting judiciously, declined to interfere with their discretion, there being no proof of mala fides. Tabor v. Brooks, 48 L. J., Ch. 130; 10 Ch. D. 273; 39 L. T. 528.

Where the disposition of a trust estate amongst certain objects is made by the author of the trust to depend upon the discretion of the trustee, the court will, in a proper suit, inquire into the manner in which the trust has been administered, and require that such discretion shall be fairly and honestly exercised; and so long as it appears to be so exercised, the court will not deprive the trustee of the discretionary power which he possesses, or assume itself the exercise of that power; but to avoid a repetition of suits where there is reason to apprehend that the conduct of the trustee may be liable to question, the court may require the discretion of the trustee to be exercised under its view. Costabadie v. Costabadie, 6 Hare, 410; 16 L. J., Ch. 259; 11 Jur. 345.

Where a trustee has a discretionary power, the court will not interfere with the exercise of it, except where it is mischievously, or ruinously, or fraudulently exercised. The onus of showing that it has been so exercised rests on those who impeach the acts of the trustee. Brittlebank, In re, Coates v. Brittlebank, 30 W. R. 99.

And see Lofthouse, In re, ante, col. 495.

Consent to Diversion of Trust Funds.]—By marriage articles, a wife was authorised to divert the trust funds for the benefit of herself or children, provided the diversion be acceded to by the trustees :—Held, that the trustees had a discretion to consent or not, that it must be bona fide exercised, and to justify their assent, the purpose for which the money was to be applied must, in their judgment, appear to be really for the benefit of the wife or children. Byam v. Byam, 19 Beav. 58 ; 24 L. J., Ch. 209 ; 1 Jur. (N.S.), 79 ; 3 W. R. 95.

Power of Renewing Leases.]—On demurrer : Held, that trustees to whom a discretionary power was given of renewing leases, had not an arbitrary power of renewal, but must renew when most for the benefit of the cestui que trust. Milsington v. Mulgrave, 3 Madd. 491.

Power of Selection.]—A testator directed his trustee to divide an estate amongst his, the testator's, first cousins as he, in his discretion, might think proper, by dividing the whole equally among them, or between two or more, or giving the whole to any one, for such estates and interests, and subject to such conditions and limitations as he should think proper :—Held, that the trustee had a power of selection only, and that if he appointed to more than one, he must do so equally among them. Ward v. Tyrrell, 27 L. J., Ch. 749 ; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 779.

A. makes two of his daughters his executrices, and directs them to distribute a sum of 400*l.*, and also the residue of his personal estate, among themselves, and their brothers and sisters, according to their needs and necessities, as they in their discretion should think fit. The court restrained the exercise of this power, by decreeing a double share to the eldest son and heir, looking upon him as a necessitous person. Warburton v. Warburton, 4 Bro. P. C. 1.

Matters of Fact and of Opinion.]—Where discretion of trustee is to be exercised on matters of fact, court will substitute a master, but not if upon matter of opinion or judgment. Walker v. Walker, 5 Madd. 424 ; 21 R. R. 320.

Power of Election to a Charitable Foundation.]—Where trustees are appointed to execute a trust according to discretion, they are not bound to state reasons for any conclusion at which they may arrive in fulfilling the duty imposed on them : their discretion must, however, be exercised with an absence of indirect motives, with honesty of intention, and with a fair consideration of the subject ; and the duty of the court generally is to see that the discretion of the trustees has been thus exercised, and not to deal with the accuracy of the conclusion at which they may have arrived. Wilkes' Charity, In re, 3 Mac. & G. 440 ; 20 L. J., Ch. 588.

If, however, in such cases, trustees think fit to state a reason for their conclusion, the court may consider the validity of the reason thus stated, and if it sees that the reason does not justify the decision, it may correct the decision accordingly. Ib.

Trustees of a charity were to select, out of certain parishes named, a lad to be brought up as a minister of the Church of England, his parents not being able to educate him for that situation, and in the event of no suitable candidate being found in the specified parishes, then to select a lad from any other parish. On a vacancy occurring the trustees chose C. J., a lad not of the specified parishes, and declared the election without stating any reasons for their choice. On a petition presented to set aside this election, and to obtain a decree that the trustees ought to have elected W. G., a lad of one of the specified parishes :—Held, that the trustees were right in abstaining from the statement of any reasons for the selection they had made, and that in the absence of any proof that they had exercised their discretion otherwise than fairly and honestly, the court had no jurisdiction to interfere on the question of the correctness of their decision. Ib.

The petition was dismissed accordingly, the petitioners paying their own costs, and the costs of the trustees being paid out of the funds of the charity. Ib.

Trust to Enforce Bond.]—L., on his marriage, gave a bond and warrant to the trustees of his settlement, upon trust, "when the trustees should think fit and expedient so to do," to levy the amount, and hold it for the uses of his settlement. No judgment on the bond was ever entered, and the amount of the bond was lost :—Held, that the discretion conferred upon the trustees was not absolute, but to be controlled by the court ; and that the circumstance that enforcing the bond might have been injurious to L.'s credit as a trader and have lost him various situations, did not justify them in omitting to enforce the bond. Luther v. Bianconi, 10 Ir. Ch. R. 194.

Power to Deal with a Fund—Refusal to Order Payment into Court.] — Although the mere existence of a discretionary power in trustees over a fund affords no reason why the court should not order payment of the fund into court, unless such payment into court would interfere with the exercise by the trustee of such discretion ; yet where it appeared that trustees were about in the due exercise of a discretionary power to deal with a fund, the court refused to order payment into court, although the trustees had not actually parted with the fund. Talbot v. Marshfield, 2 Dr. & Sm. 285.

Trust for Benefit of Children—Authority to Pay to Parent.]—A trust for the benefit of the children of A. with an authority to pay the trust funds over to their parent or guardian, does not empower the trustees to hand over the trust funds to A., without exercising any discretion in respect of his children's interest. Gainsborough (Earl) v. Watcombe Terra Cotta Co., 54 L. J., Ch. 991 ; 53 L. T. 116.

A testator by his will gave certain benefits to A. and her children, on condition that on her marriage her intended husband should "well and effectually, and to the good liking of his trustees, settle or secure to be paid" to or for the issue of the marriage an equal sum. The intended husband, with the approbation of the trustees, gave his bond for the required amount :—Held, that the bond so approved was a satisfaction of the condition contained in the will. Bacchus v. Gilbee, 2 N. R. 502 ; 33 L. J., Ch. 23 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 838 ; 8 L. T. 714 ; 11 W. R. 1049—L.JJ.

Payment of Money to Woman past Child-bearing — Under Advice of Court.] — A woman, aged fifty-two, who had been a widow for twenty-four years, was absolutely entitled in default of children to a fund in the hands of trustees :—Held, on petition for advice, that the trustees were justified in paying it over to her.

Taylor's Settlement Trusts, In re, 43 L. T. 795; 29 W. R. 350.

Power of Conversion—Right of Tenant for Life before Conversion.]—A discretionary power to convert, if and when the trustees shall think fit, entitles the tenant for life to the enjoyment of the leasehold property in specie in the meantime. Where a full discretion is by the will given to the trustees, the rule in Howe v. Dartmouth (Earl) (7 Ves. 137; 6 R. R. 96) is not applicable, and the court will not interfere. Leonard, In re, Theobald v. King, 43 L. T. 664; 29 W. R. 234.

c. Exercise of Powers and Trusts by the Court.

Refusal of Trustees to Act.]—When trustees are directed to pay a certain sum to a person for life, and are empowered, according to their discretion, to invest the trust funds out of which that sum is to arise, but decline or neglect to act, and the assistance of a court of equity is sought in order to carry into effect the purposes of the will, the court will not, as a matter of course, exercise that discretion, but will only act on its established known rules, unless the intention of the testator plainly appears to exclude such a mode of proceeding. Prendergast v. Prendergast, 2 H. L. Cas. 195; 14 Jur. 989. Affirming 5 Hare, 171; 16 L. J., Ch. 125; 11 Jur. 865.

A testator gave his leasehold to trustees for legatees in succession, and upon trust, if the trustees "should think it proper or advantageous, as to those which were customarily or might be renewed," to endeavour to renew; and in order thereto, should, "if they, in their discretion, should think fit or expedient, but not necessarily or peremptorily," insure the lives of the cestuis que vie, and apply the insurance money in renewing, and out of the rents and profits raise sufficient money to renew so often as a renewal should be advisable; and he gave a power to mortgage for the same purpose:—Held, first, that this was an imperative trust, and that the trustees were bound to renew, if they could do so on reasonable terms; secondly, that if the trustees refused, the court would exercise it; and, thirdly, that they were bound to raise the necessary funds in such a mode as would be most beneficial to all parties interested. Mortimer v. Watts, 14 Beav. 616; 21 L. J., Ch. 169.

Bequest to trustees to apply the income or principal for the benefit of J., a widow, and of her three children, in such proportions as the trustees in their absolute discretion should think proper; but in case J. married again, her interest to cease. The trustees declined to act:—Held, that the fund must be divided equally between J. and her three children. Izod v. Izod, 32 Beav. 242; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1216; 1 N. R. 462; 9 L. T. 191; 11 W. R. 452.

Where property is vested in trustees by an instrument in the Scotch form, and they have an absolute discretion given to them as to the distribution of it amongst a particular class, but decline to exercise that discretion, upon a suit being instituted to secure the property in this country the court will direct the distribution of the fund equally between the members of the class, such discretion not involving the construction of the instrument or the exercise of a discretion in the place of the trustees. Little v. Neil, 31 L. J., Ch. 627; 10 W. R. 592.

By a marriage settlement, the trustees were empowered to apply the income and capital of the trust estate for the use and benefit of such one or more of the wife and children of P., and the issue of such children, as the trustees in the exercise of a free and unlimited discretion should select and determine; but such provision for the wife to be by annuity depending on the life of P. The trustees declined exercising their discretion, and the court directed the fund to be divided equally between the wife and children and grandchildren, without making any provision as to an annuity to the wife. Ib. S. P., Langmore v. Broom, 7 Ves. 124.

Variation on petition of a scheme settled on further consideration for the administration of the estate of a testator according to a discretion reposed by him in his trustee, and exercised in their stead by the court. Bennett v. Wyndham, 4 De G. F. & J. 259.

Trust deed, whereby trustees were to give the residue of A.'s estate among his friends and relations, where they should see most necessity, and as they should think most just; though in other cases the court will not interpose where trustees declining to act have a power to distribute generally, according to their discretion, without any defined object, it was:—Held, that here a rule was laid down, the word "friends" meaning "relations," and the court could judge of the respective families' necessities and occasions by a reference to the master. Gower v. Mainwaring, 2 Ves. Sen. 87.

Joint Speculation in Land—Repudiation of Trust.]—A. and B., for whom land had been purchased by C., with a view to its being re-sold in building lots, on the land being conveyed to them, signed a paper writing purporting to be a memorandum of an agreement between them relative to the land, by which it was agreed that they should each advance half the purchase money, and receive interest on the same at 5 per cent., and that they were to have each one-third interest in the purchase and to reserve one-third of the profits arising therefrom for C., in lieu of his commission for purchasing, selling, surveying, valuing, and laying out the lands in lots, or any other services that might be required of him; but that it was clearly and distinctly understood that C. should have no power or authority whatsoever over the land, and that he should not be entitled to receive any compensation therefrom until the whole was sold and paid for. The land having afterwards greatly increased in value, A. and B. refused to recognise C.'s interest in the speculation, and offered him a money compensation for his services. Whereupon C., who had objected, from the first, to the clause in the memorandum which excluded him from all control, as inconsistent with the original terms for which he had verbally stipulated, filed his bill for an immediate sale of the land. And the court, being of opinion that the defendants, by repudiating the trust as to C.'s share, had devolved upon the court the discretion which they had by the memorandum reserved exclusively to themselves as to the time of sale, declared C. entitled to one-third, and referred it to the master to inquire whether it would be for the benefit of all parties that the land should be sold. Dale v. Hamilton, 2 Ph. 266; 5 Hare, 369; 16 L. J., Ch. 397; 11 Jur. 574.

Disclaimer.]—Bequest of 20,000*l.* to executors, in trust to divide amongst testator's younger sons at twenty-five. Further bequest of 50*l.* to each of the sons annually, until their portions should be payable, and such a further sum as in the discretion of the trustees might seem necessary, but not to exceed 3,000*l.* These legacies were charged on the real estate. One of the executors having disclaimed on a bill filed by the other executor and the elder sons:—Held, that the whole 3,000*l.* should be raised. Young v. Young, 1 Jur. 840.

Non-agreement of Trustees.]—If trustees in whom a discretionary trust is vested do not concur, the court will distribute the trust fund among the parties equally. Gray v. Gray 13 Ir. Ch. R. 404.

Where one of two trustees in whom a discretionary trust is vested was resident in Australia, the court would not act on a scheme for the distribution of the fund, approved of by his solicitor in the suit and the other trustee. Ib.

Testator directed his residuary real and personal estate to be divided by his trustees, in such shares and at such times as they should think proper, amongst his nephews, A., B. and C., and his other nephews and nieces, sons and daughters of his late sisters, T. and H., who should be living at his decease, and the children of any other such nephews and nieces who, having died in his lifetime, had left issue. There were several children, and children of deceased children, both of T. and H., living at the testator's death. The trustees not being able to agree as to the division of the property, the court ordered it to be divided amongst the children, and the children of the deceased children of T. and H., per capita. Tomlin v. Hatfeild, 12 Sim. 167.

Power not Exercised.]—A husband gave his property to trustees for his wife for life, and at her death he directed his trustees to pay 1,000*l.* equally between and among such ten of the children and grandchildren and other descendants of W. B. and H. B., as his trustees should, in their uncontrolled discretion, after inquiry, judge most to require the benefit of such a bequest. The trustees died without making a selection. There were no descendants of W. B., and at the death of the testator's widow there were only six descendants of H. B. living:—Held, that the sum was divisible amongst them. Carthew v. Enraght, 26 L. T. 834; 20 W. R. 743.

A testator empowered his widow, with the assistance of his trustees, to sell his estates, and the money arising therefrom "she, his said wife, should and might divide and appoint among his children, as she should think fit and proper, or as she should direct and order by any will":—Held, that this was a trust for the children, and that, no valid appointment having been made by the widow, the children were entitled equally. Grieveson v. Kirsopp, 2 Keen, 653; 6 L. J., Ch. 261.

A settlement was made of a trust fund, in moieties, for the granddaughters of the settlor for life (subject to a prior interest in their mother), with remainder to their children as they should appoint, or in default equally. A power was interposed, that in the event of either of the granddaughters marrying with consent, the trustees might transfer to her part of the trust funds. One of the granddaughters married with consent, but the power was not executed by the trustees:—Held, that the execution of the power was discretionary with the trustees, and they not having exercised it, the granddaughter was not entitled to payment to her of any part of the capital of the trust funds. Strickland's Trusts, In re, 1 N. R. 164.

Charitable Gift.]—Charitable gift to the use of the reparation of the church of U., and to the use of the reparation of the bridge of U., and to the use of other things needful within the parish of U., at the discretion of the trustees, to be applied and distributed for ever:—Held, that the discretion applied to the third branch only, and that the three objects took equally. Hall's Charity, In re, 14 Beav. 115; 15 Jur. 940.

Payment into Court.]—A trustee having discretionary power as to the application of a trust fund, does not necessarily abandon it by paying the trust fund into court. Landon's Trusts, In re, 40 L. J., Ch. 370.

Suit for Administration.]—Where a discretionary trust is vested in trustees, the court will not interfere with the exercise of the discretion, if it be not capricious or improper, though a suit is instituted for the administration of the trust funds. Gray v. Gray, 13 Ir. Ch. R. 404.

Decree for Administration.]—After a decree in a suit for administration of trust funds the court will not without reason control a discretionary power given to the trustees by the instrument creating the trust. Brophy v. Bellamy, 43 L. J., Ch. 183; L. R. 8 Ch. 798; 29 L. T. 380—C. A.

The court having possession of a fund impressed with a trust, but subject to a discretion given to trustees, will execute the trust without regarding the discretion. Coe's Trust, In re, 4 K. & J. 199; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 158.

1. APPOINTMENT OF TRUSTEES BY SETTLOR.

Corporation.]—Corporation may be trustees. Att.-Gen. v. Lauderfield, 9 Mod. 287.

Infant.]—Presumption against intending an infant to be a trustee. King v. Denison, 1 V. & B. 278; 12 R. R. 227.

Devise to Persons for such Purposes as Major Part think fit.]—A testator devising an estate to persons whom he names trustees, for such purposes as they, or the major part of them, shall think fit, gives no benefit to them, but is an authority only, by appointing a quorum out of them. Cook v. Duckenfield, 2 Atk. 568.

Trustee and Executor of Will.]— Where a testator constitutes a person "trustee and executor of his will," that does not authorise the person to act as a trustee jointly with other persons to whom property has been given by the will on particular trusts. Sidebotham v. Watson, 11 Hare, 170 ; 1 W. R. 229, 303.

A testatrix bequeathed funds standing in the name of A., her trustee, to B., C., and D. (her executors), upon certain trusts, and she directed A., within six months after her death, to execute a deed, declaring that he, his executors, &c., would "thenceforth stand and be possessed" of the funds upon the trusts declared by her will : —Held, that A. was a co-trustee of the funds under the will, and could not safely transfer them to B., C., and D. without the sanction of the court. Iredell v. Iredell, 18 Beav. 202.

Power of Court on Application of Settlor to Appoint a Judicial Trustee.] — See Judicial Trustees Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 35), s. 1.

Revocation of Appointment.]—See WILL.

2. ACCEPTANCE OR DISCLAIMER BY TRUSTEES.

a. Acceptance.

Proving Will.]—Where personal property is bequeathed to the executors, as trustees, the probate of the will is an acceptance of the trusts. Mucklow v. Fuller, Jacob, 198 ; 23 R. R. 29.

Lapse of Time without Disclaimer.]— A person to whom, with others, a term of years had, in the year 1810, been bequeathed in trust, and who was appointed, with the other trustees, an executor of the will, was in 1844 presumed to have accepted the trust, though he had never acted in it ; the will having been proved by the other executors, saving his right, and he never having disclaimed. Needham, In re, 1 Jo. & Lat. 34 ; 6 Ir. Eq. R. 557.

Trustee of Two Trusts Executing Deed relating to One.]—A testator gave a legacy of 1,100*l.* to two persons, upon certain trusts, for the benefit of his daughter and her children ; he then gave a messuage to the same persons, upon trust for his widow for her life, and after her decease to apply the rents for his grandson H. during his minority, and to convey the messuage to H. at twenty-one ; and he appointed his widow sole executrix. At the time of the widow's death, H. had attained twenty-one ; and afterwards, by deed reciting the death of the widow, and that, in her lifetime, H. attained twenty-one, "whereby it became unnecessary for them to act in the trusts declared by the will, and in fact they never intermeddled therein ; but, inasmuch as the legal estate in the said messuage was still outstanding in them by virtue of the recited will, they had consented, at the request of H., to convey such estate to him," the two persons named in the deed conveyed the devised messuage to H. :—Held, that the execution of this deed was of itself sufficient evidence that the persons who executed it had accepted and acted in the trusts of the will. Urch v. Walker, 3 Myl. & Cr. 702 ; 7 L. J., Ch. 292 ; 2 Jur. 487.

Execution of Trust Deed.]—A trustee who has duly executed a trust deed must, in the absence of special circumstances, be bound by that indication of his acceptance of the trust, and will not afterwards be heard to say that he thought he was merely signing as a witness. Jones v. Higgins, 35 L. J., Ch. 403 ; L. R. 2 Eq. 538 ; 14 L. T. 126 ; 14 W. R. 448.

Interference with Subject-matter with Notice of Appointment.]—A trustee, with notice of his appointment as such, interfering with the subject-matter, cannot repudiate the trust, and say he acted merely as factor or agent. Conyngham v. Conyngham, 1 Ves. Sen. 522. And see Lowry v. Fulton, 9 Sim. 115 ; 8 L. J., Ch. 314 ; 3 Jur. 454.

Effect of Acceptance.]—A person who has accepted property as a trustee, and held it as such, is not at liberty to dispute the title of his cestui que trust, though that title may be doubtful. Neligan v. Roche, Ir. R. 7 Eq. 332.

—— Evidence of Settlor's Title to Appropriate Fund.]—An executrix, by a deed, reciting that she intended to appropriate a part of her testator's assets in payment of a debt due from him to her, declared trusts of the fund intended to be thus appropriated. She died without making the appropriation, which was made after her decease by her executors. New trustees of the deed, subsequently appointed, executed a declaration of trust (contained in the deed appointing them), whereby they declared that they would hold the fund upon the trusts. On their inquiring, before their appointment, for evidence in verification of the recital as to the existence of the debt from the testator to the executrix, none could be discovered :—Held, by Turner, L.J. (dissentiente, Knight Bruce, L.J.), that the trustees could not be compelled to execute these trusts without further evidence of the settlor's title to appropriate the fund. Neale v. Davies, 5 De G. M. & G. 258 ; 23 L. J., Ch. 744 ; 2 Eq. R. 530 ; 2 W. R. 358.

Transfer into Joint Names.]—A person who has accepted, and agrees to permit the transfer of trust stock from the name of the surviving executrix, under the will, into their joint names, and at the same time obtains a copy of the will, is thereby constituted a trustee of the stock, and is not merely the agent for the executrix. And so, where the co-transferee acts with the privity of all parties, in the execution of the trusts of the will, though no declaration of trust has been executed, he is a trustee, and not removable at the pleasure of the persons interested in the trust property. Cocks v. Smith, 2 L. J., Ch. 205.

Partial Acceptance of Trusts.]—In 1823, E., by his consent, was with X. and Z. named a trustee of a marriage settlement, which comprised various sums. The deed was executed by the co-trustees of, but not by, E. X. died in 1826 insolvent. In 1829 an account was rendered which showed the sums subject to the trusts of the settlement, and that Z. had received a sum belonging to the trusts. Z. afterwards, as the administrator of his father, became possessed of a large sum of residue, not administered by the executrix, and trust funds, part of this residue, he applied to his own use ; but in 1830 he, by request, invested a portion of the residue in the names of himself and E., upon the trusts of the settlement, as such trustees thereof, and indorsed a memorandum thereon to the effect that it was so much of the within-mentioned and assigned sums as were subject to the trusts thereof. This memorandum Z. signed previously to 1842. In 1845 E. made inquiries of one of the cestuis que trust relating to the trusts vested in him, and required to be satisfied as to the property comprised in the settlement. He was then informed that he was a trustee thereof, and a receipt of the stock bought in his and Z.'s names was inclosed. This receipt E. retained; and in March, 1847, he for the first time saw the settlement, and on that occasion he signed the memorandum indorsed thereon. Z. died in 1852 insolvent. E. received the dividends on the stock, and regularly paid them over to the tenant for life. In 1854 inquiries were made, which resulted in a bill being filed, praying that an account might be taken of all sums which had been received by E., either alone or jointly with his co-trustees, or which, without his wilful neglect and default, might have been received; and that E. might be decreed to make good all losses which had been sustained, particularly so much of the property as was subject to the trusts of the settlement:—Held, that E.'s liability must be confined to the amount comprised in the memorandum signed by him; and that, so far as the bill sought to make him liable for more than that amount, it must be dismissed. Mulzy v. Edge, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 80; 4 W. R. 213.

b. Disclaimer.

By Instrument.]—As to disclaimer of office of trustee by simple instrument, and disclaimer by conveying to other trustees. Nicloson v. Wordsworth, 2 Swanst. 369; 19 R. R. 86. And see Crewe v. Dicken, 4 Ves. 97.

Semble, disclaimer in court on petition not sufficient to divest an estate; disclaimer should be by deed or of record. Ellison's Trust, In re, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 62.

A trustee of a will, who had formally renounced that character by a deed which purported (but ineffectually) to appoint a successor, being applied to eleven years afterwards to join with his original co-trustee in a deed purporting to be an exercise of a discretionary power, which could only be exercised by the two trustees of the will for the time being, refused to do so without an indemnity, but ultimately, on being indemnified, executed the deed:—Held, that he could not resume his position as trustee for such a purpose, and that, even if he could, his execution of the deed under the circumstances stated, could be regarded only as a mere formal act, and not as an exercise of that discretion which was essential to a due execution of such a power. Lancashire v. Lancashire, 2 Ph. 657; 17 L. J., Ch. 270; 12 Jur. 363.

Parol.]—Trustee named may disclaim by parol, and then he need not be a party in any conveyance of the legal estate. Bingham v. Glamorris (Lord), 2 Moll. 253.

Declining to take out Probate of Will.]—By the marriage settlement of A. a sum of 8,000*l.* stock was settled upon himself and his intended wife for their joint lives and the life of the survivor, and then for the benefit of their children; and if no children, in trust for the settlor, his executors, administrators, and assigns. After the marriage A. made his will, and thereby gave his real estate to P. and his heirs upon the same trusts, as near as could be, as were declared of the stock by the settlement, and after giving certain pecuniary legacies, he bequeathed all the rest of his moneys and property of any kind to P., his executors, administrators, and assigns, upon trust and for the benefit of the objects of his settlement as he might think best. A. died, leaving his widow, but no issue of the marriage. P. declined to take probate of the will:—Held, that whether the course taken by P. had or had not the effect of depriving him of the discretionary power given him by the will, he could not in the events that had happened, exercise that power so as to affect the rights of the parties interested under the will and settlement, and that the effect of these instruments was to give a life interest to the widow in the real and residuary personal estate impeachable of waste as to the real estate, with the remainder as to the real estate to the testator's heirs, and as to the residuary personal estate to his next of kin. Ford v. Ruxton, 1 Coll. C. C. 403.

Opinion of Counsel.]—A party, named trustee without his sanction, and called on to disclaim:—Held, authorised to take the opinion of counsel as to the necessity of executing a disclaimer. Tyron, In re, 7 Beav. 496.

Trustees Disclaiming — Agent of Trustee Accepting.]—If one of two persons named trustees and executors disclaims and renounces, and afterwards possesses himself of assets as the agent of the other, who has accepted the trust and proved the will, he does not thereby become accountable as a trustee and executor, and ought not to be made a party to a suit for the administration of the estate. Dove v. Everard, 1 Russ. & M. 231; Taml. 376. S. P., Lowry v. Fulton, 9 Sim. 115; 8 L. J., Ch. 314; 3 Jur. 454; and Stacey v. Elph, 1 Myl. & K. 195; 2 L. J., Ch. 50. But see Montgomery v. Johnson, 11 Ir. Eq. Rep. 476.

—— Not proper Party to Suit to set aside Will.]—A trustee in a will, who released and never acted, ought not to be made a party in a suit to set aside the will on the ground of fraud, and therefore need not answer as to the fraud alleged. Richardson v. Hulbert, 1 Anstr. 65.

—— Assent to Marriage not Necessary.]—Testatrix bequeathed a chattel property to her daughter on attaining twenty-one, or on day of marriage, "provided that if such marriage be had without the consent of her executors after named, or the survivor of them," then that the property should be vested in the said executors, in trust for her daughter for life, and afterwards for her children, with a limitation over to C. D. The testatrix appointed H. H., P. V., and J. C. her executors. P. V. alone proved the will. The daughter married while under age, with the assent of P. V., and J. C. executed her marriage settlement as a trustee:—Held, that the assent of H. H., who never acted in the trusts of the will, was unnecessary, the power to consent being vested in him in right of his office of executor only. Boyce v. Corbally, Ll. & G. t. Plunk. 102.

Lease with Option of Purchase—Disclaimer by Devisees in Trust of Lessor—Notice to Infant Heir.]—Land was demised by A. to B. and C. for twenty-one years, with an agreement, that in case B. and C., or either of them, their executors, administrators, and assigns, should, at any time within the term, wish to purchase the reversion at a stipulated price and should give to A., his heirs or assigns, six months' notice in writing, they should be entitled to be the purchasers of the premises at the price mentioned. A. died within the term, and devised his real estates to trustees. The trustees disclaimed the trusts; and the estates descended upon D., an infant heir-at-law of A. Notice was served upon D. and his guardian by the lessees of their desire to purchase the property pursuant to the option reserved in the lease:—Held, that as A.'s assigns had disclaimed, the notice to purchase was properly served upon the heir, and that a valid contract was thereby constituted. Woods v. Hyde, 31 L. J., Ch. 295; 6 L. T. 317; 10 W. R. 339.

Costs of Refusal to Execute Disclaimer of Derivative Interest.]—If a party, having a derivative interest under a trustee, refuses to execute a formal disclaimer to the trust property upon the appointment of a new trustee, he will be made to pay the costs of an application to the court. Primrose, Ex parte, 26 L. J., Ch. 666; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 899; 5 W. R. 508.

Legal Estate — Disclaimer by Conduct.]—Where land is devised to a trustee, conduct which amounts to a disclaimer of the office of trustee will also amount to a disclaimer of the legal estate. Birchall, In re, Birchall v. Ashton, 40 Ch. D. 436; 60 L. T. 369; 37 W. R. 387—C. A.

Settlement not communicated to Trustee until after Settlor's Death.]—A settlement whereby lands are assured to a trustee to the use of the settlor for life, and afterwards in trust for volunteers, and which is not communicated to the trustee until after the settlor's death, is valid, notwithstanding the disclaimer of the trustee. A power to appoint new trustees contained in the indenture is therefore exercisable. Jones v. Jones, 23 W. R. 1.

Deed of Disclaimer.]—Where a testator, seised in fee, devised to three trustees for certain trusts, and one disclaimed by deed:—Held, that such disclaimer was, when matter of record, sufficient to vest a complete title in the two others, and enable them to support a distress for rent upon the premises devised. Begbie v. Crook, 2 Bing. (N.C.) 70; 2 Scott, 128; 4 L. J., C. P. 264.

Quære, whether a devisee in trust can disclaim by deed after a previous assent to the devise in words. Doe d. Chidgey v. Harris, 16 M. & W. 517; 16 L. J., Ex. 190.

A devisee in trust, on the reading of the will after the testator's death, stated that he ought to have had 5*l.* for being trustee:—Held, that these words were so ambiguous that they ought not to have been left to the jury as evidence of his assent to the devise. Ib.

—— Signing Receipt for Legacy—Loss of Trust Fund.]—By her will a testatrix, who died in 1866, directed her executors to pay to A. and B. a certain sum of money to be held in trust for the plaintiff, who was at that time an infant. A. and B. gave to the executors of the will a receipt for the legacy on an inland revenue form for presentation to the inland revenue authorities. The legacy was paid to A. and B. by a crossed cheque drawn in favour of both of them, but whether payable "to order" or "to bearer" was not in evidence, nor was there any evidence that either of them had indorsed the cheque. In 1876 A., who was the father of the plaintiff, died in insolvent circumstances. In 1881 B. executed a deed-poll purporting to disclaim the trusts of the will. In 1892 the plaintiff for the first time became aware of the legacy, and called upon B. to account for the same. B. alleged that he had never accepted the trusts of the will, and that the receipt given by him was not intended to operate as an acceptance of the trust, and that he had never received nor in any way dealt with the legacy:—Held, that, although the rule was that a trustee ought to execute a disclaimer without delay, yet there was no rule that a disclaimer must be executed within any particular time; that the evidence showed that B. did not mean to accept the trust, notwithstanding the fact that he signed the legacy duty receipt as well as A.; and that, although it was not necessary for B. to have done that if he were not a trustee, yet the court would be straining matters too far if it were to hold that that act alone constituted B. a trustee. Jago v. Jago, 68 L. T. 654.

Trustee of Will comprising Property in England and Abroad—Disclaimer as to English Property only—Validity.]—A trustee of a will comprising property in England and abroad cannot disclaim the trusts relating to the property in England only, and unless he disclaims the trusts in toto he remains a trustee for all purposes. Lord and Fullerton, In re, 65 L. J., Ch. 184; [1896] 1 Ch. 228; 73 L. T. 689; 44 W. R. 195—C. A.

3. ESTATE OF TRUSTEES.

a. When Trustees take Legal Estate.

Devise by Implication.]—A testator devised property to A. for life, remainder to B. and C. in fee upon trusts, and appointed A., B., and C. his executors. By a codicil he revoked the appointment of B. to be a trustee and executor, and appointed A., C., and D. trustees and executors, as fully and effectually to all intents and purposes and in all respects as if they had originally by his will been appointed to be the trustees and executors thereof:—Held, that the legal estate passed to A., C., and D. Turner, In re, 2 De G. F. & J. 527; 30 L. J., Ch. 144; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 114; 3 L. T. 573; 9 W. R. 174.

Testator, by will, gives annuity to wife, and legacies to children, knowing he has not sufficient personal estate. He says nothing of his real estate, but appoints certain persons trustees of the inheritance for the execution of his will. Semble, the trustees took an interest in the real estate for the purposes of this will. Trent v. Trent, 1 Dow, 102. S. C., nom. Trent v. Hanning, 10 Ves. 495.

Construction in favour of vesting the legal estate in trustees for effecting a limitation to the separate use of a married woman. Hawkins v. Luscombe, 2 Swanst. 891.

Effect of limitation to trustees and their heirs to the use of them and their heirs in conferring the legal estate on the trustees. Id. 392.

Trust to Pay or Permit to Receive Rents.]—Limitation to trustees to stand seised and receive rents and profits to the use of A., is an estate executed in A. Curwardine v. Curwardine, 1 Eden, 36.

Lands limited to A. in trust for a feme covert, and that A. should receive the rents and apply them as the feme, whether sole or covert, should direct. This is a trust, and not a use, executed by the statute. Nevil v. Saunders, 1 Vern. 415.

Although a devise to A. and B. upon trust to pay rent to C., or permit him to receive the same during his life, confers a legal life estate on C., a devise to A. and B. upon trust to pay the rents to A. (or B.) or permit him to receive the same during his life, only confers an equitable life estate. Doe v. Biggs (2 Taunt. 109; 11 R. R. 533) considered. Tanqueray-Willaume and Landau, In re, 51 L. J., Ch. 434; 20 Ch. D. 465; 46 L. T. 542; 30 W. R. 801.

Devise to trustees and their heirs during the life of A. B., in trust to lay out the rents and issues thereof in government securities, until A. B. should attain twenty-one, and after that, to suffer her to receive and take the profits during her life, not subject to the debts or control of her husband, her receipt to be a sufficient discharge; and after her decease, to her heirs. Upon a suit for specific performance of an agreement for the purchase of part of the estates, the question was whether A. B. took the legal, or only an equitable interest for life in the property, so as to bring the title within the rule in Shelley's Case (1 Co. Rep. 93, b.). The Chief Baron would not compel the defendant to accept the title. Playford v. Hoare, 3 Y. & J. 175.

Contingent Remainder — Provision for Maintenance.]—A testator devised lands to trustees, their heirs and assigns, to the use of A. for life, with remainder to the use of such child or children of A. as should attain twenty-one, as tenants in common in fee, with remainders over. A. was directed to repair and insure the messuages forming part of the devised estates, and in case of his default the testator authorised his trustees to receive the rents, and thereout effect such repairs and insurance. The testator empowered his trustees to apply the income to which any infant devisee should be presumptively entitled towards his maintenance or for his benefit during his minority. By a codicil of even date with the will the testator devised land which he had contracted to sell to a railway company unto and to the use of his trustees, their heirs and assigns, upon trust to complete such contract. A. died, leaving four children, one of whom, the plaintiff, had not attained twenty-one at his father's death:—Held, that, having regard to the provision for maintenance, the limitation in favour of the children of A. was equitable, and that the contingent devise to the plaintiff therefore took effect. Berry v. Berry, 47 L. J., Ch. 182; 7 Ch. D. 657; 38 L. T. 474; 26 W. R. 327.

Devise of Freehold Messuage together with Mill Machinery "and other Fixtures."]—By his will a testator devised a certain freehold messuage, mill, tenement, and closes of land, together with the millstones, mill machinery, threshing machine, &c., "and other fixtures," to two trustees, their heirs and assigns, upon trust for A. J. T. for life, upon the express condition that the premises should be kept in good repair, and insured in the names of the trustees, and after the death of A. J. T. in trust for the children of A. J. T. at twenty-one or marriage:—Held, that upon the construction of the will, the trustees had no legal estate vested in them. Tudball v. Medlicott, 59 L. T. 370; 36 W. R. 885; 52 J. P. 659.

Interest of Executors Commensurate with Objects of Will.]—A testator, after directing his debts to be paid, and setting apart certain sums to provide annuities for his two sons, devised and bequeathed all his real and personal estate to his four daughters, to be equally divided between them: Provided as follows—that the share of his wife should be divided after her death between his four daughters or the survivors and their children; and the testator appointed his wife and T. Davies, his executors, to act jointly in carrying out all the intentions of his will, and to invest his daughters' shares for their benefit and the benefit of their children:—Held, upon an application under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, that the legal estate in freeholds was vested in the executors who could make a good title to a purchaser. Davies to Jones and Evans, 52 L. J., Ch. 720; 24 Ch. D. 190; 49 L. T. 624; 32 W. R. 460.

Interim Rents.]—A testator devised a freehold to trustees for the benefit of E. for life for her separate use, and after her death upon trusts for such of the children of E., as being sons, should attain twenty-one, or being daughters, should attain that age or marry. E. died after the testator, leaving an infant daughter who did not marry before attaining twenty-one:—Held, that the legal estate was in the trustees, and the daughter of E. took the property on attaining twenty-one, but the interim rents went to the residuary devisee. Eddels' Will, In re, 40 L. J., Ch. 316; L. R. 11 Eq. 559; 24 L. T. 223; 19 W. R. 815.

On a petition for payment out of the interim rents which had been paid in under the Trustee Relief Acts, the court decided that the legal estate was in the trustees. Ib.

Deed—Estate Pur Autre Vie or in Fee.]—Real estate was assured by deed unto and to the use of a trustee, his heirs and assigns, for a married woman for life to her separate use, and from and after the determination of that estate to stand seised thereof to such uses and upon such trusts as she should by will appoint, and in default of appointment to the use of the heirs and assigns of the married woman:—Held, that the legal fee was vested in the trustee; that all the subsequent limitations were merely equitable, and that, therefore, under the rule in Shelley's Case (1 Co. Rep. 93, b.) the wife took an equitable estate in fee, and could with the concurrence of the trustee after her husband's death, make a good title in fee to the property, and one which the court would force on an unwilling purchaser. Distinction in construction of limitation in deeds and will. Curtis v. Price (12 Ves. 89) commented on. Cooper v. Kynock or Kynoch, 41 L. J., Ch. 296; L. R. 7 Ch. 398; 26 L. T. 566; 20 W. R. 503.

Devise of Freeholds and Copyholds—Subsequent Appointment by Deed.] — Devise of freehold and copyhold surrendered to the use of the will to trustees and the survivor and his heirs in trust to pay debts and legacies, an annuity to the testator's son, and for other purposes; then on the marriage or attaining twenty-one of his granddaughter to convey to her for life, remainder to trustees, &c., remainder to her first and other sons in tail male, remainder to her daughters in tail general, remainder as he should by deed appoint. The next day by deed poll he directed his trustees, immediately after the death of his granddaughter, and failure of her issue, to convey all his real estate to the first and other sons of his son in tail male, then to his daughters in tail general, then to the right heirs of the survivor of his trustees, his heirs and assigns for ever. No conveyance was made. The granddaughter died without issue; then the son died without issue, leaving one trustee surviving. Under the will alone the trustees have a mere legal estate, and all the equitable interest beyond the express dispositions would result to the son as heir; but the deed was considered as a codicil sufficiently executed to pass copyhold, but not freehold. The last limitation is a contingent remainder to the heir of the surviving trustee, and a conveyance was directed with an insertion of trustees to support that remainder as to the copyhold; the rents and profits of the copyhold during the life of the trustee, and all the freehold, to go to the heir of the testator. Habergham v. Vincent, 2 Ves. 204; S. C., nom. Vincent v. Stansfeld, 4 Bro. C. C. 353.

Devise and Bequest of "Estate and Effects."] —A testator devised and bequeathed his "estate and effects" to trustees, their heirs, executors, and administrators, upon trust to sell his trade and the goodwill thereof, and get in and convert all such of his "personal estate" as should not consist of money, and should stand possessed of the money arising from such sale and "the residue of his estate and effects" upon trust to invest, and other trusts:—Held, that the real estate passed to the trustees, but that the beneficial interest resulted to the heirs of the testator. Longley v. Longley, 41 L. J., Ch. 168; L. R. 13 Eq. 133; 25 L. T. 736; 20 W. R. 227.

Devise of Legal Fee to Trustees—Descent not Broken.]—A. devised real estate to three trustees, one of whom was his heir-at-law, and he directed that during the lives of his wife, his daughters, and their husbands, the income should be applied for the benefit of those persons and their children, and when those persons should be dead the estate should be sold and divided among his grandchildren. This devise of the corpus had been held to fail for remoteness:—Held, that assuming the legal fee to have passed to the trustees, the descent was not broken so as to create a new reversion, but that the heir-at-law took the old estate; and that the character of this equitable reversion was not affected by the devise of the legal fee to the heir as trustee. Buchanan v. Harrison, 1 J. & H. 662; 31 L. J., Ch. 74; 10 W. R. 118.

Devise on Trust to Receive Rents and Pay Maintenance.]—A testator devised and bequeathed his real and personal estate to his wife and three other persons, and their heirs, executors, &c., for ever, upon trust for his wife to receive the rents for life; and after her decease, upon trust to pay and divide the rents among his children as they attained twenty-one, and after their decease, to pay the principal of their respective shares unto their legal representatives, their executors, administrators, and assigns. He gave power to the trustees to sell, with power of maintenance out of the rents, and advancement out of the principal of their shares; and in case any of his freehold estates should not be sold by his said trustees, then, from and after the decease of his said children, he devised the same unto their respective heirs and assigns, as tenants in common. And he directed that the receipts and conveyances of his said trustees to any purchasers of any part of his estate and effects should be good discharges and assurances:—Held, that the trustees took the legal fee, and that the children were entitled to equitable estates for life, with equitable remainders to their heirs, which united, gave them equitable estates in fee-simple. Reynell v. Reynell, 10 Beav. 21.

Legal Estate devised to Children—Power to Trustees to Sell in uncertain Event.] —B. desired the residue of his real and personal estate to be divided into eleven equal parts, and he devised and bequeathed to each of his eleven children, his or her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, one of the parts. He declared that the share or shares of his daughters should be for their separate use; and as it might probably happen that the arrangements made by his will could not be carried into effect without the sale of the whole, or at least a great portion of his real and personal estate, he recommended great caution in the sale, for he believed that his landed property was daily increasing in value, and he nominated G. and M. executors and trustees of his will for duly carrying the disposition of all the property therein alluded to into proper effect:—Held, that this was not sufficient to divest a legal estate previously devised to children, and to vest it in the trustees, although the words might give a simple power to sell, in an event which might possibly, though not certainly, happen. L. & S. W. Ry. v. Bridger, 10 Jur. (N.S.) 650; 10 L. T. 689; 12 W. R. 948.

Bare Trustee—Expiration of Trust—Right of Bare Trustee to call for Conveyance.]—A testator being, at the date of his death in 1868, equitably entitled to a freehold house in fee-simple in remainder, devised and bequeathed all his real and personal estate to trustees, upon trust to pay and permit his wife to receive the annual income during widowhood, and then upon trust for his illegitimate son absolutely; and he empowered his trustees, with the consent of his wife during her life, and, after her decease and during the minority of his said son, in their discretion, to change investments and to sell any part of his real or personal estate. The illegitimate son died intestate and without issue in 1880. The widow died in 1886. The remainder fell into possession in 1889:—Held, that, on the death of the widow, the trustees became bare trustees for the illegitimate son, and that, consequently, the surviving trustee was not entitled to call for a conveyance of the legal estate of the house. Lashmar, In re, Moody v. Penfold, 60 L. J., Ch. 143; [1891] 1 Ch. 258; 64 L. T. 333—C. A.

Copyholds—Tenure for Life with Power to nominate Successor—Devise to Trustees.]—By the custom of the manors of Y., P., and S., the tenant of the copyhold tenement held only for life, with a power to nominate by writing one or more successors, but so that if there were more than one, they held concurrently for their lives or the life of the survivor, who had power to nominate a successor to himself. A copyhold tenant of these manors by his will devised all his copyholds to three trustees to the use of his grandson A. for life, with remainder to the use of the trustees to preserve the contingent remainders, with remainder to the use of the children of A. and their heirs as tenants in common, with remainder to the use of the plaintiffs. By a codicil the testator, after reciting that he had ascertained that his "copyhold estates" were held of the manors of P. and S., directed that "all his copyhold estates within the manors of P. and S." should be held by his trustees to the uses and upon the trusts in his will declared, if and so far as the custom of the respective manors would warrant or authorise: and if the custom of the manors or either of them did not warrant or authorise the entail created by his will, then and in that case his grandson A. and his assigns, or his successor or successors, should have and hold his copyhold estates according to the custom of the manors. A. was admitted tenant for his life, and nominated the defendant as his successor, who was admitted accordingly:—Held, that the trustees took the legal estate in the copyholds held of the manor of Y., and ought to have been admitted instead of A., and that all the beneficial limitations in the will were equitable interests. Allen v. Bewsey, 7 Ch. D. 453; 37 L. T. 683—C. A.

Mixed Devise of Freeholds and Copyholds to Trustees—Doctrine of Attraction]—Devise of freeholds and copyholds to A. and B., to hold the same to A. and B., their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, upon trust during the life of J. to receive the rents and pay the same to J. for life, or otherwise to permit J. to receive them; followed by a devise after J.'s decease, to the use of the heirs of his body. The testator appointed A., B., and J. executors of his will, and declared that the receipts of his trustees and executors for any money payable under the will should be a sufficient discharge to any person paying the same:—Held, that J. took a legal estate tail in the freeholds, and an equitable estate for life in the copyholds. Baker v. Parson (infra) not followed; Houston v. Hughes (6 B. & C. 403; 9 D. & Ry. 464; 5 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 315; 30 R. R. 372) commented on. Baker v. White, 44 L. J., Ch. 651; L. R. 20 Eq. 166; 33 L. T. 347; 23 W. R. 670.

Devise (after 1837) of copyholds and freeholds to trustees to hold unto them and their heirs on trust to pay unto or permit A. to receive the rents during his life, and after his death to the use of the heirs of his body, with a gift over in case he died without leaving issue:—Held, that A. took an equitable estate for life with a legal remainder to the heirs of his body in both the freeholds and copyholds. Baker v. Parson, 42 L. J., Ch. 228.

The Statute of Uses not applying to copyholds, on a devise of freeholds and copyholds together, the legal estate in the copyholds attracts that in the freeholds and makes it vest in the first devisee. Ib.

Devise of Copyholds—Subsequent Covenant to Surrender not carried out by Testator.]—A. devised copyholds to trustees in fee, upon trusts in the will mentioned. A. afterwards executed a voluntary conveyance of the same lands to the same trustees, upon similar trusts to those declared by the will, and covenanted to surrender the copyholds to the trustees, on the trusts declared by the deed, and that until such surrender, and the trustees should be admitted to the copyholds covenanted to be surrendered, A. and her heirs would hold the lands in trust for the trustees, their heirs and assigns, and dispose of the same as they should direct and appoint. A. died without having executed any surrender:—Held, that the legal estate in the lands was in the devisees in trust under the will, and not in A.'s customary heir. Steele v. Waller, 28 Beav. 466; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1004; 3 L. T. 74.

Costs and Expenses—Charge upon Corpus—Power to Sell Corpus.]—By a private act of parliament it was enacted that certain copyhold property should be vested in trustees, their trustees and assigns, to the uses and upon the trusts declared therein, which were to grant building leases; and every lease was to contain certain specified covenants; and the trustees were to sell the materials of a house already standing on the premises, and apply the proceeds in payment of the costs and charges attending the preparing, soliciting, and obtaining the act of parliament, and preparatory and incidental thereto, and the residue of such costs and expenses were to be paid out of the rents and profits of the premises so to be demised, and were to be charged upon the premises:—Held, that the legal estate in the copyholds was vested in the trustees; that the costs incidental to obtaining the act of parliament were a charge upon the corpus of the estate, and that the court had power to direct a sale of the corpus for payment of such costs. Dixon v. Wilkinson, 1 Eq. R. 556; 22 L. J., Ch. 981; 1 W. R. 513.

Equitable Estate—Attaining Twenty-one.]—A testator devised freeholds and chattels together to trustees on trust to permit his wife to reside on the property, and have the use of the chattels until his youngest son attained twenty-one, when the whole was to be divided among his three children, they paying the wife an annuity if then living:—Held, that the interests of the children in the freehold after the youngest attained twenty-one were equitable. Fowke v. Draycott, 52 L. T. 890; 33 W. R. 701.

—— Payment of Rents to Married Woman—Direction to Trustees to Repair.]—A testatrix by her will directed her trustees to stand possessed of the net rents of her real estate, upon trust to pay the same to Mrs. W., a married woman, for life, for her separate use, her receipt alone to be a sufficient discharge to the trustees; and the testatrix directed her trustees, out of the rents of her real estate, to keep in repair all the buildings on the estate during the period of their trust, and also the chancel of P. church. No power of sale or leasing was contained in the will:—Held, that, notwithstanding the direction to the trustees with respect to repairs, Mrs. W. was equitable tenant for life of the settled land, and, as such, was entitled to be let into the possession and management of the estate, upon her undertaking to see to the repairs. Bentley, In re, Wade v. Wilson, 54 L. J., Ch. 782; 33 W. R. 610.

b. Quantity of Estate of Trustees.

i. General Principles.

Devise to Trustees without the Word "Heirs."]—A legal fee will pass without the word "heirs," where a trust of land can be satisfied in no other way. Villiers v. Villiers, 2 Atk. 72.

The word "heirs" is not necessary to give an inheritance to trustees, if a less estate would not answer the purpose of the trust. Gibson v. Montford (Lord) or Rogers, Amb. 93; 1 Ves. sen. 485; 4 Ves. 288, n.

Where an estate is devised, without any limitation of the quantity of interest, to trustees in trust for a limited purpose, with remainder to persons to whom the beneficial interest is given, the legal estate given to the trustees will cease on the satisfaction of the limited purpose, and will vest in the persons beneficially entitled in remainder. Heardson v. Williamson, 1 Keen, 33; 5 L. J., Ch. 165. S. P., Doe d. White v. Simpson, 5 East, 162; and Doe d. Player v. Nicholls, 1 B. & C. 336.

An estate created for the purpose of certain trusts, remains vested in the trustees, so long as any object of the trust may spring up, though for the present all the purposes of the trust have been satisfied. Darker v. Darker, 2 L. J. Ex. Eq. 22.

The court will not make a declaration that a person is entitled to a legal estate in fee, unless there is also some trust to be performed. Brooke v. Turner, 4 L. J., Ch. 48.

No person can be a trustee in law unless he has a vested interest in the thing given. Owen v. Owen, 1 Atk. 496.

Conveyance to Trustees and their Heirs.]—It is not a sufficient ground for restricting an estate limited in a deed to a trustee and his heirs, to an estate for life, that the estate given to the trustee seems to be larger than was essential to its purpose, or that the limitation has been unnecessarily repeated. Colmore v. Tyndall, 2 Y. & J. 605.

A., seised in fee, conveyed lands to B. and C., and the survivor of them, and the heirs of the survivor, to the use of A. for life, and after his death, to the use of B. and C., and the survivor, and the heirs of such survivor, upon trust to permit and suffer D. to receive a jointure, and after the death of D., to the use of the right heirs of A.:—Held, that B. and C. took a legal estate in fee in remainder. Fowler v. Lightburn, 11 Ir. Ch. R. 495.

Conveyance to Trustees for Charitable Purposes—Adverse Claim.]—The necessary funds having been subscribed by certain parties, a piece of land was purchased and conveyed by deed to trustees, for a charitable purpose. Under this deed the trustees entered into and continued in possession for several years; and, with the acquiescence of all the subscribers, including some not parties to the deed, a considerable expenditure was made, and heavy liabilities were incurred:—Held, that, even assuming the subscribers not parties to the deed had an equitable interest in the land in respect of the moneys subscribed by them, yet they would not be heard to assert a title to the land adverse to that of the trustees. Att.-Gen. v. Munro, 9 Jur. 461.

Devise to Trustees and their Heirs.]—A general devise to trustees and their heirs, primâ facie, gives the fee, and it lies on the parties alleging that they take a less estate to show what less estate they take. Collier v. Walters, 43 L. J., Ch. 216; L. R. 17 Eq. 252; 29 L. T. 868; 22 W. R. 209.

A trust to set and let, and a direction to sell timber, are grounds for not cutting down the estate. Ib.

A devise which, if taken alone, would convey the legal estate, may be qualified and controlled by a subsequent devise to trustees inconsistent with that estate, if such qualification necessary to enable the trustees to perform the duties of the trust. Anthony v. Rees, 2 C. & J. 75; 2 Tyrw. 100; 1 L. J., Ex. 44.

Copyholds are to the same extent as freeholds, subject to the rule that the legal estate in the trustee shall be construed to be the smallest estate necessary for the execution of the trust. Baker v. Parson, 42 L. J., Ch. 228.

A devise to trustees and their heirs:—Held, to confer an estate co-extensive only with the trusts they had to perform. Ward v. Burbury, 18 Beav. 190.

Devise of freeholds to trustees "and their heirs," upon trust to receive the rents and pay them to E. W., a feme covert, for her separate use; and after her death, upon trust to sell and divide amongst her children; and in default, to apply the rents towards the education of J. W., until he attained twenty-one; and (continued the testator) "when J. W. shall so have attained that age," I devise to him and his heirs all my real and personal estate:—Held, on the death of E. W. without issue, that J. W. took the legal estate in fee. Ib.

Devise to trustees and their heirs upon divers trusts in succession, some requiring the legal estate to remain in the trustees, and others which, in themselves, would not do so,—the whole legal fee remains in the trustees. Brown v. Whiteway, 8 Hare, 145.

Under a devise to A. and B., and their heirs, to the use of a son for life, with remainder in trust that the trustees apply the rents for maintenance of the children of the son during their minority, and after they attained twenty-one, to the use of them in fee:—Held, that the son took the legal estate for his life, with remainder to A. and B. for a chattel interest with remainder to the children in fee. Tucker v. Johnson, 16 Sim. 341.

Devise, subject as to part to a devise to trustees and their heirs for debts in aid of the personal estate, and as to part to mortgages in fee, to sons and a daughter, and their respective issue male in strict settlement, &c.; with power to the sons respectively, when in possession, to convey or appoint all or any part to trustees on trust by the rents and profits to raise a rent-charge as and for a jointure for any wife or wives for each such wife's natural life only; and also to charge portions by deed, and to lease for twenty-one years. Execution of the power by conveyance to trustees and their heirs on trust by the rents and profits to raise and pay a jointure during the wife's natural life only; and charging portions; with covenant for title, and for quiet enjoyment by the trustees during the natural life only of the wife. As to the estate of the trustees at law, quære, the court of king's bench certifying that they took an estate in fee, and the court of common pleas that they took no estate whatsoever. Wykham v. Wykham, 18 Ves. 395. And see Venable v. Morris, 7 Term

Rep. 438; Doe d. Burne v. Martyn, 2 Man. & Ry. 485; 8 B. & C. 487; 7 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 60.

Where a party who, by writing obligatory (without any penal sum), had bound himself to pay to A. B. an annuity of 20*l.* a year for her life, devised his estates to trustees upon certain trusts, until his son should attain the age of twenty-one years:—Held, that the estate of the trustees ceased upon the death of the son under the age of twenty-one, all the purposes of the trust being then at an end; and that the trustees were only liable to pay to A. B. such arrears of the annuity as became due before the son's death. Morrant v. Gough, 1 Man. & Ry. 41; 7 B. & C. 206; 6 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 14.

Devise to Trustees in Remainder.]—B. devised to his only son E. for life, remainder to his issue in tail, remainder to B.'s two daughters in tail, remainder to B.'s right heirs; the two daughters suffered recoveries to the use of E.; and by an act of parliament reciting the will, the recoveries, and that E. had no issue, trustees were empowered to sell the estates devised, and to lay out the purchase money in the purchase of other estates, to be settled to such of the uses in the will of B. as should be existing, undetermined, or capable of taking effect at the time of the sale; the trustees sold, and bought with the purchase money an estate which, by a conveyance reciting the will of B. and the act, was conveyed by them to such of the uses in the will of B. as were then existing, undetermined, and capable of taking effect:—Held, that under the conveyance the trustees took a fee. Wortham v. Mackinnon, 8 Bing. 564; 1 M. & Sc. 543.

Devise of Leases for Lives renewable for ever.]—A testator being seised of lands under leases for lives renewable for ever, in 1824 devised his freehold leases to trustees, and the heirs of the survivor of them, in trust, after payment of the head rents, to apply the clear yearly rents amongst his three daughters during their respective lives, in equal shares, for their sole and separate use; and in case any of his daughters should die leaving lawful issue, then in trust, as to the share of such daughter so dying, for the use of such issue, as she should by deed or will appoint, and in default of such appointment to the use of such issue equally, share and share alike; and if any of his daughters died without issue, he directed that her share of the rents should be paid to the survivors or survivor for the increase of her and their respective shares, to their separate use, and to go to their lawful issue, subject to the like power of appointment among such issue; and in case of the death of all his daughters without leaving lawful issue, then in trust to pay the rents to his nephew during his life; and after the death of his nephew, in case he should die leaving lawful issue, in trust, as to one-half of his freehold and leasehold interests, to the use of the children of his sister, in equal shares, and to their lawful issue; and in case his nephew should happen to die without issue, then, as to the whole of his freehold and leasehold interests, to the use of the said children of his sister, in equal shares, and to their lawful issue; and in case they should be then dead, then, as the whole, in trust for the issue of his nephew; and in case of the deaths of his nephew and the children of his sister without issue, in trust to assign over the freehold and leasehold interests to his own right heirs; and a power was given to the trustees to lease from time to time as they should remain seised and possessed by virtue of the trusts in the will contained, with the consent of the person or persons then entitled:—Held, first, that the legal estate was devised to the trustees during the existence of the entire series of limitations. Sherwin v. Kenny, 16 Ir. Ch. R. 138.

Held, secondly, that the daughters of the testator took equitable estates in quasi tail in their respective shares. Ib.

Devise to Trustees, "as also their Heirs and Assigns."]—A testator, by codicil, after appointing two persons trustees, as also their heirs and assigns, to his will and codicil, desired that his sister A. should do what she pleased with his remaining property after payment of certain legacies, excepting a tenement at W. and stock, of which she should only receive the interest and rent during her life, and afterwards to his sister's eldest son, on his taking the name of M.; but should he refuse to take the name of M., or his sister depart this life without a son, then the tenement at W. and the stock should go to P. on his taking the name of M., and so on to his heirs, each taking the name of M., none of them being allowed to touch the principal; and no one after his sister A. inherit the said property or enjoy the interest who did not take or possess the name of M.—Held, that the trustees took an estate in fee by virtue of their appointment, and that A. was entitled to an estate for life in the tenement and stock, with a remainder in fee in the tenement, and an absolute interest in the stock, to the first-born of A. vested in his birth and baptism by the name of M. Bennett v. Bennett, 2 Dr. & Sm. 266; 34 L. J., Ch. 34; 11 L. T. 362; 13 W. R. 66.

ii. Direction to Pay Debts or Legacies.

Devise to Trustees and their Heirs to Pay Debts and Legacies.]—A general devise to trustees and their heirs primâ facie gives the fee, and it lies on the parties alleging that they take a less estate to show what less estate they take. Collier v. Walters, 43 L. J., Ch. 216; L. R. 17 Eq. 252; 29 L. T. 868; 22 W. R. 209.

A testator, by will, dated in 1827, devised his estate to trustees and their heirs upon trusts that they and their heirs should stand seised of the same during the life of C., and until the whole of the testator's debts and the legacies were paid, upon trust, to set and let the same, and apply the rents and yearly profits, and the value of whatever timber might be considered at its best growth, from time to time, in discharge of his debts and legacies until they were paid, and from thenceforth to pay the rents to C. during his life; and after his death, and payment of the debts and legacies and expenses, the testator devised the estate to the heirs of the body of C., and for default of such issue, to his own right heirs. In 1830 the trustees by deed reciting that the debts and legacies were paid, conveyed the estates to C. for his life. C. shortly afterwards suffered a common recovery, and then mortgaged the estate in fee to W. In 1861 C., the father, and W., his mortgagee, had filed a bill for a conveyance of the fee against the heir of the surviving trustee and the son (C.'s heir-apparent). The son, instead of asking to be dismissed as not being heir during his father's lifetime, put in an answer disputing the plaintiff's title. In 1865 a decree was made for the conveyance of the fee to the plaintiff. The father had since died. This suit was instituted in 1873 by the son against the mortgagee:—Held, first, that the trustees took a legal fee under the will, that the rule in Shelley's Case (1 Co. Rep. 93, b) therefore applied, and that the son acquired a good equitable fee by the recovery. Ib.

Held, secondly, that if they had only taken a life estate, their conveyance of it to the father, enabled him to suffer a recovery and bar the contingent remainders at law and in equity, and was no breach of trust. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the son, having chosen to answer in the former suit, was bound by the decree. Ib.

The decision on the same will in Collier v. M'Bean, infra, that the trustees took a fee determinable when the debts were paid, disapproved of. Ib.

A testator devised his real estate to trustees and their heirs, in trust, during the life of his brother, and until payment of his debts and legacies, to apply the rents in payment of his debts and legacies, and then to pay them to his brother for life; and after the death of his brother, and such payments, he devised the estate to the heirs of the body of his brother, and in default to his own right heirs:—Held, first, that the trustees took the legal fee, determinable upon the death of his brother and payment of the debts and legacies. Collier v. M'Bean, 34 Beav. 426; 6 N. R. 192; 34 L. J., Ch. 555; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 592; 13 W. R. 766.

Held, secondly, that the brother took an equitable estate for life, with a legal remainder to the heirs of his body. Ib.

The trustees having conveyed to the brother the legal estate for his life, and he having suffered a recovery:—Held, thirdly, that the heirs of the body were not barred, because the legal estate to the brother for life, and the legal remainder to the heirs of his body, had become vested by different instruments, and also because it was the duty of the trustees to preserve the contingent estates, and therefore it was a breach of duty in them to convey the estate to the brother. Ib.

Held, on appeal, that the title under the recovery was too doubtful to force on a purchaser. S. C., 35 L. J., Ch. 144; L. R. 1 Ch. 81; 13 L. T. 484; 14 W. R. 156.

Chattel Interest—Devise to Let and Apply Rents in Payment of Mortgages.]—Devise to two trustees and the survivor, his executors and administrators, in trust, to let and apply the rents in payment of mortgages, until the whole debt should be paid off by the rents, and afterwards to other parties. The trustees take a chattel interest only. Hrardson v. Williamson, 1 Keen, 33; 5 L. J., Ch. 165.

—— Devise out of Rents to Pay Annuities and Legacies.]—Devise of real and personal estates to trustees, their executors, &c., out of rents and profits to pay certain annuities and legacies:—Held, a trust, not a chattel interest in the trustees. Gibson v. Montfort (Lord) or Rogers, Amb. 93; 1 Ves. sen. 485; 4 Ves. 288, n.

Devise to Trustees and their Heirs to Pay Debts.]—Devise to trustees and their heirs to pay debts and legacies; and then as to one moiety, to use of B. for life, sans waste; remainder to trustees during B.'s life, to preserve, &c.; remainder to use of heirs of body of B.; and ultimate remainder to testator's own right heirs:—Held, that B. took only an estate for life, that the estate devised to B. was not a use executed, but a mere trust in equity, and that the whole fee being devised to trustees, no legal fee could be limited upon it, and that he could take no legal estate. Bagshaw v. Spencer, 2 Atk. 577; 1 Ves. sen. 142.

Gift to Executor to Pay Debts, Funeral Expenses, and Bequests.]—A testator, in 1825, left all his property to his executor for the purpose of paying the following bequests, first paying debts and funeral expenses. He then bequeathed lands for ever to his illegitimate son T., giving him power to will and dispose of same if he had a family, but if he should die without issue, then to go to the use of his daughter J., also illegitimate:—Held, that the executor took the fee in the lands, and that T. took an estate tail, the limitation over being not an executory devise, but a remainder, and that this limitation conferred the fee upon J. on indefinite failure of issue of T., J. taking the entire estate remaining in the executor. Ormsby v. Anderson, 14 W. R. 379.

Devise to Trustees and the Survivor and his Heirs to Pay an Annuity—Residue of Rents to be applied for Payment of Debts.]—A testator, in 1772, devised to trustees, and the survivor and his heirs, all his real and personal estate upon trust to pay an annuity to his daughter, Lady A.; the residue of the rents to be applied to the payment of his debts; and, after her decease, in trust to permit the second son of Lady A., by J. B., her husband, afterwards Earl Ormonde, and the heirs male of his body to receive the same in preference to her eldest son, it being testator's meaning that such second son "do take and be preferred, &c., until he shall become an eldest, and so shall each and every second and younger son or sons take place and enjoy the said estates according to seniority, &c., and the heirs male of the body of such second son." In default of such issue, the estates were to go to the use of the daughters of Lady A., as tenants in common in tail, &c., with ultimate remainder to testator's trustee in fee. Lady A. had issue four sons by J. B.—Walter, John, James, and Charles, all of whom had been born during testator's lifetime, and John was second son living at date of the will, and of testator's death. In 1793 John joined his father and mother in a recovery of the W. estates so devised by the testator, and executed a deed declaring the uses thereof to Lady A. for life; remainder to John for life, with remainder to John's sons in tail; remainder successively to James and Charles for life, and their issue respectively in tail male; and said deed contained a proviso for shifting the W. estates from John to James, and from James to Charles, in the event of the O. estates of their father coming to John or James. In 1796 John died. J. B. died in 1795, whereupon Walter became entitled and suffered recoveries of the O. estate, and died in 1822, Marquis of O. James then became Marquis. Lady A. died in 1830, and in 1834 James filed his bill against Charles, and the present plaintiff, and the heir of surviving trustee, whereby he claimed the W. estates as tenant in tail, under the will of 1772, or as tenant for life, with remainder to his eldest son in tail male, under the deed of 1793. Charles answered the bill, and issue had been joined and publication passed when the plaintiff, James, Marquis of O., died. In 1838 the present plaintiff filed his bill against Charles and his three sons, setting out all the charges contained in the former bill, and the several proceedings had thereon, and claiming to be entitled to the W. estates, either as issue in tail under the will of 1772, or as tenant in tail under the deed of 1793, and the recoveries. The bill stated that Charles and his sons claimed some interest in the said estates, and in the subject matter of this suit, and in that respect were necessary parties. The bill prayed that plaintiff might have the benefit of the said former proceedings, &c., and that the trusts of the will might be carried into execution, &c. To this bill the three sons of Charles demurred for want of equity; no grounds were assigned on the record. At the bar one of the causes of demurrer was, that the plaintiff showed no title to the W. estates:—Held, that Lady A. took no estate under the will; that the devise to the second son of Lady A., and the heirs male of his body, was an executory devise to such son as should answer that description at the time of the death of Lady A.; and, therefore, that the recoveries suffered in 1793 and 1795 were bad for want of a tenant to the præcipe, so as to bar the remainders over limited by the will, even supposing that, on the death of John, James, the late marquis, took an estate tail, by way of executory devise. It was also held, that the limitation to the trustees and the survivor, and his heirs, vested in them the legal estate in fee. Ormonde v. Wandesforde, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 238.

Direction to Pay Debts—Contingent Remainder—Failure of particular Estate.]—A testator, by his will made in 1838, directed his debts to be paid. And he devised specific real estate to four persons (whom he afterwards named as his executors), their heirs and assigns, upon trust and for the intents and purposes thereinafter mentioned, viz., upon trust during the minority of his daughter D., to receive the rents and apply the same for her benefit till she should attain twenty-one, and, on her attaining twenty-one, to pay to or permit and suffer her to receive the rents during her life for her separate use, without the power of anticipation. And, from and after her death, upon trust for, and the testator thereby gave and devised the property to the issue, children or child, of the daughter who should live to attain twenty-one, in equal shares if more than one, and to their respective heirs and assigns, with remainders over. And, after making other specific devises and bequests, the testater devised and bequeathed the residue of his estate and effects (subject to and charged with the payment of his debts) to one of his trustees absolutely, for his own use and benefit. The daughter D. survived the testator, and she afterwards married and had three children, but she died before any of them had attained twenty-one:—Held, that, by reason of the direction that the testator's debts should be paid, the trustees took the whole legal estate in fee simple in the specifically-devised estate, and consequently that the contingent remainder to the children of the daughter had not failed by reason of the determination of her life estate before the happening of the contingency. Festing v. Allen, (12 M. & W. 279) distinguished. Creaton v. Creaton, infra, followed. Marshall v. Gingell, 51 L. J., Ch. 818; 21 Ch. D. 790; 47 L. T. 859; 31 W. R. 63.

A testatrix, after directing her debts to be paid by her executors, devised real estate to them upon trusts, which, apart from the above direction, would have carried the legal estate to the cestuis que trust:—Held, that the executors took the legal estate. Creaton v. Creaton, infra, Spence v. Spence, infra, and Marshall v. Gingell, supra, discussed and followed. Brooke, In re, Brooke v. Brooke, 63 L. J., Ch. 159; [1894] 1 Ch. 43; 8 R. 24; 70 L. T. 71; 42 W. R. 186.

—— Rule in Shelley's Case—Equitable Fee.]—A testator, by will, subsequently to 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, after directing that his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses should be paid by his executors as soon as conveniently might be after his decease, devised all his real and personal estate to trustees (whom he afterwards appointed his executors), in trust to pay the rents and proceeds thereof to his son J. for his natural life; and from and after the death of J., in trust for the right heirs of him, J., for ever:—Held, that by reason of the direction to them to pay debts, the trustees took the legal estate in fee, and therefore, inasmuch as the estate for life and the estate in remainder were both equitable estates, the rule in Shelley's Case applied, and J. took an equitable estate in fee. Spence v. Spence, 12 C. B. (N.S.) 199; 31 L. J., C. P. 189; 6 L. T. 538; 10 W. R. 605.

—— Devise of Copyholds.]—C., after desiring that all his just debts, &c., should be in the first place paid, devised to three trustees, and the heirs of the survivor, a copyhold estate, upon trust to pay the rents and profits thereof, in equal moieties, to his two daughters, for their separate use for life; and after the decease of either, upon trust to pay the whole of such rents, &c., to the survivor for life; and after the decease of the survivor, C. devised the estate, in equal moieties, to the heirs of the bodies of his daughters respectively; and in default of issue of either daughter, he gave the entirety of the estate to the heirs of the body of such daughter who should leave such issue; and in default of issue of both daughters, he gave the estate to the right heirs of the surviving daughter. The trustees were appointed executors of the will, and they were duly admitted to hold to the uses of the same. Both the testator's daughters died without having ever been married. The estate was of gavelkind tenure. Both the customary co-heirs and the heir-at-law of the surviving daughter claimed the estate. On demurrer by the latter:—Held, that the general charge of debts, coupled with the legal estate devised to the trustees, made the estate of the devisee in remainder an equitable estate; and the demurrer was overruled. Creaton v. Creaton, 3 Sm. & G. 386; 26 L. J., Ch. 266; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1223; 5 W. R. 123.

Where, by a will, there was a general charge of debts, and a devise to trustees upon certain trust:—Held, that the extent of the estate vested in the trustees could not be measured by the length or continuance of the equitable interests given to two tenants for life; but semble, if there had been no charge of debts, the estate of the trustees would have determined with the life of the surviving tenant for life. Ib.

Semble, where the subject of a devise is copyhold, the right of the trustees to be reimbursed moneys paid in fees of court will not of itself prevent the determination of the estates vested in them, or affect the quality of the estates limited in remainder. Ib.

Devise to Trustees in Trust to pay an Annuity.]—A testator, after the 4 Will. 4, c. 22, devised freehold lands to two trustees, their heirs and assigns, to pay thereout to his widow an annuity for her life, and after her decease for A. and B., their heirs and assigns, as tenants in common:—Held, that the legal estate in the trustees was not restricted to the life of the widow. Fenwick v. Potts, 8 De G. M. & G. 506.

A devise before 1838 to trustees in trust to pay a life annuity, with power to raise it by distress or sale as for rent in arrear, gives them the legal fee. Whittemore v. Whittemore, 38 L. J., Ch. 17; 19 L. T. 236.

iii. Power or Trust for Sale.

Devise to Trustees to Sell.]—A devise to trustees and their "heirs" carries the whole fee in law; and a devise to sell will carry a fee, though the word "heirs" be not mentioned. Bagshaw v. Spencer, 2 Atk. 578; 1 Ves. Sen. 142.

Where testator's intent appears plain, court will construe the words "heirs of the body" to be words of purchase. Ib.

"Heirs of the body" have, at law, been considered as words of purchase, even in a deed. Ib.

Power to Trustee, his Heirs and Assigns, to Sell.]—By the will of W. S., real estate was devised unto and to the use of W. T., his heirs and assigns for ever, upon trust to pay M.S. an annuity during her life, and to apply the surplus during the life of M. S. to the testator's daughter, C. N.; and after the death of M. S., the testator directed that the premises should be and remain unto W. T., his heirs and assigns, to the use of the said C. N. and her assigns for her life, with remainder to W. T. to support contingent remainders; and after the decease of C. N., to the use of B. N. and his assigns during his life, with remainder to W. T. to support contingent remainders; and after the decease of B. N., in case he should survive C. N., to the use of all and every the child and children of C. N., with cross-remainders between them, with the ultimate remainder to the testator's cousin, M. S., in fee. The will contained a power to W. T., his heirs and assigns, to sell the trust premises at the request of B. N. and C. N., or the survivor of them, and directed the proceeds of such sale to be laid out in the purchase of other estates to be settled to the same uses as the estates sold:—Held, taking into consideration the various duties prescribed by the will to be performed by W. T., that the intention was manifest, and that the words were large enough to give to W. T. a legal estate in fee. Rackham v. Siddall, 1 Mac. & G. 607; 2 Hall & Tw. 44.

A testator, without expressly devising his real estate, empowered his trustees and executors to manage and to sell and invest the proceeds. He directed them, under the management of his wife, to carry on his farm for the maintenance of his family, and subject to that trust directed his real and personal estate to be held on trust for his children equally, some of whom were to bring into hotchpot property of their own:—Held, that the trustees had the legal estate in the realty, and on the death of the wife, though the children were all of age, could sell and convey. Cooke v. Simpson, 46 L. J., Ch. 463.

A testator, by will made in 1851, after appointing his wife executrix, and B. executor and trustee of his will, devised his real estate to his wife for life, in case she continued his widow; but in case she married again, he devised the real estate to the use and intent that his wife should receive an annuity of 20*l*., with powers of entry and distress. After the decease of his wife the testator directed his trustee to sell his real estate in such manner as he should deem right, with power to execute such deeds and assurances as should be requisite for effecting the sale of his real estate:—Held, that the trustees took a contingent estate pur autre vie during the life of the widow, in the event of her subsequent marriage. Boyce, In re, 4 De G. J. & S. 205; 3 N. R. 396; 33 L. J. Ch. 390; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 138; 9 L. T. 670; 12 W. R. 359.

Private Act of Parliament.]—Effect of a private act of parliament declaring an estate vested in trustees and their heirs, in trust to sell discharged from the trusts of a settlement, devesting the legal fee outstanding under a prior settlement. Bullock v. Fladgate, 1 V. & B. 471; 12 R. R. 270.

U. devised lands by will to trustees. The will contained no power of sale. In 1873 a private act was passed, reciting that it was desirable that the lands should be sold, and enacting "from and after the passing of this act the legal estate in the lands and hereditaments devised by the will of U. shall, for the purposes of this act, vest in W. M., J. M., and R. K." The act went on to give the trustees power to sell all or any part of the lands:—Held, that the legal estate was vested in the trustees for all purposes, and not merely for the purpose of selling the lands, so that they could maintain an action of ejectment. Underwood v. Pennington, 37 L. T. 320.

—— New Trustees appointed under Act.]—In 1874 an amendment act was passed by which "all the trusts, powers, and authorities by the act of 1873, vested in or conferred upon the trustees of the act, and all matters and things incident thereto, shall be vested in the trustees and two other trustees, to be appointed as hereinafter mentioned":—Held, that the new trustees were on exactly the same footing as the others, and that the legal estate was in them all. Ib.

c. Devolution of Trust Estates.

i. Devise in General Terms.

General Devise.]—Trust estate will pass by a general devise. Hawkins v. Obeen, 2 Ves. sen. 559. S. P., Marlow v. Smith, 2 P. Wms. 198.

A general devise by a trustee did not pass the trust estate. Att.-Gen. v. Buller, 5 Ves. 339.

By a devise in general terms, a trust estate will pass; unless an intention to the contrary can be collected from expressions in the will or purposes or objects of the testator. Braybroke (Lord) v. Inskip, 8 Ves. 417 ; 7 R. R. 106.

The rule that a trust estate will pass by a general devise is confined by objects, appearing upon the will inconsistent with that intention. Morgan, Ex parte, 10 Ves. 101.

A devise by testator "of all the lands and hereditaments vested in him as trustee or mortgagee in fee" :—Held, to pass trust estates vested in the testator, but not in fee. Greenwood v. Wakeford, 1 Beav. 576 ; 8 L. J., Ch. 333.

A testator devised all his real estates (except the hereditaments thereinafter particularly devised), including all estates vested in him upon trust or by way of mortgage, to trustees upon certain trusts ; in a subsequent part of his will, he devised his farm in A., in the possession of T. H., to T. R. He had two farms in A., called respectively S. and M., both of which were in the possession of T. H., but at different rents. On a question being raised which of the two farms the testator intended to give to T. R.: —Held, that the devise must be taken to have been made to T. R. for his personal advantage, and not upon trust ; and if, therefore, it could be ascertained that one of the farms was subject to a trust, or that the testator supposed or treated it to be so, it must then be inferred that such farm was not the one intended to be devised, but that the other was the one referred to by the testator. In the present case, it was sufficiently established by the evidence, that during the lives of the testator and his father the proceeds of the farm S. had been regularly paid to a Roman Catholic priest, and that the testator had uniformly dealt with it in conformity with a real or supposed trust affecting it for this purpose :—Held, therefore, that he must be taken to have intended to comprise it in the general devise of trust estates, and that consequently the farm M. was the one devised to T. R. Blundell v. Gladstone, 3 Mac. & G. 692. Reversing 14 Sim. 83.

General Residuary Devise.]—A general residuary devise and bequest of real and personal property, for such estate and interest as the testator had therein ; the personal estate to be subject to the testator's debts :—Held, to pass the legal estate in real property of which the testator was merely trustee, the will creating no inconsistent trust thereof. Langford v. Auger, 4 Hare, 313.

—— To Use and Behoof.]—Under residuary disposition by will to a natural son, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns for ever, to and for his and their own use and behoof, a trust estate did not pass. Brettell, Ex parte, 6 Ves. 576.

—— Use and Benefit.]—Trustee, after devising certain real estates to different persons, gave and devised all his real estates not before disposed of by his will to A. B., his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, according to the tenure and nature thereof respectively, to and for his and their own use and benefit :—Held, that under this devise the trust estate passed. Bainbridge v. Ashburton (Lord), 2 Y. & C. 347; 6 L. J., Ex. Eq. 73. S. P., Sharpe v. Sharpe, 17 L. J., Ch. 384 ; 12 Jur. 598.

Own Absolute Use and Benefit.]—A testator devised all his property to his wife, her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, for all his estate and interest therein, for her own absolute use and benefit, and to be disposed of by deed or will as she should think fit :—Held, that a trust estate in fee passed by the devise. Shaw, Ex parte, 8 Sim. 159 ; 5 L. J., Ch. 378.

A testator being seised of trust estates, by his will, after reciting that he was or might at the time of his death be seised, or possessed, or entitled to real and personal estate, devised all and singular his said real and personal estate to H., her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, for her and their sole and absolute use and benefit. H. was a feme sole :—Held, that the devise to H. included the trust estates, and that the words did not create a separate estate. Lewis v. Matthews, 35 L. J., Ch. 638 ; L. R. 2 Eq. 177 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 542 ; 14 W. R. 682.

Testator gave all his property, whatsoever and wheresoever the same might be at his decease, to his wife for her absolute use for ever :—Held, that an estate vested in the testator as a trustee did not pass by the devise. Lindsell v. Thacker, 12 Sim. 178 ; 10 L. J., Ch. 348 ; 5 Jur. 603.

Charge of Legacies.]—Trust estates held to pass under a general devise notwithstanding a charge of legacies ; the devise passing all the real estate vested in the testator whether on trust or beneficially, and the charge affecting only such estate as belongs to him beneficially. Brown and Sibly's Contract, In re, 3 Ch. D. 156 ; 35 L. T. 305 ; 24 W. R. 782. But see Packman and Moss, In re, 1 Ch. D. 214.

A testator gave various pecuniary legacies, and all the rest and residue of his estate, real and personal, he gave, devised, and bequeathed to his wife, her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, absolutely :—Held, that the legacies were charged on the real estate, and therefore that the general devise did not pass property of which the testator was seised in fee as trustee. Bellis's Trusts, In re, 46 L. J., Ch. 353 ; 5 Ch. D. 504 ; 36 L. T. 644 ; 25 W. R. 456.

Charge of Debts and Legacies.]—Trust estates will not pass under a general devise where there is a charge of debts, or of legacies, or of debts and legacies. Brown and Sibly's Contract, In re, supra, dissented from.

A testator, who was mortgagee in fee of an estate to secure a sum of money of which he was trustee, devised and bequeathed his residuary real and personal estate unto and to the use of his wife, her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, in trust, either to leave the same in existing investments, or sell and convert the same, and out of the proceeds to pay his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and certain legacies, and invest the residue and retain the income thereof, for her life ; and subject as aforesaid, such residue to remain in trust for C. There was no express devise of trust or mortgaged estates :—Held, that the legal estate in the mortgaged property did not pass under the will. Smith's Estate, In re, 4 Ch. D. 70 ; 35 L. T. 890 ; 25 W. R. 294.

Quære, whether the legal estate would have passed had the mortgage money belonged to the testator in his own right. Ib. But see Martin v. Laverton, 39 L. J., Ch. 166 ; L. R. 9 Eq. 563 ; 22 L. T. 700 ; 18 W. R. 561.

Charge of a Legacy.]—A trustee devised "all his real estates, whatsoever and wheresoever," charged with a legacy :—Held, that the trust estates did not pass. Hope v. Liddell, 21 Beav. 183 ; 25 L. J., Ch. 90 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 105 ; 4 W. R. 145 S. P., Rackham v. Siddall, 16 Sim. 297 ; 12 Jur. 640. And see S. C., 1 Mac. & G. 607 ; 2 Hall & Tw. 44, ante, col. 535.

Securities for Money.]—A testator gave and bequeathed all his stock in trade, book debts, securities for money, money in the funds, and all his household goods, &c., to his wife. He also gave and bequeathed whatever money he had in the bank, or invested on any security, and also the residue of his personal and testamentary estate, goods, chattels and credits, to his trustees upon certain trusts therein mentioned :—Held, that the legal estate in certain messuages, which were conveyed to the testator upon trust to pay himself a sum of 300*l.*, and to pay the surplus to the person conveying the same, did not pass by the will. Gorfett's Trust, In re, 19 L. J., Ch. 173 ; 14 Jur. 53.

Devise to Persons as Tenants in Common.]—A devise to trustees of certain copyhold estate, and all other the real estate of the testatrix, and a declaration of the trusts of the moneys to arise from the sale of such copyhold estate, and a general devise of all other her real estate to three persons as tenants in common :—Held, not to pass the legal estate of the testatrix in certain copyholds, of which she was merely trustee. Morley's Will, In re, 10 Hare, 293 ; 1 W. R. 90.

Heir-at-Law — Devise to Unascertained Class.]—A devise by a testator of all his real and personal estate to his nephews and nieces, who were a numerous and unascertained class :—Held, not to pass estates vested in the testator in trust or on mortgage, but that such estates descended to his heir-at-law. Finney's Estate, In re, 3 Giff. 465 ; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 965 ; 6 L. T. 745.

—— Death of Trustees of Charity Devise in Testator's Lifetime.] — Where the trustees of a charity devise die in the life of the testator, the conduct shall go to his heir-at-law. Att.-Gen. v. Downing, Amb. 571.

Where by neglect the number of trustees in a trust to present to a living was not filled up at the time of an avoidance, the court would not by injunction prevent the effect of a presentation under the legal title of the heir of the surviving trustee, without a special ground ; but the court will take care as to the future, that the trust shall be properly filled up. Att.-Gen. v. Litchfield (Bishop), 5 Ves. 825.

Real Estate Contracted to be Sold.]—An estate which the testator had contracted to sell, held to pass by a devise of all his real and personal estate to trustees, in trust to sell. Wall v. Bright, 1 J. & W. 494 ; 21 R. R. 219.

In 1874 the plaintiffs entered into a contract for the purchase of real estate. After the title had been accepted, and before completion, the vendor died, having by his will (dated 1873) given his personal estate to E., whom he appointed executor, and devised all his real estate to H. and M. upon trust for sale, and having also devised to H. alone all the real estate which at his death might be vested in him as trustee :—Held, that the real estate contracted to be purchased by the plaintiffs passed to H. under the devise of trust estates. Wall v. Bright, supra, commented on and explained. Lysaght v. Edwards, 45 L. J., Ch. 554 ; 2 Ch. D. 499 ; 34 L. T. 787 ; 24 W. R. 778.

—— Tenancy in Common with Accruer.]—Testator agreed to sell land to B., but died before the purchase was completed. By his will he had given the residue of his real and personal estate (which included the land agreed to be sold) to his children, equally to be divided between them as tenants in common, with a proviso that if any of them died under twenty-one without leaving issue, then, as well as to the respective estate and interest and share to which any such child so dying would otherwise have been entitled under any of the devises, bequests or dispositions therein contained, as to any accruing share, testator gave and devised the same unto the others of them ; and if more than one, equally as tenants in common :—Held, that the legal estate in the property agreed to be sold had not passed by the devise, but descended upon the heir-at-law of the testator. Thirtle v. Vaughan, 2 W. R. 632.

—— Costs of Suit for Completion of Contract.] —Where, after contracting to sell land, the vendor devises to parties, some of whom are infants at his decease, his estate must bear the costs of the suit which he has thus voluntarily rendered necessary to a completion of the contract, and a mere devise of trust estates does not in such a case avoid the necessity of a suit. Purser v. Darby, 4 K. & J. 41.

Distinction in this respect between suits rendered necessary by the voluntary act of the deceased, and those caused by the mere act of God, as where the deceased has died intestate, leaving an infant heir. Ib.

—— Direction to Trustees to Complete Contract—Receipt of Executor.]—Testator devised his estates to trustees in trust to sell, and declared their receipts to be sufficient discharges : and he directed his trustees to complete any contracts for the sale of his estates, entered into during his lifetime, and remaining incomplete at his death :—Held, that his executor was the proper party to give receipts for the purchase-moneys of the estates contracted to be sold by the testator. Eaton v. Sanxter, 6 Sim. 517 ; 3 L. J., Ch. 197.

Devise of Mortgaged Estates.]—See WILL.

ii. Assignment or Specific Devise.

Devise of Copyholds.]—Trust of copyhold passes by unattested will. Tuffnell v. Page, Dick. 76 ; 2 Atk. 37 ; Barnard. 12. But see Wagstaff v. Wagstaff, 2 P. Wms. 261.

Devise by Sole Surviving Trustee.]—Semble, where a trust estate is limited to trustees and the survivors and survivor, and the heirs of the survivor, the surviving trustee does not commit a breach of trust by not permitting the trust estate to descend, or by devising it to proper persons on the trusts to which it was subject. Titley v. Wolstenholme, 7 Beav. 425 ; 13 L. J., Ch. 410.

A testator devised real and personal estate upon trusts, which, as held, the testator intended to be performed by the trustees and the survivors, and the heirs and assigns or executors of the survivor. There was no power to appoint new trustees. The surviving trustee devised and bequeathed the trust estates to A., B., and C., upon the trusts of the first will:—Held, that this devise, and the appointment of A., B., and C. as trustees, were valid. Ib.

A devise by a sole surviving devisee in trust of all estates which at his decease might be vested in him as trustee, and which he could devise without breach of trust to A. W., her heirs and assigns, upon the trusts affecting the same respectively:—Held, to pass the trust estates to the devisee A. W. Beasley v. Wilkinson, 13 Jur. 649.

Where the surviving trustee of a will devised the trust estate upon the same trusts on which he held:—Held, that the cestuis que trust were entitled to have new trustees appointed of the original will. Ockleston v. Heap, 1 De G. & Sm. 641.

Semble, that Cooke v. Crawford (13 Sim. 91; 11 L. J., Ch. 406) has been misunderstood; a trustee can, and it may often be his duty to devise a trust estate, to prevent the legal estate from vesting in a lunatic or a person out of the jurisdiction, or in any other person who ought not to be a trustee. Wilson v. Bennett, 5 De G. & Sm. 475; 21 L. J., Ch. 741; 16 Jur. 966.

Bequest by Surviving Trustee—Leaseholds given to Trustees, their Executors and Administrators.]—Bequest to A. and B., their executors and administrators, upon trust. B., the surviving trustee, by his will bequeathed his trust estates to C. and D., their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, on the trusts; and he appointed C., D., and E. executors of his will:—Held, that C. and D. took only the legal estate, and that neither C. and D. by themselves, nor C., D., and E. were capable of executing the trusts. Burtt's Estate, In re, 1 Drew. 319.

—— No Power in Will to appoint New Trustees.]—The survivor of two executors and trustees bequeathed the trust property to A., upon the trusts declared by the original testator, expressing by the same instrument his wish that A. would execute the trusts with fidelity. No direction was given by the will of the original testator as to the appointment of new trustees. On a bill by the cestuis que trust for that purpose:—Held, that A., though legally in the possession of the trust property, was not a trustee properly constituted, and that the cestuis que trust were entitled to have new trustees appointed by the court. Mortimer v. Ireland, 6 Hare, 196; 16 L. J., Ch. 416; 11 Jur. 721.

Action against Trustee — Assignee Necessary Party.]—Bill against a trustee who has assigned his trust; the assignee ought to be made a party as the decree should be first against him, and the trustee to stand as a security. Burt v. Dennet, 2 Bro. C. C. 225.

Assignment of Nomination of Preacher.]—A., being impropriator of a parish, demised part of the tithes to certain parishioners as trustees for 1,900 years, who re-demised it to him for 999 years under the yearly rent of 50*l.*, payable to the trustees as a provision for a preacher, to be nominated by the trustees. The heir of A. afterwards sold the rectory to B., and the representative of the surviving trustee was prevailed upon to assign to B. the right of nominating a preacher. From the date of the original demise, and for forty years after the latter transaction, the preacher was constantly nominated by the parishioners; but upon a contest between them and B. it was held that the right of nomination was absolutely in the trustees, and that the assignment of that right was a breach of trust; and directions were given by the house of lords for the re-establishment of the trust in trustees, to be impartially chosen. Foley v. Att.-Gen., 7 Bro. P. C. 249.

—— Nomination to Church.]—A., seised of the manor and patronage of W. by his will gives 100*l.* per annum rent-charge, and the advowson to six trustees, and those trustees, when reduced, to choose others; B., the only surviving trustee, assigns his trust to others who nominate to the church, being a donative: decreed, the assignees of the trust, though the assignment was made by one only who survived, had the right to nominate to the church, and not the owner of the manor. Att.-Gen. v. Floyer, 2 Vern. 748.

iii. Under Statute.

Statute.]—Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 30; Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), s. 12.

Bare Trustee—Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874—Land Transfer Act, 1875.]—When a surviving trustee of real estate had died intestate after the passing of the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, 37 & 38 Vict. c. 78, and prior to the commencement of the Land Transfer Act, 1875, 38 & 39 Vict. c. 87, the legal estate vested in his heir-at-law notwithstanding the provision of the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, s. 5. Christie v. Ovington, 1 Ch. D. 279; 24 W. R. 204.

Semble, a person to whose fiduciary office no duties were originally attached, or who, although such duties were originally attached to his office, would, on the requisition of his cestui que trust, be compellable in equity to convey the estate to them, or by their direction, is a bare trustee within the meaning of s. 48 of the Land Transfer Act, 1875. Ib.

A trustee with a beneficial interest in the trust estate is not a "bare trustee" within the Land Transfer Act, 1875, s. 48. Morgan v. Swansea Urban Sanitary Authority, 9 Ch. D. 582.

—— Unpaid Vendor.]—Thus a vendor of freeholds who let the purchaser into possession before payment of the purchase-money and execution of the conveyance was, by reason of his having a lien on the property for his purchase-money and not being bound to convey until payment, held not to be a "bare trustee" within the act, so that upon his death, the money still remaining unpaid and the conveyance unexecuted the legal estate passed to his heir-at-law. Ib.

Quære, whether a trustee without any beneficial interest in the trust estate, but having active duties to perform in relation thereto, is a "bare trustee" within the act. Ib. And see Cunningham v. Frayling, post, col. 556.

Declaration of Trust by Equitable Mortgagor—Power to Remove Mortgagor and Appoint New Trustees—Legal Mortgagee—Notice of Trust.]—A declaration in an equitable mortgage that the mortgagor, in whom the legal estate is vested, will hold all his estate and interest in trust for the equitable mortgagee, followed by an authority to the equitable mortgagee to remove the mortgagor from being a trustee, appoint new trustees, and vest all the mortgagor's estate and interest in them by declaration, enables the equitable mortgagee, by virtue of s. 12 of the Trustee Act, 1893, to divest the legal estate out of a subsequent legal mortgage with notice of the trust, and to set it up against a prior incumbrancer of whose charge the equitable mortgagee has only received notice since the date of his own equitable mortgage. London and County Banking Co. v. Goddard, 66 L. J., Ch. 261 ; [1897] 1 Ch. 642 ; 76 L. T. 277 ; 45 W. R. 310.

Section 12 of the Trustee Act, 1893, applies to bare trustees. The exception of mortgages for securing trust money from the operation of s. 12, and the exclusion of "the duties incident to an estate conveyed by way of mortgage" from "trust," as defined by s. 50, explained. Ib.

4. Retirement and Removal of Trustees.

a. Retiring Trustees.

Statute.]—Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), s. 11.

i. In General.

No Person ready to accept Trust.]—A trustee who is entitled to be discharged from his trust is bound to show that there is some person ready to accept the trust. If no person will accept the trust, the court may be obliged to keep the trustee before it, and not discharge him ; but it will take care that the trustee shall not suffer thereby. Courtenay v. Courtenay, 3 Jo. & Lat. 519 ; 9 Ir. Eq. R. 329.

Whether a trustee who has accepted the trust, and committed no breach, can, by filing a bill, get discharged if no other fit person can be found to act, and cestui que trust will not consent to his discharge, quære. Ardill v. Savage, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 79.

Trustee Withdrawing.]—Trustee cannot, by any act of his own, denude himself of that character till he has performed his trust. Chalmers v. Bradley, 1 J. & W. 68.

A trustee cannot withdraw from his trust unless under a provision to that effect. Manson v. Baillie, 2 Macq. H. L. 80.

Mere Caprice—Costs.]—A trustee cannot, from mere caprice, retire from the performance of his trust without paying the costs occasioned. But circumstances arising in the administration of a trust which have altered the nature of his duties, justify him in leaving it, and entitle him to his costs. Forshaw v. Higginson, 20 Beav. 485.

Want of Confidence in Co-Trustee.]—The want of confidence in a co-trustee is a ground for asking to be relieved from the administration of trusts. Ib.

A trustee was desirous of retiring, and was justified in so doing, though from private circumstances ; his cestui que trust having prevented him retiring, he instituted a suit to administer the trusts. He was allowed his costs. Ib.

The costs of evidence arising out of personal transactions between trustees will not be allowed to them, or charged on the trust fund. Ib.

The personal costs of the cestuis que trust in respect of this evidence must be borne by themselves ; but in a case where no one objected, they were allowed out of the trust fund. Ib.

A trustee desirous of retiring, by reason of his want of confidence in his co-trustee, cannot safely effect his object by getting such co-trustee to appoint a new trustee in his place, under a power vested in him for that purpose. Ib.

Unexpected Questions Arising.]—Trustees are not entitled as against the trust estate capriciously to refuse to continue ; but if they find the trust estate involved in complicated questions, not in contemplation when they undertook the trust, they have a right to come to the court to be relieved from it. Greenwood v. Wakeford, 1 Beav. 576 ; 8 L. J., Ch. 333.

Bill by Trustee to be Removed.] — The trustees of a marriage settlement, being desirous of retiring from the trusts in consequence of the responsibility to which they were exposed by the acts of the tenant for life, in repeatedly charging the trust estates and funds with annuities and other incumbrances, filed a bill to be discharged from the trusts, and for the appointment of new trustees under the direction of the court. The court granted the relief sought by the bill, and ordered the costs to be paid out of the interest of the tenant for life. Coventry v. Coventry, 1 Keen, 758 ; 6 L. J., Ch. 275.

A trustee thirty years after his appointment, when one of his colleagues, the acting trustee, had died, was, upon a bill filed by him :—Held, entitled to be relieved from the trusts of the settlement. Gardiner v. Downes, 22 Beav. 395 ; 25 L. J., Ch. 881 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 847 ; 4 W. R. 621.

Held, also, that he was, as trustee, entitled to the costs of the suit, as between solicitor and client, and also to his costs, charges, and expenses. Ib.

Bill by trustee to be removed filed against cestui que trust. In England a trustee after he has acted is never removed at his own desire. It is done in Ireland, but the trustee must do it at his own expense. He must pay the costs of the suit. Hamilton v. Fry, 2 Moll. 458.

—— Trustee desiring to be Discharged on Account of Failing Health.]—A trustee of a marriage settlement (which contained the usual power for the appointment of new trustees in place of any desiring to be discharged, &c.) applied, on account of his failing health, to the donee of the power to appoint a new trustee in his place. He neglected to do so for sixteen months, alleging that no person willing to act could be found. No embarrassment had arisen in the execution of the trusts :—Held, that he was entitled to be discharged, but that failing health alone, where the trusts were of a formal character, was not a sufficient reason for his seeking to resign so as to entitle him to costs. Richardson v. Grubb, 16 W. R. 176 :—Held, also, that he must pay the costs of being released from his trusteeship and of the petition. Ib.

—— No Reason given for Resignation.] — By deed, a mortgage debt, being money invested by the settlor upon the security of the estate of his nephew, was assigned to the plaintiff and two other persons, who were a brother and a brother-in-law of the mortgagor, upon trust for the settlor for life, and then for the children of the mortgagor. The settlement contained a power of appointing new trustees in the place of any desiring to be discharged. The plaintiff claimed to be discharged by the court, and that a new trustee should be appointed in his place. His co-trustees had refused to exercise the power, and now appeared by counsel, and refused to act with any other trustee in the plaintiff's stead, and if he retired, desired to retire also:—Held, that the plaintiff and his co-trustees were entitled to be discharged, but as the plaintiff had shown no reason, in the circumstances of the trust, for his resignation, no costs of his application were given to him. Costs of the other trustees out of the estate. Porter v. Watts, 21 L. J., Ch. 211; 16 Jur. 737. And see Howard v. Rhodes, 1 Keen, 581; 6 L. J., Ch. 196.

ii. Rights of Retiring Trustees.

To have Accounts Taken.]—When a trustee retires, and new trustees are appointed by the court, the retiring trustee is entitled to have the accounts taken. Nott v. Foster, 15 Jur. 3.

Money in the funds belonging to wards of the court cannot be transferred into the name of the accountant-general, to the credit of the cause, until the account is taken by a master, and his report made. This does not mean that such a transfer cannot be made, but that it could not operate as an acquittance and discharge of the trustees until they had passed their accounts. Bencraft v. Rich, 1 Bro. C. C. 56, and note there.

Copy of Settlement and Deed of Appointment.]—A retiring trustee is not entitled to an attested copy of the settlement under which he was a trustee, or to a duplicate of the deed of appointment of new trustees (except at his own expense). The defendant in this case was the executor of the surviving trustee of a settlement of 1821. The plaintiffs were by a deed of 1851 duly appointed new trustees. The defendant refused to transfer the settled funds to the new trustees, unless an attested copy of the original settlement and a duplicate of the deed of 1851 were given him at the expense of the estate, though he had had a copy of the latter deed, which he had compared with the original:—Held, that he was not entitled to make the demand, and he was refused his costs. Warter v. Anderson, 1 Eq. R. 266; 11 Hare, 301; 1 W. R. 493.

Quære, whether if the trustee offered to pay for the duplicate copy, and the means of furnishing it existed, but the request was refused, the court would not say the request was reasonable. Ib.

Effect of Assignment.]—Where executors and trustees have made an assignment on the appointment of a new trustee, they lose their character of executors, and become trustees only. Smith v. Smith, 1 Dr. & Sm. 384; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 652; 4 L. T. 44; 9 W. R. 405.

iii. Liabilities of Retiring Trustees.

Material Facts not brought to Notice of Court.]—The existence of a suit in which an appointment of trust funds made in execution of a power is before the court, and directions consequential thereto have been obtained, and the trustees retire and are succeeded by others, but in which material facts connected with such appointment of the trust funds are not brought to the knowledge of the court, does not protect the retiring trustees from the liabilities which result from such facts if they involve a breach of trust, but, on the contrary, renders such breach of trust inexcusable. Harrison v. Randall, 9 Hare, 397; 21 L. J., Ch. 294; 16 Jur. 72.

Assigning to a Continuing Trustee.]—Where a settlement requires that a retiring trustee should assign the property to the continuing trustee, and that a new trustee should be chosen in the place of the retiring trustee, and there is no power to appoint a sole trustee, then, if a retiring trustee assign the trust property to a continuing trustee, and he, in abuse of his trust, dispose of it, the retiring trustee is answerable. Wilkinson v. Parry, 4 Russ. 272.

Incomplete Appointment of New Trustee.]—The incomplete appointment of a new trustee will leave the retiring trustee responsible for any breach of trust committed by the intended new trustee. Pearce v. Pearce, 22 Beav. 248; 25 L. J., Ch. 893; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 843.

A retiring trustee is not justified in signing a power of attorney for the transfer of stock to a continuing and new trustee before the appointment has been completed. Ib.

A trustee not duly appointed who joins in doing acts which enable a breach of trust to be committed, will be responsible to the extent of the money which has come to her hands. Ib.

Breach of Trust by New Trustees.]—Where trustees denude themselves of a trust under circumstances that warrant a reasonable belief of the insecurity of the trust funds in the hands of those to whom they commit them, they will not be considered as having validly discharged themselves of the custody of the trust funds, or released themselves from responsibility; it is, however, the duty of the court to protect them, unless there be a case proved by incontrovertible testimony of their negligence or misconduct. Webster v. Le Hunt, 8 Jur. (N.S.) 345; 4 L. T 72; 9 W. R. 918.

A bill was filed against the retiring trustees of a marriage settlement, seeking to make them liable for a breach of trust committed by the new trustees, who had, immediately after the trust had been transferred to them, sold out certain stock, and paid the proceeds to the tenant for life. It was alleged that the retiring trustee had been cautioned that the tenant for life had concocted a scheme with the new trustees to obtain possession of the fund, and the fact that such caution was so given was deposed to by the tenant for life. Kindersley, V.-C., made a decree holding the retiring trustees responsible for the loss of the fund. On appeal, the decision was reversed on the ground that there was no evidence to corroborate the testimony of the tenant for life, and, as he was a party to the fraud no reliance ought to be placed on his unsupported statement. Ib.

Assignment of Policy to Single New Trustee.]—By a marriage settlement the husband assigned a policy of assurance on his life to the two trustees of the settlement, and covenanted to pay the premiums. One trustee disclaimed, and the other, by assigning the policy to a single new trustee, enabled the husband to mortgage and dispose of the policy and a bonus thereon:—Held, that such breach of trust being an act of commission and not of omission only, the trustee so assigning to the new trustee was liable to pay to the trust estate the money actually received for the policy. Kingdon v. Castleman, 46 L. J., Ch. 448; 36 L. T. 141; 25 W. R. 345.

Trustee Retiring to Enable Breach of Trust to be Committed.]—In order to fix a trustee with the consequences of a breach of trust on the ground that, though himself refusing to be a party to it, he has retired in order to enable it to be committed, the particular improper act which was in contemplation at the date of his retirement must be committed, and he will not be held liable for another analogous breach of trust which the parties in whose favour he retires may immediately on his retirement commit or sanction. Clark v. Hoskins, 37 L. J., Ch. 561; 19 L. T. 331; 16 W. R. 1159—L.JJ.

Therefore, where trustees of a settlement which contained a power to raise money on the security of the settled estates for repairs refused a request of the tenant for life to exercise the power on the ground that the money was wanted, not for the repairs, but for the general purposes of the tenant for life, but retired in favour of more accommodating trustees, who did not raise any money under the settlement, but delivered the title-deeds to the tenant for life in order that she might deal with the estate as her own, and suppress the settlement, and she borrowed money accordingly of the plaintiff:—Held, that the retiring trustees were not liable to make good the advances of the plaintiff, and a bill to make them liable was, as against them, dismissed with costs. But a decree was made against the tenant for life and the new trustees, and also against the solicitor of the tenant for life, who had advised and participated in what had been done, though avowedly aware throughout of the fraudulent nature of the transaction. Ib.

Trustee Retiring on False Representation as to Sum due on Bond.]—H. W., as trustee of a marriage settlement, held a bond to secure 1,200*l.* W., his brother, who was a specialty creditor of the obligor, obtained possession of the obligor's assets, and applied them in payment of his own debt and of simple contract debts before administration, which was afterwards granted to the obligor's widow, the sister of W., who was entirely guided by his advice and under his control. Subsequently W. represented to H. W. that only the sum of 600*l.* was forthcoming on foot of the bond. H. W., acting on this statement, retired from the trust, and a memorandum was endorsed on the trust deed, signed by the administratrix and the tenant for life of the trust fund, stating that the sum of 600*l.* only was available to pay the bond, and W. was appointed trustee of the marriage settlement in place of H. W. The assets of the obligor would have been, if properly administered, sufficient to pay the bond in full:—Held, that W. and H. W. were both liable to the full amount of the bond, but that W.'s assets (he having died) were primarily answerable, as he had received the trust fund. Fetherstone H. v. West, Ir. R. 6 Eq. 86.

Held, also, that in such a state of facts it was not necessary to take an account of the assets of the obligor. Ib.

D. gave his estates real and personal to A., B. and C., upon trust to hold the proceeds after conversion as to one-fourth part of the net residue for his daughter Ann, afterwards the wife of B., for her separate, inalienable use during her life, remainder for her children as she should appoint, and failing appointment among the children equally, and as to another one-fourth part of the residue for the testator's daughter Susan, afterwards the wife of A., for her separate use during her life, remainder for her children as she should appoint, and failing appointment among such last-mentioned children equally. A., the surviving trustee of a fund, one moiety of which was settled upon his wife and children, and the other moiety upon the wife and children of B., in exercise of a power in the settlement, appointed B. sole trustee of the fund, taking an indemnity from him, and retained the other half in his own name. B. sold out and misapplied the moiety of the fund transferred to him, and became bankrupt. A.'s solicitor, D., advised him against the appointment of B. as sole trustee, but prepared the deeds of appointment and indemnity, and was even present at the transfer of the funds from A. to B., the husband of Ann. P. had approved the deed of appointment on behalf of B. and wife, but was not otherwise acquainted with the trust. On a bill filed by Ann's children against A., D. and P.:—Held, that P. was not liable, that D. was not liable, but that A. was liable to replace the principal. Barnes v. Addy, 43 L. J., Ch. 513; L. R. 9 Ch. 244; 30 L. T. 4; 22 W. R. 505.

b. Removal of Trustees.

Statutes.]—Trustee Act, 1893, s. 25; Judicial Trustee Act, 1896, s. 1.

By Court—Under Trustee Acts.]—Where A. was nominated trustee and executor of a will, upon a petition presented for his removal under 1 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 22, stating that the will had been produced and shown to A., and read by him previously to its having been executed by the testator in his lifetime; and that A. had thereupon approved thereof and consented to act as such trustee, but that subsequently to the testator's death he had declined to interfere in the trusts of the will, the court made an order for his removal, and referred it to the remembrancer to approve of a proper person to be appointed trustee in his place. Crook v. Ingoldsby, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 375.

The court has not power under the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 60, s. 32, to remove a trustee. Garty's Settlement, In re, 3 N. R. 636; 10 L. T. 331.

The 13 & 14 Vict. c. 60, does not, by s. 32, give power to the court of chancery to remove a trustee who is unwilling to retire; but such a trustee is entitled to have his accounts taken in the presence of all parties interested, so that they may be bound, and to have any balance due to him ascertained and paid in the same manner as before the act. Blanchard, In re, 3 De G. F. & J. 131; 30 L. J., Ch. 516; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 505; 4 L. T. 426; 9 W. R. 647.

The court will not under the trustee act order the removal of a trustee merely on the ground of his having gone out of the jurisdiction. Mais, In re, 21 L. J., Ch. 875; 16 Jur. 608.

General Jurisdiction of Court.]—There is a jurisdiction in courts of equity to remove old trustees and substitute new ones in cases requiring such a remedy. The main principle on which such jurisdiction should be exercised is the welfare of the beneficiaries and of the trust estate. The court below refused to remove certain trustees on the application of the cestui que trust. On appeal :—Held, that the trustees must, in the special circumstances of the case, be removed without costs of appeal, the appellant having persisted in charges of fraud which the evidence did not sustain. Letterstedt v. Broers, 53 L. J., P. C. 44 ; 9 App. Cas. 371 ; 51 L. T. 169—P. C.

—— Solicitor Trustee — Summary Jurisdiction.]—A trustee who is a solicitor cannot be removed under the jurisdiction of the court of chancery over solicitors, that jurisdiction being exercised only in respect of acts done by a solicitor in that character, or in some relation immediately arising out of it. Blanchard, In re, and Le Doulcet's Mortgage, In re, 3 De G. F. & J. 131 ; 30 L. J., Ch. 516 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 505 ; 4 L. T. 426 ; 9 W. R. 647.

—— Failure of Duty from Misunderstanding.]—Failure of duty from misunderstanding not a ground of removal. Att.-Gen. v. Coopers' Co. 19 Ves. 492.

—— Trustee of Lunatic renewing Lease.]—If trustee of lunatic renews lease for his own benefit, it is a breach of trust, and he will be discharged. Phelp, Ex parte, 9 Mod. 357.

—— Dissension between one Cestui que Trust and Trustee.]—The mere fact of there being a dissension between one of several cestuis que trust and the trustee is not sufficient ground for removing the trustee from the trust. Forster v. Davies, 4 De G. F. & J. 133 ; 31 L. J., Ch. 276 ; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 65 ; 5 L. T. 532 ; 10 W. R. 180.

The expression attributed to the lord chancellor, in Att.-Gen. v. Hardy (1 Sim. (N.S.) 338) with respect to the removal of dissentient trustees observed upon. Att.-Gen. v. Clapham, 4 De G. M. & G. 591 ; 3 Eq. R. 702 ; 24 L. J., Ch. 177 ; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 505 ; 3 W. R. 158.

A reason for not appointing a person to be a trustee may not be a ground to remove him if already appointed. S. C., 10 Hare, 613 ; 2 Eq. R. 91 ; 23 L. J., Ch. 70 ; 2 W. R. 28.

—— Corporation Trustee of Debenture Trust-deed.]—The defendant corporation was the trustee of a debenture trust-deed. A large majority of debenture holders brought an action to have the corporation removed from being trustee. The corporation had suggested that their salary should be increased, but had withdrawn the suggestion on the objection of the company. Petitions had been presented to wind up the corporation, who had been in financial difficulties, but their difficulties had been surmounted and the petitions withdrawn, and they were now solvent and working efficiently, and it did not appear that the interest of the debenture-holders had suffered or been in danger :—Held, that no sufficient cause had been shown for removing the corporation from being trustee. Assets Realisation Co. v. Trustees, Executors, and Securities Insurance Corporation, 65 L. J., Ch. 74 ; 44 W. R. 126.

—— Woman who had Married a Foreigner.]—Decree discharging from a trust a woman who had married a foreigner, though the answer denied any intention of quitting the kingdom, and stating her desire of continuing the trust. Lake v. De Lambert, 4 Ves. 592.

—— Refusal to Concur in Sale or to Retire.]—The defendant was one of two trustees for sale of an estate, the produce of which was divisible amongst persons sui juris. He refused to concur in a sale agreed upon by his cestuis que trust until he had been furnished with deeds, &c., relating to another and an independent trust, and to which the court held that he was not entitled. He also refused to retire from the trusts to facilitate the sale. Upon a bill by the other trustees and the persons beneficially interested, he was removed from the trusts and ordered to pay the costs of the suit. Palairet v. Carew, 32 Beav. 564 ; 32 L. J., Ch. 508 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 426 ; 8 L. T. 139 ; 11 W. R. 449.

Trustee and Executor—No Personal Estate remaining Unadministered.]— The fact that a trustee is also one of the executors of the settlor does not prevent his removal from the trust, where there is no personal estate remaining unadministered, and the executors have converted themselves into trustees, and hold no property by virtue of their office of executor. Stamford (Earl) In re, Payne v. Stamford, 65 L. J., Ch. 134 ; [1896] 1 Ch. 288 ; 73 L. T. 559 ; 44 W. R. 249.

—— Retirement of Trustee and Appointment by him of excluded Trustee for a Consideration.]—A testator appointed two trustees and executors of his will, but by a codicil he excluded them, and appointed two other persons. One of these retired in consideration of 75*l.* paid to him by one of the excluded trustees, and executed a deed appointing the excluded trustee in his room. The court directed the new trustee to be removed and the deed to be cancelled, declared the conveyance to be void, and directed the 75*l.* to form part of the assets. Sugden v. Crossland, 3 Sm. & G. 192 ; 25 L. J., Ch. 563 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 318 ; 4 W. R. 343.

—— Wanton Refusal to Act and Receive Dividends—Costs.]—Where the representative of a deceased trustee made a suit necessary by a wanton refusal to act in the trust, and to receive the dividends of the trust fund :—Held, she was entitled to the costs of a bill filed to remove her and appoint other trustees. Legg v. Mackrell, 2 De G. F. & J. 551 ; 4 L. T. 568. Reversing 1 Giff. 165 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1154.

Removal of Bankrupt Trustees.]—See BANKRUPTCY.

—— Charity Trustees.]—See CHARITY.

Practice.]—In an action to remove a trustee, the defendant having failed to file an affidavit of documents, his defence was struck out, and an order was afterwards made, on motion for judgment as in default of pleading, removing him from the office of trustee, and vesting his estate in the other trustees. Fisher v. Hughes, 25 W. R. 528.

Charges of vexatious conduct, as a ground for the removal of a trustee, must be made by bill, and not by petition. Bridgman, In re, 1 Dr. & Sm. 164 ; 2 L. T. 560 ; 8 W. R. 598.

In a bill for the removal of a trustee, it is not scandalous or impertinent to challenge every act of trustee's misconduct. Portsmouth (Earl) v. Fellows, 5 Madd. 450 ; 21 R. R. 335.

Nor to impute to him any corrupt or improper motive in execution of trust. Ib.

Nor to allege that his conduct is the vindictive consequence of some act on the part of the cestui que trust, or of some change in his situation. Ib.

But it is impertinent, and may be scandalous, to state any circumstances as evidence of general malice or personal hostility. Ib.

No prayer for the removal of trustees is necessary to give the court authority to remove them. Att.-Gen. v. Drummond, 3 Dr. & War. 162; 2 Con. & L. 98.

The court will not, upon petition, remove a trustee who has accepted the trust but refuses to continue to act. A bill must be filed for the purpose, the costs of which will be cast on the trustee if it appear that he has improperly refused to act. Anon, 4 Ir. Eq. R. 700.

5. Appointment of New Trustees.

a. Under Powers in Settlement.

i. Who may Exercise Power.

Appointment by Recital in Deed.]—A will contained a power for the trustees or trustee thereof to appoint new trustees. The trust property comprised a renewable release. After the death of the testator a renewal of the lease was granted to four persons, who had not been appointed trustees of the will, but who in the lease granted to them were described as "the present trustees" of the will. The surviving trustee and executor of the will was a party to this deed, and the demise was expressed to be made by his direction:—Held, on the authority of Poulson v. Wellington (2 P. Wms. 533), that this statement in the renewed lease operated as an appointment of the four lessees to be trustees of the will. Farnell's Settled Estates, In re, 33 Ch. D. 599; 35 W. R. 250.

A settlement contained a proviso that in case either of the trustees should die or become unwilling to act in the trusts, it should be lawful for the acting trustees or trustee for the time being, or the executors or administrators of any surviving trustee, to nominate any fit person to supply the place or places of the trustee or trustees respectively so dying or becoming unwilling to act. On the death of one trustee, the survivor executed a deed reciting that he was desirous of retiring from the trust, and that he had appointed another person to be a trustee in his place, and conveying the trust property to such new trustee:—Held, that the surviving trustee had power to nominate a sole trustee to act in his place, and that the appointment by recital was good. Miller v. Priddon, 1 De G. M. & G. 335; 21 L. J., Ch. 421.

Refusal of Sole Trustee to appoint Co-trustee.]—A sole continuing trustee under a will which contained a power to appoint new trustees so worded as to contemplate the possibility of there being a sole trustee, was held justified in refusing to appoint a co-trustee with himself, although required to do so by a cestui que trust; and a trust fund which, under an order of the court below, he had paid into court, was ordered to be paid out to him alone. Peacock v. Colling, 54 L. J., Ch. 743; 53 L. T. 620; 33 W. R. 528—C. A.

Alienation of Interest by Donee of Power.]—A power to appoint new trustees may be exercised by a tenant for life after alienating his interest. By a settlement, property partly real and partly personal was conveyed to trustees upon trust to provide an annuity for A., a widow, for life, and subject thereto, for B., her son, absolutely. The settlement provided that B. during his life, and after his death the trustees or trustee for the time being, or the executors or administrators of the last acting trustee, should have power to appoint new trustees, if necessary. B. mortgaged his whole interest under the settlement, and the real estate (subject to A.'s annuity) was sold by the mortgagees to C. The personal estate was not sold by the mortgagees:—Held, that B. could still exercise the power to appoint new trustees, without the consent of C. Hardaker v. Moorhouse, 53 L. J., Ch. 713; 26 Ch. D. 417; 50 L. T. 554; 32 W. R. 638.

Surviving Trustee Residing Abroad.]—Under a power enabling a surviving or continuing trustee to appoint a new trustee in the place of a trustee dying, going to reside abroad, becoming incapable of acting, &c., the surviving trustee, although himself residing abroad, may appoint another trustee in the place of the one deceased. O'Reilly v. Alderson, 8 Hare, 101.

Married Woman entitled under Marriage Articles.]—A lady being entitled to a sum, payable at a future time, out of her father's estates, it was agreed, by articles on her marriage, that in the settlement to be made in pursuance thereof a power should be inserted for her father in his lifetime, or his executors within six months after the sum should be payable, to invest that sum in the names of the trustees to be appointed for the purpose, and for the trustees, with the consent of the husband and wife, or the survivor, or of their own authority, as the case should happen, to change the securities, the trusts of the fund being for the husband for his life, then to the wife for her life, then to the children. No settlement was executed, and the father and the husband died before the fund was invested, leaving the wife surviving and four children:—Held, that the wife had no power to appoint a trustee to receive the funds. Brasier v. Hudson, 9 Sim. 11.

Trustees Declining to Act.]—A power for the surviving or continuing trustees to appoint new trustees in the stead of any trustees dying or declining to act, does not authorise declining trustees to appoint new ones in their own stead. Nicholson v. Wright, 26 L. J., Ch. 312; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 313; 5 W. R. 431.

A trustee who had paid money into court under the 10 & 11 Vict., c. 96:—Held, to have retired from his trust, and a new trustee held to have been duly appointed in his stead, under a power for that purpose to arise in the event of a trustee "refusing or declining to act in the trusts of the settlement." Williams, In re, 4 K. & J. 87.

Acting Executors.]—A power in a settlement to a party, his executors, &c., to appoint new trustees, may, on the renunciation of one executor, be exercised by the remaining acting ones. Granville (Earl) v. M'Neile, 7 Hare, 156; 18 L. J., Ch. 164; 13 Jur. 252.

Disclaiming Trustees—Appointment by continuing Trustee.]—The testator appointed A., B. and C. executors and trustees of his will, providing that if either of them, or any succeeding trustee or trustees, should die, or refuse or neglect or become incapable to act in the trust, it should be lawful to and for the survivor of them, the said A., B. and C., and such new trustee or trustees to be nominated in their or either of their stead, to appoint a new trustee or new trustees instead of the said A., B. and C., or either of them, or any future trustee or trustees so dying or desiring to be discharged, or refusing or neglecting or becoming incapable to act as aforesaid. A. having disclaimed the trust, and B. having died, C. alone, though not the survivor of A., B. and C., appointed new trustees under the power:—Held, that the new trustees were well appointed. Cafe v. Bent, 5 Hare 24; 9 Jur. 653.

—— Subsequent Exercise of Power by Renouncing Trustee.]—A trustee of a will who had formally renounced that character by a deed which purported (but ineffectually) to appoint a successor, being applied to eleven years afterwards to join with his original co-trustee in a deed purporting to be an exercise of a discretionary power which could only be exercised by the two trustees of the will for the time being, refused to do so, without an indemnity, but ultimately, on being indemnified, executed the deed:—Held, that he could not resume his position as trustee for such a purpose, and that, even if he could, his execution of the deed, under the circumstances stated, could be regarded only as a mere formal act, and not as an exercise of that discretion which was essential to a due execution of such a power. Lancashire v. Lancashire, 2 Ph. 657. Affirming 1 De G. & Sm. 288; 11 Jur. 1024.

—— Settlement in Scotch Form—One Trustee Disclaiming.]—Estates were vested by a settlement, in the Scotch form, in two trustees, each of whom was empowered to nominate any other person to succeed him in the trust after his decease. One trustee disclaimed; the other trustee appointed by his will three persons to succeed him:—Held, that they were duly appointed. Sands v. Nugee, 8 Sim. 130; 5 L. J., Ch. 329.

Retiring Trustees.]—A settlement contained a power for the tenant for life during his life, and after his decease for the surviving or continuing trustees or trustee, or the executors or administrators of the last acting trustee, to appoint any other person or persons to be a trustee or trustees, in the stead of any trustee or trustees dying, or desiring to be discharged, &c. There were two trustees named in the will, both of whom were desirous of being discharged after the death of the tenant for life. They accordingly executed an indenture whereby they appointed two new trustees in their place, and conveyed the trust property to them accordingly:—Held, that the power had not been properly executed. Stones v. Rowton, 17 Beav. 308; 1 Eq. R. 427; 22 L. J., Ch. 975; 17 Jur. 750; 1 W. R. 499.

A testator appointed three trustees, and empowered "the surviving or continuing trustee or trustees" to appoint new trustees. Two of the trustees disclaimed; the third acted, and by deed, reciting that he "now declined to act," appointed new trustees:—Held, that such retiring trustee was not a surviving or continuing trustee within the power, and that the appointment was invalid. Travis v. Illingworth 2 Dr. & Sm. 344; 5 N. R. 427; 34 L. J., Ch. 481; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 215; 12 L. T. 134; 13 W. R. 489. And see Coates to Parsons, In re, post, col. 568.

Two trustees were originally appointed by a settlement, which contained a power that if the trustees or either of them should be desirous of being discharged, the tenant for life, "and after his decease, the surviving or continuing trustees or trustee," might appoint any other person or persons to be a trustee or trustees, in the stead of the trustee or trustees so desiring to be discharged:—Held, that this did not authorise the two original trustees, after the death of the tenant for life, to retire together and appoint two new trustees in their stead. Ib.

New Trustee.]—A testator, after devising real estate to two trustees and bequeathing his personal estate to his wife and the same two trustees, declared that if any of the trustees thereby appointed, or to be appointed as thereinafter mentioned, should depart this life, or decline or become incapable to act, it should be lawful for the surviving or continuing trustee for the time being, or the executors, &c., of such survivor, but with the consent of his (the testator's) said wife during her widowhood, to appoint one or more person or persons to be a trustee or trustees in the room of the trustee or trustees so dying, or declining or becoming incapable to act; and thereupon the said trust estates, moneys and premises should be vested in the same trustee or trustees, solely or jointly with the continuing trustee or trustees as occasion should require; and that such new trustee should have the same powers, &c., as if he or they had been originally nominated a trustee or trustees. A new trustee having been appointed in the place of one who died, and having survived the widow and the other original trustee:—Held, that he was authorised under the power to appoint two new trustees. Hillman v. Westwood, 3 Eq. R. 142; 24 L. J., Ch. 57; 3 W. R. 41.

By a marriage settlement, a policy and moneys thereby assured were assigned to four trustees on the trusts of the settlement, with power to the husband and wife, on and after the death of the survivor, or the continuing trustee, or, in case there should be no continuing trustee, for the retiring trustee, in case the trustees should die, or desire to be discharged, to appoint new trustees; and the estate should thereon be assigned, so as to vest in such trustee jointly with the former trustees; and in case there should be no former continuing trustee, then in such new trustee or trustees only. Two of the trustees being dead and two desirous of retiring, three new trustees were appointed, of whom one being afterwards desirous of retiring, a new trustee was appointed:—Held, a valid exercise of the power. Emmet v. Clarke, 3 Giff. 32; 30 L. J., Ch. 472; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 404; 4 L. T. 319; 9 W. R. 515.

E. M. N. and his wife, under a power in their marriage settlement, directed the trustees, after the decease of the survivor of them, to receive a sum of 3,000*l.*, and pay it to their three daughters equally. F. M. N., one of the daughters, upon her marriage with S. D., assigned all her interest in the appointed fund, by way of settlement, to C. R. and T. L. Upon C. R. requiring to be discharged from being a trustee, T. L., who had never accepted the trusts, executed a deed of disclaimer, upon which

B. W. N. and J. N. were appointed trustees in the place of C. R. and T. L., and C. R. assigned the trust fund to them; but the trustees of the original settlement alleged that T. L. had accepted the trusts, and that B. W. N. and J. N. were not trustees, and they refused to pay the share of F. M. N. to them:—Held, upon a bill filed by B. W. N. and J. N., that they were duly appointed trustees; and upon an objection for want of parties, that the cestuis que trust and T. L. were not necessary parties to the suit; that the capital and dividends of F. M. N.'s share ought to be transferred to the trustees; that the costs of the suit ought to be paid out of the trust funds; and that the defendant was not entitled to any costs of the objection for want of parties, but that the plaintiffs were entitled to their costs out of the trust funds. Noble v. Meymott, 14 Beav. 471; 20 L. J., Ch. 612.

Disclaimer of Trust except Power of Nominating Trustees.]—A testatrix gave real and personal property to trustees, with a proviso, that if the trustees thereby appointed or to be appointed should die or decline to act, it should be lawful for the then surviving or continuing trustee, or if there should be no surviving or continuing trustee then for the trustee so declining to act, by deed to substitute or appoint any other person or persons to be a trustee or trustees in the place of the trustee or trustees so dying or declining to act. One of the two trustees died in the lifetime of the testatrix: the other survived her, and by deed disclaimed the trust, except the power of nominating other persons to be trustees; and by the same deed he appointed two persons to be trustees in the place of the trustee who had died before the testatrix and of himself:—Held, that the power had been properly executed. Hadley, Ex parte and In re, 5 De G. & Sm. 67; 21 L. J., Ch. 109; 16 Jur. 98.

Power for "Other Trustee or Trustees" to appoint—Sole Surviving Trustee himself Retiring.]—Power for "the surviving or continuing or other trustee or trustees" to appoint new trustees:—Held, that under the words "other trustee or trustees" new trustees were well appointed by the sole surviving trustee, although he was himself retiring at the same time. Camoys (Lord) v. Best, 19 Beav. 414.

Trustee Dying in Testator's Lifetime.]—Where the testator gave 300*l.* to each of three trustees who should prove and act, but if any one should die without having acted, or should refuse to act, the legacy should go to such trustees as, under the powers of the will, should be appointed in their place, two died in the testator's lifetime, and, under a decree in a suit for administration, two others having been proposed by the survivor and appointed by the master:—Held, that they were not entitled to the legacies, the power of appointing new trustees by the will being in the surviving trustee or trustees, who were to nominate, &c., and that thereupon the estate, &c., vested in the trustee dying or refusing to act, should become vested in the new trustee. &c. Quære, whether the estate, never having vested in the trustees dying in the testator's lifetime, new trustees could be appointed by the survivor under the power. Walsh v. Gladstone, 14 Sim. 2; 8 Jur. 51.

A new trustee cannot be appointed under the usual powers, in the place of one appointed by the will, who died in the lifetime of the testator. Winter v. Rudge, 15 Sim. 596.

A testator empowered his wife (who was a cestui que trust under his will) during her life, and after her death the then surviving or continuing trustee of his will, to appoint any new trustee or trustees as often as any of his first or future trustees should die, &c. One of the trustees named in the will died before the testator:—Held, that the power did not authorise the widow to appoint a new trustee in the place of the deceased. Ib.

A testator appointed A., B. and C. to be trustees of his will, and declared that if the trustees thereby appointed, or any of them, should happen to die, it should be lawful for the surviving trustee or trustees to appoint any other person or persons to be a trustee or trustees in the place of the trustee or trustees so dying, and that, on such appointment, the trust premises should be conveyed, so that the same should be vested in the surviving trustees and such new trustees, or in such new trustees solely, on the same trusts. A. died in the lifetime of the testator:—Held, that it was the intention of the testator that there should be three trustees of his will, and that a new trustee might be appointed in the place of A. Lonsdale (Earl) v. Beckett, 4 De G. & Sm. 73; 19 L. J., Ch. 342.

Co-heiresses of last Surviving Trustee.]—By an indenture dated the 23rd of November, 1836, freehold hereditaments were conveyed to W. D. and T. P. upon trust for sale, and in the event of the death of any of the trustees thereby appointed or to be appointed as thereinafter mentioned, a power of appointing new trustees was limited to certain named persons, and, after the decease of the survivor of them, to "the acting trustees or trustee for the time being, or the executors or administrators of the last acting trustee." W. D. died in 1849. T. P. died in 1855 intestate as to trust estates, leaving T. H. P. his heir-at-law. T. H. P. died intestate in 1857, leaving T. S. H. P. his heir-at-law. T. S. H. P. died intestate in 1876, leaving three daughters his co-heiresses-at-law. None of the persons named in the deed exercised the power of appointing new trustees, and the last survivor of them died in 1889. By a deed dated the 7th of June, 1890, the three co-heiresses of T. H. S. P. appointed new trustees, who contracted to sell the property under the trust for sale. The co-heiresses did not otherwise act as trustees of the indenture of 1836:—Held, on a vendor's summons under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, that T. S. H. P. having active duties to perform was not a "bare trustee" within the meaning of section 48 of the Land Transfer Act, 1875; that the legal estate devolved upon the co-heiresses; that they were acting trustees for the time being, and consequently that their appointment of new trustees was a valid exercise of the power. Cunningham and Frayling, In re, 60 L. J., Ch. 591; [1891] 2 Ch. 567; 64 L. T. 558; 39 W. R. 469.

Sale of Trusteeship by Trustee.]—A testator by his will appointed S. and C. trustees of certain property therein comprised, which appointment he afterwards revoked by codicil, substituting H. and B. in their room. The will contained the ordinary clauses authorising the appointment by the continuing trustees or trustee of a new trustee or new trustees in the place of any dying or desiring to be discharged. Shortly after the death of the testator, C., one of the excluded trustees, paid 75*l.* to H. upon the understanding that H. should retire and that he, C., should be appointed a new trustee in his place. This arrangement was assumed to be carried into effect by an indenture made between H., B. and C., in which the pecuniary consideration was not disclosed :—Held, that this attempted execution of the power of appointment was fraudulent and void. The deed was directed to be cancelled, and the sum of 75*l.* to be paid over by H. to the cestui que trust. Sugden v. Crossland, 3 Sm. & G. 192 ; 25 L. J., Ch. 563 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 318 ; 4 W. R. 343.

Informality in Appointment of Trustees—Election of Vicar.]—By deed of trust of 1682 for the appointment of a vicar, it was declared that upon the death of any of the trustees the survivors should from time to time, when and as often as they should think fit, before the number of trustees should be reduced to the number of five, or within three months after they should be reduced to the number of four, appoint new trustees, and convey the premises to them, so as to complete the number of nine trustees. It appeared that from the date of the deed to the election of a clerk in 1840 this clause had never been strictly acted upon, though the number of trustees had generally been kept up to nine :—Held, that the informality in the appointment of the trustees did not vitiate the election. Att.-Gen. v. Cuming, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 139 ; 7 Jur. 187.

Bankruptcy of Trustee—"Unfit to Act."]—When there was a power in a settlement to appoint new trustees, in case any of the trustees therein "should become incapable, or unfit to act in the trust thereof" :—Held, that by the bankruptcy of a trustee he became "unfit to act" within the meaning of the power. Roche, In re, 2 Dr. & War. 287 ; 1 Con. & L. 306.

—— Absconding Trustee—"Incapable" of Acting.]—A power to appoint a new trustee in the place of a trustee who should become incapable to act, contemplates the personal incapacity of such trustee ; and, therefore, a trustee who had become bankrupt, and been indicted for not surrendering to the fiat, and had absconded, was held not thereby to have become "incapable" of acting in the trust within the meaning of the power. Watts's Settlement, In re, 9 Hare, 106 ; 20 L. J., Ch. 337 ; 15 Jur. 459.

—— "Person nominated for the Purpose."]—Under a marriage settlement dated March 16, 1864, a power of appointing new trustees in case any of the trustees should "die or desire to be discharged from, or refuse, decline, or become incapable to act in the execution of the trust," was given to the husband and wife or the survivor of them. One of the trustees was adjudicated bankrupt and absconded. The husband, who had survived the wife, purported in 1895, in exercise of the power given to him by the settlement and by the provisions of the Trustee Act, 1893, to appoint a new trustee in the place of the absconding trustee :—Held, that the husband, not being a person nominated to make an appointment of a new trustee in the particular event which had happened, was not "the person nominated for the purpose of appointing new trustees of the setttlement by the instrument creating the trust," within the meaning of section 10 of the Trustee Act, 1893, and therefore that the appointment which he had purported to make was invalid. Wheeler and De Rochow's Settlement Trusts, In re, 65 L. J., Ch. 219 ; [1896] 1 Ch. 315 ; 73 L. T. 661 ; 44 W. R. 270.

Lunacy of Trustee—Appointment by other Trustees.]—A power of appointing new trustees provided that if any trustees or trustee should die, or become unwilling or unable to act, the trustees or trustee for the time being, whether continuing or declining to act, might appoint a new trustee or trustees. One of the three trustees became of unsound mind, but was not so found by inquisition, and the other two appointed a new trustee in his room :—Held, that the power was well exercised. East, In re, Bellwood's Trusts, In re, 42 L. J., Ch. 480 ; L. R. 8 Ch. 735.

—— Service of Petition.]—A petition for an order vesting the trust estate in the continuing trustees and the new trustee having been presented :—Held, that service on the trustee of unsound mind was not necessary. Ib.

Trustee going out of the Jurisdiction—Incapable to Act.]—A power to appoint a new trustee on an existing one becoming incapable to act does not apply to the case of a trustee going to reside abroad. Withington v. Withington, 16 Sim. 104.

A trustee going out of the jurisdiction is not thereby incapable, unwilling, or unable to act within the terms of the power to appoint new trustees, and an application to the court is proper. But if a breach of trust has been committed, this court, though it sanctions the appointment of a new trustee, will make no order as to the trust property. Harrison's Trust, In re, 22 L. J., Ch. 69 ; 1 W. R. 58.

—— Domicile Abroad.]—In a deed of settlement of property in the city of London, it being declared, that if either of the trustees should die, or decline or become incapable to act, it should be lawful to appoint a trustee in his room. One trustee having for several years been domiciled in New York, as a bookseller :—Held, he was incapable of acting within the meaning of the deed. Mesnard v. Welford, 1 Sm. & G. 426 ; 1 Eq. R. 237 ; 22 L. J., Ch. 1053 ; 17 Jur. 815 ; 1 W. R. 443.

—— Simple Residence Abroad.]—Semble, that a power in a settlement to appoint a new trustee in the place of a trustee incapable to act applies to personal incapacity, and not to simple residence abroad. Blanchard, In re (3 De G. F. & J. 131 ; 30 L. J., Ch. 516 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 505 ; 4 L. T. 426 ; 9 W. R. 647), distinguished. Bignold's Settlement, In re, 41 L. J., Ch. 235 ; L. R. 7 Ch. 223 ; 26 L. T. 176 ; 20 W. R. 345.

—— Temporary Departure.]—New trustees of a charity were to be appointed in lieu of those who should depart the United Kingdom, from whatever cause or motive, or under whatsoever circumstances ; and every such trustee so departing the United Kingdom was immediately upon his departure to be, and be considered to be, discharged from the trusts of the charity. A temporary departure from the United Kingdom held insufficient to vacate the office of trustee. Moravian Society, In re, 26 Beav. 101 ; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 703 ; 6 W. R. 851.

"Be Abroad."]—The power to appoint a new trustee of a will was exercisable (inter alia) in case a trustee should "be abroad." One of the trustees had taken the lease of a house in Normandy for about five years, and was residing there, and intended to continue to reside there until the expiration of his lease. He was within a day's post of London, and could reach London in about sixteen hours. He was continuing to act in the management of the trust, and attended nearly all the meetings of the trustees:—Held, that he was "abroad" within the meaning of the power, and the power to appoint a new trustee had arisen. Stamford (Earl), In re, Payne v. Stamford, 65 L. J., Ch. 134; [1896] 1 Ch. 288; 73 L. T. 559; 44 W. R. 249.

Appointment of New Trustee—Duplicate Instruments.]—A testator devised his estates to four trustees, with a power of sale, and directed that in case any trustee should die or retire from the trust the continuing trustees should "nominate" a fourth within two months, by any deed or writing properly attested. One trustee died, and an indenture was executed in duplicate on the same day by two of the trustees in England and by the third in Ireland under which a fourth trustee was simply "nominated," but no conveyance of the estate was executed to him. A contract was entered into for the sale of the estate; the purchaser refused to complete, and the four trustees filed a bill for specific performance:—Held, upon demurrer for want of equity, that a trustee might be appointed by two deeds as well as by one, but that, as no conveyance of the legal estate was effected, the new trustee was not properly appointed; that, nevertheless, the three continuing trustees might execute the power of sale, and that it was competent for all four to file the bill, the fourth trustee being joined for the sake of conformity. Warburton v. Sandys, 14 Sim. 622; 14 L. J., Ch. 431; 9 Jur. 503.

ii. Exercise of Power Pending Suit.

Institution of Administration Suit—Control of Court.]—The institution of a suit against trustees for the administration of the trust estate under the direction of the court, does not preclude the exercise of the discretion given to the trustees by the will of the testator, as to the appointment of new trustees, or the management of the trust; but the trustees are required, after the institution of the suit, to act under the control of the court. Cafe v. Bent, 3 Hare, 245; 13 L. J., Ch. 169; 8 Jur. 141.

The appointment of a new trustee under a power, pending a suit for administration, is not necessarily invalid. Graham v. Graham, 16 Beav. 550; 22 L. J., Ch. 937; 17 Jur. 569.

—— After Judgment.]—After judgment in an action for the administration of the trusts of a will, the person having by the terms of the will or by statute the power of appointing new trustees, retains such power so far as it does not conflict with the order which has been made, but subject to the control of the court; and the proper course is for such person, before exercising the power, to submit the name of the proposed new trustee to the chief clerk in chambers for approval. Hall, In re, Hall v. Hall, 54 L. J., Ch. 527; 51 L. T. 901; 33 W. R. 508.

A decree for the administration of the trusts of a will directed "that some proper person be appointed" a trustee of the will in the place of a deceased trustee. The power of appointing new trustees was given by the will to the surviving trustee, who was the defendant. The plaintiff took out a summons to have A. B. appointed trustee, and the defendant a summons to have C. D. appointed. The summonses were adjourned into court, and Bacon, V.-C., appointed the nominee of the plaintiff:—Held, on appeal, that the decree did not take away from the defendant the power of appointing new trustees, though after decree he could only exercise it subject to the supervision of the court; that if he nominated a fit and proper person, such person must be appointed, and the court would not appoint some one else on the ground that such other person was, in the opinion of the court, more eligible; and that if he nominated a person whom the court did not approve the court would not itself make the choice, but would call on him to make a fresh nomination:—Held, therefore, that the appointment of A. B. must be discharged. Middleton v. Reay (infra) distinguished. Gadd, In re, Eastwood v. Clark, 52 L. J., Ch. 396; 23 Ch. D. 134; 48 L. T. 395; 31 W. R. 417.

In a suit for the appointment of new trustees, occasioned by the refusal of the surviving trustees to exercise a power of appointment, reference was made to the master to approve of proper persons. Exceptions to his report, on the ground that he had not regarded the right of nomination given to the surviving trustee by the instrument creating the power, but not raising any objections to the fitness of the persons nominated by the master, were overruled. Middleton v. Reay, 7 Hare, 106; 18 L. J., Ch. 153; 13 Jur. 116.

If the party's right of nomination is to be preserved, there should be special directions to the master, semble. Ib.

Action for Appointment of New Trustee.]—Real estate was settled by will on D. for life, with remainders over, and the will appointed two trustees, and empowered them to sell at the request and by the direction of the person entitled to the actual freehold, with the usual provisions for re-investment in land and interim investment in other securities. The will also gave a power to appoint new trustees vested in the same person. One of the trustees was dead. D., who was over eighty years of age, proposed to sell the estate. The remaindermen brought this action for the appointment of a new trustee, and to restrain the sale as improper, adducing evidence to show that the estate would sell to better advantage at a future date, owing to the existence of minerals at present unworked, and a projected railway which would pass through the estate. D. had no re-investment in land in view, and proposed to invest in consols. After action brought, the Settled Land Act 1882 came into operation; and shortly before the action came on for trial, D., under the power in the will, appointed a new trustee without referring the the appointment to the court. The trustees consented to the proposed sale:—Held, that D. was entitled to sell the estate as well under the power in the will as under the Settled Land Act. Thomas v. Williams, 52 L. J., Ch. 603; 24 Ch. D. 558; 49 L. T. 111; 31 W. R. 943.

Held, also, that the new trustee was properly appointed, notwithstanding the pending action. Ib.

iii. Duty in Exercise of Power.

Control of Court.]—Court controls trustee in the exercise of power to appoint new trustees, though given in very large words. Webb v. Shaftesbury (Earl), 7 Ves. 480; 6 R. R. 154.

Appointment to keep Trust Property in Hands of Solicitor.]—Trustees ought not to exercise a power of selecting new trustees for the mere purpose of continuing the trust property under the management of a particular solicitor. Marshall v. Sladden, 4 De G. & Sm. 468; 7 Hare, 428; 19 L. J., Ch. 57; 14 Jur. 106.

Communication with Cestuis que Trust.]—Circumstances in which it is improper for a retiring trustee to appoint a new trustee, without communication with the cestuis que trust. Ib.

It is the duty of trustees having power to appoint new trustees, to make such appointment impartially, as between the cestuis que trust, and not without communication with them. O'Reilly v. Alderson, 8 Hare, 101.

Sale of Trusteeship.]—S., in 1852, appointed B. and C. trustees of his will, which contained a power of appointing new trustees. By a codicil made in the same year he revoked the appointment of B. and C., and appointed D. and E. in their place as trustees. After the death of the testator, C., in consideration of 75*l.* paid by him to D., who retired from the office of trustee, was by deed, purporting to be an appointment under the power, appointed in his place:—Held, that the deed was fraudulent and void, and that no estate passed to C. under it. The court ordered the deed to be delivered up to be cancelled, and the 75*l.* to be repaid by D. for the benefit of the parties beneficially interested under the will. Sugden v. Crossland, 3 Sm. & G. 192; 25 L. J., Ch. 563; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 318; 4 W. R. 343.

Special Power—Intervention of Trustees.]—When a person having a special power of appointment over a fund of personalty appoints trustees for the objects of the power, the court, though recognising the validity of such an appointment, will not, as a matter of right, transfer the fund to the trustees appointed by the donee of the power. Busk v. Aldam, 44 L. J., Ch. 119; L. R. 19 Eq. 16; 31 L. T. 370; 23 W. R. 21.

iv. Who may be Appointed New Trustees.

Trust for Sale—New Trustee Person to exercise Discretion fairly.]—Where trustees for sale have taken various steps with a view to the execution of their trust, and, one of them retiring shortly before the sale, a new trustee is, under a power contained in the trust deed, appointed in his stead, the new trustee must be a person who can and will exercise his discretion fairly and beneficially for all persons, and as fairly and beneficially as the retiring trustee could have done. Roberts v. Bozon, 3 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 113.

American Trustees.]—Upon the marriage of an English woman with a citizen of the United States, who was temporarily resident in England, the fortune of the wife, consisting of stock in the British funds, was assigned to trustees, who were Englishmen and relatives of the wife, upon certain trusts for the husband and wife and the issue of the marriage. By the settlement, power was given to the trustees, with the consent of the husband and wife, to invest the trust property in the names of the trustees or trustee for the time being in the public funds of Great Britain or America, or upon real securities in England, Wales, or America; and power was also given to the husband and wife or the survivor, in case the existing trustees should be desirous of being discharged from the trusts, to appoint new trustees. After the marriage, the husband and wife lived for about five years in England, and then went to reside permanently in America, having, previously to their departure, appointed three Americans to act as trustees in the room of the original trustees, the trust property being at the same time transferred by the English trustees into the American funds in the names of the three American trustees:—Held, that this appointment of American trustees, though not expressly authorised by the settlement, was valid. Meinertzhagen v. Davis, 1 Coll. C. C. 353; 13 L. J., Ch. 457; 8 Jur. 973.

Donee of Power appointing himself.]—A power to appoint new trustees is a fiduciary power and the appointor cannot appoint himself. Newen, In re, Newen v. Barnes, 63 L. J., Ch. 763; [1894] 2 Ch. 297; 8 R. 309; 70 L. T. 653; 43 W. R. 58; 58 J. P. 767.

—— "Other" Person or Persons.]—By a marriage settlement property belonging to the wife was settled on trusts in favour of the wife, her children, appointees, and next of kin, and if any trustee should die, or go to reside abroad, or desire to retire from, or refuse or become incapable to act in, the trusts, the husband and wife, or the survivor, and after the decease of such survivor, the continuing trustees or trustee, or, if no continuing trustee, the retiring or refusing trustees or trustee, or the executors or administrators of the last acting trustee, were empowered to appoint any "other" person or persons to be a trustee or trustees in the place of the trustee or trustees so dying, or going to reside abroad, or desiring to retire, or refusing, or becoming incapable, to act. The husband and wife, in exercise of the power, purported to appoint the husband and another person to be trustees in the place of retiring trustees. Upon a summons raising the question whether the retiring trustees might transfer the trust property to the persons so appointed:—Held, that a power of appointing new trustees being fiduciary, the donee of such a power cannot appoint himself. Skeats' Settlement, In re, Skeats v. Evans, 58 L. J., Ch. 656; 42 Ch. D. 522; 61 L. T. 500; 37 W. R. 778.

Held, also, that the terms of the power required that the trustee or trustees to be appointed should be some person or persons "other" than the person or persons making the appointment, and therefore, upon both these grounds, that the appointment was invalid. Ib.

Settled Land—Solicitor of Tenant for Life.]—It is the rule of the court not to appoint as trustee of a settlement for the purposes of the Settled Land Act the person who is solicitor to the tenant for life under the settlement, nor to sanction such an appointment; but that rule of practice does not prevent a tenant for life who is the donee of the power of appointment of new trustees from so exercising the power, and the court will not declare such an appointment invalid merely because the person appointed is solicitor to the tenant for life. Stamford (Earl), In re, Payne v. Stamford, 65 L. J., Ch. 134; [1896] 1 Ch. 288; 73 L. T. 559; 44 W. R. 249.

—— Appointment of Trustees for Purposes of Act—Infant absolutely entitled Resident in British Colony—Trustees in Colony.]—The court has jurisdiction upon an appointment of trustees of a settlement for the purposes of the Settled Land Acts to appoint persons who are domiciled and resident in a British colony. Such jurisdiction is properly exercised upon an appointment of trustees to carry out the sale of land which is settled land by reason of the person entitled thereto being an infant, where the infant is domiciled and resident in a colony. Simpson, In re, and Whitchurch, In re, 66 L. J., Ch. 166; [1897] 1 Ch. 256; 76 L. T. 131; 45 W. R. 277—C. A.

Form of Order.]—Trustees appointed under s. 38 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, should be appointed trustees of "the settlement effected by the instrument in question for the purposes of the Settled Land Acts." Form of order in Wright's Trusts, In re (53 L. J., Ch. 139; 24 Ch. D. 662), adopted. Ib.

v. Number of New Trustees.

Statute.]—Trustee Act, 1893, s. 10, sub-s. (2).

Appointment of a Single Trustee.]—Where, by the terms of a settlement, it appears to be the intention of the parties that there should at all times be two trustees of the property comprised in the settlement, the appointment of a single trustee in the place of two original trustees, and the transfer by them of the trust property to such single trustee, is a breach of trust, and the original trustees are responsible accordingly. Hulme v. Hulme, 2 Myl. & K. 682.

By a settlement, lands were assured to A. and B. upon certain trusts, with a power in case they or either of them, or any trustee or trustees to be appointed under the power, should die or become unwilling to act, for the settlor during his life, and after his decease, for the acting trustees or trustee for the time being, or for the executors or administrators of any surviving trustee, to nominate any fit persons or person to supply the place of the trustees or trustee so dying or becoming unwilling to act. A. never executed the deed, nor acted. After A.'s death, B., being desirous of retiring, nominated C. to be a new trustee, and conveyed to C. all the trust estate. Afterwards, on account of doubts as to the validity of this appointment, the executor of B. executed a deed, appointing C. and D. to be trustees of the settlement in the place of the original trustees; and by the same deed C. conveyed the property to the use of himself and D. They then sold the trust estate under a power of sale in the settlement:—Held, that the survivor of the original trustees had not been guilty of a breach of trust in appointing only one new trustee, and that the two new trustees were well appointed, and had validly exercised the power of sale, so as to exonerate the purchasers from responsibility. Miller v. Priddon, 1 De G. M. & G. 335; 21 L. J., Ch. 421.

The bill contained an allegation that the new trustee was, when the sales were made, the sole trustee of the settlement. Semble, that this allegation would not have precluded the plaintiff from insisting upon the invalidity of the appointment of that trustee, if the appointment had been invalid. Ib.

A testator appointed A., B. and C. to be trustees of his will, and declared that if the trustees thereby appointed or any of them should happen to die, it should be lawful for the surviving trustee or trustees to appoint any other person or persons to be a trustee or trustees, in the place of the trustees or trustee so dying: and that, on such appointment, the trust premises should be conveyed, so that the same should be vested in the surviving trustees and such new trustees, or in such new trustees solely, on the same trusts. A. died in the lifetime of the testator:—Held, that it was the intention of the testator that there should be three trustees of his will, and that a new trustee might be appointed in the place of A. Lonsdale (Earl) v. Beckett, 4 De G. & Sm. 73; 19 L. J., Ch. 342.

The power of appointing new trustees given by s. 27 of the act 23 & 24 Vict. c. 145, authorises a retiring trustee, one of two originally appointed, to appoint a single trustee in place of himself, the other original trustee having previously disclaimed without acting. West of England & South Wales District Bank v. Murch, 52 L. J., Ch. 784; 23 Ch. D. 138; 48 L. T. 417; 31 W. R. 467.

Reduction of Original Number.] — By an indenture of settlement three trustees were appointed. The settlement contained a power for the cestuis que trust, in case the trustees therein named, or either of them, should die, or be desirous of being discharged from the trusts, to appoint any other person or persons to be a trustee or trustees in the place of any such trustee or trustees so dying, or being desirous to be discharged. One trustee died, and the other two were desirous of being discharged, upon which two new trustees only were substituted. The two continuing trustees refused to transfer the fund to the new trustees, upon the ground that the appointment was not properly executed, and paid the trust fund into court under the Trustee Act:—Held, upon petition for payment of the money out of court, that it was competent for the cestuis que trust to appoint two trustees only, and that the old trustees were not justified in paying the money into court, and they were ordered to pay costs thereby occasioned, and their costs of the petition. Fagg's Trust, In re, 19 L. J., Ch. 175.

Where three trustees were named in a settlement, with a power to the cestuis que trust, to nominate, substitute, or appoint any person or persons in the place of the said present or other trustee or trustees who should die, &c.:—Held, that an appointment of two persons only in the room of the three original trustees, was a valid appointment. Bathurst's Estate, In re, 2 Sm. & G. 169; 18 Jur. 568.

Trustees of a deed had a discretionary power of distribution over a fund amongst a class of children, who in default took equally. There were originally five trustees, one of whom was a member of the class. After the death of the surviving trustee, three new trustees were appointed under a power, one of whom (A.) was a member of the class. These three apportioned the fund, except a minute portion, amongst the three survivors of the children, equally, including

A. :—Held, that the appointment of three trustees, instead of five, was not void ; and, secondly, that the appointment of the fund was good. Reid v. Reid, 30 Beav. 388.

Increase of Original Number.]—Where, by a settlement, a certain number of persons are appointed trustees, and power is given, upon the death or retirement of a trustee or trustees, to appoint any other person or persons to be a trustee or trustees in his or their room, an appointment of a greater than the original number of trustees is not a valid exercise of the power. Davis, Ex parte, Clark, In re, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 46 ; 3 Mont. D. & D. 304 ; 12 L. J., Bk. 38 ; 7 Jur. 430.

Upon the construction of the power for appointing new trustees contained in a marriage settlement :—Held, that the appointment of three new trustees in the room of the two original trustees of the settlement, was valid. Meinertzhagen v. Davis, 1 Coll. C. C. 353; 13 L. J., Ch. 457 ; 8 Jur. 973.

Semble, that the appointment of more than one trustee in the place of one dead or retiring trustee, cannot be justified without express words indicating the intention of the settlor. Stones v. Rowton, 17 Beav. 308 ; 1 Eq. R. 427 ; 22 L. J., Ch. 975 ; 17 Jur. 750 ; 1 W. R. 499.

Right of Surviving Trustee to Co-operation of New Trustee.]—When, in the inception of a trust, the funds are vested in two trustees, and one of them dies, the survivor is entitled to have the advice and co-operation of a new trustee before dealing with the principal of the trust funds in any way which involves a question of discretion. Livesay v. O'Hara, 14 Ir. Ch. R. 12.

Settlement of Policies—Refusal of Old Trustees to Execute Conveyance.]—By a marriage settlement, certain policies of assurance effected by the husband upon his life were assigned to trustees upon trust to pay the proceeds to the wife for life, and then to divide the capital between the children of the marriage. The settlement also contained a covenant on the part of the husband to pay the premiums, and hand over the receipts to the trustees. There was also a power for the husband and wife jointly to appoint new trustees, with a proviso that on such appointment the old trustees should convey to the new trustees. The husband and wife jointly executed the power of appointing new trustees ; the old trustees refused to execute a conveyance of the trust property, upon which a bill was filed to compel them to do so : —Held, that there was nothing vested in the trustees ; consequently there was nothing for them to do, and nothing for the court to direct them to do : and the bill was dismissed with costs. Dodson v. Powell, 18 L. J., Ch. 237.

Bankruptcy of Surviving Trustee — Transfer to New Trustee.]—When the power to appoint new trustees directs the property to be vested in the new trustees jointly with the surviving or continuing trustee, and the surviving trustee had become bankrupt :—Held, that, notwithstanding, a valid appointment of and transfer of the estate to the new trustee might be made under the power. Roche, In re, 2 Dr. & War. 287 ; 1 Con. & L. 306.

Refusal by Husband Separated from Wife to Exercise Joint Power of Appointment of New Trustees.]—Where there is a joint power of appointing new trustees in a settlement, and the parties are separated and cannot agree, and the husband refuses to appoint or approve of a person nominated by the wife merely for that reason, a claim by him dismissed with costs. Fry v. Watson, 1 W. R. 282.

Refusal of New Trustees to Execute Trust without Evidence of Settlor's Title.]—An executrix, by a deed reciting that she intended to appropriate a part of her testator's assets in payment of a debt due from him to her, declared trusts of the fund intended to be thus appropriated. She died without making the appropriation, which was made after her decease by her executors. New trustees of the deed, subsequently appointed, executed a declaration of trust (contained in the deed appointing them) whereby they declared that they would hold the fund upon the trusts. On inquiring, before their appointment, for evidence in verification of the recital as to the existence of the debt from the testator to the executrix, none could be discovered :—Held, that the trustees could not be compelled to execute these trusts without further evidence of the settlor's title to appropriate the fund. Neale v. Davies, 5 De G. M. & G. 258 ; 2 Eq. R. 530 ; 23 L. J., Ch. 744 ; 2 W. R. 358.

—— Power of Assent annexed to Office.]—Marriage articles authorised the tenant for life to withdraw the fund from the settlement, with the assent of the "under-signed trustees" :—Held, that the power of assent was annexed to the office, and might therefore be exercised by new trustees appointed by the court. Byam v. Byam, 19 Beav. 58 ; 24 L. J., Ch. 209 ; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 79 ; 3 W. R. 95.

New Trustees—Notice to Original Trustees—Constructive Notice.]—Persons appointed new trustees under a will or settlement are bound to inquire what the trust property consists of, and what the trusts are, and to look into the trust documents to see what incumbrances their predecessors had notice of. But if there was nothing among the trust documents which would have given them notice of an incumbrance, they will not be held liable for loss arising from their ignorance of it, even though they have in fact omitted to look into those documents. Hallows v. Lloyd, 58 L. J., Ch. 105 ; 39 Ch. D. 686 ; 59 L. T. 603 ; 37 W. R. 12.

Semble, it is the duty of a trustee parting with a fund to a new trustee to inform him of all notices he has received affecting the fund. Booth's Settlement Trusts, In re, 16 Jur. 965 ; 1 W. R. 444.

Semble, that new trustees of trust funds in settlement are not bound to inquire of the old trustees whether they have received notice of any incumbrance. Phipps v. Lovegrove, 42 L. J., Ch. 892 ; 16 L. R., Eq. 80 ; 28 L. T. 584 ; 21 W. R. 590.

Liability for Breaches of Trust.] — As to liability of new trustees for breaches of trust. See Geaves, Ex parte, Strahan, In re, 8 De G. M. & G. 291 ; 25 L. J., Bk. 53 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 651 ; 4 W. R. 536.

b. Under Statutory Powers.

Statutes.]—Trustees Appointment Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 19). Trustee Act, 1893, s. 10.

Husband and Wife.]—A settlement executed in 1878 contained no express power to appoint new trustees, but there was a declaration that the husband and wife during their joint lives, and the survivor of them during his or her life, "shall have power to appoint new trustees or a new trustee for this settlement." There was no express reference to the power of appointing new trustees conferred by s. 27 of Lord Cranworth's Act, which was then in force:—Held, that after the commencement of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, the husband and wife were the proper persons to exercise the power conferred by s. 31 of that act of appointing a new trustee in place of one of the trustees who had remained out of the United Kingdom for more than twelve months, though s. 27 of Lord Cranworth's Act did not provide for, and the parties when they executed the settlement probably did not contemplate, the occurrence of a vacancy in that event. Walker and Hughes' Contract, In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 135; 24 Ch. D. 698; 49 L. T. 597. And see Mara v. Browne, 65 L. J., Ch. 225; [1896] 1 Ch. 199; 73 L. T. 638; 44 W. R. 330.

Personal Representative of Trustee Predeceasing Testator.]—Where all the trustees named by a testator predecease him the legal personal representative of the last survivor has not power, under s. 31 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, to appoint new trustees. Nicholson v. Field, 62 L. J., Ch. 1015; [1893] 2 Ch. 511; 3 R. 528; 69 L. T. 299; 42 W. R. 48.

Representative of Sole Trustee.]—The power of appointing new trustees given by s. 31 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, to "the personal representatives of the last surviving or continuing trustee" includes the case of an executor of a sole trustee. Shafto's Trusts, In re, 54 L. J., Ch. 885; 29 Ch. D. 247; 53 L. T. 261; 33 W. R. 728.

The representative of a deceased trustee is not bound at the request of the cestuis que trust to exercise the power of appointing new trustees given by the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, and the refusal to do so is not a sufficient reason for ordering the executors to pay the cost of a petition for the appointment of new trustees. Knight's Trust, or Will, In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 223; 26 Ch. D. 82; 49 L. T. 774; 32 W. R. 336.

"Personal Representatives" of Surviving Trustee—Appointment of Special and General Executors by Will of Surviving Trustee—Probate granted to "general" Executors.]—Section 31 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, does not enable a sole surviving trustee of a will to appoint by his will, in continuation to himself, trustees of the will of the original testator. Parker's Trusts, In re, 63 L. J., Ch. 316; [1894] 1 Ch. 707; 70 L. T. 165.

The sole surviving trustee of a will by his will appointed general executors, and also purported to appoint special executors, for the purpose of executing, in continuation to himself, the trusts of the will of the original testator. The general executors obtained a grant of probate of the will of the trustee to themselves as "general executors," without any reservation of power to the special executors to come in and prove, and proceeded by deed to appoint two persons to be trustees of the will of the original testator. Subsequently probate of the will of the trustee, limited to the trust estates of the original testator, was granted to the persons named as special executors:—Held, that the will of the trustee did not operate as an exercise of the power of appointing new trustees conferred by s. 31 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881; but that as the general executors were, at the time when the deed of appointment was executed, in possession of a general grant of probate, which was the only probate then in existence, they were "personal representatives" of the last surviving trustee within the meaning of the section, and therefore the deed was a valid appointment of trustees. Ib.

Executor of Surviving Trustee.]—When an express power contained in a will for the appointment of new trustees by the surviving or continuing trustees had not been acted on, the court refused to compel the legatees to acquiesce in an appointment by the executor of the last surviving trustees, under 23 & 24 Vict. c. 145, s. 27. Jackson's Trusts, In re, 18 L. T. 80; 16 W. R. 572.

Surviving Trustee.]—One of the trustees of a deed of separation which contained no power of appointment of new trustees having died:—Held, that the power was vested in the surviving trustee by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 145, s. 27, and a petition by the husband claiming the right of selection was dismissed. Soulby's Trusts, In re, 21 W. R. 256.

"Continuing Trustees"—"Contrary Intention"—Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 31.]—On a summons under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, an objection was taken by a purchaser from trustees that an appointment of one of their number, under the power given by s. 31 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, in the place of a trustee who had been abroad for more than twelve months, was invalid because that trustee had not joined in making the appointment:—Held, that there being no evidence that the absent trustee was either willing or competent to join in making the appointment, the objection could not be sustained. Coates to Parsons, In re, 56 L. J., Ch. 242; 34 Ch. D. 370; 56 L. T. 16; 35 W. R. 375.

The instrument creating a trust cannot be taken to have expressed a contrary intention within sub-s. 7 of s. 31 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, merely because it does not provide for filling up a vacancy in the number of the trustees upon the happening of an event not contemplated by the parties to that instrument. Ib.

—— Provision in Private Act—Approbation of the Court.]—A private act, passed in the year 1869, enacted that s. 27 of Lord Cranworth's Act should be deemed and taken to apply to the trusteeship of the "Manchester estates" comprised therein; "provided that every new trustee of the said estates shall be appointed with the approbation of the court of chancery." In the year 1886, a deed was executed by the continuing trustees appointing new trustees under the power "vested in them by statute." This deed contained the usual declaration vesting the estates in the new trustees; but the appointment was not made with the approbation of the court:—Held, that the deed must be construed as if the special provision contained in the private act had formed part of Lord Cranworth's Act; that, as Lord Cranworth's Act had been repealed, the court could not add that special provision to the general power of appointment given by the Conveyancing Act, 1881; and that, therefore, the new trustees were well appointed. Lloyd's Trustees, In re, 57 L. J., Ch. 246.

—— Consent of Persons beneficially Interested.]—A settlement of real estate of which there were four trustees, provided that if the trustees thereby appointed, "or any future trustee or trustees to be appointed in the place of them or any of them as hereinafter mentioned," should die or be desirous of being discharged, &c., it should be lawful for "the surviving or continuing trustee or trustees for the time being," with the consent of the tenant for life or in tail for the time being entitled in possession, to appoint a new trustee or new trustees in the place of the trustee or trustees so dying, &c. In 1872, four new trustees were appointed under the Trustee Act, 1850, in the place of two deceased and two retiring trustees. After this a decree was made for carrying the trusts of the settlement into execution. Two of the trustees of 1872 being dead, and another desiring to retire, the plaintiff, who was an infant tenant in tail in possession, took out a summons to appoint new trustees. W., the continuing trustee, took out a summons, asking that he might be at liberty to appoint new trustees. A reference to chambers being directed, W. proposed new trustees whom the court considered to be proper persons, but to whom all the persons beneficially interested objected:—Held, that the persons nominated by W. must be appointed, though the tenant in tail in possession did not consent, for that as the power in the settlement only applied to filling up vacancies in the number of original trustees, or trustees appointed under the power, it had come to an end when new trustees were appointed by the court in 1872, and that the fetter imposed by the settlement on the exercise of that power did not apply to the new power given to the continuing trustee by the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, which enabled him to fill up vacancies in a body of trustees not coming within the scope of the power in the settlement. Cecil v. Langdon, 54 L. J., Ch. 313; 28 Ch. D. 1; 51 L. T. 618; 33 W. R. 1—C. A.

—— Retiring Trustee joining in Appointment.]—Semble, that if a trust deed contained a power to appoint new trustees expressed in the same words as sub.-s. 1 of s. 31, without anything more, it would not be necessary that a retiring trustee should join in the appointment of his successor. In such a case the words "continuing trustee" would mean only a trustee who is to continue to act in the trusts after the completion of the appointment. Travis v. Illingworth (supra, col. 553), and Norris, In re (infra), approved. Opinion of Bacon, V.-C., in Glenny and Hartley, In re (infra), dissented from. Coates to Parsons, In re, supra.

A trustee who has made up his mind to retire, may be a "continuing" trustee, until he has executed the deed appointing new trustees. By a settlement in 1867 (Lord Cranworth's Act having been passed in 1860), it was declared that it should be lawful for "the surviving or continuing trustees," in the event of any trustees declining to act, to discharge such trustees, and to appoint any new trustees; and it was provided that nothing should authorise the discharge of the only continuing trustees without the substitution of others. Of three original trustees, one having died, the other two by deed in 1874, after reciting that they themselves "declined to act" and "desired to be discharged," and had "determined to appoint" three other persons to be trustees, "in exercise of the power for this purpose vested in them" by the settlement, appointed the three persons "to be trustees in the place of" themselves and the deceased trustee respectively:—Held, that the appointment was good. Travis v. Illingworth (2 Dr. & Sm. 344) not followed. Glenny and Hartley, In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 417; 25 Ch. D. 611; 50 L. T. 79; 32 W. R. 457.

When a power of appointing new trustees authorises the continuing trustee or trustees to appoint a new trustee or trustees in the place of a trustee or trustees becoming unwilling to act, an appointment by a sole continuing trustee, in the place of a trustee who desires to retire, is valid; it is not necessary that the retiring trustee should join in making the appointment. Glenny and Hartley, In re (supra), commented on. Travis v. Illingworth (supra) approved, and followed. Norris, In re, Allen v. Norris, 53 L. J., Ch. 913; 27 Ch. D. 333; 51 L. T. 593; 32 W. R. 955.

c. Appointment by the Court.

Statutes.]—Trustee Act, 1893, s. 25. Judicial Trustee Act, 1896, s. 1.

i. In General.

Colony—Australia—Appointment by Master—Vesting Order.] — Sections 30 and 32 of 16 Vict. (No. 19) authorise the supreme court to appoint a new trustee where it is expedient to do so, and "either by the same or by any subsequent order," to vest the trust property in the trustee so appointed. It is competent to the court under these sections to refer the appointment to the master, and at the same time to make an order vesting the trust property in the trustee whom the master shall appoint. It is not necessary that in case of appointment by the master the court should make a subsequent vesting order. Plomley v. Richardson, 64 L. J., P. C. 18; [1894] A. C. 632; 11 R. 324; 71 L. T. 377—P. C.

Suit for Appointment of New Trustees.]—Although the proper course is to proceed under the Trustee Act for the appointment of new trustees, a bill might be resorted to for the same purpose. Legg v. Mackrell, 4 L. T. 568.

A suit for the removal of the trustee of a settlement, and the appointment of new trustees; and for the payment of certain moneys comprised in the settlement, and which had been lent to the husband, to such new trustees out of a sum of money belonging to the husband which had been paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act; and for general administration of the trusts of the settlement—may be sustained. Thorp v. Thorp, 1 K. & J. 438.

How parties beneficially interested, where one executor and trustee has disclaimed, and the other is dead, are to obtain an appointment of new trustees for the purpose of executing the trusts of the will. Wood v. Stane, 8 Price, 613.

When the interest of a money fund, vested in two trustees, was payable to H. and his wife for their lives, remainder, as to the principal sum, to F. and his wife, and the deed contained a power of appointing a new trustee in case of the death of one of the present trustees, and one of the trustees had died:—Held, that a bill to appoint a new trustee by F. and his wife was maintainable, although there was no proof that the other parties had refused to appoint under the power. Finlay v. Howard, 2 Dr. & War. 490.

The representatives of a surviving trustee who had concurred with his co-trustee in a breach of trust by lending to the tenant for life on his promissory note, were held entitled to file a bill against such tenant for life, and the other cestuis que trust for replacing the funds, and the appointment of new trustees, with costs against the tenant for life, or out of the fund. Greenwood v. Wakeford, 1 Beav. 576; 8 L. J., Ch. 333.

Where the surviving trustee of a will devised the trust estate upon the same trusts on which he held:—Held, that the cestuis que trust were entitled to have new trustees appointed of the original will. Ockleston v. Heap, 1 De G. & Sm. 641.

The survivor of two executors and trustees bequeathed the trust property to A., upon the trusts declared by the original testator, expressing by the same instrument his wish that A. would execute the trusts with fidelity. No direction was given by the will of the original testator as to the appointment of new trustees. On a bill by the cestuis que trust for that purpose:—Held, that A., though legally in the possession of the trust property, was not a trustee properly constituted, and that the cestuis que trust were entitled to have new trustees appointed by the court. Mortimer v. Ireland, 6 Hare, 196; 16 L. J., Ch. 416; 11 Jur. 721.

A testator gave a legacy to a trustee in trust to invest it for the benefit of E. S., independent of the control of her husband. On a bill by the husband and wife against the trustee to have it declared that the wife was absolutely entitled to the fund, and to have the same transferred to her or to her husband by her direction or in her right, it was held, that the wife was entitled to the entire disposal of the fund, but that the husband could not obtain it in that suit; and it was referred to the master to approve of a trustee, to whom the fund might be transferred, upon the trust declared in the will, and to approve of a deed declaring that trust. Simons v. Horwood, 1 Keen, 7.

A trustee, by his answer, declined to act, and on the hearing it was referred to the master to appoint new trustees; the original trustee afterwards agreed to act: and, on application to the court that the trustee might be at liberty to amend his answer in this respect, so as to enable the court, on a re-hearing, to vary that part of the decree, the court refused to do this, but thought the master was at liberty, on statement of these circumstances, to decline the appointment of new trustees. Miles v. Neale, 1 Cox, 159.

Bill Filed by one Director of a Company.]—On a bill filed by one director of a company on behalf of the company, praying a transfer of the fund to new trustees, the court will, without having the new trustees before the court, direct the transfer. Wilson v. Parker, 10 Jur. 979.

Inquiry as to Notice of Incumbrances.]—Semble, it has never been the practice of the court on appointing new trustees of funds to inquire whether the old trustees have received notices of incumbrances. Phipps v. Lovegrove, 42 L. J., Ch. 892; L. R. 16 Eq. 80; 28 L. T. 584; 21 W. R. 590.

ii. Under the Trustee Acts, 1850 and 1852.

Death of Trustee—No Administration to Surviving Trustee.]—Where a surviving trustee has been dead for many years, and no administration has been taken out to him, and there is therefore no existing trustee, the court will appoint a new trustee, upon petition, under s. 32 of the Trustee Act, 1850, and s. 9 of the Trustee Extension Act, 1852. In such a case it is expedient to appoint a new trustee, but it cannot be done without the aid of the court. Davis v. Chanter, 27 L. J., Ch. 577; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 272; 6 W. R. 416.

—— Question in whom Legal Estate Vested.]—Where the trustees of a will are dead, and there is a question as to the party in whom the legal estate is vested, the court will appoint new trustees, notwithstanding that a receiver has been appointed in the suit, and continue the receiver. Reeves v. Neville, 10 W. R. 335.

—— Trustee in Bankruptcy.]—When the proceedings in a bankruptcy have been suspended by a resolution of the creditors, passed under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, s. 110, and the trustee appointed by the creditors to wind up the estate and effects of the bankrupt has died, the court of chancery has jurisdiction, under the trustee acts, to appoint new trustees. Raphael, In re, 39 L. J., Ch. 200; L. R. 9 Eq. 233; 18 W. R. 247.

—— Pending Sale under Settled Estates Act.]—Pending the proceedings for carrying out a sale directed by an order made under the Settled Estates Act, one of the trustees, who were the conveying parties, died. The court directed a petition to be presented for the appointment of a new trustee in the place of the deceased trustee. Scott v. Heisch, 33 L. T. 498; 24 W. R. 108.

—— Objection that Separation Deed Void.]—Upon a petition to appoint new trustees of a separation deed, on the death of the sole trustee, it was objected that the deed was void, in consequence of the father's thereby abandoning his right to the custody of his children. The court declined deciding as to its validity, but appointed new trustees to protect the property. Matthews, In re, 26 Beav. 463; 28 L. J., Ch. 295; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 184; 7 W. R. 244.

Disclaimer of Trustee.]—Two trustees of real estates named in a will disclaimed. On a petition by of a person entitled to a pecuniary legacy charged on the estates, to appoint two persons named in the petition as trustees in their place, it was suggested that s. 32 of Trustee Act, 1850, authorised the court to appoint trustees in substitution for or in addition to existing trustees only, and that the heir of the testator had become the existing trustee :—Held, that the distinction was too narrow ; and the court, upon affidavits of the fitness of the proposed trustees, appointed them in substitution for the trustees who had disclaimed. Tyler's Trust, In re, 5 De G. & Sm. 56 ; 21 L. J., Ch. 16 ; 15 Jur. 1120.

Application for the direction of the court as to the appointment of a third trustee in the room of a disclaiming trustee. The parties in whom the power of appointment was vested were in India ; they, supposing that only two trustees had disclaimed, appointed two. It appeared that the third had also disclaimed. The petition was ordered to be amended by intituling it in the Trustee Act, 1850, and by introducing the above facts ; the court would then appoint under the power in the Trustee Act. Humphry's Estate, In re, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 921.

Upon a petition for the appointment of new trustees by the court, it is not necessary that a disclaiming trustee who has never acted should disclaim by deed, but a disclaimer by his counsel at the bar is sufficient. Forster v. Dawber, 1 Dr. & Sm. 171 ; 8 W. R. 646.

M. and C. being trustees and executors under a will, C. simply renounces, and M. then dies, having left devisees in trust. A petition is presented to appoint new trustees, and for a direction that such devisees might convey. C., by affidavit on the petition, disclaimed ; and on the doubt whether the devisees in trust of M. had the legal estate :—Held, that a vesting order would obviate the difficulty. Skinner's Trust, In re, 2 W. R. 130.

Semble, disclaimer in court on petition not sufficient to divest an estate ; disclaimer should be by deed or of record. Ellison's Trust, In re, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 62.

And semble, disclaimer by petition is no more than a parol disclaimer, and not like a disclaimer by bill, as a bill is entered of record. Ib.

Refusal to Act—Petition of Person having only a Contingent Interest.]—Where estates were given to trustees, upon trust (after a trust for one for life, with remainder for his children) to convey to a person in the event of the death of the tenant for life without issue, the court, under the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 60, appointed trustees in the place of original trustees who refused to act. Sheppard's Trusts, In re, 4 De G. F. & J. 423 ; 1 N. R. 76 ; 32 L. J., Ch. 23 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 59 ; 7 L. T. 377 ; 11 W. R. 60.

—— Administrator of Naturalised British Subject.]—Where three executors and trustees of the will of a naturalised British subject renounced probate, and declined to act, the court, on the petition of the administrator, and of the persons who would, but for the fact of their being aliens, be co-heirs at law, made an order, the crown not opposing, for the appointment of new trustees, and vesting the real estate in such new trustees. Martinez, In re, 22 L. T. 403.

—— Voluntary Settlement not communicated to Sole Trustee—Death of Settlor.]—A settlor made a voluntary settlement of real estate, but did not communicate the fact of the settlement to the sole trustee during his lifetime. After the settlor's death the trustee refused to undertake the trusts of the settlement. The settlement contained a covenant for further assurance, and a power to appoint new trustees :—Held, that this was a case in which the court would appoint new trustees. Jones v. Jones, 31 L. T. 535.

Infant.]—Devise to an adult and infant trustee upon trust to sell. New trustee appointed in place of the infant under s. 32 of the Trustee Act, 1850, and vesting order granted in favour of the old and new trustees. Porter's Trusts, In re, 25 L. J., Ch. 482 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 349 ; 4 W. R. 417.

The court will on petition appoint a new trustee in the room of an infant appointed trustee by the testator together with two other persons, and who has himself a beneficial interest. Gartside's Estate, In re, 1 W. R. 196.

Where the court, with a view to carrying out the trusts of a testator's will, appoints a new trustee in the room of an infant trustee nominated by the testator himself, the appointment should be without prejudice to any application by the infant to be restored to the trusteeship on his coming of age. Shelmerdine, In re, 33 L. J., Ch. 474 ; 11 L. T. 106.

Trustee out of Jurisdiction.]—Where one of two trustees was residing out of the jurisdiction of the court, the court refused to appoint another trustee in his stead under ss. 22 and 32 of the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 60. Mais, In re, 21 L. J., Ch. 875 ; 16 Jur. 608.

A surviving trustee of a settlement of stock having died, his widow took out administration with the will annexed in Ireland. There was no representative in England. A petition was presented for the appointment of new trustees, and for a vesting order, under the statute 13 & 14 Vict. c. 60, but the order was refused. Frost's Trust, In re, 20 L. J., Ch. 112 ; 15 Jur. 644.

Order appointing trustees of a settlement, one one of the trustees named in it residing permanently abroad, and the other having been wrongly described in the settlement. Irwin's Trust, In re, 9 L. R., Ir. 19.

The court has power, under the Trustee Act, 1850, s. 32, to appoint a new trustee in place of a trustee who is permanently residing abroad, without his consent. Blanchard, In re (3 De G. F. & J. 131 ; 30 L. J., Ch. 516), distinguished. Bignold's Settlement, In re, 41 L. J., Ch. 235 ; L. R. 7 Ch. 223 ; 26 L. T. 176 ; 20 W. R. 345.

Semble, that a power in a settlement to appoint a new trustee in the place of a trustee incapable to act applies to personal incapacity, and not to simple residence abroad. Ib.

A new trustee appointed in the place of a trustee who had become bankrupt, had never surrendered, and had not been heard of for several years. Renshaw's Trusts, In re, L. R. 4 Ch. 783 ; 17 W. R. 1035.

Appointment under one petition in lunacy and chancery of new trustees, in the place of a person of unsound mind, not so found by inquisition, and of a deceased trustee and a trustee resident abroad. Stewart, In re, 8 W. R. 297, 425. And see Davidson, In re, 20 L. J., Ch. 644.

—— Vesting Order where one Trustee Abroad.]—Where there are several trustees, one of whom is out of the jurisdiction, and a new trustee is appointed by the court in his place under the Trustee Act, 1850, an order vesting the trust estate in the new and continuing trustees will, under s. 10 of that act, have the effect of severing the joint tenancy, semble. Watt's Settlement, In re, 9 Hare, 106; 20 L. J., Ch. 337; 15 Jur. 459.

Where one of several trustees of real estates is out of the jurisdiction, and it is sought to get another trustee appointed in his place, and to vest the trust property in the new trustee and the continuing trustees, the proper course is, not to apply for a vesting order for that purpose, but for an order appointing a proper person to concur with the continuing trustees in conveying the property, so as to vest it in themselves and the new trustee. Plyer's Trust, In re, 9 Hare, 220; 20 L. J., Ch. 529; 15 Jur. 766.

Form of order appointing a trustee in the place of a trustee out of the jurisdiction, where there is another and continuing trustee, and the vesting order is not made. Ib.

Where one of several trustees is out of the jurisdiction, and a new trustee is appointed in his place, the court will make an order vesting the estate in the continuing trustees and the new trustee. Watt's Settlement, In re (supra), overruled. Smith v. Smith, 3 Drew. 72; 3 Eq. R. 126; 24 L. J., Ch. 229; 18 Jur. 1047; 3 W. R. 95.

Under s. 10 of the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 60, the court will make an order vesting lands in a new trustee, jointly with continuing trustees, notwithstanding the doubts suggested in Watt's Settlement, In re, and Plyer's Trust, In re (supra). Bute's Will (Marquis), In re, Johns. 15; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 487.

The property comprised in a settlement consisted of money lent upon a mortgage of freeholds vested in the two surviving trustees, and of a sum of consols standing in their names. One of these two surviving trustees was a lunatic, and the other was resident out of the jurisdiction; and under a power in the settlement two persons were appointed new trustees in their places. Upon a petition by these two new trustees, and by all the beneficiaries praying for an order reappointing the new trustees as trustees of the settlement, and vesting in them the trust property:—The court declined to reappoint the new trustees, but under s. 3 of the Trustee Act, 1850, vested the lands subject to the mortgage in the new trustees, and under s. 5 of the same act vested the mortgage debt and the right to call for a transfer of the consols in the trustee of sound mind resident out of the jurisdiction, and, it appearing that he was out of the jurisdiction, vested the mortgage debt and the right to call for a transfer of the consols in the new trustees. Batho, In re, 58 L. J., Ch. 32; 39 Ch. D. 189; 59 L. T. 882—C. A.

The master of the rolls has no jurisdiction under the trustee acts to appoint, or to make an order vesting the trust fund in, a new trustee in the place of a trustee found a lunatic in England, and residing there. Smith's Trusts, In re, Ir. R. 4 Eq. 180.

No Original Trustees.]—The court has inherent jurisdiction in a cause to appoint trustees of a will in a case where no trustees were originally appointed by the testator. Dodkin v. Brunt, L. R. 6 Eq. 580.

Executors of a will, which contained no appointment of trustees, set apart a sum of money to answer a legacy; the fund was standing in the name of the surviving executor:—Held, that he was a constructive trustee within the trustee acts, and new trustees were appointed on petition. Davis's Trusts, In re, 40 L. J., Ch. 566; L. R. 12 Eq. 214; 19 W. R. 944.

The court will appoint trustees of a will by which property is limited in such a manner as contemplates the intervention of trustees, although none may have been appointed by the testator. Gillett, In re, 25 W. R. 23.

Where a testator had, by his will, left all his property to his wife for life and appointed her his sole executrix, and had also left legacies of considerable amount to be paid after her death, but had not constituted any persons trustees thereof:—Held, upon petition intituled in an administration action commenced for the purpose and in the Trustee Act, 1850, that upon the retirement of the widow the court had jurisdiction, under the Trustee Act, 1850, to appoint in her place a trustee or trustees to perform the duties incident to the office of an executor. Moore, In re, McAlpine v. Moore, 21 Ch. D. 778; 30 W. R. 839.

No existing Trustees.]—The court has no jurisdiction under the Trustee Act, 1850, to appoint a new trustee of a term of which there is no subsisting trustee. Hazeldine, In re, 16 Jur. 853.

—— Death of Trustee in Lifetime of Testator.]—When a testatrix devised real estate on trust for sale, but there had never been a trustee of the will, in consequence of the death in the testatrix's lifetime of the sole trustee named in the will, and it was not known who was the heir of the testatrix:—Held, that the court had no jurisdiction under the Trustee Act, 1850, in the absence of the heir, to appoint a trustee and to make an order vesting in him the real estate descended. Gunson v. Simpson, L. R. 5 Eq. 332; 18 L. T. 78; 16 W. R. 782.

Where a sole trustee for sale of a will had died in the lifetime of the testator, a petition was presented by the administrator of the testator, and the executors and trustees of the trustee of the will who had died, asking for the appointment of two new trustees and for a vesting order:—Held, that s. 31 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, did not apply, and that therefore the petition was necessary. Ambler's Trusts, In re, 59 L. T. 210.

The court, sitting in lunacy, has power under s. 9 of the Trustee Extension Act, 1852, to appoint new trustees of the will of a deceased lunatic, where the trustees appointed by the lunatic have died in his lifetime, for the purpose of getting rid of the funds standing in court to the credit of the lunacy. Orde, In re, 52 L. J., Ch. 832; 24 Ch. D. 271; 49 L. T. 430; 31 W. R. 801.

When all the trustees of real estate named in a will have predeceased the testator, new trustees may be appointed if the heir of the testator is before the court. Smirthwaite's Trusts, In re, 40 L. J., Ch. 176; L. R. 11 Eq. 251; 23 L. T. 726; 19 W. R. 381.

A suit having been instituted for the purpose of obtaining an order for the transfer, with the consent of all parties, of a fund standing in the books of the Bank of England in the name of an incorporate body, which had ceased to exist, the court, having ordered the decree to be intituled in the matter of the Trustee Act, 1850, appointed two trustees, and empowered and directed them to transfer the fund. Hanover (King) v. Bank of England, L. R. 8 Eq. 350; 21 L. T. 106.

Contract for Sale—Old Trustee not Party.]—The court refused to appoint a new trustee on petition, where the object of the parties was to convey an estate to a purchaser, pursuant to a contract for sale, to which the old trustee ought to have been but was not a party. Lloyd, In re, 3 Jo. & Lat. 255.

Trustees de facto.]—Held, that this court has no power, under the Trustee Act, 1850, to appoint trustees, where there are trustees de facto acting as such. Hadley's Trusts, In re, 5 De G. & Sm. 67; 21 L. J., Ch. 109; 16 Jur. 98.

Power in Settlement Insufficient—Incapable of Acting.]—Where a trustee, a bankrupt, had not surrendered, and was proclaimed, the court refused to appoint a new trustee in his place under a power, in which were the words, "refuse or become incapable to act." Turner v. Maule, 15 Jur. 761.

New trustee appointed by the court where the power to appoint new trustees only contained the words, "die, or decline, or become incapable to act," and where a trustee who had acted was anxious to retire. Armstrong's Settlement, In re, 5 W. R. 448.

New trustee appointed by the court where the power to appoint new trustees only contained the words, "shall die, or become incapable, or be unwilling to act," and where two trustees who had acted desired to be discharged from the trusts. Woodgate's Settlement, In re, 5 W. R. 448.

The words "unable to act," do not apply to the case of a trustee going out of the jurisdiction. Harrison's Trust, In re, 22 L. J., Ch. 69; 1 W. R. 58.

By residence for twenty years in America, and establishing himself in trade there, a trustee held to "become incapable" of acting in respect of leasehold property in England. Mesnard v. Welford, 1 Sm. & G. 426; 1 Eq. R. 237; 22 L. J., Ch. 1053; 17 Jur. 815; 1 W. R. 443.

In 1824 A. was appointed a trustee of leaseholds, situate in Middlesex; and the deed by which he was appointed contained a power for B. to appoint a trustee in the place of A., if A. "should die, or decline, or become incapable to act in the execution of the trusts aforesaid." In 1832 A. went to the United States of America, and had never since returned to this country, and was now settled in trade at New York. B. had appointed a trustee in the place of A. without A.'s consent:—Held, that A. was "incapable to act" as a trustee of the leaseholds in question, and the new trustee was declared to have been properly appointed. An order was made vesting the leaseholds in the new trustee. Ib.

A settlement contained a power to appoint a new trustee in case any trustee should become incapable of acting. A trustee became of unsound mind. Upon petition, under the Trustee Act, 13 & 14 Vict. c. 60, the court made an order for appointing a new trustee, and empowering the continuing trustee to transfer the trust fund. Cooper's Settlement, In re, 25 L. J., Ch. 685; 4 W. R. 729.

A testator appointed A. (the tenant for life) and B. trustees. The will contained no power to appoint new trustees. B. having disclaimed, A., under 23 & 24 Vict. c. 145, s. 27, appointed a single trustee in his place:—Held, that the other cestuis que trust were entitled to have a third trustee appointed, and that the statute did not take away the jurisdiction of the court to increase the original number of trustees. D'Adhemar v. Bertrand, 35 Beav. 19.

—— Rectification of Deed.]—Where deed does not provide for appointment of new trustees, court will not add such a power. Southwell v. Ward, Tam. 314.

Where a bill is filed seeking to rectify an instrument, and for the appointment of new trustees, the court, though it may not be able to rectify the instrument, will grant relief so far as to appoint new trustees. Barber v. Barber, 4 Drew. 666; 29 L. J., Ch. 49; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1197; 1 L. T. 21; 8 W. R. 16.

Therefore, where a bill was filed to rectify a settlement in a foreign form, and praying the appointment of new trustees, and the defendant demurred to the bill for want of equity, and for want of jurisdiction, the court overruled the demurrer, but without costs; the plaintiff not satisfying the court that he would be entitled, at the hearing, to have the settlement rectified. Ib.

—— Effect of Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 31.]—Sect. 31 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, having given a power to appoint new trustees in every case where a trust is subsisting, it is now improper to apply to the court for the appointment of new trustees under the Trustee Act, 1850, s. 32, unless there is some reason to make it "difficult, inexpedient, or impracticable to appoint them without the assistance of the court" other than the mere absence of a power to do so in the instrument creating the trust. Gibbon's Trusts, In re, 45 L. T. 756; 30 W. R. 287.

Donee of Power willing to Appoint.]—Where under a subsisting power of appointment the donee of the power is able and willing to appoint new trustees under s. 31 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, the court has no jurisdiction to make an appointment under the trustee acts. Higginbottom's Trusts, In re, 62 L. J., Ch. 74; [1892] 3 Ch. 132; 3 R. 23; 67 L. T. 190.

The court has not jurisdiction, under the Trustee Act, 1850, to take away the power of appointing new trustees from the donee of the power, where the donee is capable of exercising, and willing to exercise, the power, although such donee may have disclosed an intention or desire to exercise his power corruptly. Hodson's Settlement, In re, 9 Hare, 118; 20 L. J., Ch. 551; 15 Jur. 552.

Lunatic—Consent to Appointment by Committee.]—A will contained a power of appointment of new trustees exercisable with the consent of the tenant for life. The trustees having died, the tenant for life, who had been found lunatic, presented a petition in lunacy and chancery by the committee of her estate as next friend for the appointment of new trustees:—Held, that there was no jurisdiction in lunacy to appoint new trustees, and that the only proper application in lunacy was to ask for an order authorising the committee to consent on behalf of the lunatic to an appointment of trustees under the power. Garrod, In re, 55 L. J., Ch. 311; 31 Ch. D. 164; 54 L. T. 291; 34 W. R. 157—C. A.

The court has power, notwithstanding s. 137,

16 & 17 Vict. c. 70, to make an order for the appointment of new trustees, where the power of appointment was vested in a tenant for life, a lunatic, but it declined to do so in the absence of the committee of the lunatic. Parke's or Parker's Trust, In re, 32 Beav. 580; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 998; 8 L. T. 378; 11 W. R. 655.

A power for the appointment of new trustees contained in a settlement became vested in a person who had been found lunatic by inquisition. The committee of the person and estate petitioned, under the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 70, for leave to exercise the power for him, and the same was ordered. Bowmer, In re, 3 De G. & J. 658; 28 L. J., Ch. 618; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 348; 7 W. R. 313.

When the person having power to appoint a new trustee is a lunatic, found so by inquisition, an order appointing a new trustee may be made in chancery under the Trustee Act, 1850, s. 32. Sparrow, In re, L. R. 5 Ch. 662; 18 W. R. 1185.

Order made under the Trustee Act, 1850, appointing a new trustee, and vesting the trust premises in him jointly with the continuing trustees, in a case where one of three trustees was lunatic, and though the will contained a power to appoint new trustees. Davis, In re, 3 Mac. & G. 278.

Property was left by will to trustees in trust for a person for her life, with remainder as therein mentioned. In the clause providing for the appointment of the trustees the power of appointment was vested solely in the tenant for life during her life. The tenant for life having become lunatic, and one of the trustees of the will having died, the court on the petition of the surviving trustee for the time being and the committee of the lunatic's estate, appointed a new trustee in the stead of the trustee who had died. Heaphy, In re, 18 W. R. 1070.

The court of chancery will not take upon itself to inquire into the fact whether a lunatic is a trustee within the meaning of the Trustee Act, 1850; there must be a reference to the master to make that inquiry, according to the former practice. Ramshay, In re, 15 Jur. 96.

—— Denial of Lunacy—Jurisdiction.]—The court will not, on a petition under the Trustee Act, 1850, remove a trustee against his wish. Where the ground for a petition for the appointment of a new trustee is the alleged insanity of a trustee, and the insanity is denied by him, the court will not try the question whether the trustee is of sound mind, nor will it (under s. 52) direct a commission in the nature of a writ de lunatico inquirendo to issue concerning such person, the proper mode of establishing the lunacy in such a case being on a petition in lunacy or in an action in the high court to remove the trustee. Combs, In re, 51 L. T. 45—C. A.

"Person of Unsound Mind."]—The clause in s. 2 of the Trustee Act, 1850, which declares that the expression "person of unsound mind" shall mean "any person, not an infant, who, not having been found to be a lunatic, shall be incapable from infirmity of mind to manage his own affairs," must be construed as referring to a person who, although not found a lunatic, is nevertheless in such a state of mind as to render him liable to be so found if an inquisition were held upon him. The case of a trustee who is, from great age and its infirmities, practically incapable of transacting business (though not otherwise of unsound mind) is within s. 32 of the Trustee Act, 1850. Phelps' Settlement Trusts, In re, 55 L. J., Ch. 465; 31 Ch. D. 351; 54 L. T. 480—C. A.

A paralytic deprived of the power of speech, and unable to read or write or attend to business, but apparently not suffering from any mental disease, is not a person of unsound mind within the Trustee Act, 1850. Barber, In re, 57 L. J., Ch. 756; 39 Ch. D. 187; 58 L. T. 756; 37 W. R. 182—C. A.

A person is of "unsound mind" within the meaning of the Trustee Act, 1850, where from permanent incapacity of mind he is incapable of managing his affairs, though his state of mind is not such that he would be found lunatic on inquisition. Phelps' Settlement Trusts, In re (supra), not followed. Martin's Trusts, In re, 56 L. J., Ch. 695; 34 Ch. D. 618; 56 L. T. 241; 35 W. R. 524—C. A.

In an action in the chancery division, the court gave a judgment removing a trustee of unsound mind, and appointing a new trustee in his place, but declined to make an order under s. 34 of the Trustee Act, 1850, vesting the estate in the new trustee, considering that it ought to be applied for in lunacy. The lords justices sitting in lunacy made the vesting order. Ib.

The court has jurisdiction, under s. 32 of the Trustee Act, 1850, to appoint a new trustee in the place of a trustee who has become incapable, as, for instance, through age and infirmity, of acting in the trusts. Lemann's Trusts, In re, 52 L. J., Ch. 560; 22 Ch. D. 633; 48 L. T. 389; 31 W. R. 520.

A will contained a power for the trustees, or the survivors of them, to appoint a new trustee in the place of any trustee who should be "incapable to act." One of the surviving trustees, the testator's widow, having become, through age and infirmity, incapable of acting in the trusts, or of concurring in the appointment of a new trustee, or in a transfer of the trust estate, the court appointed a new trustee in her place and made a vesting order. Ib.

Where a trustee, from ill health, was unequal to the exertion of signing the necessary papers for effecting a transfer into court of a sum of stock, the court appointed new trustees of such sum of stock, they undertaking, within a given time, to transfer such sum of stock into the name, and with the privity, of the accountant-general of this court, pursuant to the provisions of the Trustee Relief Act. Dawson's Trusts, In re, Broome, In re, 3 N. R. 39—L.JJ.

iii. Under the Trustee Acts prior to 1850.

Construction of Act.]—Construction of 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 22. Faireswell, In re, 2 Jur. 987.

A trustee and executor was not within the 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 22. Clarke v. Wilson, Hay & J. 424.

General Rule.]—The court would not appoint new trustees under the 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 22, except in a plain case, or where there had been a recent creation of trust, and the court had jurisdiction by reason of disability, or the like. The insecure nature of the property was no ground for the interference of the court. Whitley v. Fishbourne, Ll. & G. t. Sugd. 23.

The court had no power to appoint new trustees under the 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 60, unless a case of disability in the present trustees was established. Pennefather, In re, 2 Dr. & War. 292. Harte v. Ffrench (Lord), Ib., 292.

The court would not appoint a new trustee under s. 22 of the 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 60, where no bill had been filed, and there was no power to do so in the instrument creating the trust, unless a disability existed such as was pointed out by the previous sections of the act, viz. infancy, lunacy, &c. Fitzgerald, Ex parte, Ll. & G. t. Sugd. 20.

Before the court had jurisdiction under s. 22, there must have been a case where the party might apply by petition, under the former sections of the act. Ib., 21. S. P., Humble, Ex parte, 4 L. J., Ch. 21.

Death of Trustee.]—Leasehold, as well as freehold, charity estates were within s. 23 of 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 60, where all the trustees were dead; and a direction would be made under that section for the appointment of new trustees; and that a proper person be appointed to convey and assign the estates accordingly. St. Antholin Trust Estates, In re, 7 L. J., Ch. 269.

The court made the usual order of reference to the master to appoint new trustees of the will, under the 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 22, the devise to the trustees being to them and the survivors of them, and the heirs and assigns of such survivor; and it appearing that the trustees named were both dead, that they had never acted, but had never declined, nor were ever called upon to act, and the heir-at-law of the survivor was resident in Canada. Legg, In re, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 374.

The court refused to appoint new trustees, under the 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 60, in the room of trustees who had died, where the trust property consisted both of stock and real estate, no administration having been taken out to the survivor of the said trustees (who died intestate), and his heir-at-law being out of the jurisdiction. Anderson, In re, Ll. & G. t. Sugd. 27.

It was not intended by ss. 9 and 10 to supply the want of a personal representative of a trustee of a chattel interest, or stock. Ib.

Where the sole trustee in a will, to whom a term was demised, died in the testator's lifetime, the court referred it to the master to appoint a new trustee, and to approve of a like demise. Devey v. Peace, Tam. 78.

Refusal to Act.]—The mere refusal of the trustee to act in the trusts would not bring the case within the 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 60. Hartford, In re, 1 Con. & L. 394; 2 Dr. & War. 292.

This court would not appoint a new trustee, under the 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 22, instead of a person who appeared never to have accepted the trust and refused to act. Mitchell v. Nixon, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 155.

The court would not appoint a new trustee, under the 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 22, where the old trustee had acted and was within the jurisdiction, but refused to act any longer. Hossford, In re, 1 Jones, 550.

The court would not appoint a new trustee, under the 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 22, in the place of a person, who though named as trustee, had never accepted the trust. Quinlan, In re, 1 Jones, 549. S. P., Clerk, In re, 1 Jur. 737.

A trustee of chattels real and of stock, having acted in the trusts, died, and appointed executors resident within the jurisdiction, who proved his will, but never acted and refused to act in the trusts, which were still continuing:—Held, that the court had jurisdiction to appoint new trustees under the 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 22. Muley v. Smiths, 3 Ir. Eq. R. 497; Longf. & T. 241.

The original trustee having committed a breach of trust, the court appointed new trustees, the executors of the old trustee undertaking to replace the trust fund. Ib.

Where the executor of the survivor of three trustees declined to prove his will:—Held, that the case was within the stat. 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 60; and, upon the usual reference, new trustees were appointed. Huggar, Ex parte, 1 Beav. 98.

An estate was devised to A., subject to a charge of 5,000*l.*, payable to the executors in a suit to which A. was a party; the estate was sold, and all proper parties were ordered to join in the conveyance. A., refusing to execute the deed, was declared a trustee for the purchaser, under the 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 60, and another person was directed to convey in his stead. Robinson v. Wood, 5 Beav. 246.

One of three trustees under a will had disclaimed, and another had become lunatic:—Held, upon the petition of the sole acting trustee and the cestui que trust, in the matter of the lunacy, that the court had no jurisdiction to appoint a new trustee in the place of the disclaiming trustee; but the court appointed two persons trustees in the place of the lunatic. Smith, In re, 17 L. J., Ch. 415.

A person was named as a trustee in a marriage settlement of the year 1821, but did not execute or act in the trusts of it. After the death of his co-trustee, he, in 1844, refused to act in the trusts. The court, upon the petition of the tenant for life, under the 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 22, refused to appoint a new trustee in his place. After such a lapse of time, it must, in a petition matter, be presumed that the trustee accepted the trust. Uniacke, In re, 1 Jo. & Lat. 1.

The stat. 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 60, was not intended to sanction a trustee resigning his trust rather than do an act which he deemed improper. A trustee in a marriage settlement refused to join in lending the trust moneys, because he disapproved of the security. The wife pursuant to a power for the purpose removed him, and appointed a new trustee in his place; and the husband and wife then presented a petition under the act to compel the old trustee to transfer the funds to the new trustee. The court refused the application. Pepper v. Tuckey, 2 Jo. & Lat. 95; 7 Ir. Eq. R. 572.

By marriage settlement a judgment was vested in trustees; and it was declared, that if the wife should, with the consent of her husband, think it advisable to call in the sum secured thereby, the trustees were to permit her to use her discretion as to the re-investment of same. One trustee died; the other was out of the jurisdiction. The wife, with the consent of her husband, called in the money, and she and her husband assigned the judgment to a third person, who advanced the money; but the surviving trustee refused to execute the assignment, and desired to be discharged from the trusts. The court, thinking that the real object of the parties was not to continue the money in settlement, but, under colour of the power, to get it out of settlement, refused to appoint new trustees. Molony, In re, 2 Jo. & Lat. 391.

Where a trustee, who did not labour under any disability, declined to act, an application by petition for a new trustee was granted, although some of the cestuis que trust were minors, the funds being small. Plunket v. Smith, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 523.

Trustees out of the Jurisdiction.] — The court appointed new trustees under 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 22, where the trustees were out of the jurisdiction, and declined to act, although the deed creating the trusts contained no power to appoint new trustees. Mayo (Earl), In re, Ll. & G. t. Plunk. 118, 126.

In every case in which a petition for conveyance could be presented under a previous section, the court had power, under s. 22, to appoint new trustees. Ib.

Three trustees, two of whom were creditors of A., joined in making promissory notes for securing to the other creditors of A. a composition on the respective debts, and took a conveyance and assignment of the real and personal estate of A. upon trust, after paying the costs and charges, to indemnify the three trustees in respect of the promissory notes, and then to pay the two trustees, who were creditors, a like composition on their respective debts, and to pay the surplus to A. After two of the trustees had received part of the personal estate of A., and had paid the promissory notes to a larger amount than they had received, the other trustee (who was one of the creditors) went out of the jurisdiction of the court. There was no power in the deed to appoint new trustees:—Held, on the petition of the two trustees, that the trustee out of the jurisdiction was a trustee within the act 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 60, for the petitioners and himself, and the court, without directing a bill to be filed, appointed another trustee in his stead. Ryley, In re, 3 Hare, 614.

Where a rent-charge was, by indenture of 1634, granted to trustees for charitable uses, the last survivor being unknown, the court, under 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 23, on the petition of parties who had administered the rent-charge until it ceased to be paid, appointed new trustees, and a party to convey the rent-charge to them. Nightingale's Charity, In re, 3 Hare, 336; 8 Jur. 1005.

The court would not direct the appointment of a trustee to convey, in the room of a trustee who was abroad, without a reference to the master, although there might be affidavits of the absence of the trustee. Inquiry also directed whether the absent party was a trustee, although appointed such by the duchy court of Lancaster. Fazekerly v. Gillebrand, 7 Jur. 1123.

One of two trustees absconded: the other was ordered to transfer the fund into his own name, and that of another appointed. Friendly Society, In re, 1 Sim. & S. 82.

Semble, that neither bankruptcy nor occasional residence abroad disqualified a testamentary trustee to whom the testator had unconditionally confided a large personal discretion in the administration of the trusts, together with power to appoint a receiver of the rents of the trust estates. Archbold v. Charitable Bequests Commissioners, 2 H. L. Cas. 440.

Form of the order for the appointment of a new trustee, under 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 60, in the room of a trustee resident out of the jurisdiction, where the trust fund consisted merely of government stock in the Bank of Ireland. Chambers, In re, 3 Dr. & War. 496.

A testator, who gave a legacy for charitable purposes to be executed in a foreign country, named as one of the trustees of the charity an officer created by act of parliament, describing him by his office, and not by his name. The act of parliament having been repealed, and the office abolished, the court referred it to the master to approve of a proper person to be a trustee in his stead. Att.-Gen. v. Stephens, 3 Myl. & K. 347.

One of the three trustees, dismissed under an act of parliament, being gone abroad, and having released, there being no provision for the change of trustees, upon a bill, it was referred to the master to appoint a new trustee. Buchanan v. Hamilton, 5 Ves. 722.

The residence of a party interested in trust funds being out of the jurisdiction does not authorise the court to appoint new trustees without notice being given to such party. Hardman, Ex parte, Molyneux, In re, 3 Mont. D. & D. 559.

Power to Appoint in Settlement.]—Testator directed a new trustee to be appointed, if either should die or become incapable of acting; one absconded, charged with forgery; but was not outlawed; referred to the master to appoint a new trustee. Millard v. Eyre, 2 Ves. 94.

Where a deed declaring trusts contained a power to appoint new trustees in case of death, desire to be discharged, or refusal to act of the trustees, and the trustee went to America, and his residence could not be discovered:—Held, that a new trustee might be appointed, under s. 22 of 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 60, on petition. Ledwich, In re, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 561.

Although taking up his permanent residence abroad, in a case where there was a power to appoint a new trustee in place of one going to reside abroad, did not ipso facto deprive a trustee of his office, yet it was such a disqualification as entitled the cestui que trust to have a new trustee appointed in his place. O'Reilly v. Alderson, 8 Hare, 101.

The act 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 60, did not apply to a case where the event upon which the appointment of new trustees was sought had been provided for by the settlement. Laffan, In re, 1 Con. & L. 395. And see Ib., 396, n.

The court might appoint new trustees under 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 22, although the instrument creating the trust contained a power to appoint new trustees. Fauntleroy, In re, 10 Sim. 252; 8 L. J., Ch. 367; 3 Jur. 673. S. P., Foxhall, In re, 2 Ph. 281; 16 L. J., Ch. 498. And see Brooks v. Mills, 14 Jur. 1080.

Lunatic Trustee.]—The vice-chancellor had no authority to make an order of reference, under the 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 60, with respect to a lunatic trustee. Shorrocks, In re, 1 Myl. & Cr. 31.

The vice-chancellor had no jurisdiction, under 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 60, in cases of lunatic trustees or mortgagees, beyond directing the reference to the master in the first instance. Anon., 5 Sim. 332; 3 L. J., Ch. 240.

Where a trustee was of unsound mind, but not found a lunatic, a reference, under 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 60, to appoint a new trustee, could be made only by the lord chancellor. Mount, In re, 12 L. J., Ch. 95.

On a petition under the act 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 60, the court never interfered in the administration of the trusts, but merely substituted a trustee in the place of the lunatic. Ward, In re, 2 Mac. & G. 73.

New trustees appointed on petition, under the act 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 60, in the stead of a lunatic, not found such by inquisition, to whom, together with two other persons since deceased, a sum of money charged by will upon real estates in the West Indies, and another sum secured by a bond, had been assigned by a deed, dated 1802, upon certain trusts. A person at the same time appointed to assign the sums of money to the new trustees. Welch, In re, 3 Myl. & Cr. 292 ; 7 L. J., Ch. 169.

When it did not appear that the old trustee, though incapable of managing his affairs, was a lunatic, the court would not appoint a new trustee, under s. 22 of the 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 60. Wakeford, In re, 1 Jo. & Lat. 2.

Upon a reference made on a petition for the appointment of a new trustee in the place of an original trustee, who had left this country, the master found that another of the original trustees had become lunatic. An order was afterwards made for the transfer of the trust funds by the committee, without a second reference in the matter of the lunatic under the 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 60. Buckle, In re, 15 L. J., Ch. 289.

One of the trustees under a will had disclaimed and another had become a lunatic :—Held, upon the petition of the sole acting trustee and the cestuis que trust in the matter of the lunacy, that the court had no jurisdiction to appoint a new trustee in the place of the disclaiming trustee ; but the court appointed two persons trustees in the place of the lunatic. Smith, In re, 17 L. J., Ch. 415.

iv. Persons appointed New Trustees.

General Principle.]—The rules adopted by the court in appointing new trustees are, first, the court will have regard to the wishes of the person by whom the trust has been created, if expressed in the instrument creating the trust, or clearly to be collected from it : secondly, the court will not appoint a person to be a trustee with a view to the interests of some, and in opposition to that of others of the cestuis que trust ; thirdly, the court will have regard to the question whether the appointment of a proposed person will promote or impede the execution of the trust. Tempest, In re, 35 L. J., Ch. 632 ; L. R. 1 Ch. 485 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 539 ; 14 L. T. 688 ; 14 W. R. 850.

A trust deed between father and son contained a power for the appointment of new trustees ; this power was given, in the first instance, to the father and son during their joint lives, and after the death of either of them to the survivor. A suit was instituted after the death of the son by the father against the representative of the trustee for a conveyance of the legal estate in the trust premises to new trustees nominated by the father. A reference having been made to the master to appoint a proper person to be trustee, he instituted an inquiry as to the relative fitness of the persons proposed by the father and the party representing the interest of the son, and reported against the nominee of the father :—Held, upon exceptions to this report, that the right of nomination rested with the father, and that the master ought to have selected his nominee, except he was objectionable. Kennedy v. Turnley, Dr. 415 ; 6 Ir. Eq. R. 399.

Principles upon which the court acts in the appointment of trustees in such cases. Ib.

Interested Parties.—Beneficiaries.]—On a petition for the appointment of a new trustee of a will in substitution for one who had died, the court (declining to lay down any hard-and-fast rule that under no circumstances will a cestui que trust and one of the donees of a power to appoint new trustees be appointed as trustee) directed the appointment as trustee of one of several persons beneficially interested in the estate of the testator, who had nominated as trustees of his will persons to whom he had given beneficial interests, and on their death or retirement had empowered the persons beneficially entitled for the time being "to appoint one or more persons to supply the vacancy." Tempest v. Camoys (Lord), 58 L. T. 221 ; 52 J. P. 532.

Where the trusts of a settlement were of a complicated nature, and no stranger could be found willing to accept the office of trustee, the court, departing from its usual practice, appointed as trustees two of the parties beneficially interested. Clissold's Settlement, In re, 10 L. T. 642.

Where the trusts are onerous, and other persons cannot be found to undertake them, the court will appoint one of the cestuis que trust to be trustee. Clutton, Ex parte, 17 Jur. 988.

Under special circumstances, the court will appoint one of the cestuis que trust as trustee of an estate. Conybeare's Settlement, Ex parte, 1 W. R. 458.

Cestuis que trust residing out of the jurisdiction of the court appointed trustees of real estate under peculiar circumstances. Custis's Trust, In re, Ir. R. 5 Eq. 429.

The original trustees of a will being dead, a petition was presented for the appointment of new trustees, and for a vesting order. The persons proposed to be appointed were both beneficially interested under the will, but it was found impossible to obtain the services of independent persons. All the beneficiaries, except one who was abroad, were co-petitioners, and were desirous that the persons proposed as trustees should be appointed. The court made the order, subject to an undertaking by the new trustees that if either became sole trustee he would use every endeavour to obtain the appointment of a co-trustee ; and dispensed with service on the absent beneficiary. Lightbody's Trusts, In re, 52 L. T. 40 ; 33 W. R. 452.

—— Remainderman.]—The court refused to appoint as trustee the remainderman entitled on the death of an infant tenant in tail in possession, the powers being very wide. Paine's Trusts, In re, 54 L. J., Ch. 735 ; 28 Ch. D. 725 ; 52 L. T. 323 ; 33 W. R. 564.

—— Near Relative of Beneficiaries.]—The master of the rolls will not appoint a near relative of the cestuis que trust a trustee, unless he finds it absolutely impossible to get some one unconnected with the family to undertake the office. Wilding v. Bolder, 22 Beav. 222.

—— Husband of Beneficiary.]—Where it was not possible to get another person, the court, with the consent of a lady who was interested under a will for her separate use, appointed her husband one of two new trustees of the will, the order containing a direction that if he became sole trustee there should be a new trustee appointed. Parrott, In re, 30 W. R. 97.

The husband of a cestui que trust being appointed a trustee by the court, was required to undertake to apply for the appointment of an additional trustee as soon as he became a sole trustee. Hattatt, In re, 21 L. T. 781; 18 W. R. 416.

—— Feme Sole.]—The court declined making an order allowing a feme sole to propose herself to be trustee, on the ground that, on her marriage, her husband might interfere with the trust. Brook v. Brook, 1 Beav. 531.

An unmarried lady of education and position, and having independent means, was appointed a co-trustee of a will. Campbell's Trusts, In re, 31 Beav. 176; 31 L. J., Ch. 821; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1199; 10 W. R. 640.

The court appointed an unmarried lady, aged twenty-seven, who was a relation of the cestuis que trust under a will, to be a trustee, there being a difficulty in finding any other suitable person to accept the office. Berkley, In re, Berkley v. Berkley, 43 L. J., Ch. 703; L. R. 9 Ch. 720; 31 L. T. 365.

Part of a testator's estate consisted of shares upon which there was an unlimited liability. Upon a petition to appoint a new trustee, an order was made that one of the continuing trustees, in whose name the shares stood, should sell them, and invest the proceeds in the names of himself and the other trustees. Ib.

Solicitor Trustee appointing Son.]—On the retirement of one of two trustees of a will, the continuing trustee, who was the solicitor to the trustees, appointed his son, who was his partner in his business, to be a new trustee. The trusts of the will were being administered by the court:—Held, that, without any reference to the personal fitness of the son, by reason of his position the appointment was one which the court ought not to approve, though it would not have been invalid if the court had not been administering the trusts. Norris, In re, Allen v. Norris, 53 L. J., Ch. 913; 27 Ch. D. 333; 51 L. T. 593; 32 W. R. 955.

Persons out of the Jurisdiction — Beneficiaries all out of Jurisdiction.]—Where all the cestuis que trust are resident out of the jurisdiction, the court will appoint new trustees resident out of the jurisdiction. Liddiard, In re, 49 L. J., Ch. 373; 14 Ch. D. 310; 42 L. T. 621; 28 W. R. 574.

Consols stood settled upon a trust for a married woman for life to her separate use, without power of anticipation, with remainder as she should by will appoint, with remainder to her executors or administrators. She and all her family resided in Ireland:—Held, that the court would appoint two persons residing in Ireland, though out of the jurisdiction. Austen's Settlement, In re, 38 L. T. 601.

—— Two Trustees out of, and One within, the Jurisdiction.]—The cestuis que trust (some of whom were infants) under a settlement of freehold farms in Wales (dated in 1840) were all resident out of the jurisdiction either in Canada or the United States. The settlement contained a power of sale exercisable with the consent of the equitable tenant for life, and a power of appointing new trustees exercisable by the surviving or continuing trustee, or the heirs or assigns of the last surviving or continuing trustee. In 1874, when both the original trustees of the settlement were dead, the executrix of the last surviving trustee, erroneously believing herself empowered in that behalf, purported to appoint two persons resident in Canada to be trustees of the settlement. These two persons, believing themselves to be duly appointed, had acted as trustees since 1874, and had employed an English agent to receive the rents of the farms, paying him a commission for so doing. The heir of the last surviving trustee could not be found, and there was no one capable of exercising the power of appointing new trustees contained in the settlement. Upon a petition by all the cestuis que trust for the appointment by the court of the two Canadians and the English agent as new trustees, and for authority to pay the English trustee a commission on the rents while acting as manager and receiver, the court appointed the two persons resident in Canada and the English agent to be new trustees of the settlement, but required an undertaking by the trustees out of the jurisdiction, in case the power of appointing new trustees should become exercisable by them, or either of them, not to appoint any new trustee resident out of the jurisdiction without the consent of the court. Freeman's Settlement Trusts, In re, 57 L. J., Ch. 160; 37 Ch. D. 148; 57 L. T. 798; 36 W. R. 71.

The court also, subject to the production of evidence as to the number of the holdings, the rents and dates of payment, the necessity of paying a commission for collecting the rents, and that the proposed remuneration was proper, sanctioned the payment of a commission to the English trustee. Ib.

—— Canadian.]—A father gave six separate sums in trust for six daughters respectively for life, with remainder for the benefit of their children respectively at twenty-one or marriage, with ultimate gifts over for the benefit of all his children in certain contingencies. He gave a general power of appointment of new trustees. One of the six daughters married a Canadian; her children were Canadians, and had attained twenty-one or married, and the investments of the sum of money for her benefit were mostly Canadian. One of the trustees of the will retiring as far as regarded that sum, the court appointed a Canadian trustee of the same jointly with the other trustee of the will. Cunard's Trusts, In re, 48 L. J., Ch. 192; 27 W. R. 52.

—— Persons Resident in Paris.]—By a deed-poll, declaring the trusts of certain sums of stock, power was reserved to the trustees to invest the trust moneys in the French funds. The trustees, although applied to by the tenant for life to make such investment, refused to do so, and paid the trust funds into court under the Trustee Relief Act. Upon a petition presented by the tenant for life, praying for the appointment of three foreigners resident in Paris as trustees in the room of the old ones, and the transfer of the trust funds to them accordingly, the court refused to make the order. Guibert's Trust, In re, 16 Jur. 852.

—— Persons Resident in New Zealand.]—

Trustees having a power of advancement for the benefit of children, were authorised by the court to make an advancement for the passage and outfit of the children with their parents to New Zealand, for the sake of their health, each child's share contributing equally to the passage and outfit of their parents. Long's Settlement, In re, 38 L. J., Ch. 125; 19 L. T. 672; 17 W. R. 218.

The court declined to sanction the transfer of the trust funds to new trustees resident in New Zealand. Ib.

v. Number of New Trustees.

One Trustee a Discharged Bankrupt—New Trustee substituted.]—One of the two trustees of a will had been adjudicated a bankrupt, but had obtained his discharge. The other trustee, who was beneficially entitled also to one-third of the trust estate, petitioned for the removal of the trustee who had been bankrupt, and the appointment of a new trustee. The application was opposed by beneficiaries entitled to greater shares than the petitioner:—Held, that the bankruptcy being a recent one, the trustee must be entirely impecunious; and that it was expedient under s. 147 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, to appoint a new trustee in the place of the one who had been bankrupt, notwithstanding that he had obtained his discharge. Foster's Trusts, In re, 55 L. T. 479.

Suit for Removal of Surviving Trustee—Original Number appointed.]—Where a suit was instituted for the administration of the trusts of a will, for an account of the funds, and for the removal of the surviving trustee, and at the hearing all parties waived all the prayer, except the appointment of new trustees, and stated that all parties interested were before the court, a petition was directed to be presented, supported by a proper affidavit of the fitness of the intended new trustees, and an order to be made for the appointment of the same number as were appointed by the will, without a reference. Burkley v. Buckley, 14 Jur. 189.

A., B., and C. were trustees under a will. A. died; B. and C. became bankrupt. Three new trustees were appointed by the court in the place of A., B., and C. Vaughan, Ex parte, Clarke, In re, 13 L. J., Bk. 22.

Out of four trustees of a settlement one was a lunatic, so found by inquisition, and another was, through ill-health, unfit to act. The court appointed two new trustees in their room, and made an order that the real estates subject to the settlement should vest in the new trustees jointly with the continuing old ones, and that the right to call for a transfer of some stock also subject to the settlement should vest in the same persons. Chauncy, In re, 14 W. R. 849.

Additional Trustees—Trustee Act, 1850, s. 32.]—The sole trustee of a will who had acted, and was in no way personally disqualified from continuing to act, in the trusts, was desirous of being discharged from the trusts of a particular fund, forming portion of the trust property, and had expressed his intention of lodging such fund in court unless new trustees were appointed in respect of it, whom he declined to appoint himself:—Held, not to be a case of expediency for the appointment of additional trustees within s. 32 of the Trustee Act, 1850. Nesbitt's Trusts, In re, 19 L. R. Ir. 509—C. A. (Ir.)

Under s. 32 of the Trustee Act, 1850, the court has jurisdiction to appoint an additional trustee, even though there is no vacancy in the trusteeship. Brackenbury's Trusts, In re (L. R. 10 Eq. 45) followed. Gregson's Trusts, In re, 56 L. J., Ch. 286; 34 Ch. D. 209; 35 W. R. 286.

Semble, that the power conferred by sub-s. 2 of s. 31 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, to increase the number of trustees, "on an appointment of a new trustee," only arises when an appointment is being made to supply a vacancy in the trusteeship. Ib.

It is not contrary to the practice of the court to appoint three trustees in the place of two nominated in a will containing a power to appoint new trustees. Birch v. Cropper, 2 De G. & Sm. 255.

In appointing new trustees, the court is not limited to the number originally nominated. Plenty v. West, 16 Beav. 356.

Two trustees appointed, in addition to two existing trustees, in a case where only two trustees were originally appointed, but where the trust property had been very much increased. Boycott's Settlement Trusts, In re, 5 W. R. 15.

A testator appointed A. B. (the tenant for life) and C. D. trustees. The will contained no power to appoint new trustees. C. D. having disclaimed, A. B. (under the powers of the 23 & 24 Vict., c. 145, s. 27) appointed a single trustee in his place:—Held, that the cestuis que trust were entitled to have a third trustee appointed, and that the statute did not take away the jurisdiction of the court to increase the original number of trustees. D'Adhemar (Viscountess) v. Bertrand, 35 Beav. 19.

Several trustees appointed on petition, under the act 1 Will. 4, c. 60, in the stead of a sole surviving lunatic trustee. Welch, In re, 3 Myl. & Cr. 292; 7 L. J., Ch. 169.

A testator by his will devised his real estate to one trustee upon certain trusts. The trustee died intestate. Under the stat. 13 & 14 Vict. c. 60, the court appointed two trustees, and made a vesting order. As the property was very small, the appointment was made without a reference on affidavit of fitness of the new trustees. Tunstall, Ex parte, 4 De G. & Sm. 426; 15 Jur. 645, 981.

The court can appoint two or more new trustees in place of one becoming bankrupt. Wilkinson, Ex parte, 3 Mont. & Ayr. 145.

Where a testator had bequeathed a large fund to a single trustee, the court, at the instance of the tenant for life of the fund, appointed an additional trustee at the cost of the corpus of the trust property. Grant v. Grant, 6 N. R. 347; 34 L. J., Ch. 641; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 787; 13 L. T. 721; 13 W. R. 1057.

Reduction in Number of Trustees.]—The court will never place a trust fund belonging to persons not sui juris in the power of a sole trustee. Dickinson's Trusts, In re, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 724.

The court will not appoint one new trustee to supply the place of more than one originally constituted. Ellison's Trusts, In re, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 62. But see Sitwell v. Heron, 14 Jur. 848.

Under special circumstances two trustees will be appointed where the original number was three. Bulkeley v. Eglinton (Earl), 1 Jur. (N.S.) 994.

Where the property settled was very considerable, and the original settlor had nominated three trustees, the court required clear proof of the alleged impossibility to find a third person to act with two new proposed trustees. Ib.

When there are three trustees, and one dies, another disappears, and the third is desirous of retiring, the court will appoint two in the place of the three. Marriott, In re, 16 W. R. 749.

Where one of four trustees of a will had been found lunatic by inquisition, the court made an order vesting his estate in the other three trustees, although the number of trustees was thereby diminished. Leon, In re, [1892] 1 Ch. 348; 66 L. T. 390—C. A.

Where one of several trustees is of unsound mind, the court will not re-appoint the other trustees as trustees in the place of themselves and the lunatic trustee, for the purpose of excluding the lunatic trustee from the trust; but a new trustee must be appointed in his place. Harford's Trusts, In re, infra, not followed. Aston, In re, 23 Ch. D. 217; 48 L. T. 195; 31 W. R. 801—C. A.

The court will not, on petition, on the lunacy of one of several trustees, appoint the other trustees to be new trustees in the place of themselves and the lunatic trustee. Colyer, In re, 50 L. J., Ch. 79; 43 L. T. 454.

When a trustee wishes to retire, and a successor cannot be found, the court can appoint the continuing trustees to be sole trustees in the place of the continuing and retiring trustees. Stokes' Trusts, In re, 41 L. J., Ch. 290; L. R. 13 Eq. 333; 26 L. T. 181; 20 W. R. 396.

One of the four trustees of a will desiring to retire:—Held, that the court had jurisdiction, under s. 32 of the Trustee Act, 1850, to appoint the remaining three as trustees in the place of themselves and the fourth. Shipperdson's Trust, In re, 49 L. J., Ch. 619.

One of the four trustees of a will having absconded:—Held, that the court had jurisdiction, under s. 32 of the Trustee Act, 1850, to appoint the remaining three as sole trustees in place of themselves and the fourth. Harford's Trusts, In re, 13 Ch. D. 135; 41 L. T. 382; 28 W. R. 239.

One sole trustee appointed in the place of a lunatic trustee where the trust was shortly to be wound up, and there had been but one trustee originally. Reynault, In re, 16 Jur. 233.

Form of order appointing two continuing trustees to be trustees of real and personal estate settled by will, in place of themselves and one retiring trustee. Northrop, In re, Taylor v. Northrop, 29 W. R. 134.

A testator having devised to two trustees upon trust to sell, and one of the trustees named being an infant, the court declined to make an order vesting the whole estate in the other trustee, being adult, but appointed a person to be trustee in the room of the infant, and vested the whole estate in such new trustee with the original adult trustee jointly. Porter's Trusts, In re, 25 L. J., Ch. 688; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 349; 4 W. R. 443.

vi. Powers of New Trustees.

Statute.]—Trustee Act, 1893, s. 37.

Effect of Order substituting New Trustees for those Named in Will.]—The effect of an order made by a court of equity under the Trustee Act, 1850, substituting new trustees for those named in the will, is to transfer to the new trustees all the rights and power of the old ones. The court, therefore, granted administration (with will annexed) to the substituted trustees, without requiring the execution of a deed of conveyance to them by the old trustees. Woodfall, In goods of, 42 L. J., P. 64; L. R. 3 P. 108; 29 L. T. 248; 21 W. R. 933.

Power to Survivor to Appoint—Surviving Trustees Appointed but not under Power.]—Under a power to the survivor to appoint new trustees:—Held, upon the terms of the power, that surviving trustees, appointed by the court and not under the power, had no authority to exercise it. Cooper v. Macdonald, 35 Beav. 504; 14 W. R. 755.

By deed, power was given to the trustees or trustee for the time being, at their or his entire discretion, to pay certain rents for the benefit of one, two, or more of the children of A. B., the tenant for life, and there was a power to the surviving or continuing trustee to appoint new trustees. The trustees all died without appointing new trustees, and new trustees were appointed by the court:—Held, that they had the discretionary power given to the original trustees. Bartley v. Bartley, 3 Drew. 384.

Tenant for Life authorised to withdraw Fund with Assent of "Undersigned Trustees."]—Marriage articles authorised the tenant for life to withdraw the fund from the settlement, with the assent of the "undersigned trustees":—Held, that the power of assent was annexed to the office, and might therefore be exercised by new trustees appointed by the court. Byam v. Byam, 19 Beav. 58; 24 L. J., Ch. 209; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 79; 3 W. R. 95.

Trust for Purchase of Estates in England or Scotland—Power to Heir to Appoint New Trustees.]—A testator bequeathed the residue of his personal estate to three persons, their executors, administrators, and assigns, in trust that they or the survivor of them, or the executors, administrators, or assigns of such survivor, should invest it in the purchase of estates in England or Scotland, such estates, if in England, to be settled according to the limitations of the same will as to his own English estates, which were thereby limited to one for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail, and, if in Scotland, according to the limitations of a Scotch deed of strict entail, to which his own Scotch estates were then subject, and, until such purchase could be found, should pay the income of the residuary fund to the person who would be entitled to the rents of the English estates so to be purchased in case the same were actually purchased. And the will contained a power to such person, or, in case of his minority, to his guardian, to appoint new trustees, who were to have all the powers and capacities of those in whose room they should be substituted. The three trustees invested the greater part of the residue in Scotch estates: and all died during the lifetime of the tenant for life. On his death, his son, who was entitled under the Scotch deed to the Scotch estates, as well as under the will to the English estates, conceiving himself entitled absolutely to what remained of the residuary fund, executed disentailing deeds both of the money and of the English estates, and obtained payment of the fund to himself; but his right to do so being disputed on his death by the next Scotch heir of entail :—Held, that he had no such right ; but that he was entitled only to the income of the fund during his life, and that upon his death, there being then no one by whom new trustees could be appointed under the power in the will, and the court being of opinion that the discretionary power of selecting between English and Scotch investments would not extend to trustees appointed by the court, the fund became divisible in equal moieties, one-half belonging to the personal representatives of the deceased, and the other half to be invested in Scotch estates, to the uses of the Scotch deed. Fordyce v. Bridges, 2 Ph. 497 ; 2 G. Cooper, 326 ; 17 L. J., Ch. 185. Varying 10 Beav. 90 ; 16 L. J., Ch. 81 ; 10 Jur. 1020.

Trust confined to Executors personally.]—One by will gives annuities, and directs residue of her estate to be disposed of in charity to such persons and in such manner as her executors or survivor may think fit. On the death of them new trustees were appointed to sustain the annuities, but they could not dispose of the residue, it being a trust confined to the executors personally. Hibbard v. Lamb, Amb. 309.

Fine.]—A fine might have been levied by a trustee, substituted for a missing trustee, under 6 Geo. 4, c. 75, s. 5. Jackson v. Warde, 9 Bing. 399 ; 2 M. & Sc. 566. S. C., nom. Jenkyn v. Ward, 2 L. J., C. P. 38.

Power to Appoint toties quoties.]—The court, in decreeing the appointment of new trustees, will not direct a power to be inserted in the deed for appointing new trustees toties quoties. Bowles v. Weeks, 14 Sim. 291.

—— Insertion of Power to Appoint New Trustees.]—The power of appointing new trustees in a settlement provided that the new trustees so to be appointed from time to time should have the same power as the trustees named in the settlement. The power was incapable of being exercised in consequence of neither of the trustees acting. On new trustees being appointed in the suit :—Held, that the court could not give them the power of appointing new trustees. Specified persons were appointed by the court new trustees without a reference. Oglander v. Oglander, 2 De G. & Sm. 381 ; 17 L. J., Ch. 439 ; 12 Jur. 786.

Power was given to trustees and their successors to appoint new trustees. The court, being called on to appoint new trustees, declined to enable such new trustees to appoint successors. Holder v. Durbin, 11 Beav. 594 ; 18 L. J., Ch. 479. S. P., Att.-Gen. v. Madden, 2 Con. & L. 519 ; Brown v. Brown, 3 Y. & C. 395.

Where the deed does not provide for the appointment of new trustee, the court will not add such a power. Southwell v. Ward, Tam. 314.

On bill for appointment of new trustee, the decree directed, although not prayed, a proviso to be inserted in the deed authorising the parties from time to time thereafter to appoint new trustees. Joyce v. Joyce, 2 Moll. 276.

—— New Trustees of a Charity.] — On a petition for the appointment of new trustees of a charity, the court directed that, in the deed appointing the trustees, a power should be inserted for appointing new trustees in future. 52 Geo. 3, c. 101, In re, 12 Sim. 262.

—— Where Trustees Appointed in place of Trustees Dying in Lifetime of Testator.] — Trustees appointed by the court in the place of others whose appointment had failed by their deaths in the lifetime of the testator, authorised to appoint future trustees in the manner and under the circumstances mentioned in the will. White v. White, 5 Beav. 221 ; 6 Jur. 160.

vii. Separate Sets of Trustees.

Statutes.]—Trustee Act, 1893, s. 10, sub-s. 2 (b)—Trustee Act, 1850—Conveyancing Act, 1882.

Distinct Trusts.]—Under the trusts of a will different parts of the testator's property were subject to distinct trusts, but in a certain event the trusts would coalesce :—Held, that there was power to appoint separate sets of trustees for the different parts of the property. Hetherington's Trusts, In re, 56 L. J., Ch. 174 ; 34 Ch. D. 211 ; 55 L. T. 806 ; 35 W. R. 285.

Sect. 5, sub-s. 1, of the Conveyancing Act, 1882, authorises the appointment of a separate set of trustees for a part of the trust property held on distinct trusts only when an appointment is being made of new trustees of the whole property. It does not enable the existing trustees of the whole property to retire from the trusts as to part by means of an appointment of new trustees of that part. Savile v. Couper, 56 L. J., Ch. 980 ; 36 Ch. D. 520 ; 56 L. T. 907 ; 35 W. R. 829. S. P., Nesbitt's Trusts, In re, 19 L. R. Ir. 509—C. A. (Ir.)

A testator devised properties in two different parishes in strict settlement in favour of different families, and appointed two trustees of the whole. The powers entrusted to the trustees were very wide. One trustee having died, a petition was presented for the appointment of two new trustees to act with the surviving trustee as to one property only :—Held, that the court had power to make the appointment under the Conveyancing Act, 1882, s. 5, though the surviving trustee was trustee for both properties. Paine's Trusts, In re, 54 L. J., Ch. 735 ; 28 Ch. D. 725 ; 52 L. T. 323 ; 33 W. R. 564.

Independently of s. 5 of the Conveyancing Act, 1882, the court has power under the trustee acts to allow trustees to retire from the trusts of a part of the trust property, held upon trusts distinct from those affecting the remainder, and to appoint a separate set of trustees of such part. Savile v. Couper, supra, considered. Moss's Trusts, In re, 57 L. J., Ch. 423 ; 37 Ch. D. 513 ; 58 L. T. 468 ; 36 W. R. 316.

A father gave six separate sums in trust for six daughters respectively for life, with remainder for the benefit of their children, respectively at twenty-one or marriage, with ultimate gifts over for the benefit of all his children in certain contingencies. He gave a general power of appointment of new trustees. One of the six daughters married a Canadian ; her children were Canadians, and had attained twenty-one or married, and the investments of the sum of money for her benefit were mostly Canadian. One of the trustees of the will retiring as far as regarded that sum, the court appointed a Canadian trustee of the same jointly with the other trustee of the will. Cunard's Trusts, In re, 48 L. J., Ch. 192 ; 27 W. R. 52.

Where by the same will different estates have been vested in the same trustees upon different trusts, and there is only a single power of appointment of new trustees in the usual form, and all the trustees have died, the court may, with the consent of the representatives of the surviving trustee, appoint new trustees to execute the trusts of one estate without dealing with the other estates. Dennis's Trusts, In re, 10 L. T. 688; 12 W. R. 575.

—— Freeholds and Leaseholds.]—A testator gave different parts of his property, consisting of freeholds and leaseholds, on substantially similar trusts for different families, with cross-remainders in each case. Many of the cestuis que trust were not sui juris:—Held, the present trustees of the will and all the cestuis que trust who were sui juris consenting, that separate sets of trustees might be appointed for the different divisions of the property. Grange, In re, Cooper v. Todd, 44 L. T. 469; 29 W. R. 502.

—— Part of Trust Property Lost.]—Where it is expedient to do so, the court will, under s. 32 of the Trustee Act, 1850, appoint a separate set of trustees for a part of trust property held on distinct trusts. Aston's Trusts, In re, 25 L. R. Ir. 96.

Where one of two trustees of a will had died, and the other had absconded with the residuary trust funds under the will, and could not be found, and the only fund forthcoming was a sum of 381*l.* 9*s.* 9*d.* India 3½ per cent. stock, which was subject to distinct trusts under the said will:—Held, a case in which it was expedient to appoint separate trustees. Ib.

Where part of the trust property had been lost, the court in appointing new trustees refused to confine the trust to the remaining property, but directed it to be made of the whole comprised in the settlement, and referred it to the master, whether it would be proper to take proceedings for the recovery of the part lost. Bennett v. Burgis, 5 Hare, 295; 15 L. J., Ch. 231; 10 Jur. 153.

viii. Practice.

a. Present Practice.

Originating Summons.]—Upon an originating summons asking for general administration of an estate and the appointment of new trustees, the court can make an order for the appointment of new trustees, all the parties interested in the appointment being before the court. Allen, In re, Simes v. Simes, 56 L. J., Ch. 779; 56 L. T. 611.

The court has no jurisdiction upon an originating summons in chambers, to make an order appointing new trustees. Gill, In re, Smith v. Gill, 53 L. T. 623; 34 W. R. 134.

Service of Petition—Cestuis que Trust out of Jurisdiction.]—Upon a petition presented by the persons entitled to the residue of a testator's estate for the appointment of new trustees of his will in the place of a deceased trustee and a lunatic trustee, the court dispensed with the service of the petition upon one out of four persons entitled to the proceeds of sale of certain real estate devised by the will who was resident in Australia. Wilson, In re, 55 L. J., Ch. 632; 31 Ch. D. 522; 54 L. T. 263—C. A. See also Lightbody's Trusts, In re, supra, col. 586.

Affidavit of Fitness of New Trustee—Description.]—In support of a petition for the appointment of a new trustee in the place of a trustee who had become lunatic, two affidavits were filed as to the fitness of the person proposed to be appointed. The deponent of one affidavit was described as a "gentleman," the other deponent being described as an accountant. Each affidavit described the proposed new trustee as a "gentleman," but also stated that he was a person of independent means:—Held, that the description of the deponent as a "gentleman" was insufficient, that the position in life of the deponent ought to be stated, so as to enable the court to judge whether his evidence was reliable, but that the other affidavit was sufficient. Horwood, In re, 55 L. T. 373—C. A.

Verification of Consent of New Trustee.]—Although the rules of December, 1885, do not apply to lunacy proceedings, and, therefore, when a petition is presented in lunacy for the appointment of new trustees, the consent of the new trustees must be verified by affidavit; yet when a petition is presented intituled in the chancery division and in lunacy, asking for the appointment of new trustees under the jurisdiction of the lords justices as additional judges of the chancery division, and a vesting order under the jurisdiction in lunacy, the rules of December, 1885, apply, and the consent to act is sufficiently verified by the signature of the solicitor. Hume, In re, Trenchard's Will, In re, 55 L. T. 414—C. A.

The persons entitled to the residuary estate of a testator presented a petition for the appointment of new trustees of his will in the place of the original trustees, one of whom had died, and the other was a lunatic:—Held, that the signature of a new trustee to his consent to act must in lunacy be verified by affidavit according to the old practice, the Ord. XXXVIII., r. 19a, not applying to proceedings in lunacy. Wilson, In re, 55 L. J., Ch. 632; 31 Ch. D. 522; 54 L. T. 263—C. A. S. P., Needham, In re, 54 L. T. 263—C. A.

Where a new trustee is appointed in chancery as well as in lunacy, his signature to his consent to act may be verified in manner provided by Ord. XXXVIII., r. 19a, and need not be verified by affidavit according to the old practice. Secus, where the order is made in lunacy only. Wilson, In re, supra, explained. Hume, In re, 56 L. J., Ch. 1020; 35 Ch. D. 457; 56 L. T. 351; 36 W. R. 84—C. A.

Policy of Life Assurance for Benefit of Wife and Children of Assured—Petition.]—Application for the appointment of trustees of a policy of life assurance, effected under the provisions of the married women's property acts, for the benefit of the wife and children of the assured, may be made by petition. Atkinson's Policy Trusts, In re, 13 R. 285.

b. Under the Trustee Acts, 1850 and 1852.

Who may Present Petition.]—A petition to change the trustees in a settlement ought to be presented by the cestui que trust, and not by the proposed trustees. O'Dell, In re, Hayes, 257.

A person who has a contingent interest in a trust fund has a locus standi to present a petition for the appointment of new trustees under the Trustee Act, 1850. Sheppard's Trusts, In re, 4 De G. F. & J. 423 ; 1 N. R. 76 ; 32 L. J., Ch. 23 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 59 ; 7 L. T. 377 ; 11 W. R. 60.

Creditors who have obtained a decree for the administration of the estate of their deceased debtor, under which a contract for sale of his real estate has been entered into, and the purchase money paid into court, are persons "beneficially interested" in the lands comprised in the contract within the scope of the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 60, s. 37, and entitled to apply thereunder. Wragg, In re, 1 De G. J. & S. 356 ; 2 N. R. 49.

Amendment of Petition.]—In some branches of the court a petition might be amended by adding co-petitioners without re-answering. Curtwright's Trust, In re, 2 L. T. 262 ; 8 W. R. 492.

Parties to Concur or be Served.]—The master directed to appoint a new trustee, although some of the cestuis que trust were infants, and another was out of the jurisdiction. Hunter v. Gibson, 16 Sim. 159.

Service of a petition for the appointment of a new trustee on infant cestuis que trust dispensed with. Young's Trusts, In re, 21 L. T. 556.

On a petition, under the Trustee Act, 1850, for the appointment of new trustees of a settlement, the beneficial interests under which had been made the subjects of marriage settlements :—Held, that the original cestuis que trust, their husbands and wives, and the trustees of their settlements, sufficiently represented all the parties beneficially interested. Smyth's Settlement, In re, 2 De G. & Sm. 781.

Certain persons interested, being desirous of having new trustees appointed of certain articles of settlement, exhibited a statement before the master, under the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 60, s. 38, and the master gave a certificate approving of certain persons as new trustees, all persons interested having appeared before him and consented. On a motion that the certificate might be confirmed, and that an order might be made appointing the persons approved of by the master trustees of the articles of settlement, the other parties interested did not appear, and the question was, whether it was necessary for them to do so, as they had already consented before the master. Lord Cranworth thought they must appear and consent, and made the order on the production of a consent brief from the other parties. Thomas's Trust, In re, 15 Jur. 187.

On a petition to appoint new trustees, under the Trustee Act, 1850, in place of two who were advanced in years and anxious to retire :—Held, that the two old trustees and all the cestuis que trust should appear. Sloper, In re, 18 Beav. 596.

When a chapel was conveyed to trustees upon trust among other things to allow such person to preach as the Wesleyan conference should appoint :—Held, that the persons representing the conference might join in a petition for the appointment of new trustees. Harden Wesleyan Chapel, In re, 1 W. R. 212.

All the cestuis que trust ought ordinarily to be parties to a petition for the appointment of new trustees, infants by their next friends, as well as adults. Fellows' Settlement, In re, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 62.

Costs "incidental to and consequent on" inquiry ; the words "incidental to and consequent on" to be struck out. Ib.

Persons entitled to six-seventh parts of a trust fund applied to have a new trustee of the fund appointed :—Held, that, primâ facie, all the persons beneficially interested must be before the court, and that though circumstances might render such an application impossible, yet, no such impossibility being suggested, these persons were not entitled to apply, and the court declined to make the order asked, without service on the person entitled to the remaining one-seventh part. Richard's Trusts, In re, 5 De G. & Sm. 636.

Demise of lands to trustees for 1,000 years on certain trusts. Petition for the appointment of new trustees :—Held, that the reversioner ought to be served with the petition. Farrant's Trust, In re, 20 L. J., Ch. 532.

Petition by tenant for life for a vesting order, to vest property in a new trustee appointed in the place of a trustee out of the jurisdiction, must be served on the remainderman. It must be proved by affidavit, inter alia, that the power has been properly exercised, and that the proposed trustee is a fit and proper person. Maynard's Settlement Trusts, In re, 16 Jur. 1084 ; 1 W. R. 15.

A new trustee was appointed under a power in a settlement in the place of a trustee who was a lunatic. An order was made, under the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 60, for vesting the estate in the new trustee, but the committee of the lunatic's estate had not been served. The registrar declined to draw up the order without service, which the court directed to be made. Saumarez, In re, 8 De G. M. & G. 390 ; 25 L. J., Ch. 575 ; 4 W. R. 658.

A tenant for life of trust property, with a power of appointing new trustees, was duly found lunatic ; but no committee was appointed. On a petition being presented, under 16 & 17 Vict. c. 70, s. 137, for the appointment of new trustees of the property, the court declined to make an order in the absence of a committee. Parke's Trust, In re, 32 Beav. 580 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 998 ; 8 L. T. 378 ; 11 W. R. 655.

When a petition is presented for the appointment of a new trustee under the Trustee Act, 1850, in place of a trustee of unsound mind not so found, service on the trustee of unsound mind is not necessary. Green, In re, Murton, In re, L. R. 10 Ch. 272 ; 32 L. T. 446 ; 23 W. R. 804.

In petition cases, under the Trustee Act, 1850, arising from trustees being out of the jurisdiction, it should be sworn where the trustee is, as service will be required when the absence is only in England. Hughes, Ex parte, 1 Jo. & Lat. 32 ; 6 Ir. Eq. R. 559.

An appointment of a new trustee in place of one permanently residing out of the jurisdiction will be made without service of the petition on the trustee so residing out of the jurisdiction. Martin Pye's Trusts, In re, 42 L. T. 247.

The service of a petition for vesting in newly-appointed trustees lands which had descended to the infant heir of the former sole trustee upon the guardian of the infant is not necessary. Little, In re, L. R. 7 Eq. 323.

Affidavit of Fitness.]—Two trustees of real estate were appointed by the court in the place of one on petition under the Trustee Act, 1850 ; and, the property being small, without a reference, on an affidavit of the fitness of the two persons proposed as trustees. Tunstall, Ex parte, 4 De G. & Sm. 421 ; 15 Jur. 645, 981.

On a petition for the appointment of new trustees under the Trustee Act, 1850, it was asked that the parties named in the petition might be appointed trustees without a reference to the master, upon an affidavit of their fitness. Battersby's Trust, In re, 16 Jur. 909.

The court will not, as a general rule, receive the evidence of the solicitor in the matter, as to the fitness of persons proposed to be appointed new trustees. Grundy v. Buckeridge, 22 L. J., Ch. 1007 ; 17 Jur. 731.

It is not sufficient to describe a person making an affidavit of the fitness of a new trustee merely as a "gentleman." Orde, In re, 52 L. J., Ch. 832 ; 24 Ch. D. 271 ; 49 L. T. 430 ; 31 W. R. 801.

Consent of New Trustees.]—An affidavit by a third party is not sufficient evidence that the proposed trustees will consent to act. Semble, that such consent may be sufficiently shown by the instruction of counsel or by letter. Parks's Trust, In re, 1 W. R. 477.

An intended trustee should not appear to consent by counsel, but should merely signify his assent to the petitioner. Draper's Settlement, In re, 2 W. R. 440.

Where a trustee declines to act, and it is necessary to appoint a new one in his place, his consent to the new appointment must be obtained. Garty's Settlement, In re, 3 N. R. 636 ; 10 L. T. 331.

Order for the appointment of new trustees on the written consent of the parties proposed to be appointed. Battersby's Trusts, In re, 16 Jur. 900.

Other Evidence.]—On a petition for appointing new trustees of a will containing gifts to classes, an affidavit of the solicitor was received as sufficient evidence of the persons constituting the classes without the production of baptismal and other certificates. Hoskins, In re, 4 De G. & J. 436.

On a petition by the cestui que trust under a will of real estate for the appointment of new trustees, the will not having been proved :—Held, that the production of the affidavit of one of the attesting witnesses, proving the due execution of the will, would be sufficient evidence. Wickens's Trusts, In re, 27 W. R. 880.

Affidavits made in a cause allowed to be used as evidence in a petition under the Trustee Act, 1850. Pickance, In re, 10 Hare (App.) xxxv.

Order in Lunacy or in Chancery.]—Testator by his will appointed B. his trustee, with a direction after his wife's death to sell his real estate, and to execute the necessary assurances to convey the estate, and gave to his widow a power of appointing new trustees ; but the will contained no devise of the legal estate to B. B. became of unsound mind, though not so found. After the wife's death, a petition in lunacy was presented for the appointment of new trustees, that the power of sale might be exercised :—Held, that the court had jurisdiction, under the Trustee Act, to appoint new trustees ; that an order drawn up in chancery, as well as in lunacy, should be made for their appointment and vesting in them such estate (if any) as was in the former trustee. Semble, such a power in a will would give an estate by implication, to the trustee. Boyce, In re, 3 N. R. 396 ; 33 L. J., Ch. 390 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 138 ; 9 L. T. 670 ; 12 W. R. 359.

An order for the appointment of four new trustees, in place of three deceased trustees and a surviving trustee of unsound mind, may be made in lunacy only, and need not be made in chancery also. Boyce, In re, supra, considered. Owen, In re, L. R. 4 Ch. 782 ; 17 W. R. 1034.

Costs.]—A court of equity has no jurisdiction to award costs adversely against third parties cited to appear as respondents upon a petition to appoint new trustees under the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 60. Primrose, Ex parte, 23 Beav. 590 ; 26 L. J., Ch. 666 ; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 899 ; 5 W. R. 508. But see Woodburn's Trusts, In re, 1 De G. & J. 333 ; 26 L. J., Ch. 522 ; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 799 ; 5 W. R. 642.

Where an order had been made for the appointment of new trustees under the Trustee Act, 1850, and for the payment of the costs out of the trust estate, and it was subsequently shown that the trust estate consisted entirely of realty, the order was amended by the insertion of words authorising the trustees to raise the costs out of the realty by way of mortgage, the mortgage deed to be approved by the judge at chambers. Crabtree, In re, 14 W. R. 497.

When a legacy had been bequeathed to a sole trustee for a tenant for life, and then for reversioners absolutely, the costs of a petition by the reversioners for the appointment of an additional trustee were ordered to be paid by the petitioners, and not out of the corpus of the legacy. Brackenbury's Trusts, In re, 39 L. J., Ch. 635 ; L. R. 10 Eq. 45 ; 22 L. T. 469.

On petition for the appointment of new trustees under the Trustee Act, 1850, the court has no jurisdiction to order payment into court of the trust funds. The costs of a petition for the appointment of new trustees where the petitioner was the tenant for life directed to be paid out of the corpus of the fund, and as regards persons having legal interests in the funds as between solicitor and client. Parby's Settlement Trusts, In re, 29 L. T. (O.S.) 72.

Under a power in a settlement of real estate, a new trustee was duly appointed in the place of a sole trustee, deceased. The heir of the deceased trustee could not be found, and, on petition, an order was made to vest the estate in the new trustee, and that upon consent he might pay the costs of the proceedings, and that such costs, with interest at 4*l.* per cent., might form a charge on the inheritance. Davies, Ex parte, 16 Jur. 882.

A bankrupt trustee is entitled to his costs of appearing on a petition for the appointment of new trustees. Turner v. Mollineux, 3 L. T. 687 ; 9 W. R. 252.

On a petition for appointment of new trustees of two trust funds, the costs ordered to be paid out of the two funds ratably. Grant, In re, 2 J. & H. 764.

Where a petition by a married woman by her next friend, for the appointment of new trustees, contained allegations against the husband of misconduct, and his affidavit denied those allegations, and contained other allegations of misconduct on the part of the parties therein referred to, the court ordered the next friend to pay the respondent his costs of answering the charges made against him, and the costs incurred in making those charges, and in reference thereto ; the respondent to pay the costs incurred by the charges which he first introduced, and the trust property to bear the ordinary costs of a petition for the appointment of new trustees. Wills, In re, 3 N. R. 107 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1225 ; 9 L. T. 570 ; 12 W. R. 97.

A trustee who makes an improper opposition to a petition for the appointment of new trustees will have to bear his own costs of the opposition, and will have the costs occasioned to the other parties by his opposition deducted from the costs properly payable to him. Wiseman, In re, 18 W. R. 574.

Two petitions were presented on the same day for the appointment of new trustees; the court will order the costs of the more perfect petition only to be paid out of the fund, and notwithstanding that the less perfect petition was presented first. Pring's Trusts, In re, 42 L. J., Ch. 473; 28 L. T. 467.

c. Under the Trustee Acts prior to 1850.

Reference to the Master.]—Court will not change a mere trustee for wife under marriage settlement, without sending it first to master to see if a proper person is proposed. O'Keeffe v. Culthorpe, 1 Atk. 18.

When trustees have a power to appoint new trustees, the court will not, on their application, direct an appointment without a reference. —— v. Roberts, 1 J. & W. 251.

In this case a claim was filed for the appointment of new trustees of a will, there being a power in the will for the appointment of new trustees; but one of the trustees was dead, and the survivor refused to act. Order made on the hearing accordingly. Brooks v. Mills, 14 Jur. 1080.

A new trustee appointed under 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will 4, c. 60, without a reference to the master, the petitioner being the only person interested in the trust property. Shick, Ex parte, 5 Sim. 281.

Upon an application, under 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 60, for the transfer of a sum of stock standing in the name of a lunatic trustee, the Lord Chancellor refused to adopt the facts as found in a suit in the exchequer, and directed the usual reference. Prideaux, In re, 2 Myl. & Cr. 640; 7 L. J., Ch. 82.

The court never appoints a new trustee without a reference to the master. Roche, In re, 2 Dr. & War. 287; 1 Con. & L. 306.

A new trustee will be appointed by the court without a reference, on proof of his fitness, and on his consent. Robinson's Trust, In re, 15 Jur. 187. S. P., Cockell v. Pugh, 6 Beav. 293; Proctor, In re, 16 Jur. 233; Buckley v. Buckley, 14 Jur. 189.

The court will not direct the appointment of a trustee to convey, in the room of a trustee who is abroad, without a reference to the master, although there be affidavits of the absence of the trustee. Inquiry also directed whether the absent party was a trustee, although appointed such by the duchy court of Lancaster. Fazekerly v. Gillebrand, 7 Jur. 1123.

Where a surviving trustee had assumed by his will to appoint trustees for the will of his testator, which contained no power for the appointment of new trustees, a reference was directed to the master, regard being had to the will of the trustee, and liberty was given to the persons nominated therein to propose themselves. Anon., 4 L. J., Ch. 48.

Where a legacy is given for permanent charitable purposes to trustees, not having a corporate character, the court will not transfer the fund to them, without a reference. Wellbeloved v. Jones, 1 Sim. & S. 40; 1 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 11; 24 R. R. 146.

Trustees of a charity are never appointed by the court without a reference, though the amount of the fund be extremely small. Att.-Gen. v. Arran (Earl), 1 J. & W. 229.

The court will not make an order for the appointment of particular persons as trustees of a charity without a reference to the master. Shrewsbury School, In re, 1 Mac. & G. 85; 13 Jur. 201.

Where the decree, among other things, referred it to the master to appoint a new trustee, a certificate by the master of such appointment was to be considered as a separate report. Harris v. Kemble, 4 Russ. 474.

Exceptions to Report and Confirmation.]—A trustee, by his answer, declined to act, and on the hearing it was referred to the master to appoint new trustees; the original trustee afterwards agreed to act, and on application to the court, that the trustee might be at liberty to amend his answer in this respect, so as to enable the court on a re-hearing to vary that part of the decree, the court refused to do this; but thought the master was at liberty, on statement of these circumstances, to decline the appointment of new trustees. Miles v. Neave, 1 Cox, 159.

Where a reference has been made to the master to appoint trustees of a charity, it is the rule of the court to adopt the master's appointments, unless the persons appointed can be shown to be objectionable, and the court will not enter into the question of the fitness of other persons whom the master has refused to appoint. Norwich Charities, In re, 2 Myl. & Cr. 275. S. P., Att.-Gen. v. Dyson, 2 Sim. & S. 528; 4 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 164.

A person's name had been submitted to the master as a new trustee, and he had been approved by the master, but without any affidavit of his respectability. Such an affidavit was afterwards produced to the Lord Chancellor, and no objection to his respectability was made: —Held, that there was no ground for referring the question of his appointment back to the master. Ludlow Charities, In re, 3 Myl. & Cr. 262.

Where a deed gives a power of appointing new trustees to a particular person, the court is bound to adopt his nominee, unless he refuses to nominate any but a person wholly unfit; therefore, when the power of appointing trustees was given to H. K. and J. K., and the survivor of them, and J. K. died, and H. K. nominated new trustees, but, in consequence of the interference of R. K., who had become entitled to J. K.'s interest under the deed, it was necessary to file a bill to procure a conveyance of the legal estate; and the master, under the reference made at the hearing, entered into a general inquiry as to the relative fitness of the nominees of H. K. and R. K., and selected the nominee of the latter:—Held, he was wrong in so doing, although the reference had been made in general terms to select a proper person as trustee. Kennedy v. Turnley, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 399.

Rules of the court as to controlling the appointment of trustees in such cases. Ib.

Where a bill is filed for the appointment of new trustees, the amount of the property being small, the court will make an order for the master to appoint the trustees at once under the reference, without the necessity of coming back to the court. Clinton v. Watkins, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 489.

In a suit for the appointment of new trustees, occasioned by the refusal of the surviving trustees to exercise a power of appointment, reference was made to the master to approve of proper persons. Exceptions to his report on the ground that he had not regarded the right of nomination given to the surviving trustee by the instrument creating the power, but not raising any objections to the fitness of the persons nominated by the master, were overruled. Middleton v. Reay, 7 Hare, 106; 18 L. J., Ch. 153; 13 Jur. 116.

An order of reference, under the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 29, as to whether it would be for the benefit of the parties beneficially interested in a settled fund to lend it on the security of freehold estates in Ireland, may be made ex parte; but the court will not confirm the master's report, finding that such a loan would be for the benefit of such parties, unless they all, as well those entitled in remainder as those entitled for life, have either been served with the petition, or appeared before the master. Kilpatrick's Trust, In re, 15 Jur. 941.

In this case a reference had been made, under Turner's Act, for the master to approve of a new trustee. The master made his certificate accordingly, and a petition was presented, praying that the master's report might be confirmed. The vice-chancellor stated that he had communicated with the other judges, and it was settled that these applications must be made by motion, and not by petition. Farmer, In re, 16 Jur. 634.

Parties.]—A party beneficially entitled to part of the dividends of a sum in the funds held to have a sufficient interest to support a petition, under 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 60, for appointment of a new trustee; and by s. 10 the court may appoint one of the bank officers to receive the dividends and pay them over to the new trustee; and although an order has been made under the act, but irregularly, the court has jurisdiction to give costs. King, In re, 10 Sim. 605; 9 L. J., Ch. 257.

Upon a petition by a mortgagee for the appointment of a new trustee in the room of the infant heir of a trustee for sale under a mortgage deed, the court, in the absence of the mortgagor, refused the application. Green, In re, 2 Coll. C. C. 91; 9 Jur. 704.

On petition, a trustee of lands with a power of sale sufficiently represents the cestui que trust. Blanchard's Trusts, In re, 2 N. R. 386; 8 L. T. 603.

Service of Petition.]—Mode in which a petition presented under an act of parliament, by which the court derives its jurisdiction, ought to be intituled. Law, In re, 4 Beav. 509; 11 L. J., Ch. 118; 6 Jur. 615.

A petition under the 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 60, to obtain a transfer of trust stock from the names of the surviving trustees into the joint names of such trustees and of a new trustee duly appointed, is properly presented by such new trustee. Ib.

After a reference to the master, and a report thereupon, on a petition to confirm the report, under the provisions of the stat. 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 60, and to transfer funds to new trustees:—Held, that all parties interested in the fund, whether in reversion or otherwise, should be served with notice of the petition. Yates, Ex parte, 16 L. J., Ch. 72; 11 Jur. 33.

ix. Costs.

New Trustee in Place of Bankrupt.]—On a petition to have a new trustee appointed in the place of the bankrupt, who had misappropriated the trust fund, the court will give the assignees their costs only out of the general estate. Heelis, Ex parte, Atkinson, In re, 7 Jur. 684.

Refusal of Trustees of Meeting-House to Retire.] — The trustees of a meeting-house, having by a change of their religious opinions become disqualified for the trust and refused to retire, ordered to pay the costs of the appointment of new trustees incurred in a suit instituted for that purpose on the information of the attorney-general. Att.-Gen. v. Murdoch, 2 K. & J. 571.

New Trustee made Party by Supplemental Bill.]—The survivor of two trustees being guilty of misconduct, the cestuis que trust filed a bill to remove him, and to appoint a trustee in his place. After the bill was filed, he appointed a new trustee under a power in the settlement, in the place of the deceased trustee, without the consent of the cestuis que trust. The new trustee, who had no notice of the filing of the bill, was made a party by supplemental bill. The court made him pay his own costs of the supplemental bill, but not those of the other parties. Peatfield v. Benn, 23 L. J., Ch. 497; 2 W. R. 68.

Mode of Appointment provided by Act of Parliament.]—A bill having been filed for the appointment of new trustees in a case where it was proper to have recourse to the mode provided by the provisions of the act of parliament, the costs directed to be paid to the plaintiff. Thomas v. Walker, 18 Beav. 521.

Executrix of Deceased Sole Trustee refusing to Receive and Pay Dividends.]—An executrix of a deceased and sole trustee having declined to receive and pay the dividends on stock standing in the name of the trustee, the cestui que trust filed a bill against her for the appointment of new trustees, a transfer of the trust fund, and payment of a dividend:—Held, that the executrix was entitled to her costs out of the fund. Legg v. Mackrell, 2 De G. F. & J. 551.

6. Rights, Powers, Duties and Liabilities.

a. In General.

General Position of Trustee.]—Mere trustee has no right to traverse inquisition. Sadler, In re, 1 Madd. 581.

Trustees not to take advantage of their own laches. Kentish v. Newman, 1 P. Wms. 236.

The court will not take a trust deed out of the possession of the bankrupt's trustees. Holder, Ex parte, 3 Deac. & C. 276; 2 L. J., Bk. 64.

Acceptance of Trust—Trustee cannot Dispute Title of Cestui que Trust.]—A person who has accepted property as a trustee, and held it as such, is not at liberty to dispute the title of his cestui que trust, though that title may be doubtful. Neligan v. Roche, Ir. R. 7 Eq. 332.

It is not competent to a trustee to dispute the title of his cestui que trust; neither does the court listen to imputations of imbecility against a grantor in the absence of those beneficially interested. Pearson v. Lindley, 2 Jur. 758.

No trustee of property having a right the exercise of which conflicts with his duties as a trustee, can, even with the consent of his cestuis que trust, enforce his own right to their detriment. Cook v. Addison, 38 L. J., Ch. 322; L. R. 7 Eq. 466; 20 L. T. 212; 17 W. R. 480.

Trustees cannot set up, as against their cestuis que trust, the adverse title of third parties. Newsome v. Flowers, 30 Beav. 461; 31 L. J., Ch. 29; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1268; 5 L. T. 570; 10 W. R. 26.

A seceding congregation of a chapel attempted to obtain possession of it by procuring some of their body to be appointed new trustees. In a suit to set aside the appointment:—Held, that the new trustees could not raise as a defence, that the congregation had departed from the original form of worship, and that such an objection could only be made available on an information filed by them and raising the question. Ib.

It would be dangerous, where a person enters on the foot of a trust, and never makes any declaration of his having performed the trust in pursuance of the will, to construe this such an entry, as that a fine and non-claim would bar the right of the plaintiff, a remainderman. Shields v. Atkins, 3 Atk. 560.

Upon a trust in equity, no estate can be gained by disseisin, abatement, or intrusion while the trustee continues in possession of the land, neither will equity suffer a merger of the trust estate. Hopkins v. Hopkins, 1 Atk. 591; Cas. t. Talb. 44; 1 Vern. 268.

Duration of Trust.]—A trustee cannot, by any act of his own, denude himself of that character till he has performed his trust. Chalmer v. Bradley, 1 J. & W. 68.

When Majority can Act.]—A trust to apply funds "towards the repairs of the church of W., the payment of the fifteenths, and relief of the poor of W., buying of armour and setting forth soldiers, and repairing Sawbridge bridge, within the parish," is of a public nature; and therefore an act done by a majority of the trustees assembled for that purpose is valid. Wilkinson v. Malin, 2 C. & J. 636; 2 Tyrw. 544; 1 L. J., Ex. 234.

One of several mortgagees can maintain an action to foreclose the mortgage, making the others co-defendants if they are unwilling to be joined as co-plaintiffs, or have done some act precluding them from being plaintiffs. The act of a majority of trustees cannot bind a dissenting minority nor the trust estate. In order to bind the trust estate the act must be the act of all the trustees. Luke v. South Kensington Hotel Co., 48 L. J., Ch. 361; 11 Ch. D. 121; 40 L. T. 638; 27 W. R. 514—C. A.

The manager of a company is not entitled, as such, to sign the firm or name of the partnership. Beveridge v. Beveridge, L. R. 2 H. L. (Sc.) 183.

The authority of trustees representing three-fourths of the property of a concern held to be insufficient to empower the manager as such, to sign the company's firm, especially when the proceeding was opposed by the representative of the remaining fourth. Ib.

Power to Render Property Liable to Third Party.]—Trustees may render the property of their beneficiaries liable to third persons for an act done by them in the exercise of the trust. Mersey Docks and Harbour Board v. Gibbs, 35 L. J., Ex. 225; L. R. 1 H. L. 93; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 571; 14 L. T. 697; 14 W. R. 872.

A trustee will be restrained from using the legal powers that have been conferred upon him otherwise than for the legitimate purposes of his trust, and therefore a demurrer for want of equity cannot be sustained to a bill seeking such relief, although the plaintiff may have a remedy at law. Balls v. Strutt, 1 Hare, 146; 5 Jur. 1035.

Where a plaintiff, as a drawer of a bill, indorsed it in trust for himself, and it was again indorsed by the defendant on the like trust, to a person who commenced an action on the bill against the plaintiff:—Held, that the court would restrain a trustee from using the powers conferred on him otherwise than for the real purposes of the trust, and a demurrer to a bill (to restrain the defendant from negotiating, and for having the bill delivered up), for want of equity, overruled, notwithstanding the plaintiff might also have a remedy at law. Ib.

Trustee entitled to act on his own Judgment.]—A trustee is entitled to act on his own judgment, and is not bound to follow the opinions of the cestuis que trust. Selby v. Bowie, 2 N. R. 2; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 432; 8 L. T. 372; 11 W. R. 606.

Power to Change Stocks.]—Trustees with power to change stocks, cannot thereby change cestui que trust's interests. Lord v. Godfrey, 4 Madd. 455.

Trustees in Possession of Land for Charitable Purposes—Adverse Title to Land.]—The necessary funds have been subscribed by certain parties, a piece of land was purchased and conveyed by deed to trustees, for a charitable purpose. Under this deed the trustees entered into and continued in possession for several years; and with the acquiescence of all the subscribers, including some not parties to the deed, a considerable expenditure was made, and heavy liabilities were incurred:—Held, that, even assuming the subscribers not parties to the deed had an equitable interest in the land in respect of the moneys subscribed by them, yet they would not be heard to assert a title to the land adverse to that of the trustees. Att.-Gen. v. Munro, 9 Jur. 461.

Non-interference of Trustees—Right to carry Trust into Effect.]—The non-interference of the trustees for a long period does not preclude them or their representatives from sustaining a suit for carrying the trust into effect, so long as the trust subsists. But, semble, on the contrary it is the duty of the trustees or their representatives to take steps for enforcing the trust. Hughes v. Wells, 9 Hare, 749; 16 Jur. 927.

A trustee has as much the benefit of the pleading of this court as he that has the equitable interest; and a cestui que trust is entitled to have the privilege maintained by the trustee. Suffolk (Earl) v. Green, 1 Atk. 450.

Duty of Trustee—To Preserve Evidence of his Acts.]—A trustee is bound to preserve evidence of his acts. Aspland v. Watte, 25 L. J., Ch. 53; 3 W. R. 526.

——To Obtain Information as to Trust Fund.]—It is the duty of trustees to obtain information of the disposition of the trust fund. Walker v. Symonds, 3 Swanst. 58; 19 R. R. 155.

Trustee for Infants under Invalid Deed.]—Position, duty, and liability of a trustee for infants of an estate created by an invalid deed or a deed of doubtful validity, and which is impeached by other parties. Elsey v. Lutyens, 8 Hare, 159.

Appeal to House of Lords—Right of Cestui que Trust to use Trustee's Name on Indemnity.]—A trustee cannot, upon receiving a proper indemnity, refuse the use of his name to his cestui que trust for the purpose of prosecuting an appeal in the house of lords, on the ground that he thinks such appeal unreasonable, and that he is the solicitor of the party in whose favour the decree appealed from was made. Pakington v. Benbow, 5 W. R. 670.

Cestui que Trust Heir of Trustee.]—No act of the trustee can vary the right of the cestui que trust, but his situation may; as where the cestui que trust is his heir, and the right to dower depends upon which dies first. Selby v. Alston, 3 Ves. 341; 4 R. R. 10.

Mistake as to Cestui que Trust.]—A trustee who is in possession of land is so on behalf of his cestuis que trust, and his making a mistake as to the persons who really are his cestuis que trust cannot affect the rights of the cestuis que trust inter se. Lister v. Pickford, 34 Beav. 576; 6 N. R. 243; 34 L. J., Ch. 582; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 649; 12 L. T. 587; 13 W. R. 827.

Right of Cestui que Trust to Inspect Trust Deed.]—A cestui que trust is entitled to inspection of the deed creating the trust, notwithstanding that the trustee alleges that by the exercise of a power contained in the deed the cestui que trust's interest under it has ceased. Bugden v. Tylee or South, 21 Beav. 545; 26 L. J., Ch. 425; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 783; 5 W. R. 128.

Privileged Communications — Opinion of Counsel.]—A trustee is not bound to produce to his cestui que trust cases laid before counsel with a view of resisting a claim by such cestui que trust, although the trustee is not personally interested. Thomas v. Secretary of State for India, 18 W. R. 312.

Trustee assenting to Bill in Parliament—Injunction.]—Quære, whether a cestui que trust can have an injunction to restrain his trustees from assenting to a bill in parliament. Parker v. Dunn River Navigation Co., 1 De G. & Sm. 192; 11 Jur. 624.

b. Management.

i. In General.

Changing Nature of Estate.]—A trustee cannot change the nature of the estate, by turning money into land, or a lease for years into a freehold, et e converso. Witter v. Witter, 3 P. Wms. 100.

Mixing Trust Funds.]—A trustee, for a particular purpose, must not intermix the trust fund with other trust funds and apply the whole in manner he thinks fit. Att.-Gen. v. Goldsmiths' Co., C. P. Cooper, 292.

Letting Cestui que Trust in Possession.]—It is not of course to let the cestui que trust under a will into possession of an estate; it must depend on the testator's intention. Tidd v. Lister, 5 Madd. 429; 21 R. R. 323.

Power to Lay out Money on Securities.]—Power to trustees to lay out money on securities, includes power to give discharges to borrowers. Wood v. Harman, 5 Madd. 368.

Payment of Head Rents.]—Quære, whether the trustee of leaseholds settled to separate use of married woman, is bound to see that head rents are paid, or liable as for wilful default, if the premises are evicted for nonpayment of rent. Booth v. Purser, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 40.

Right of Sporting.]—Where a manor is conveyed to trustees, upon trust to divide the profits of it amongst the tenants of the manor, it is the duty of the trustees not to let the right of sporting to any of the tenants, upon terms advantageous to them as tenants; but to make the best profit they can by letting the right of sporting to all eligible persons, whether tenants or otherwise, and to divide the profit so made ratably amongst the cestuis que trust. Hutchinson v. Morritt, 3 Y. & C. 547. And see Webb v. Shaftesbury (Earl), 7 Ves. 480.

Neglect to Let Farm at Higher Rent.]—A trustee letting a farm originally at a proper rent will not be held personally liable for the difference between that rent and the rent which, at a subsequent period of the tenancy, might have been obtained, merely because he neglected to give notice to quit a few months after there appeared to be a probability that the price of agricultural produce would enable him, with propriety, as between landlord and tenant, to obtain a higher rent. And, semble, that rule would be applicable even to a case in which the tenant was a near relation to the trustee, unless there were some other circumstances to confirm the suspicion of personal favour which that relationship is calculated to excite. Ferraby v. Hobson, 2 Ph. 255; 16 L. J., Ch. 499.

Abatement of Rent on Lease for Lives.]—In taking accounts against a trustee when he is to be fixed with a personal liability, his good faith is to be considered, and every fair allowance is to be made in his favour, especially if the demand against him is one which arose many years ago, and the beneficiary was at the time cognisant of all the matters connected with it. M'Donnell v. White, 11 H. L. Cas. 271.

A., being greatly in debt, executed a deed of trust for the benefit of creditors; and among the property assigned under the trust deed was a lease for lives renewable for ever, on which the rent reserved was really a high rack-rent; the tenant complained, and the trustee, with the knowledge of A., though without his consent, but with the full assent of A.'s brother, to whom A. had committed the management of his affairs, received from the tenant an abated rent. A. complained of the abatement, but he took no steps to put an end to it:—Held, that the estate of the trustee could not after the expiration of the trust be called on to make up the deficiency. Id.

Assignment of Advowson of Rectory Appendant to Manor.]—Under a devise of manors, lands, &c., to A., his executors, &c., for a term of eleven years, in trust to receive the rents, issues, and profits of the premises that should from time to time accrue and become due, and dispose of the same for the benefit of a certain cestui que trust; A. may, by the directions of the cestui que trust, and for his benefit, assign the advowson of a rectory appendant to a manor to a purchaser for the said term of eleven years, to the intent that the purchaser may present for the next turn in the case of an avoidance before the expiration of the term, and in case of such avoidance, the purchaser may present accordingly. Albemarle (Lord) v. Rogers, 7 Bro. P. C. 522.

Direction to Convey Real Estates to Child attaining Twenty-Five—Life Estate only if Conduct not approved by Trustees.]—K., by will, directed his trustees, on R., the eldest son of K., and failing him the next eldest son, attaining twenty-one, to convey certain real estates to K., but in case any of the children conducted themselves so as not to merit the approbation of the trustees, then such children were to have life estates only. K., by codicil directed his trustees to postpone the conveyance to R. till he attained twenty-five. R. at twenty-three married, with the approbation of the trustees, though they were not parties to his marriage settlement, which settlement disposed of his interest under his father's will as if it were an estate in fee. When R. attained twenty-five, the trustees, not being satisfied with R.'s conduct, conveyed to him only a life estate in the premises:—Held, first, that the eldest son was included under the term children: secondly, that the trustees were not bound to declare their dissatisfaction until R. attained twenty-five, and that they could not by having assented to R.'s marriage preclude themselves from discharging the duty of reviewing his conduct when he attained twenty-five. Weller v. Ure, 15 L. T. 97.

Promissory Note to be Cancelled if Maker behaved to Satisfaction of Trustees in his Business.]—A testator gave all his real and personal estate (after certain specific and pecuniary gifts) to trustees, including therein a promissory note for 3,000*l.* and interest due from J. L. C., upon trust to get in and convert, and divide among certain persons, of whom J. L. C. was one. If J. L. C. behaved to the satisfaction of the trustees in a certain business in which he was placed, the trustees were to cancel the note for the benefit of J. L. C.; but if he did not behave to their satisfaction in the said partnership for six years from the testator's decease, they were to call in the note. Within a year from the testator's decease the partnership, in which J. L. C. was, was dissolved: then J. L. C. became bankrupt: then the trustees (but long within six years after the testator's decease) gave notice to J. L. C. that he had misconducted himself, and called in the 3,000*l.* In their answer, which was also within the six years, the trustees declared that the misconduct referred to was misconduct in the partnership, and within the meaning of the will, and that it had caused the dissolution:—Held, that such notice, although after the bankruptcy, was sufficient, and that the 3,000*l.* should be deducted out of the share of J. L. C. in the residue. Bird v. Johnson, 18 Jur. 976.

Distinction between a trustee undertaking to make good a debt due to the estate, and actually receiving payment, in the one case being bound to invest it, i.e. if the money be received; but secus, where the trustee merely undertakes to make it good, the debtor not being discharged. Ib.

Deposit of Bonds and Money with Bankers to Guarantee Interest to Bondholders.]—An agent of a foreign railway company deposited with the plaintiffs, who were bankers in England, certain bonds of the company, and a sum of 5,000*l.* to guarantee the payment of the interest on the same bonds, which was payable at the plaintiff's bank; and in case of non-payment of the interest the 5,000*l.* was to be forfeited, and divided among the bondholders. The interest was not duly paid:—Held, that the plaintiffs were trustees of the money for an unascertained class of individuals, and that they could not be called upon to ascertain, at their own risk and expense, who was included in that class; and therefore one who claimed to be an unsatisfied bondholder, and had in that character commenced an action against the plaintiffs for part of the 5,000*l.*, was restrained by injunction. Hankey v. Morley, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 234.

Power to apply Surplus Income in Improvement of Property.]—Trustees of a term with power to apply surplus income in building and improvement were allowed to apply money standing to real estate capital account in building and improvements, including drainage. Leslie, In re, 45 L. J., Ch. 668; 2 Ch. D. 185; 34 L. T. 239; 24 W. R. 546.

Trustees of real estate for a term of 1,000 years from the day of the death of the settlor, had powers, during a period of certain lives in being and twenty-one years, to manage the estates, and out of the income to keep down charges and incumbrances, and subject thereto to repair, erect new or additional buildings, and generally to make such outlay for the improvement of the estates as they should think fit or conducive to the general benefit of the estates or the tenants thereof, and hold the surplus as capital, which was to be laid out in the purchase of lands to be settled to the like uses. The settlor having died in 1870, the first tenant for life being in possession, and the income being insufficient, after keeping down charges and incumbrances, to pay for repairs, for the cost of new buildings, and generally for improvement of the property, the court allowed, out of capital, payments in draining upon which the tenants paid 5*l.* per cent., and in erecting new buildings. Ib.

Though 32 Geo. 3, after directing trustees to light, cleanse, and improve certain streets, empowers them to sell waste lands in order to defray the expenses, &c. and to expend the surplus in such a manner as they shall deem necessary, it does not authorise them to spend such overplus in opposing a bill in parliament, which, if passed, would be extremely prejudicial to the purposes of the act under which they officiate. Edwards v. Wilson, 2 Chit. 610.

Duty to enforce Payment of Trust Funds.]—It is the duty of trustees to press for the payment of the trust funds to them, and if they are not paid within a reasonable time, to enforce payment by legal proceedings. And it is especially their duty to take action promptly if by the terms of the trust payment has been deferred to the expiration of a specified time. The only excuse for not taking action to enforce payment is a well-founded belief on the part of the trustees that such action would be fruitless; and the burden of proving the grounds of such belief is on the trustees. Brogden, In re, Billing v. Brogden, 38 Ch. D. 546; 59 L. T. 650; 37 W. R. 84—C. A.

—— Property not Lost by Trustees—Indemnity.]—Trustees are not bound at their own expense to take proceedings for the recovery of trust property not lost by their own default. Tudball v. Medlicott, 59 L. T. 370; 36 W. R. 886; 52 J. P. 659.

A testator by his will left certain freehold property to trustees in trust for certain beneficiaries; a short time after the testator's death a mortgage of the devised property was discovered, but was suspected by the trustees to be a forgery. They had not funds with which to institute proceedings:—Held, that they were not bound to take proceedings at their own expense to recover the trust estate. Ib.

Loss by Non-conversion—Form of Order.]—Where there has been a loss to the trust estate by reason of a non-conversion of a security forming part of the trust property, but the trustees allege that they could at no time have realised the full value of the security, they will be allowed the benefit of an inquiry to show the actual amount which would have been realised by a conversion at the proper time, and their liability will be limited accordingly. Gainsborough (Earl) v. Watcombe Terra Cotta Co., 54 L. J., Ch. 991; 53 L. T. 116.

Deposit at Bank—Delay—Failure of Bank.]—A will appointing trustees only authorised them to invest in parliamentary stocks or funds, or in freehold, copyhold, or leasehold hereditaments. The will contained a provision that no trustee should be answerable for any banker, broker, or other person in whose hands any moneys might be deposited for safe custody or otherwise. The trustees left the sum of 500*l.* on deposit at a bank, by way of interim investment, whilst they looked for a mortgage, for fourteen months, when the bank failed. Upon the question whether the trustees were liable for the loss thereby occasioned:—Held, that fourteen months was too long for the trustees to leave trust money on deposit at a bank; that if after six months they could not get a mortgage, they ought to have invested the money in consols; that, from the moment they left it too long on deposit, they became responsible for the consequences of their default, and were therefore liable for the sum lost to the trust estate. Cann v. Cann, 51 L. T. 770; 33 W. R. 40.

Loss of Trust Money by Reason of Defect in Title—Employment of Solicitor.]—In the year 1838 the trustees of a marriage settlement invested a portion of the trust funds on an assignment of an appointed share of a fund. The appointment purported to be made in execution of a joint power by a husband and wife, but the deed had not been executed by the wife. The trustees had employed a solicitor to act for them in preparing the assignment, and to transact the legal business connected with it:—Held, that the trustees were not liable for the loss occasioned by the non-execution of the power of appointment. Rochfort v. Seaton, [1896] 1 Ir. R. 18.

Retaining Assets for Payment of Legacies—Insufficiency.] — Trustees are not insurers, and if they have and retain in their hands assets which, fairly valued, are sufficient to meet legacies which are not payable, but have to be held in trust, they are justified in paying other legacies payable pari passu with them, but payable at once. And trustees making such payments are not personally responsible to the unpaid legatees if the assets retained for them should in the result prove insufficient to pay them in full. The conduct of trustees ought to be regarded with reference to the facts and circumstances existing at the time when they had to act and which were known, or which ought to have been known, by them at that time. Hurst, In re, Addison v. Topp, 67 L. T. 96—C. A.

Pressure by Trustee for Money due to Estate.]—A testator who died in 1872 by his will bequeathed a legacy of 1,000*l.* in trust for J. By a codicil after reciting that he desired his widow after his death to enter into the business then carried on by him in partnership with D., and that the bulk of his property was invested as capital in the said business, the testator empowered his trustees to invest or continue invested, moneys in their hands as trustees, in the aforesaid business or any other business in which they in their uncontrolled discretion might think fit, without being liable for loss. The widow entered into partnership with D. for ten years, during which term the 1,000*l.* was left in the business. After the expiration of ten years the widow left the business, and D. filed a petition, and a composition of 10*s.* in the pound was agreed to, payable by three instalments. Only one instalment was received by the trustees which was not invested, but placed on deposit at a bank. No pressure was made for payment of the other instalments. J. commenced an action against the trustees, seeking relief on the ground of breaches of trust:—Held, that the not calling in the 1,000*l.* on the widow's retirement from the business was not a breach of trust, but that, on the construction of the codicil, the power was not restricted to lending to any particular partners in the business:—That the not calling in or pressing for payment of the two unpaid instalments was not a breach of trust, for the trustees were not guilty of negligence but had acted honestly in the belief that pressure would not have resulted in benefit to the estate, and had reasonable grounds for acting as they had done:—That as the loss of income by the non-investment of the first instalment was very small, and as there was a probability of another instalment being shortly received, when both might be invested together, no order would be made against the trustees, who had acted on the advice of their solicitor in placing the money on deposit instead of investing it. Earl, In re, Johnson v. Davies, 39 W. R. 107.

Trust for Sale—Carrying on Business—Advances—Right of Creditor against Trust Funds.]—By a marriage settlement a lunatic asylum was assigned to trustees on trust at the request of the husband and wife to sell and stand possessed of the proceeds of the sale for the benefit of the wife and children; but the trustees were to allow the husband to carry on the business of the asylum without paying any rent, but paying certain premiums and other moneys. The husband became bankrupt, and thereupon the surviving trustee of the settlement entered into possession of the asylum and carried on the business until the asylum was sold for a large sum of money. A tradesman had supplied the trustee with goods for the use of the asylum, and brought an action claiming payment out of the trust funds of the settlement:—Held, that, whether the trustee would or would not have been entitled to be indemnified for moneys advanced by him for the purposes of the asylum, the tradesman had no right to recover his debt out of the trust funds, no special part of the estate having been appropriated for carrying on the asylum. Garland, Ex parte (10 Ves. 110), considered. Strickland v. Symons, 53 L. J., Ch. 582; 26 Ch. D. 245; 51 L. T. 406; 32 W. R. 889—C. A.

—— Conversion—Direction to postpone Sale—Profits of Business.]—A direction in a will empowering trustees to postpone the sale and conversion of any part of the testator's property for such period as to them should seem expedient, justifies the trustees in postponing the sale of the testator's business, and in carrying on the business with a view to benefit the tenant for life who is entitled to the profits till sale. Crowther, In re, Midgley v. Crowther, 64 L. J., Ch. 537; [1895] 2 Ch. 56; 13 R. 496; 72 L. T. 762; 43 W. R. 571.

—— Power to Postpone Sale—Power to Carry on Business.]—A testator gave all his residuary estate to trustees upon trust with all convenient speed to sell; and particularly with all convenient speed to sell his business of a pawnbroker. The testator empowered his trustees to postpone the sale of his estate, or any part thereof, for so long as they should think fit:—Held, that this power did not authorise the trustees to carry on the business for an indefinite time. But, under the circumstances, they were authorised to carry it on for two years from the death of the testator. Smith, In re, Arnold v. Smith, 65 L. J., Ch. 269; [1896] 1 Ch. 171; 74 L. T. 14; 44 W. R. 280.

Increase of Capital—Mortgage.]—See Dimmock, In re, 52 L. T. 494, post, col. 629.

West Indian Estates—Expenses of Cultivation—Advances by Consignee.]—D., the consignee of the produce of a West Indian plantation, carried on by T., as executor and trustee of his father, advanced money to T. to be expended on the estate, on the agreement that T. should bind the future profits of the estate to repay the same, which T. had power to do under the will. The agreement was not in writing, but was bona fide acted on by D., who advanced moneys accordingly:—Held, that the agreement being part performed was binding. Daniel v. Trotman, 1 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 123; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 583; 8 L. T. 522; 11 W. R. 717. And see Morison v. Morison, post, col. 645.

A West Indian plantation is a species of trade, and cannot in general be carried on without advances from a consignee in this country, to be reimbursed out of the future proceeds. This difference between West Indian estates and landed estates here, affects the mode in which courts view the dealings and conduct of trustees, and even the construction of wills and instruments relating to the former estates. Semble, the consignee advancing money to carry on a West Indian plantation has an implied lien on the future profits for such advances. Ib.

Administration of Trusts—Payment by Trustees.]—A father devised his real estate to trustees to pay an annuity of 6,000*l.* a year to his daughter, and subject thereto upon trust to accumulate the rents for twenty-one years, and out of the accumulated fund from time to time to pay his debts, legacies, and the incumbrances on the estates, and invest the residue in the purchase of lands to be held on the same trusts; and he directed the estates, on the expiration of the trusts for accumulation, to be settled in strict settlement. He directed that as soon as the incumbrances were paid off, the annuity should be increased to 8,000*l.* He gave his residuary personal estate to his trustees to pay off the incumbrances, and apply the surplus in the same way as the accumulated rents and profits. He died leaving personalty which, within a month after his death, was ascertained to be amply sufficient to pay off his debts, legacies, and incumbrances. The trustees, however, retained a considerable part of the personal estate, as it was producing a high rate of interest; and they did not for several years pay off all the incumbrances:—Held, that the trustees were right in paying the annuity at the rate of 8,000*l.* a year from the testator's death, and must be allowed it in their accounts. Astley v. Essex (Earl), L. R. 6 Ch. 898; 25 L. T. 470.

A widow, who was by the terms of the will to be allowed money by the trustees during the minority of an infant—her son—abandoned the child, for whom other guardians were appointed by the court, and afterwards having cohabited with a married man, and by him had several illegitimate children, lived with them in a house to the use of which she was entitled under the will. The trustees under these circumstances refused to make her any allowance out of the trust moneys:—Held that she could not compel the trustees so to do, but was disqualified from making any claim by her abandonment of the child, independently of other misconduct. Mellor v. Mellor, 20 W. R. 51.

—— Overpayment to Beneficiary—Costs.]—A testator devised and bequeathed his residue to his wife and two sons, his executrix and executors, on trust for his wife for life, and after her death as to one-fourth for each of his two sons, and as to the other two-fourths respectively on trust for each of his two daughters and their children. The widow and sons proved the will during the life of the widow. She managed the estate; she paid sums of money in respect of each fourth by anticipation, one son received more than was paid in respect of the other shares. It turned out after her death that the estate was insufficient to bring up the other shares to an equality with what such son had received:—Held, in an action to administer the testator's estate, that, it not being shown that the deficiency had not arisen from subsequent wasting of the estate, neither son was liable as trustee to make good the deficiency of the other shares, and the son who had received the excess was not liable as beneficiary to refund; but that he could not be paid his separate costs as beneficiary because he had already received more in excess of his proper share than the amount of such costs. Winslow, In re, Frere v. Winslow, 60 L. J., Ch. 20; 45 Ch. D. 249; 63 L. T. 485; 39 W. R. 120.

—— Sums Voluntarily added to Share—Erroneous Construction of Will.]—Where the trustees of a will had voluntarily added certain sums to the settled share of a beneficiary under an erroneous impression as to the true construction of the will, and the will was subsequently construed by the court adversely to their impression:—Held, that there was nothing on the evidence to show that the trustees held the contributed fund on the trusts of the will as construed by the court, but only that they held the money for the benefit of the beneficiary under the will. Walters, In re, Neison v. Walters, 63 L. T. 328—C. A.

Partnership — Money of deceased Partner left as Loan—Expenses of Audit and Stocktaking.]—Testator, on retiring from business, left his share of the capital as a loan at interest to his late firm without security, upon the terms of an agreement under which the annual balance sheets of the firm were to be shown to him, and he had at all times access to, and liberty to inspect the stock and books of the business. The money was to become immediately repayable in certain events, the happening of many of which could not be ascertained without an audit of the firm's books and a stocktaking. The testator, by his will, gave his personal estate upon trust for certain persons for life, with remainder to others absolutely :—Held, first, that the discretion of the trustees of the will as to how often there should be an examination of the books and stock of the firm ought not to be fettered, but, in the absence of special circumstances, it should be made once a year. Held, secondly, that the expenses of such examinations should be paid out of the capital of the testator's estate, and not out of the income. Bennett, In re, Jones v. Bennett, 65 L. J., Ch. 422 ; [1896] 1 Ch. 778 ; 74 L. T. 157 ; 44 W. R. 419—C. A.

Trust to receive Rents and manage Estate —Salary.]—Where estates were devised to a near relative and a family solicitor until B. attained the age of twenty-eight years, upon trust to receive the rents and manage the estate, and the will empowered any trustee being a solicitor to charge and be paid for all business done by him as a solicitor in respect of such estate, and a legacy of 100*l.* was given to each trustee, and the trustees managed the estates consisting of 2,000 acres partly unlet for fifteen years, paying themselves a salary of 100*l.* a year each for the trouble of such management, amounting in all to 3,000*l.*; on an originating summons on behalf of the tenant for life and the infant remainderman :—Held, that such payments of 200*l.* a year were unauthorised by the will; the trustees might at any time have applied to the court, but they neglected to do so ; that it was not a case to follow the course adopted in Marshall v. Holloway (2 Swanst. 432), where an inquiry was directed as to whether any and what sum should be allowed to the trustees for their trouble. The salary was disallowed, and an order made for payment into court, without interest, within six months. Bedingfield, In re, Bedingfield v. D'Eye, 57 L. T. 332. See also Freeman's Settlement Trusts, In re, 57 L. J., Ch. 160 ; 37 Ch. D. 148 ; 57 L. T. 798 ; 36 W. R. 71.

Solicitor-Trustee—Power to Charge for Professional Services, and also for Work done as Trustee.]—A testator, having by his will appointed a solicitor one of his executors and trustees, and bequeathed 200*l.* to him if he should accept the office, declared that he and "every other person to be thereafter appointed a trustee of his will who might be a solicitor should be entitled to receive his usual professional costs and charges as well by way of remuneration for business transacted (including all business of whatever kind not strictly professional, but which might have been performed by a trustee not being a solicitor) as costs and charges out of pocket in the same manner as if he had not been a trustee, but had been employed by the trustees in the matter of the trusts " :—Held, that notwithstanding the legacy of 200*l.* the defendant was entitled to charge not only for his professional services, but also for his trouble as a trustee for what was not properly solicitor's work. Fish, In re, Bennett v. Bennett, 62 L. J., Ch. 977 ; [1893] 2 Ch. 413 ; 2 R. 467 ; 69 L. T. 233—C. A.

Settlement of Accounts between Co-trustees—Beneficiaries' right to investigate Accounts.]—In the absence of special powers or authority contained in the trust deeds, trustees cannot settle their accounts against the estate by agreeing the amount with their co-trustees, so as to bind the beneficiaries ; the latter are entitled to have such accounts re-opened and investigated. Ib.

Effect of Administration Decree.]—After an administration decree has been made, all powers of management of the estate which may be vested in trustees are subject to the control of the court ; and the judge who exercises such control must be personally satisfied of the propriety of the course proposed to be adopted by the trustees. Bethel v. Abraham, 43 L. J., Ch. 180 ; L. R. 17 Eq. 24 ; 29 L. T. 715 ; 22 W. R. 179.

Trustees having power to invest certain moneys belonging to a testator's estate at their discretion, and having power also to continue or change securities from time to time, as to the majority should seem meet, applied to the court in a suit for the administration of the trust estate for liberty to invest the moneys in and to convert securities into American funds or railway stocks. Infants were interested in the trust estate :—Held, that if the trustees had the discretion they claimed (which was doubtful), the court ought not, in a case where infants were interested, to permit them to exercise that discretion in the way they proposed. Ib.

After trustees have invoked the aid of the court in administering an estate, and a decree has been made, they cannot act in the matter of the administration except under the sanction of the court. Minors v. Battison, 1 App. Cas. 428 ; 46 L. J., Ch. 2 ; 35 L. T. 1 ; 25 W. R. 27—H. L. (E.)

ii. Power to Mortgage.

General Rule—Power to Sell or Borrow.]—All that the law requires from a trustee who has power to sell or borrow, is that he shall follow the dictates of ordinary prudence in adopting the one course or the other ; and the question, whether he did or did not act prudently, is one of fact to be solved according to the circumstances of each case. Binnie v. Broom, 14 App. Cas. 576—H. L. (Sc.)

——Furniture given to Widow for Life—Maintenance of Children out of Capital.]—The defenders, or those they represented, were appointed, under a settlement, with directions to pay debts and to pay a certain portion of the free income of the settled property to the widow of the settlor for the support, education, and putting out in the world of the children; and after the youngest child (then not born) reached thirty, to sell or divide the estate, which consisted of house property in Glasgow, and to make such further advances for the maintenance and education of the children as the trustees should consider expedient. The trustees entered into office in 1857, and in 1858 borrowed a large sum to pay off, inter alia, a bond debt. The trust was sequestrated in 1867, all the creditors not being paid in full. The testator's furniture was life-rented by the widow; she pledged it, and it was lost to the estate. In 1886 the pursuer and other children of the testator sought to make the trustees liable for not having sold the property instead of borrowing:—Held, that the trustees were authorised to make payments to the widow and children, although those payments were out of capital; and that they were not liable for the loss of the value of the furniture. Ib.

A trust "to make sale and dispose of" the testator's real estate, does not authorise a mortgage where an intention appears that the whole real estate should be converted, as in the case of a trust to apply the moneys arising from such sale in payment of debts, and then upon further trusts for the benefit of wife and children. Haldenby v. Spofforth, 1 Beav. 390; 8 L. J., Ch. 238; 3 Jur. 241. And see Saxby v. Thomas, post, col. 629.

To pay Debts.]—Trustees, to pay debts, may fairly raise by sale or mortgage without waiting for a decree. Bath (Earl) v. Bradford (Earl), 2 Ves. Sen. 590.

Where a term for years was by settlement vested in trustees to raise, by sale or mortgage, money to discharge the debts of the tenant for life, who soon after with his own money pays the debts, without taking assignments of the securities; a mortgage of it by the trustees, several years after, by direction of the tenant for life is a due execution of the trust. Tenant for life has, during his own life, a right to call for an execution of the trust, and to stand in the place of creditors. After an express declaration of the tenant for life to charge, it cannot, from the debts being paid by him, from no assignment of the securities being taken, or from length of time, be presumed he intended to exonerate the estate. Redington v. Redington, 1 Ball & B. 131; 12 R. R. 5.

A. directed his trustees to raise by mortgage of all or any part of his devised estate, any sum or sums of money, not exceeding 20,000*l.*, and to apply the same in liquidation of such of the debts of M., as to them should seem expedient or proper. The trustees having refused to raise the money without the sanction of the court, suits were instituted by the creditors and trustees for the purpose of obtaining the benefit of the trust, and obtaining the sanction of the court to the raising of the money:—Held, first, that the trustees had not, by their refusal to raise the money without the sanction of the court, abandoned their power of selection among the creditors. Joel v. Mills, 30 L. J., Ch. 354; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 389; 3 L. T. 882; 9 W. R. 298.

Held, secondly, that the power of selection among the creditors was not confined to debts in existence at the death of the testator. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that debts which at the time of his death were barred by the statute of limitations, were excluded from the benefit of the trust. Ib.

To Pay Off Incumbrances.]—A. devised his estates at Blackacre to trustees for a term of 1,000 years, upon trust to pay off all incumbrances for the time being secured on his "settled and unsettled estates." At the date of his will, amongst his settled estates was a renewable leasehold property at Whiteacre, which was settled upon him for life, remainder to his eldest son absolutely. Subsequently to the date of his will he purchased the reversion expectant upon the determination of the lease of Whiteacre, and he and his eldest son joined in a mortgage to secure a part of the purchase money. The equity of redemption in the mortgage was limited to A. and his eldest son as joint tenants, and the surplus moneys, in case the mortgagee sold under his power of sale contained in the deed, were directed to be paid to the testator and his son, according to their interests:—Held, that the subsequent dealings, by way of mortgage, with Whiteacre did not amount to a re-settlement, but that the same was, at the death of the testator, to be considered as one of his settled estates, and that the mortgage upon it was raisable by the trustees out of Blackacre, under the 1,000 years' term. Hastings (Lord) v. Astley, 10 W. R. 73.

To Pay Off Charges.]—Limitation of estates to successive tenants for life, with remainders in tail, subject to a term vested in trustees, the trusts of which were, in the first place, by cutting and selling timber of full growth, or by demising, mortgaging, or selling the estate (except the mansion-house), for all or any part of the term, or by all or any of the said ways, or any other reasonable ways, to raise 30,000*l.*, and pay the same to the parties therein mentioned:—Held, that, as between the tenants for life not impeachable for waste and the remaindermen, the corpus of the estate must bear the charge; and that the interest of the charge must be paid by the tenant for life in possession, who, in the meantime, was entitled (as part of the profits of the estate) to the timber, which, as such tenant for life, he had a right to cut. Marker v. Kekewich, 8 Hare, 291; 19 L. J., Ch. 492; 14 Jur. 544.

The trustees of the term in such a case have not an unlimited discretion to raise the charge in such a manner as they may think fit; and it does not follow that, because their discretion in a mode of raising the charge has been honestly exercised, the charge will be left to be finally borne by those parties upon whom their act might chance to throw it. Ib.

By a marriage settlement, the father of the intended husband agreed to settle a money bond and certain real estates on the intended husband and wife, during their joint lives, and after the death of the husband, if the wife should survive, on her for life, and after her decease or second marriage, upon the children; and it was agreed, that if the husband should die before his wife, three trustees should be appointed to take care of the property for the child or children of the marriage. The marriage was solemnised, and there was issue of it. The husband's father died, leaving his son, the husband, the sole executor, who thereupon took possession of the bond, and deposited it with his bankers, who had no notice of the settlement, to secure a loan from them. The husband then died insolvent, leaving his wife surviving. In a suit concerning the trust property, trustees thereof having been appointed by the court:—Held, that they might redeem the bond by raising money for that purpose out of other parts of the property included in the settlement. Sharshaw v. Gibbs, Kay, 333; 23 L. J., Ch. 451; 18 Jur. 330; 3 Eq. R. 314.

Devise of real estates to trustees in fee, upon trust, "out of the rents, issues, and profits" thereof, to pay two annuities, "and by the same ways and means, or by such other ways and means (except a sale or sales) as they may think proper, to levy and raise" sufficient to pay off the charges on the estate, and, subject to the trusts aforesaid, to A. for life, with remainders over:—Held, that the trustees could not raise the charges either by sale, by mortgage, or by leases on fines, but that they must be raised out of the rents and profits of timber and mines, the trustees exercising a discretion, so as not to exhaust the whole income, and leave nothing for the tenant for life. Bennett v. Wyndham, 23 Beav. 521; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1143; 5 W. R. 410.

Absolute Discretion to Mortgage for Purchase of Real Estate.]—Where absolute discretion has been given to trustees as to the exercise of a power the court will not compel them to exercise it, but if they propose to exercise it, the court will see that they do not exercise it improperly or unreasonably. Where the power is coupled with a trust or duty the court will enforce the proper and timely exercise of the power, but will not interfere with the discretion of the trustees as to the particular time or manner of their bonâ fide exercise of it. Tempest v. Camoys (Lord), 51 L. J., Ch. 785; 21 Ch. D. 571.

A testator gave his trustees a power to be exercised at their absolute discretion of selling real estates, with a declaration that the proceeds should be applied, at the like discretion, in the purchase of other real estates. He also gave them power at their absolute discretion, to raise money by mortgage for the purchase of real estates. A suit having been instituted for the execution of the trusts of the will, and a sum of money, the proceeds of the sale of real estate, having been paid into court, one of the trustees proposed to purchase a large estate and to apply the fund in court in part payment of the purchase money, and to raise the remainder of the purchase money by mortgage of the purchased estate. The other trustee refused to concur in the purchase:—Held, that the court could not control the dissentient trustee in the exercise of his discretion in refusing to make the purchase, or in refusing to exercise his power of raising money by mortgage for the proposed purpose. Ib.

Power "to make any Sales and Arrangements they shall judge expedient."]—A testator appointed Hignett and Jones executors and trustees of his will, and directed that the trustees or trustee for the time being of his will should have full power to settle his accounts and wind up his affairs as they or he should think fit, and, in so doing, "to make any sales and arrangements they or he shall judge expedient." And the testator devised all his real estate unto and to the use of his trustees upon the trusts therein declared. After the testator's death, Jones (Hignett having renounced probate and disclaimed the trusts of the will), in order to meet some pressing claims against the estate, borrowed a sum of 500*l.* upon the security of a mortgage of a portion of the real estate:—Held, that, under the terms of the will, Jones being both executor and trustee, had power to mortgage the testator's real estate. Jones, In re, Dutton v. Brookfield, 59 L. J., Ch. 31; 61 L. T. 661; 38 W. R. 90.

—— Carrying on Business.]—A testator bequeathed a pecuniary legacy and a life annuity to his widow, and gave all his real and personal estate to his trustees upon certain trusts. He empowered his trustees to continue his business of a brick manufacturer, and to increase or diminish his real or personal estate therein at his death:—Held, that the trustees could not create a paramount charge by mortgaging the real estate to raise moneys for the discharge of debts incurred by them in carrying on the testator's business. Webb, In re, Leedham v. Patchett, 63 L. T. 545.

Power to Mortgage Chapel.]—The trust deeds of certain Wesleyan Methodist chapels contained powers of raising money by mortgage for the purposes of the trusts:—Held, that any of the trustees of the chapels might be mortgagees under this power, and that, if they were such mortgagees, they might exercise all the rights of mortgagees, although in opposition to the trusts. Att.-Gen. v. Hardy, 1 Sim. (N.S.) 338; 20 L. J., Ch. 450; 15 Jur. 441.

The court will, on motion ex parte, restrain trustees of a chapel from mortgaging it for a small sum where there appears no necessity for such mortgage to be created; the plaintiff undertaking to abide by such order as the court might think fit in respect of payment of the debts then due. Rigall v. Foster, 18 Jur. 39.

Borrowing on Future Tolls.]—Personal liability of the trustees of a turnpike road who exceed the powers given them by their act in borrowing money on the credit of future or expected tolls. Wilson v. Goodman, 4 Hare, 62.

Lands to be Mortgaged for Particular Purpose.]—Where lands are vested in trustees by act of parliament, to be mortgaged for a particular purpose, it is incumbent on the mortgagee to see the money applied accordingly. Cotterel v. Hampson, 2 Vern. 5.

Suit for Foreclosure.]—In a suit for foreclosure of a mortgage created by trustees, demurrer allowed on the ground that they had no power to mortgage, but the plaintiff allowed to amend for the purpose of claiming a lien on the interest of a cestui que trust who was a party to the deed. Page v. Cooper, 16 Beav. 396; 1 W. R. 136.

Duty to obtain Transferee—Transfer of Mortgage—Costs of Transfer.]—F. devised a real estate to trustees for a term of 2,000 years upon trust to raise money in aid of his personal estate, and subject thereto in strict settlement. Large sums of money were raised under this trust, and amongst others a sum of 10,000*l.* by a mortgage to M. In 1890 M. called in the mortgage. At this time the estate of the tenant for life under the will had been assigned to the L. Society; the tenant in tail in remainder was an infant. An order was then made on a summons taken out by the infant tenant in tail by his next friend, to which the trustee of the term was the only defendant, that the trustee should be at liberty to raise the sum of 10,000*l.* which M. had called in by way of transfer of the hereditaments comprised in the said mortgage, except a small portion thereof, which should be released, and that the costs of all parties of the transfer should be raised by a mortgage of the part so released for the remainder of the term. The costs were accordingly raised by a mortgage of the excepted portion by the trustee, and the mortgagee now took out a summons for foreclosure and a receiver. The L. Society opposed:—Held, that the trustee of the term had not discharged all his duties, as a sum of 1,600*l.* might still have to be raised under the trusts thereof, besides which he had a right to redeem the mortgage for 10,000*l.* and had a duty to his cestui que trust under the term to preserve the equity of redemption, and therefore the mortgage to raise the costs of the transfer was binding on the tenant for life and his assignees, apart from the order for the amount of the taxed costs of such transfer. Sewell v. Bishopp, 62 L. J., Ch. 985; 69 L. T. 68.—C. A.

And see POWERS.

iii. Power of Leasing.

Lease by Tenant for Life—Release of Mortgage by Trustee.]—A., tenant for life, with power of leasing, agreed to grant a lease of a house, subject together with other property to a mortgage which was vested in a trustee, and in which A.'s wife and unborn children were interested. To enable A. to grant a valid lease, the trustee of the mortgage and A.'s wife joined in releasing the house from the mortgage:—Held, that it was a breach of trust on the part of the trustee to release the house from the mortgage; but that the trustee and A. might have joined in granting a valid lease, without discharging the premises from the mortgage. Dawes v. Betts, 17 L. J., Ch. 315; 12 Jur. 709.

Mining Lease.]—Upon a special case presented under 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, and the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, the court declined to give power to trustees to grant leases of real estate for a term not exceeding ten years. Shaw's Trusts, In re, L. R. 12 Eq. 124; 25 L. T. 22; 19 W. R. 1025.
